And likewise, in Georgia, where a sale of a stock of goods in violation of the bulk sales law is conclusively presumed to be fraudulent as to creditors of the vendor, a creditor of one who has made such a sale can hold the vendee liable in a garnishment suit for the value of the goods, if not more than the amount of the indebtedness sought to be collected in the suit, although the vendee bought the goods in part payment of a debt then due to him from the vendor, and although the vendee has sold the goods prior to the service of the summons and garnishment. In this case, the court said: "We are of opinion that the purpose of the stat-ports to make such a sale void as against creditors of the seller, although the parties acted with the utmost good faith, and entertained no purpose to defraud or to embarrass the seller's creditors in the collection of their claims. The sale, which was otherwise valid as against everybody, is made invalid as against creditors as a matter of law. It is declared fraudulent when no fraud was intended by the parties. As was said by the court in Thompson v. Esty, 69 N. H. 55, 63, 45 Atl. 566, 567, in regard to the effect of the retention of the possession by the vendor of the chattels sold: "Though it is found or admitted that the vendee paid to the vendor the full value of the property, that no actual fraud was intended or committed, and that no creditor was misled, deceived, or injured in any respect by the transaction, the law pronounces it fraudulent and void." After showing that in many, if not in a majority, of the cases where this rule has been implied, it has resulted in evident injustice, it was held that the rule should be confined within the limits of the cases to which it had been applied, and not be extended to cases where its application was not necessarily required by the authorities; that not one but a creditor of the vendor who had attached the property could have the sale set aside on account of the constructive fraud; and that an assignee in insolvency, though representing all the creditors, did not have that right. An attaching creditor who has obtained judgment for his debt is alone entitled to appropriate the property so held, as against the innocent vendee who has paid the vendor a full consideration for it. In the course of the discussion, the court refer to the opinion in Boardman v. Cushing, 12 N. H. 105, and say: "This is an unequivocal recognition of the rights of creditors to set aside a presumptively fraudulent conveyance upon an attachment of the property, but the opinion also contains the equally emphatic assertion that the enforcement of such rights, without regard to the actual intention of the parties or the resulting injury, is not to be extended to cases requiring the application of equitable principles. To charge a trustee in foreign attachment on account of a fraudulent sale of property, fraud must be proved as a fact from all the relevant circumstances of the case, and not declared as a matter of law from a few circumstances which as evidence might indicate a fraudulent purpose." The phrase, "fraudulent and void as to creditors," relates to attaching creditors who seek to set aside the vendee's title, which, ute regulating sales of stocks of goods, wares, and merchandise in bulk was to constitute such goods, etc., sold in bulk without complying with the provisions of the statute, trust property in the hands of the purchaser for the benefit of the creditors of the seller. . . . And if a purchaser under such circumstances sells the goods, he is liable, if the statute be constitutional, under a subsequent garnishment proceeding, for their value at the time he sells them, provided the value is not more than the amount of the garnisher's debt against the principal defendant." Jaques & T. Co. v. Carstarphen Warehouse Co. 131 Ga. 1, 62 S. E. 82.

In equity.

As to conditions precedent to equitable remedies of creditors, in general, see note to Ziska v. Ziska, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1.

Upon the question of priority as to proceeds of creditors' bills, see note to Russell v. Chicago Trust & Sav. Bank, 17 L.R.A. 345.

And as to the effect of a creditors' bill or supplementary proceedings as against bankrupt proceedings, see subdivision of note to State ex rel. Strohl v. Superior Court, 45 L.R.A. at page 193.

Under a bulk sales statute providing that proceedings to set aside a sale made in violation thereof must be taken within ninety days after the consummation of the sale, where it is practically impossible for a general creditor within that time to bring action and obtain judgment in order to avoid the sale by issuing an execution against the property sold, and where an attachment does not lie, because the fraud requisite therefor, under the local statute, must be actual, and not merely constructive, any creditor is entitled to sue, by creditors' bill, on behalf of himself and others, to set aside the sale. Guaranty Title & T. Co. v. Pearlman, 144 Fed. 550.

But where a creditor of one who has sold a stock of goods in violation of the bulk sales law has a complete statutory remedy by attachment, he is not entitled to the extraordinary remedies of injunction and receiver. Carstarphen Warehouse Co. v. Fried, 124 Ga. 544, 52 S. E. 598.

In Bixler v. Fry, 157 Mich. 314, 122 N. W. 119, the opinion of the judge below was affirmed by an equally divided court, that a general creditor of one who has sold his stock of merchandise in violation of a bulk sales statute making such a sale void as against the creditors of the vendor cannot, without first having secured a judgment in an action at law against the vendor, his debtor, maintain a bill in equity against the vendee for the appointment of a receiver, an accounting, and a sale of the property conveyed.

And in Rubinsky v. Spiro, 60 Misc. 582, 113 N. Y. Supp. 852, it was held that a general creditor of one who has sold merchandise in bulk in violation of the bulk sales law cannot maintain a suit in equity to set aside the transfer until after recovery of judgment against the debtor and return of execution unsatisfied. A. C. W.

until set aside, is a valid title. As between the parties to the sale, the title passed to the vendee, and it remains in him until it is vacated by a creditor of the vendor upon proceedings instituted for that purpose, or until the vendee disposes of the property. Though the word "void" is used in the statute, in legal effect it means voidable at the instance of an attaching creditor. But, as above suggested, a creditor who resorts to trustee process against the vendee is not an attaching creditor. He does not attach the property and seek to defeat the vendee's title. He acquires no lien upon the property. Corning v. Records, 69 N. H. 390, 398, 76 Am. St. Rep. 178, 46 Atl. 462. It may not be inaccurate to say that he affirms the sale, but seeks to charge the trustee for its value upon some equitable ground. "That trustee process is an equitable proceeding in which the rights of the parties are determined upon equitable principles, and that, in the absence of fraud in the intent, the trustee cannot be charged for chattels in his possession unless he has in his hands property belonging to the defendant which the defendant has the legal right to take and carry away, are propositions for which in this state the citation of authority seems superfluous." Corning v. Records, supra, 396. See also authorities there cited. This general principle is recognized and applied in Dole v. Farwell, 72 N. H. 183, 55 Atl. 553, where it was held that, as against the trustee, a plaintiff in foreign attachment cannot raise the question whether an assignment of future earnings by the defendant is fraudulent as matter of law. In Gutterson v. Morse, 58 N. H. 529, cited by the plaintiffs, the trustee was charged for the value of property fraudulently conveyed to him without consideration, which he had sold, because it was equitable and just that he should be so charged, and not upon the ground of setting aside the trustee's title to the property. Having fraudulently received the defendant's property and sold it, equity required that he should account for its value to the defendant's creditor. The case is not an authority for the proposition that one sued as a trustee may be charged for the value of property sold to him by the defendant, when there was no fraud in fact connected with the sale, and when he had paid the defendant a full and fair consideration for it. Equity does not require or authorize such a holding. Pittsfield Bank v. Clough, 43 N. H. 178, 187. In view of the settled law of this state upon this subject, apparently contrary holdings elsewhere (Jacques & T. Co. v. Carstarphen Warehouse Co. 131 Ga. 1, 62 S. E. 82; Kohn v. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) Fishback, 36 Wash. 69, 104 Am. St. Rep. 941, 78 Pac. 199) need not be considered.

In the enactment of the statute in question the legislature of 1909 furnished no evidence of an intention to establish a new rule for the collection of debts in cases of conveyances of property by debtors, which are merely fraudulent in law, but not in fact; nor to extend the equitable process of foreign attachment to such cases. The intention was to apply the doctrine of constructive fraud to sales of personal property under certain circumstances which before had been regarded as valid sales. The statute was designed to extend the doctrine, but not to affect or increase the remedies, that have been applied in cases of constructive fraud, as contrasted with cases of actual fraud. It furnished, therefore, no justification for charging the trustee in this proceeding.

This result renders it unnecessary to consider the question raised and argued by counsel, of the constitutionality of the statute.

Exception sustained.

All concur.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

MILTON E. BAILEY et al., Appts.,
v.
JOHN KELLY.

(86 Kan. 911, 122 Pac. 1027.)

Landlord and tenant — lease with existing nuisance — liability to licensee.

1. Where a nuisance dangerous to life is created by the owner on his premises, or through his gross negligence is suffered to remain there, he cannot, by leasing the property to another, avoid his own liability to any person who is rightfully upon the premises, and who, without any fault, is injured by reason of such nuisance; and this liability extends to a servant of the tenant, notwithstanding the tenant, by reason of his own fault or neglect or knowledge of the danger, could not have maintained an action against the owner for any injury suffered by himself.

Headnotes by PORTER, J.

Note. — When a court assumes to remove the ancient landmarks and to unsettle law which has been settled for centuries, it owes the duty to the profession and its constituents to give a valid reason for its act, and when it fails to do so the only excuse for preserving the decision is to restore the guide posts. The above decision is without precedent except in the Willcox Cases, decided by the supreme court of Tennessee and referred to in the above opinion. The note to the first of those cases, in 34 L.R.A. 824, shows that the decision is unsupported by principle or precedent, and the note in 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 799, shows that they have been repudiated by the courts before which the question has come since their decision. It is too well settled to admit of controversy that a property owner is not bound to keep it safe for persons who

Trial — jury — knowledge of landlord.

2. In such a case, it is for the jury to determine whether or not the owner knew of the dangerous condition of the premises at the time of the letting, or in time to have abated the nuisance before the injury occurred, or should have known it by the exercise of ordinary care.

(April 6, 1912.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the District Court for Cloud County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiffs' intestate, which was alleged to have been due to the defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles L. Hunt, Park B. Pulsifer, A. M. French, and A. L. Wilmoth, for appellants:

Plaintiffs should recover.

Copley v. Balle, 9 Kan. App. 465, 80 Pac. 656; Thomp. Neg. § 1173; Kinchlow v. Midland Elevator Co. 57 Kan. 374, 46 Pac. 703; come upon it without his invitation or permission. 26 L.R.A. 686, note. Furthermore, when he lets it to another with the dangerous condition plainly visible, the lessee takes all the risk of injury from it. After it goes into possession of the lessee, he alone is responsible for injury to persons who come upon it by his permission or invitation, since there is no privity between them and the property owner. As shown in BAILEY v. KELLY, the landlord has been held liable where he let the premises with a nuisance on them dangerous to the public, and the court states that "no reason is apparent why the same rule should not apply to a case where the dangerous nuisance exists upon private property, and a third person who is lawfully upon the premises, and who is without default or negligence, is injured thereby." But this is the exact point where the line of cleavage has been made by the courts throughout the history of the question. The courts hold that the property owner owes a duty to the public which he cannot evade by leasing the property, but that he owes no duty to his lessee or persons who come upon the property by the lessee's invitation, except in cases where there was a concealed danger, in which cases the owner has been held liable upon the theory of fraud. But it does not appear that the danger was concealed in BAILEY v. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

De Tarr v. Ferd. Heim Brewing Co. 62 Kan. 188, 61 Pac. 689; Cristadoro v. Von Behren, 119 La. 1025, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1161, 44 So. 852; Monahan v. National Realty Co. 4 Ga. App. 680, 62 S. E. 127; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Moore, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 289, 27 S. W. 962; Steinberg v. Willcox, 96 Tenn. 163, 34 L.R.A. 615, 33 S. W. 917; Herd v. Koenig, 137 Mo. App. 589, 119 S. W. 56; Reichenbacher v. Fahmeyer, 8 Ill. App. 217; McLaughlin v. Kelly, 230 Pa. 251, 79 Atl. 552; Ross v. Jackson, 123 Ga. 657, 51 S. E. 578; Bailey v. Dunaway, 8 Ga. App. 713, 70 S. E. 141; Patterson v. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. 16 S. D. 33, 91 N. W. 336; Grant v. Tomlinson, 138 Mo. App. 222, 119 S. W. 1079; Curtis v. Kiley, 153 Mass. 123, 26 N. E. 421.

Messrs. F. W. Sturges, Fred W. Sturges, Jr., and Theo Laing, for appellee:

Appellee leased the premises without fraud or concealment, without promise or agreement to change or repair, to a tenant who had opportunity to know and knew the condition thereof. He was therefore not liable.

Perez v. Rabaud, 76 Tex. 191, 7 L.R.A. 620, 13 S. W. 177; Scott v. Simons, 54 N. H. 431; Brewster v. De Fremery, 33 Cal. 341; O'Brien v. Capwell, 59 Barb. 497; Edwards v. New York & H. R. Co. 98 N. Y. 245, 50 Am. Rep. 659; Moore v. Parker, 63 Kan. 52, 53 L.R.A. 778, 64 Pac. 975; Walsh v. Schmidt, 206 Mass. 405, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 798, 92 N. E. 496.

KELLY. This distinction appears to be sound. There is no liability for negligence unless there is a duty, and the property owner owes no duty to persons who come upon the land without his invitation or license, nor to persons who, because of contract, assume the risk, as in case of the lessee. Furthermore, there appears to be no ground upon which the lessee can give invitations or licenses which will impose liability upon the property owner. Attention is called to the fact that Edwards v. New York & H. R. Co. 98 N. Y. 245, 50 Am. Rep. 659, upon which the court so largely relies to support its ruling, involves the fall of a gallery in a public place of entertainment known as Gilmore's Garden, in New York city, which is within the exceptions of the general rule, but even in that case a judgment of nonsuit was affirmed. Also in Todd v. Flight, 9 C. B. N. S. 377, 30 L. J. C. P. N. S. 21, 7 Jur. N. S. 291, 3 L. T. N. S. 925, 9 Week. Rep. 145, 15 Eng. Rul. Cas. 329, the injury was caused by the fall of a chimney over the line onto the property of an adjoining landowner, which is manifestly a different case from BAILEY v. KELLY. The court in BAILEY v. KELLY appears to have sufficiently pointed out the distinction between the facts before it and those involved in the other cases cited by it to make further comment unnecessary. H. P. F.

Porter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On October 4, 1909, the daughter of the plaintiffs, a girl of sixteen years, was drowned in a cistern on premises belonging to the defendant. At the time of the accident she was a servant in the employ of persons who occupied the premises as tenants of the defendant. The parents sued the owner of the property to recover damages upon the ground that he was negligent in permitting the cistern to be and to remain with a dangerous and insecure covering. The court sustained a demurrer to the evidence, and the plaintiffs appeal.

In the rear of the premises there was a large shed in which there was a cistern 20 feet deep and 8 feet in diameter. The water in the cistern was 12 feet deep. The wooden platform over the cistern was raised a few inches above the level of the ground, there being no floor in the shed. Some time prior to the fall of 1907, an opening had been cut in the platform. The cover to the opening consisted of a window sash which was about 2 feet wide and 2 feet 8 inches long, from which the glass had been removed and upon one side of which sheet iron was nailed. The cover was but little larger than the opening, and there was no way of fastening it to the platform. It lay loosely over the opening, and was easily slipped off or to one side. Water was drawn from the cistern by lowering a bucket through the opening. In December, 1907, the defendant leased the premises to Watson for the purpose of being used as a restaurant. The cover of the cistern remained in the same condition from the time of the letting until the accident, after which hinges and clasps were put on, by which it could be fastened in place. The shed in the rear of the restaurant was used by the tenants for the purpose of storing supplies and for doing laundry work; water from the cistern being used for laundry purposes. The plaintiffs' daughter, who had been in the employ of the tenant about four weeks, went from the kitchen to the shed to get supplies for the restaurant. In doing so she stepped upon the insecure cover, which tilted, and threw her into the cistern, and she was drowned. The trial court sustained the demurrer on the sole ground that the action could not be maintained, because the daughter, if she had survived, could not have recovered from the landlord for injuries received while a servant of the tenant, caused by the defective condition of the premises or the failure of the landlord to repair. From the evidence it appears that the defendant purchased the property in January, 1906. The cistern was made by a former owner in 1895. In 1907 a tenant who occupied a part of the premises, and who had been using the cistern in connection with a barber shop, pulled up the pump, and abandoned the use of the cistern. He left the platform as it had been up to that time, with a small opening just large enough for a four-inch pipe. The evidence does not show who caused the larger opening to be made, or who provided the defective cover, but the platform, the opening, and the cover were in the same condition when the premises were leased to Watson in December, 1907, as they were when the accident occurred. In order to show that the defendant knew of the condition of the cistern, the tenant, Watson, was called as a witness. He testified that, at the time he went into possession, the defendant did some painting about the house, and was there when the witness was using the cistern to get water to wash the floors and windows. He also testified that he examined the premises himself at the time he leased the place, and that, from about the time he took possession, he knew the condition of the cistern, and that there was nothing about it that led him to believe it to be dangerous; that on the day of the accident he was helping his wife with the laundry work, and had been drawing water from the cistern for washing, and that, so far as he knew, Jennie Bailey, the girl who was drowned, never drew any water from the cistern. There was no evidence to show that she knew of the dangerous condition of the cover except that she had been employed there for four weeks before the accident, and that she and the other employees went in and out and had opportunity to see the premises.

As between landlord and tenant, where there is no fraud or false representations or deceit, and in the absence of an express warranty or covenant to repair, the law has always been that there is no implied contract that the premises are suitable or fit for occupation, or for the particular use intended, or that they are safe for use. Bowe v. Hunking, 135 Mass. 380, 46 Am. Rep. 471; O'Brien v. Capwell, 59 Barb. 497; Jaffe v. Harteau, 56 N. Y. 398, 15 Am. Rep. 438; Eakin v. Brown, 1 E. D. Smith, 36; Moore v. Parker, 63 Kan. 52, 53 L.R.A. 778, 64 Pac. 975; Taylor, Land. & T. 9th ed. § 175a. The rule generally is that the occupant, and not the owner, is responsible to third persons for injuries caused by the failure to keep in repair. 1 Thomp. Neg. § 1155; 1 Pingrey, Real Prop. pp. 617, 618, 623. There are certain exceptions to the rules exempting the landlord from liability for injuries to third persons caused by defective conditions in leased premises. One of them, relied upon by the appellant, is where the premises are let with a nuisance upon them, which is the cause of the injury complained of. A nuisance may result from nonfeasance or negligence as well as from misfeasance or malfeasance. Wood, Nuisances, 3d ed. chap. 1. If there is a dangerous nuisance on the premises, the owner cannot avoid liability to a third person for damages resulting from a continuance of the nuisance, which it was his duty to abate. 1 Thomp. Neg. § 1158; Knauss v. Brua, 107 Pa. 85; Irvine v. Wood, 51 N. Y. 224, 10 Am. Rep. 603; Waggoner v. Jermaine, 3 Denio, 306, 45 Am. Dec. 474; Fish v. Dodge, 4 Denio, 311, 47 Am. Dec. 254; Rosewell v. Prior (Eng.) 2 Salk. 459; Clark v. Fry, 8 Ohio St. 358, 72 Am. Dec. 590; Stephani v. Brown, 40 Ill. 428; Peoria v. Simpson, 110 Ill. 294, 51 Am. Rep. 683. The rule is well settled, however, that when the property does not constitute a nuisance when demised, but becomes so only by the act of the tenant, the owner will not be held liable. Joyce v. Martin, 15 R. I. 558, 10 Atl. 620; Rankin v. Ingwersen, 49 N. J. L. 481, 10 Atl. 545; Kalis v. Shattuck, 69 Cal. 593, 58 Am. Rep. 568, 11 Pac. 346; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 120. The doctrine of caveat emptor does not apply where there is any dangerous defect in the demised premises not easily discoverable, and, if the landlord knows of such defect, the duty rests upon him to notify the lessee. Moore v. Parker, 63 Kan. 52, 53 L.R.A. 778, 64 Pac. 975; Meyers v. Russell, 124 Mo. App. 317, 101 S. W. 606; Sunasack v. Morey, 196 Ill. 569, 63 N. E. 1039; Morgan v. Sheppard, 156 Ala. 403, 47 So. 147; Cate v. Blodgett, 70 N. H. 316, 48 Atl. 281. A distinction, of course, is made between cases where the construction of the premises is such that they cannot be used at all for the purpose intended by the tenant without creating a nuisance, and those where the nuisance arises from an improper use of the premises by the tenant. 1 Thomp. Neg. § 1158; Pickard v. Collins, 23 Barb. 444. In most of the cases holding the landlord liable because of leasing the premises with an existing nuisance which has caused the injury, it will be found that the defective or dangerous condition created what is usually termed a public nuisance, such as an unguarded excavation on a public street, or so near thereto as to become dangerous to the public. Such are the following cases: Stephani v. Brown, 40 Ill. 428; Hart v. Albany, 9 Wend. 570, 571, 24 Am. Dec. 165; Peoria v. Simpson, 110 Ill. 294, 51 Am. Rep. 683; Owings v. Jones, 9 Md. 108; Dalay v. Savage, 145 Mass. 38, 1 Am. St. Rep. 429, 12 N. E. 841. Others proceed upon the proposition that the premises were leased with the expectation that they would be used and frequented by the public, such as a wharf or pier or place of amusement. Albert v. State, 66 Md. 325, 59 Am. Rep. 159, 7 Atl. 697. In Swords v. Edgar, 59 N. Y. 28, 17 Am. Rep. 295, a leading case very frequently cited, the action was against the landlord, who leased a pier when it was defective, and it was held that he was liable to a third person who entered upon it and was injured by its defective condition. Clancy v. Byrne, 56 N. Y. 129, 15 Am. Rep. 391, was a case where plaintiff's horse fell through a defective pier. The action was against the lessee, who had covenanted with his landlord to make all ordinary repairs, and had then sublet the pier. He was held liable because he owned or had rights in the premises, and leased them with the nuisance upon them. No reason is apparent why the same rule should not apply to a case where the dangerous nuisance exists upon private property, and a third person who is lawfully upon the premises, and who is without default or negligence, is injured thereby. In Edwards v. New York & H. R. Co. 98 N. Y. 245, 248, 249, 50 Am. Rep. 659, which is often referred to in opinions by other courts and by text writers as a leading case, this language is used (the italics are ours): "If a landlord lets premises and agrees to keep them in repair, and he fails to do so, in consequence of which any one lawfully upon the premises suffers injury, he is responsible for his own negligence to the party injured. If he demises premises knowing that they are dangerous and unfit for the use for which they are hired, and fails to disclose their condition, he is guilty of negligence which will in many cases impose responsibility upon him. If he creates a nuisance upon his premises, and then demises them, he remains liable for the consequences of the nuisance as the creator thereof, and his tenant is also liable for the continuance of the same nuisance. But where the landlord has created no nuisance, and is guilty of no wilful wrong or fraud or culpable negligence, no case can be found imposing any liability upon him for any injury suffered by any person occupying or going upon the premises during the term of the demise; and there is no distinction stated in any authority between cases of a demise of dwelling houses, and of buildings to be used for public purposes. The responsibility of the landlord is the same in all cases. If guilty of negligence or other delictum which leads directly to the accident and wrong complained of, he is liable; if not so guilty, no liability attaches to him."

"The foundation of the liability in these cases, when there is no warranty and no misrepresentation, is negligence." Bowe v. Hunking, 135 Mass. 380, 384, 46 Am. Rep. 471, citing George v. Skivington, L. R. 5 Exch. 1.

Where the nuisance arises from the improper use of the premises, the tenant, and not the landlord, will be liable; but where the nuisance existed at the time the premises were leased, the action may be maintained against either lessor or lessee or both. Stephani v. Brown, 40 Ill. 428. By receiving the rent the landlord profits by the continuance of the nuisance, and is held liable after he has parted with the possession. Besides, he may, notwithstanding the lease, enter for the purpose of abating a nuisance. Rosewell v. Prior, 2 Salk. 459. It appears to be sound doctrine and good sense that he whose duty it is to abate a nuisance should answer for the consequences resulting from its continuance. In Brown v. Cayuga & S. R. Co. 12 N. Y. 486, Denio, J., in a separate opinion, speaking for himself, said: "Everyone is bound so to use his own property that it shall not be the means of injury to his neighbors, and I think the proprietor should himself look to it, and that he cannot safely wait to be admonished before reforming what may be dangerous to others." Page 494.

The main contention of the appellee is that the demurrer was rightly sustained because of the principle thus stated in 24 Cyc. 1119: "The general rule is that a subtenant, guest, or servant of the tenant is regarded as so far identified with the tenant that his right to recover against the landlord is the same as the tenant's right would be, had the accident happened to him; but he can have no greater claim against the landlord than the tenant himself would have under like circumstances." To the same effect is 1 Thomp. Neg. § 1133. It must be conceded that authority from able text writers and decisions by courts of the highest standing will be found which seem to support the contention. These authorities put the servant in the shoes of the tenant for all purposes. They divide strangers and all third persons into two classes with respect to the landlord's liability for injuries caused by defects in the premises. Into the first class they place all persons who are strangers to both landlord and tenant, such as the owners of adjoining premises, travelers upon highways adjoining the leased premises, and all persons who sustain no contractual relations with either party to the lease. In the second class they place servants, employees, licensees, guests, customers, etc., of the tenant; and 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

these being upon the premises by his invitation, express or implied, are said to stand in his shoes. The rule declared is that, as between the landlord and them, the duty to keep the premises in safe condition is in all respects the same as that which the landlord owes to the tenant. The doctrine of caveat emptor is strictly applied; and, if the tenant cannot recover, this class of strangers cannot. Whitmore v. Orono Pulp & Paper Co. 91 Me. 297, 40 L.R.A. 377, 64 Am. St. Rep. 229, 39 Atl. 1032; O'Brien v. Capwell, 59 Barb. 497; Perez v. Rabaud, 76 Tex. 191, 7 L.R.A. 620, 13 S. W. 177; Anderson v. Hayes, 101 Wis. 538, 70 Am. St. Rep. 930, 77 N. W. 891; Burdick v. Cheadle, 26 Ohio St. 393, 20 Am. Rep. 767. And see extended note in 92 Am. St. Rep. 499, and cases cited at page 509. A leading case is O'Brien v. Capwell, supra, which was an action by a washerwoman in the employ of the tenant against the landlord, for injuries caused by the railing on a back porch giving way on account of its defective condition and lack of repair. Some reliance was placed upon the promise of the landlord to repair, made when his attention was called to the defect. The court held the negligence of the landlord to be one of omission of duty; and in the opinion it was said: "In such case, where no affirmative fault, misfeasance, or affirmative wrong was committed by the defendant or was imputed to him, it is essential, to sustain a recovery, to establish that the defendant owed some clear, specific, legal duty to the party injured, which was violated." 59 Barb. 504. The tenant was aware of the defective condition when the premises were leased, and the court held that, because the landlord owed him no duty which would have entitled the tenant to recover in case he had been injured, the servant could not recover; that the rule of caveat emptor always applies to contracts of letting, "with one or two recognized exceptions" (p. 504), which, it was said, had no application to that case. The opinion cites, among other authorities, McGlashan v. Tallmadge, 37 Barb. 313, 315. We have examined the cited case, which holds that, where the landlord was guilty of fraud or where a nuisance was created by his wrongful act, the rule of caveat emptor does not apply. The case of O'Brien v. Capwell, 59 Barb. 497, which defendant cites, is not squarely in point, nor is the reasoning upon which it rests satisfactory. In the present case the dangerous nuisance was not the result of the failure to repair. It was as much a death trap and a nuisance when the opening was made and the defective cover placed there as it was when the accident occurred. Another case cited by appellee is Perez v. Rabaud, 76 Tex. 191, 7 L.R.A. 620, 13 S. W. 177, which squarely denied the right of a servant of the tenant to recover against the landlord for injuries caused by the defective and dangerous cistern, and the decision is placed upon the ground that the servant cannot be classed as a stranger, but can recover only where the tenant could have recovered if the latter had been injured. It should be noted that the defective condition of the cistern was alleged to have resulted "from age and natural decay," and that the petition set up a promise of the landlord to repair. The decision follows, and is based upon the cases of O'Brien v. Capwell, supra, and Jaffe v. Harteau, 66 N. Y. 398, 15 Am. Rep. 438. In the Jaffe Case, which is frequently referred to as a leading case, the wife of the tenant was denied the right to recover. Of course, that case cannot be recognized as an authority here, because it is directly opposed to Moore v. Parker, 63 Kan. 52, 53 L.R.A. 778, 64 Pac. 975, where it was held that the wife of the tenant could maintain the action. The opinion also relies to a great extent upon the general rule stated in 1 Thompson on Negligence, 1st ed. p. 323, and 2d ed. §§ 1130-1133, to the effect that, in the absence of fraud or deceit, there is no implied agreement that the premises are fit for occupation, and that the rule extends to servants of the tenant. The Texas case may have been decided correctly upon the facts. It is distinguishable from the present case by the fact that there is here no reliance upon a promise to repair, or, in fact, upon the breach of any covenant, express or implied, under the law of landlord and tenant. The liability of the appellee as it appeared at the close of appellant's evidence does not rest upon any contractual relation of landlord and tenant. If liable at all, his liability springs from his negligent act in creating a dangerous nuisance upon his premises, and which he is held, with his tenant, to have maintained jointly, because he received the rent for the premises with the nuisance existing thereon. Rosewell v. Prior, 2 Salk. 459. "It is also, no doubt, true that in the leasing of premises there is no implied warranty that they are fit for a particular use, and that liability, if any, in this class of cases, does not spring from contract, but must be predicated upon the negligent act or omission of the landlord, the same being the proximate cause of the injury, in reference to a matter where it was his duty to use ordinary care out of respect to the rights of others liable to be thereby directly involved; and for an injury 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

thus arising a recovery may be had where there is no such contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff as would bar the remedy in other actions for negligence." Reichenbacher v. Pahmeyer, 8 Ill. App. 217, 218.

A case frequently cited in connection with the nuisance doctrine is Godley v. Hagerty, 20 Pa. 387, 397, 69 Am. Dec. 731, where the owner erected a building for rent in so imperfect a manner that it was incapable of supporting the burden imposed upon it, and it fell, injuring an employee of the tenant. The owner was held liable for the injury. It was said in the opinion: "When a man erects a building to rent, the law requires a reasonable share of that regard for human life which he is sure to manifest when he builds for his own inhabitation. If he will build, as is charged and found in the case, 'loosely, carelessly, unskilfully, and negligently,' and with 'insufficient and improper materials,' whereby the innocent and unsuspecting are injured, let him respond in damages." Coke v. Gutkese, 80 Ky. 598, 44 Am. Rep. 499, was an action by the daughter of the tenant for injuries she received by falling through a defective flooring into a privy vault. The action was brought against the owner, alleging that he knew the dangerous condition of the floor and concealed the fact from the lessee, and that neither the plaintiff nor her father, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have discovered it. The Kentucky court held the petition good as against a demurrer.

Of course, in the present case, the tenant himself could not recover for any injury he sustained as a result of the nuisance which he participated in maintaining, and the existence and danger of which were not concealed from him by the owner. The appellants, however, might have joined him as a defendant in the present action or have sued him separately. What reason can be suggested for denying to a person injured by the gross neglect of both landlord and tenant the right to recover of the landlord merely because the tenant in a like case could not maintain an action against the landlord? The tenant knew of the dangerous trap, the servant, so far as the evidence discloses, was ignorant of the peril, and, without fault or culpable negligence on her part, came to an untimely death.

We have purposely omitted citations to cases where the landlord retained control over the premises or some portion of them, such as cases involving tenement buildings and rooming houses, and cases of injuries caused by unguarded elevator shafts, where the landlord controlled the operation of the elevator. In such cases the owner's liability arises from the neglect of a duty which he manifestly owes to all persons lawfully upon the premises. Kinchlow v. Midland Elevator Co. 57 Kan. 374, 46 Pac. 703, is cited and relied upon by the appellant. In that case the landowner, who was in possession and control of the premises, maintained thereon a dangerous nuisance by which a boy in the employ of a licensee of the landowner was injured. The court applied the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas, and held the owner liable because he had maintained upon his premises a trap or pitfall unguarded and liable to cause injury to others; but the case is not directly in point for the reason that the owner was in possession and control of the premises.

A case which fully recognizes the principle running through the cited cases is Moore v. Parker, 63 Kan. 52, 53 L.R.A. 778, 64 Pac. 975. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the petition, and the judgment was reversed. The wife of the tenant of a farm was injured by the giving way of a platform over a well intended for domestic use. The petition alleged that the owner of the premises constructed the platform of defective materials, and that, at the time the premises were leased, he knew it was in a dangerous condition, and that he negligently and fraudulently concealed the fact, and failed to disclose to plaintiff or her husband the defects, which were not obvious, and could not be discovered by the exercise of ordinary care. It was ruled in the syllabus: "A landlord is not an insurer or a warrantor, nor is he compelled to exercise constant care and inspection; but if he knows that the premises which he is about to let are defective and in a dangerous condition, especially if such dangerous or defective place is not obvious or discoverable to the tenant by the exercise of ordinary care, and he does not inform the latter of such defective or dangerous place, and injury is occasioned thereby to the tenant or a member of his family, who is not aware of such defective or dangerous place, while in the exercise of ordinary care, the landlord is liable in damages. The law requires good faith on the part of the landlord toward his tenant." It will be observed that the petition alleged the landlord's knowledge of the nuisance, his concealment of the fact from the tenant, and that it was unknown to plaintiff or to the tenant, and could not be discovered by the exercise of ordinary care. The demurrer admitted these averments. In the present case the appellee contends that the evidence fails to show that he knew of the dangerous condition of the cistern, and that he concealed it from the tenant; and, further, that it conclusively appears that what ever defect existed was obvious and discoverable by the tenant. In fact, the tenant admitted in his testimony that he knew the conditions from the time he went into possession, although he says there was nothing which induced him to believe them to be dangerous.

The courts are at variance upon the question whether or not it is necessary to show actual notice of the dangerous condition to the owner in order to establish his liability to persons injured thereby. The numerical weight of authority would seem to require proof of actual notice. However, in Hines v. Willcox, 96 Tenn. 148, 160, 34 L.R.A. 824, 832, 54 Am. St. Rep. 823, 33 S. W. 914, 916, the landlord was held liable to a tenant for injuries caused by a defect in the premises which the landlord concealed from the tenant when the lease was made, and which defect was known to the landlord or might have been known by him in the exercise of reasonable care. In the opinion it was said: "We think the great weight of authority is that if a landlord lease premises which are, at the time, in an unsafe and dangerous condition, he will be liable to his tenant for damages that may result, if he knows the fact and conceals it, or if, by reasonable care and diligence, he could have known of such dangerous and unsafe condition, provided reasonable care and diligence is exercised by the tenant on his part." The case has been criticized by other courts for extending the rule, and holding the landlord liable for defects of which he has only constructive notice, that is, making him liable not only for failure to disclose defects of which he knows, but also for failure to make known defects which he could have discovered by reasonable diligence. See O'Malley v. Twenty-Five Associates, 178 Mass. 555, 60 N. E. 387, and critical note in 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 799-802. But in Irvine v. Wood, 51 N. Y. 224, 10 Am. Rep. 603, a case cited and approved in numerous decisions, the same rule of constructive notice was applied and the owner was held liable, as well as the tenant, for damages to one passing along a public street, who stepped upon the iron cover of a coal hole which turned and caused him to fall through it. In Moore v. Parker, 63 Kan. 52, 53 L.R.A. 778, 64 Pac. 975, the case of Hines v. Willcox is approved, and an excerpt quoted stating the doctrine that constructive notice is sufficient. The question, however, was not decided, for the reason that the petition to which the demurrer was erroneously sustained in that case alleged that the landlord had actual notice. In Timlin v. Standard Oil Co. 126 N. Y. 514, 22 Am. St. Rep. 845, 27 N. E. 786, the court cites with approval the case of Todd v. Flight, 9 C. B. N. S. 377, 30 L. J. C. P. N. S. 21, 7 Jur. N. S. 291, 3 L. T. N. S. 325, 9 Week. Rep. 145, 15 Eng. Rul. Cas. 329, where it was said that an action will lie against an owner who, with knowledge, leased his premises in a dangerous condition,—that is, in such a condition as to be a nuisance,—where damage was caused to a third party after the leasing. In the opinion in the principal case, Peckham, J., used this language: "I think that even if he do not create it, yet if, to his knowledge, it exist on his premises at the time of the demise, and is of a character dangerous to the public or an adjoining owner, or if he were in truth ignorant, and yet by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence he would have known of its existence, there is no principle which can exempt him from responsibility any more than if he created the nuisance himself." 126 N. Y. 525.

There was some evidence tending to show that the opening in the platform was made, and the insufficient cover attached, some time in 1907 previous to the letting. Whether the owner created the nuisance himself, or whether it was done by some tenant then in the occupancy of the premises, does not appear, and is not controlling. Ever since Rosewell v. Prior, 2 Salk. 459, it has been held that if the nuisance is created by a tenant, and thereafter the landlord takes possession and relets the premises to another with the nuisance remaining thereon, he is liable the same as though he created it in the first instance. For the reasons stated, we are of the opinion that it was for the jury to determine whether or not the appellee knew of the dangerous condition of the premises at the time of the letting, or in time to have abated the nuisance before the injury occurred, or should have known of it by the exercise of ordinary care, and that, in cases where a nuisance dangerous to life is created by the owner on his premises, or through his gross negligence is suffered to remain there, he cannot, by leasing the property to another, avoid his own liability to any person who is rightfully upon the premises, and who, without fault, is injured by reason of such nuisance. And this liability extends to a servant of the tenant, notwithstanding the tenant, by reason of his own fault or neglect or knowledge of the danger, could not have maintained an action against the owner for any injury suffered by himself.

It was error to sustain the demurrer, and the judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

Petition for rehearing denied.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FOURTH CIRCUIT.

SIDNA ALLEN, Plff. in Err.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(— C. C. A. —, 194 Fed. 664.)

Perjury — securing acquittal — double jeopardy.

1. Placing one on trial for perjury which secured his acquittal of another offense is not placing him twice in jeopardy for the same offense.

Evidence — perjury — sufficiency.

2. To sustain a conviction of perjury for giving evidence which secured the acquittal of accused upon another charge, the falsity of the oath must be proved by positive and direct testimony, circumstantial evidence alone not being sufficient.

(February 27, 1912.)

Note. — Acquittal of crime as a bar to a subsequent prosecution of defendant for perjury committed on the former trial.

It is a general rule that the acquittal of a defendant on a criminal prosecution in which he testified, does not bar a subsequent prosecution against him for perjury committed upon the former trial. Where the issues in both trials were practically the same, however, it has been held that the decision in the first prosecution was res judicata.

The general rule just stated was applied in People v. Sculley, 3 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 244, where it was held that an acquittal upon a trial for robbery was not a bar to a prosecution for perjury committed by the accused in the former trial, in stating that he did not aid or assist in the robbery, and knew nothing about it. The court said: "The objection was suggested to my mind when the jury was impaneled, as to whether the case did not involve such a re-examination of the preceding case as to preclude the prosecution of the offense by way of indictment for perjury committed upon that trial. Of course, such a case could not have arisen before the act was passed allowing the defendant to be a witness in his own behalf, and that statute is of recent date; and there is no case that I am aware of where this precise point has arisen, as to whether or not a person may be indicted for perjury for giving testimony falsely upon a trial of himself which may have resulted in his acquittal. But the preceding rule of the common law was that a judgment received by a person in his favor could not be admitted in his favor. It was a record upon which he could stand as a legal estoppel, but, it was a matter open for re-examination; and if it was obtained by perjury on the part of the person in whose favor it might be rendered, there was a good reason for holding that though the perjury had been success-

ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Western District of North Carolina to review a judgment convicting defendant of perjury. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Pritchard, Circuit Judge, and Dayton and Rose, District Judges.

Messrs. Walter S. Tipton and Watson, Buxton, & Watson, for plaintiff in error:

Where the evidence in the criminal and perjury cases is the same, the perjury case will not lie.

United States v. Butler, 38 Fed. 498; Cooper v. Com. 106 Ky. 909, 45 L.R.A. 216, 90 Am. St. Rep. 275, 51 S. W. 789, 59 S. W. 524, 11 Am. Crim. Rep. 625; United States v. McKee, 4 Dill. 128, Fed. Cas. No. 15,688; Coffey v. United States, 118 U. S.

ful, it would not exonerate him from criminal prosecution. The statute allowing witnesses to take the stand in their own behalf, and subjecting them to the same consequences as other witnesses, has exposed the accused, where he gives false testimony knowingly, to prosecution by way of indictment afterwards, although his testimony may have resulted in his favor. If that should not be the rule, then in all cases a very strong inducement would be held out to the accused to swear falsely, if he could swear falsely with the assurance in his own mind that he would be under no criminal accountability whatever, and that he could not be indicted the same as any other witness might be. That was not any part of the purpose of the law allowing the accused to be a witness in his own behalf on the trial. One of the objects was to subject him to all the restraints and obligations that other witnesses were subjected to, in order to insure, so far as possible, a truthful statement from him when he was placed as witness upon the stand. It is more important that these restraints should be imposed upon a person swearing in his own behalf in a civil or criminal case, than upon other persons, for the purpose of securing, as far as possible, truthful testimony in courts of justice. If they are not to be imposed then the criminal goes upon the stand with the knowledge that he may swear falsely, and is in no manner responsible for the crime, and thus destroy one of the great safeguards that might be expected to accrue. I think the law is not designed to uphold any such inconsistency."

And, in State v. Williams, 60 Kan. 838, 58 Pac. 476, affirmed on rehearing on other grounds in 61 Kan. 739, 60 Pac. 1050, it was held that an acquittal of the defendant in a prosecution for assault and battery was not an adjudication of the truthfulness of the defendant's testimony, and not such an adjudication as barred a prosecution for perjury in testifying that he did not strike the one upon whom the assault was alleged to have been committed, with a pistol, or have a pistol in his possession.

And this case was followed in State v. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

436, 29 L. ed. 684, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437; Petit v. Com. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 262, 57 S. W. 14.

Before the jury can convict of perjury, the falsity of the oath must be proven by two credible witnesses, or by one such witness and corroborative circumstances sufficient to turn the scales against the defendant's oath.

United States v. Wood, 14 Pet. 430, 10 L. ed. 527; State v. Miller, 24 W. Va. 807; State v. Hawkins, 115 N. C. 712, 20 S. E. 623; State v. Massey, 97 N. C. 465, 2 S. E. 445; Schwartz v. Com. 27 Gratt. 1025, 21 Am. Rep. 365, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 410; United States v. Hall, 10 L.R.A. 324, 44 Fed. 864; Peterson v. State, 74 Ala. 34; McClerkin v. State, 20 Fla. 879; People v.

Bevill, 79 Kan. 524, 131 Am. St. Rep. 345, 100 Pac. 476, 17 Ann. Cas. 753, holding that an acquittal in a prosecution charging illegal fishing was not a bar to a prosecution against the defendant for perjury committed on the former trial, in testifying that he did not set certain nets or take fish therefrom.

And in State v. Cary, 159 Ind. 504, 65 N. E. 527, it was held that an acquittal of the defendant in a prosecution for criminal assault did not establish the fact that testimony which he gave in his behalf, denying the commission of the assault, was true, or bar a prosecution against him for perjury.

So, in State v. Caywood, 96 Iowa, 372, 65 N. W. 385, it was held that an acquittal for larceny was not res judicata in a prosecution against the defendant for perjury committed in the former trial.

And in State v. Vandemark, 77 Conn. 201, 58 Atl. 715, 1 Ann. Cas. 161, it was held that an acquittal in a prosecution for criminal conspiracy to commit an assault was not a bar to a prosecution for perjury committed by the defendant on the former trial, in stating that he was not at certain places at given times, and did not commit the assault, and had no knowledge of it; since the offenses were wholly distinct, and it was impossible that evidence sufficient to prove the former could be sufficient to prove the latter.

And in Dickerson v. State, 18 Wyo. 440, 111 Pac. 857, 116 Pac. 448, where a plea in bar tendered the issue of former acquittal, it was held that such a plea in a prosecution for perjury, setting up the defendant's acquittal of the crime of rape on the trial in which the perjury was alleged to have been committed, was insufficient.

So, in People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 678, 100 N. W. 908, it was held that the defendant's acquittal of the crime of bribery was not a bar to a prosecution for perjury committed in the former trial, by stating that he had been sent to offer the bribe by a certain person.

After referring to United States v. Butler; Cooper v. Com.; and Petit v. Com. infra, the court in this case said: "These cases are authority for the proposition that an acquittal of a certain charge is a complete defense to a subsequent prosecution for perjury; which is based upon the assumption that respondent was guilty of that charge. If this proposition be sound, and it has been denied . . . it has no application to this case. It is true that the perjured testimony under consideration was material, because it strengthened respondent's claim that he was not acting corruptly. But its falsity is not, legally speaking, inconsistent with respondent's innocence of the crime of bribery. Because respondent was innocent of that crime, it does not follow that all testimony tending to prove his innocence was true, and that all testimony tending to prove his guilt was false. It is not even certain that the jury who acquitted respondent of the charge of bribery found that De Vries did not send him to Renihan. From the nature of the case this is a fact extremely difficult, if not impossible, to be proved. But if we assume that they did so find, as alleged in respondent's plea, it by no means follows that such finding is res judicata in this suit. The foregoing authorities certainly do not so hold. Because the people may not prosecute one for perjury upon the basis that he was guilty of the crime for which he has been acquitted, it by no means follows that they cannot prosecute him for perjury simply because the jury credited his perjured testimony, and particularly when the prosecution for the crime of perjury does not proceed upon grounds inconsistent with his innocence of the first charge. The verdict of the jury in the first case adjudged respondent innocent of the crime of bribery. By what reasoning can it be contended that it also adjudged him innocent of the crime of perjury in giving his testimony therein? He was not then tried for that charge, and he could not have been convicted of it. If a prosecution on that charge had been at once instituted, the pendency of the first prosecution could not have been pleaded in abatement of the second; and it has been held that the judgment in the suit in which perjury is alleged to have been committed is inadmissible evidence 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Wells, 103 Cal. 631, 37 Pac. 529; Haines v. State, 109 Ga. 526, 35 S. E. 141; State v. Waddle, 100 Iowa, 57, 69 N. W. 279; Wadlington v. Com. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1108, 59 S. W. 851; State v. Jean, 42 La. Ann. 946, 8 So. 480; Com. v. Pollard, 12 Met. 225; Com. v. Butland, 119 Mass. 317; Vance v. State, 62 Miss. 137; Whittle v. State, 79 Miss. 327, 30 So. 722, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 574; State v. Blize, 111 Mo. 464, 20 S. W. 210; State v. Gibbs, 10 Mont. 213, 10 L.R.A. 749, 25 Pac. 289; Gandy v. State, 23 Neb. 436, 36 N. W. 817; Crusen v. State, 10 Ohio St. 258; Williams v. Com. 91 Pa. 493; State v. Buie, 43 Tex. 532; Grandison v. State, 29 Tex. App. 186; Galloway v. State, 29 Ind. 442.

Messrs. A. E. Holton and A. L. Coble, for defendant in error:

The acquittal of a defendant charged with crime is no bar to his prosecution for perjury in having testified falsely on the first prosecution.

State v. Vandemark, 77 Conn. 201, 58 Atl. 715, 1 Ann. Cas. 161; United States v. Houston, 4 Cranch, C. C. 266, Fed. Cas. No. 15,398; United States v. Randenbush, 8 Pet. 288, 8 L. ed. 948; State v. Morgan, 95 N. C. 641; Coffey v. United States, 116 U. S. 436, 29 L. ed. 684, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437; State v. Beville, 79 Kan. 524, 131 Am. St. Rep. 345, 100 Pac. 476, 17 Ann. Cas. 753; 30 Cyc. 1422; State v. Cary, 159 Ind. 504, 65 N. E. 527; State v. Williams, 60 Kan.

on the question of guilt or innocence in the prosecution for perjury. . . . The general proposition that one can escape punishment for perjury, because he succeeded in inducing a jury to credit his false testimony, is supported neither by authority nor by reason. If he could, then it is true, as stated by counsel for the people, that the law encourages parties, particularly respondents in criminal cases, to perjure themselves. We must declare that the law is guilty of no such folly. Is the rule changed by the fact that the suit in which credit was given to the perjured testimony was another suit between the same parties? We think not. "The former verdict is conclusive only as to facts directly and distinctly put in issue, and the finding of which is necessary to uphold the judgment. The doctrine of estoppel [that is, the conclusiveness of a former judgment] is restricted to facts directly in issue, and does not extend to facts which rest in evidence, and are merely collateral. "A fact or matter in issue is that upon which plaintiff proceeds by his action, and which the defendant controverts in his pleadings, while collateral facts are such as are offered in evidence to establish the matters or facts in issue." "

In State v. Smith, — Minn. —, 137 N. W. 295, it was held that unless the conviction on the charge of perjury necessarily imported a contradiction of the jury's verdict of not guilty in the former trial for arson, the prosecution for perjury was not barred; and it was held that the jury's verdict of not guilty in the arson case in question, in which evidence was given of the defendant's admissions of being at the place where the arson was alleged to have been committed and of setting the fire in question, did not bar a prosecution for perjury based upon the defendant's denials of such admissions on the trial for arson.

Where the issues in both trials were practically the same, it has been held however, that the decision in the first prosecution was res judicata in the subsequent prosecution for perjury.

Thus, in United States v. Butler. 38 Fed. 498, the defendant had been acquitted upon 837, 58 Pac. 476; Hutcherson v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 67, 24 S. W. 908.

Circumstantial evidence is sufficient to convict of perjury.

United States v. Wood, 14 Pet. 430, 10 L. ed. 527; 1 Greenl. Ev. ¶ 258; People v. Doody, 172 N. Y. 165, 64 N. E. 807, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 576, affirming 72 App. Div. 372, 76 N. Y. Supp. 606; 30 Cyc. 1453; Beach v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 240, 22 S. W. 976; State v. Journigan, 120 N. C. 568, 26 S. E. 696; State v. Knox, 61 N. C. (Phill. L.) 313.

Rose, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error was the defendant below. He will be called the defendant. The defendant in error will be referred to as the government. The circumstances are peculiar. A year before the present indictment was returned, the defendant and one Dickins had been jointly indicted in the court below for (1) making counterfeit $20 gold pieces; (2) having such coins in their possession with intent to defraud; and (3) passing or attempting to pass some of such coins on particular individuals. To such indictment Dickins pleaded guilty. The defendant stood his trial. It was proved that the defendant and Dickins lived close together in Carroll county, Virginia. They had been for some time closely associated. The defendant had in writing ordered machinery which could be used to make counterfeit coins. He had paid for this machinery by his personal check. Dickins had invented a wagon brake. The defendant had a half interest in the patent therefor. In February, 1910, they came together to Winston-Salem, North Carolina. Their avowed purpose was to sell rights under the brake patent. While in Winston-Salem, Dickins passed or attempted to pass two of the counterfeit coins, one upon a prostitute, and the other upon a hack driver. As a result of his offering one of the coins to the latter, he was arrested. At the time he attempted to pass these coins, and when he was arrested, the defendant was waiting for him at a railroad station in Winston-Salem. There were many other facts and circumstances offered in evidence. Some of these tended to show that the defendant and Dickins were acting in concert. There was testimony that some man who answered more or less closely to the description of the defendant had, after the arrest of Dickins, made an unsuccessful attempt to recover from the prostitute the coin which had been passed upon her. The defendant took the stand in his own behalf. He admitted everything to which those government witnesses, who had positively identified him, had sworn. He gave an explanation of all such circumstances consistent with his lack of any knowledge of or participation in any illegal act of Dickins. He denied that he had ever visited the prostitute in question, or had ever had any communication of any kind with her. He was acquitted.

an indictment for unlawfully selling liquor, and it was held in a subsequent prosecution for perjury in stating that he did not sell it, as charged, that a plea of prior acquittal was bad, since the indictments were not for the same transaction nor sustained by the same evidence, but it was held that such acquittal was a conclusive adjudication in defendant's favor in the prosecution for perjury. The court said: "It certainly strikes one as an anomaly that, after an acquittal for a criminal offense, a party may be put upon trial for perjury, in swearing that he was not guilty of that offense; but I do not think a plea of former acquittal is the proper way to take advantage of it. To make such a plea effective it must appear that the same evidence will sustain both indictments, and that they relate to the same transaction. Thus, if a person be acquitted of robbery, he cannot be convicted of larceny of the same property; nor, after conviction for arson, can a prisoner be tried for murder committed in burning the building, although it has been held that a trial and conviction for an assault and battery is no bar to a subsequent indictment for manslaughter. Burns v. People, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 182. But the offense of perjury is a totally distinct and separate thing from 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) selling liquor, and was committed at a different time, although it related to the same transaction, and the evidence that will sustain one will only partly sustain the other. If defendant's contention were sound it would follow as a matter of course that if he had been convicted upon the first indictment for selling liquor, he could have pleaded a prior conviction to the indictment for perjury, a point I should be quite unwilling to concede. But I am clearly of the opinion that upon the trial of this case the defendant would be entitled to show that he had been acquitted of the offense concerning which he is charged to have committed perjury, and that such acquittal would be conclusive. Whenever the same fact has been put in issue between the same parties, the verdict of the jury upon such issue is a complete estoppel. This case contains all the elements of a plea of res judicata: the parties are the same; the point in issue, viz., whether he did in fact sell liquor, is the same, and the quantum of proof requisite in both cases is also the same. Had he sworn before the commissioner that he had paid his tax, and had been acquitted by the jury upon the ground that he did not sell liquor, the issue would have been different, and perhaps such difference might have been

About twelve months afterwards, the indictment now before us was found. By it he is charged with perjury in having sworn at his trial for counterfeiting that he was not guilty of the counterfeiting charge; that he did not have the counterfeit coins in his possession, nor did he attempt to pass them; that he had nothing to do with the counterfeit money that Dickens made and passed; that he did not know that Dickens had in his possession in Winston-Salem a counterfeit coin; that he did not make or aid and abet Dickens in the manufacture of counterfeit coins; and that he was in Winston-Salem on February 10, 1910, only for the purpose of selling a patent wagon brake. At the trial of the defendant for perjury, the testimony on both sides was in all substantial respects the same as that which had been given when he was called upon to answer the indictment for counterfeiting. It is true that the government did prove two additional attempts of Dickens to pass the counterfeit coins. When making one of these attempts, it was shown that Dickens had a companion. Such companion did not look unlike the defendant, but the witness would not swear that it was in fact the defendant. The defendant was convicted.

A number of assignments of error are made. The most important are intended to raise the questions (1) whether such a prosecution can be maintained at all; and (2) whether the defendant can be properly convicted when no witness has testified that what the defendant had sworn in the first trial was false, and when it is not shown that the defendant has ever, in writing or otherwise, made any representations necessarily inconsistent with the truthfulness of the evidence for the giving of which he was put upon his trial.

The defendant says that he has been twice put in jeopardy for the same offense. With this contention we cannot agree. Passing or trying to pass in February counterfeit coins upon various residents of Winston-Salem is not the same offense as fore-swearing one's self in June in the United States district court at Greensboro. State v. Vandemark, 77 Conn. 201, 58 Atl. 715, 1 Ann. Cas. 161; State v. Williams, 60 Kan. 838, 58 Pac. 476; Hutcherson v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 67, 24 S. W. 908; State v. Beville, 79 Kan. 524, 131 Am. St. Rep. 345, 100 Pac. 476, 17 Ann. Cas. 753; State v. Cary, 159 Ind. 504, 65 N. E. 527; People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 679, 100 N. W. 908; State v. Caywood, 96 Iowa, 372, 65 N. W. 385. In every one of these cases, the defendant was held properly convicted of perjury while testifying in his own behalf when under prosecution for an offense of which he was acquitted. It is true that the right to convict for perjury committed under such circumstances has been denied. United States v. Butler (D. C.) 38 Fed. 498; Cooper v. Com. 106 Ky. 909, 45 L.R.A. 216, 90 Am. St. Rep. 275, 51 S. W. 789, 59 S. W. 524; Petit v. Com. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 262, 57 S. W. 14.

But in none of those cases was it held shown by parol, but in this case the two issues were identically the same."

And in Cooper v. Com. 106 Ky. 909, 45 L.R.A. 216, 90 Am. St. Rep. 275, 51 S. W. 789, 59 S. W. 524, it was held that an acquittal on a charge of adultery was a bar to a prosecution of the accused for perjury in swearing that he did not commit the offense. The court said: "Appellant in this case had already been tried and acquitted of the offense of having had carnal sexual intercourse with Libbie Purvis, and the judgment in that case is res judicata against the Commonwealth, and he cannot again be put on trial, where the truth or falsity of the charge in that indictment is the gist of the question under investigation."

And this case was followed in Petit v. Com. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 262, 57 S. W. 14, where it was held that an acquittal on a prosecution for carrying a deadly weapon was a bar to a prosecution against the defendant for false swearing as to whether or not he was carrying such weapon.

Referring to the Butler Case supra, the court, in State v. Williams, 60 Kan. 838, 58 Pac. 476, said: "In that case the defendant, who had been acquitted upon a charge of selling liquor without the payment of the special tax required by law, was prosecuted 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

for perjury for swearing that he did not sell the liquor; and it was held that his acquittal of selling liquor was an adjudication in his favor on the subsequent trial for perjury, and that the government could not show that his sworn statement was false. It will be observed, however, that the issues there were more nearly identical than in the present case. The defendant swore that he did not sell liquor, and the finding of the jury was that he did not sell it. So, it was held that a person could not be convicted of perjury in swearing to a state of facts which a jury in another case against him had found to be true. Even in that case it was said that if the defendant had sworn that he had paid his tax, and had been acquitted by the jury upon the ground that he did not sell the liquor, the issue would have been different. So, here the defendant may have had a pistol in his hand or on his person at the time of the alleged assault, without being guilty of the offense charged against him in the police court; and he may even have struck Stevens with the pistol, and still have been acquitted on the ground that it was necessary for his own defense; and therefore there is not the identity of issues that there was in the Butler Case." J. T. W.

that the prosecution for perjury put the defendant a second time in jeopardy for the same offense. Indeed, Judge, afterwards Mr. Justice Brown, who decided United States v. Butler, supra, pointed out that it was impossible to hold that the defendant was being tried twice for the same crime. If that were true, a defendant testifying in his own behalf in a criminal trial could safely swear to anything he pleased. He could never be punished for perjury so committed. Autre fois convict is as conclusive a plea as autre fois acquit. But the learned judge was of opinion that, wherever the nature of the perjury alleged was such that the real issue of fact to be passed upon by the jury sworn in the perjury case was necessarily the same which had been already decided by the jury in the first case adversely to the contention upon which the government must stand in the perjury prosecution, the matter was res judicata. In spite of the great weight which the sound learning and broad wisdom of Mr. Justice Brown give to any of his judicial deliverances, his reasoning in this case has failed to secure general acceptance. The highest courts of Connecticut, Indiana, Michigan, Iowa, and Kansas have expressly declined to follow it. It has been adopted by the court of appeals of Kentucky. The reasons why a verdict of acquittal in a criminal case should not necessarily bar a subsequent prosecution of the defendant for perjury committed by him when testifying as a witness in his own behalf are forcibly stated by the supreme court of Michigan in People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 679, 100 N. W. 908. As there argued, public policy may require the recognition of the right sometimes to institute such prosecution. If so much be granted, it may be neither easy nor safe to lay down a fixed and unvarying rule of law defining the circumstances under which such prosecutions may or may not be undertaken. For the purposes of this case, it is enough to say that it is very hard to imagine any state of things which would justify an indictment for perjury of an acquitted defendant against whom the government offers no other substantial evidence than that which had been before the jury which had found him not guilty. The government and its prosecuting officers should not discredit the verdicts and judgments of its own courts by seeking to induce one jury to find that another gave a wrong verdict upon what is in all material respects the same testimony. The record in the case at bar suggests that the able and experienced attorney for the United States, when he began the prosecution for perjury, had some reason to think that one of the new witnesses to the passing by Dickins of counterfeit coins would be able to identify the defendant as the person who was with him when such attempt was made. After it was found that such identification could not be had, it would have been better to have gone no further with the case. It is unnecessary for us to decide whether upon this record as it stands and as a matter of law we would, upon this ground, be justified in reversing the judgment of the court below. It will have to be set aside for reasons which, unless other evidence shall be forthcoming, will preclude a verdict for the government in any new trial which may be had.

As already stated, no witness testified to anything which was absolutely inconsistent with the defendant's innocence. No admission of his which showed him to be guilty was offered in evidence against him. The defendant prayed the court to instruct the jury that, in order to convict him, the falsity of his oath must be proved by two credible witnesses, or by one such witness and corroborative circumstances sufficient to turn the scale against the defendant's oath. The learned judge declined to give this instruction or others of similar import. He told the jury that such had been the rule of the common law, but that it did not apply in a case like the present. He added: "This case depends largely upon circumstantial evidence. . . . The law of circumstantial evidence is not supplanted by the rule of the common law which I have stated; but in an indictment for perjury, if the prosecution has introduced testimony showing circumstances which are well connected, strong, cogent, and convincing, which irresistibly lead the minds of the jury to the conclusion beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant swore falsely as charged in the indictment, that he swore contrary to what he necessarily knew to be the truth, not only is the jury warranted in returning a verdict of guilty under such circumstances, but it would be their duty to do so."

To the refusal of the instructions asked for by him and to the portion of the charge of the learned judge above referred, the defendant duly excepted and has assigned error. Such assignments must be sustained. In trials for treason and perjury almost alone are now to be found any survival of the practice of arbitrarily measuring the probative value of evidence by the number of witnesses. It is true that in perjury the requirements of the rule are not now what they once were. There is no question that there are cases in which neither the two witnesses of the earlier law, nor the one witness with strong corroboration of the later, are required to support a conviction. The court and the text-writers have said that the oath of a living witness to the falsity of the statement in question is not indispensable. "First, where the falsehood of the matter sworn by the prisoner is directly proved by documentary or written evidence springing from himself with circumstances showing the corrupt intent; secondly, in cases where the matter so sworn is contradicted by a public record, proved to have been well known by the prisoner when he took the oath, the oath only being proved to have been taken; and thirdly, in cases where the party is charged with taking an oath contrary to what he must necessarily have known to be true, the falsehood being shown by his own letters relating to the fact sworn to, or by any other written testimony existing and being found in his possession and which has been treated by him as containing the evidence of the fact recited in it. United States v. Wood, 14 Pet. 440, 441, 10 L. ed. 527, 533; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 258.

It may well be that a conviction might be sustained under still other circumstances, although the living witness was not forthcoming. If so, the evidence that the defendant had in fact forsworn himself must be direct and positive. If true, it must demonstrate the defendant's guilt. Such was the testimony held sufficient in People v. Doody, 172 N. Y. 165, 64 N. E. 807, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 576. We have examined the other authorities relied on by the government. None of them sustain its contention. We have already quoted from Greenleaf on Evidence. 30 Cyc. 1452, in so many words declares: "Positive and direct evidence is absolutely necessary in a perjury case. Circumstantial evidence standing alone is never sufficient."

In Beach v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 240, 22 S. W. 976, the acts proved were absolutely inconsistent with the innocence of the accused. The court there, it is true, says that two witnesses need not swear directly adversely to the fact sworn by the defendant. It is sufficient when the facts conclusively demonstrate his guilt. It, however, shows the sense in which it intends its words to be understood, by citing as its authority for them United States v. Wood, supra. The most recent text-writers recognize that to convict of perjury the government must produce testimony of a more direct and positive character than is required to justify a verdict of guilty of other offenses. There is no suggestion that the rule as laid down in Greenleaf and in United States v. Wood, supra, is not in substance still binding on the courts. 3 Wigmore, Ev. § 2040; 2 Chamberlayne, Ev. § 989.

In this case no witness directly swore to the falsity of any of the testimony for the giving of which the defendant was indicted. Nor is there any direct written evidence springing from himself which proves any of that testimony to be untrue. No admission or action of his established by the evidence is logically inconsistent with his innocence. Under such circumstances the refusal of the instructions asked for by him and the giving of the portion of the charge above quoted constituted prejudicial error.

The judgment of the lower court will have to be reversed.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FIRST CIRCUIT.

JOHN P. REYNOLDS, Trustee in Bankruptcy, Appt.,

v.

NEW YORK TRUST COMPANY.

(110 C. C. A. 409, 188 Fed. 611.)

Trover — right to waive tort — consumption of property.

1. The right to waive the tort, and sue in contract for conversion of property, does not fail because the property is consumed rather than converted into money.

Courts — Federal — effect of state decisions.

2. A Federal bankruptcy court is not bound by the decisions of the courts of the state in which it is sitting, as to the right of one whose property has been converted and consumed, to waive the tort and sue in contract for its value.

Note. — Bankruptcy: double proof of claim against estate of firm and individual partner.

This note does not include the cases on the right to prove a debt against the respective estates of two partnerships composed in whole or in part of the same members. Nor does it include cases like Re Knight, 2 Biss. 518, Fed. Cas. No. 7,880, 8 Nat. Bankr. Rep. 436, holding that where there are partnership and individual debts, and there are no partnership assets and no solvent partner, the debts of the firm and of the individual member may be proved against the individual estate, which is to be distributed pari passu among the creditors.

Generally, as to provability and discharge of partnership debts in individual proceedings, see the note in 69 L.R.A. 772.

As to the effect of an adjudication of bankruptcy of a member of the firm upon the rights of the firm creditors against the firm property, see the note in 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 787.

Bankruptcy — quasi contracts — conversion — waiver of tort.

3. A contract, express or implied, for which claims may be filed under the bankruptcy act, includes quasi contracts to pay for property converted and consumed by the debtor.

Same — partnership — proof against firm and individual.

4. One whose bonds have been converted and consumed by a brokerage firm cannot, upon the theory that the tort is both joint and several, so as to permit him to proceed in contract, prove his claim in bankruptcy proceedings both against the estate of the firm and that of an individual partner who is not shown to have participated in the conversion or benefited thereby.

(June 22, 1911.)

As to the effect of an adjudication of bankruptcy of the partnership, to subject the separate estates of the partners to administration in bankruptcy, see the note in 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 654.

As to the application of partnership assets, with the consent of all partners, to the payment of an individual debt of a partner, as a voidable preference under the bankruptcy act, see the note in 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1040.

As to whether the individual partner, as well as the firm, must be insolvent in order to render the firm bankrupt, or to avoid a payment of a firm debt as a preference, see the note in 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 960.

As to whether a preference of a firm creditor by a partner, out of his own property, is an act of bankruptcy by the firm, see the note in 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 656.

Pertinent to the matters discussed in REYNOLDS v. NEW YORK TRUST CO. is the question whether an unliquidated claim for tort may be proved in bankruptcy. This question was discussed in the note in 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 961, which shows that it has been very generally held not only under the present bankruptcy law, but under the preceding bankruptcy laws, that unliquidated claims for damages arising ex delicto are not provable in bankruptcy, the only exception being such actions for tort as may be waived, and an action ex contractu maintained.

Generally, as to election between tort and assumpsit, see the note in 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 280.

English rule.

With respect to the question herein considered the rule was established in England, at an early date, that joint and several creditors could not resort to both estates. This rule is said, in Emery v. Canal Nat. Bank, 3 Cliff. 507, Fed. Cas. No. 4,446, 7 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 217, to have been first promulgated in Ex parte Rowlandson (1735), 3 P. Wms. 405, in which the obligee in a joint and several bond proved his debt under three separate commissions,—that of the partnership and those of each part-

A PPEAL by the trustee in bankruptcy from an order of the District Court for the District of Massachusetts allowing a claim of the New York Trust Company for a certain amount against the individual estate of E. H. Gay, bankrupt. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Colt, Circuit Judge, and Aldrich and Brown, District Judges.

Messrs. Tyler & Young and Woodman & Whitehouse for appellant.

Mr. Charles P. Howland for appellee.

Brown, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal by the trustee in bankruptcy of E. H. Gay, from an order

ner,—and after receiving a dividend under the joint commission, applied for a dividend under each separate commission. The chancellor was at first inclined to think that the petitioner, being a joint and several creditor, ought to be at liberty to come in under each of the commissions provided that he received but a single satisfaction, but afterwards held that since, if a person to whom others are jointly and severally bound sues the obligors severally, he cannot thereafter sue them jointly, the petitioner should be put to his election as to which commission in bankruptcy he would claim under. It was argued in behalf of the petitioner that the reason for the rule preventing both joint and several suits upon a joint and several obligation was based upon the want of necessity therefor, in that, if the obligee should sue the obligors jointly and recover judgment, he would be entitled to resort to both the joint and separate estates in execution, and that it would therefore be fruitless and vexatious to bring separate actions to accomplish what could be done by one; and that the bankruptcy of the debtor ought not to deprive the creditor of this advantage given him by law, so long as he did not receive a double satisfaction. In support of this position, a case decided three years earlier, but apparently unreported, was cited, in which a joint and several creditor was entitled to realize under both commissions. But the chancellor distinguished this case upon the ground that there the creditor had not only a debt against the partnership, but had the individual bond of the bankrupt partner for the same debt. While the Rowlandson Case has been cited as negating the right to make double proof, the exact holding would seem to be that, while a joint and several creditor may prove his debt against both estates, he cannot, so long as each estate is insufficient to meet the debts for which it is primarily liable, claim dividends from both estates, at least if he does not hold the separate and independent obligation of the bankrupt partner for the same debt.

So, also, subsequent cases adopted the rule that the obligee in a bond to whom the of the district court for the district of Massachusetts, allowing a claim of the New York Trust Company for the sum of $14,875, against the individual estate of E. H. Gay. A claim of like amount was allowed against the copartnership estate of E. H. Gay & Company, bankrupt. From the allowance of the claim against the copartnership estate, there is no appeal.

The question before us is whether the trust company has the right to make double proof, and to have its claim allowed both against the copartnership estate and against the individual estate of one of the copartners.

By stipulation the parties have agreed upon the following facts:

(1) E. H. Gay was the managing partner

bankrupts were jointly and severally bound must make his election come upon the joint or separate estates, and, having chosen to come upon one, he could not come upon the other for the deficiency until the creditors of such other were first served. Ex parte Banks (1740) 1 Atk. 106; Ex parte Bond (1745) 1 Atk. 99. The Banks Case, like the Rowlandson Case, supra, based its conclusion upon the ground that, although the bond creditors might have brought separate actions and had separate execution, they could not have levied their debt upon both estates at the same time. In the Bond Case, it was reasoned that to permit a joint and several creditor to resort to both estates would prejudice the joint creditors, who were said to have an equal right with the former to resort to the residue of the individual estate after the payment of the individual creditors.

What was said in the discussion of Ex parte Rowlandson, supra, with respect to the distinction between proving the debt and the allowance of dividends, is borne out by the statement in Ex parte Bentley (1790), 2 Cox, Ch. Cas. 288, 2 Revised Rep. 36, that it had been the constant practice for a joint and several creditor under such circumstances to be admitted to prove under both a joint and separate estate, so long as he made his election before a dividend.

In Ex parte Bevan (1804) 10 Ves. Jr. 107, Lord Eldon said that he had never been able to understand why a creditor having a joint and several security should not go against both estates, but that it was settled otherwise upon reasons not very intelligible; and held, in conformity with the established rule, that the advantage of a joint and several creditor was no more than that he could elect whether he would in the first instance be a joint or several creditor, and that if he elected the former, he was entitled to no preference out of the surplus of the separate estate, but that the other joint creditors came in on an equal footing with him in resorting to that estate. This case was followed in Ex parte Hay (1808) 15 Ves. Jr. 4.

In another case the commissioners allowed 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of E. H. Gay & Company. The New York Trust Company, owner of twenty-five $500 first-mortgage 6 per cent bonds of the Manistee, Filer City, & East Lake Street Railway Company, lodged them with E. H. Gay & Company on March 14, 1905, together with $3,125 in cash, under a deposit agreement by which E. H. Gay & Company were to deliver to the New York Trust Company at par value $15,625 bonds of a corporation to be organized in the course of the reorganization of the railway company.

(2) In pursuance of this agreement, the Manistee Light & Traction Company was incorporated. Its bonds were issued and delivered to E. H. Gay & Company, who received and held 15 $\frac{625}{630}$ of them for the double proof, but the court of review, upon appeal to it, was evenly divided as to the propriety of the rule (Ex parte Moulton, Montagu, Bankr. Cas. 321), but upon appeal to the chancellor he affirmed the judgment of the two judges who were against double proof, placing his decision upon the ground of authority. (1832) 2 Deacon & C. 419.

There were other early English cases upon this question, but they will not be here treated. A few of the cases have been set out for the purpose of showing the early adoption of the rule and the subsequent inclination to regret its adoption, preceding the enactment of a bankruptcy law treating that precise question.

The provision of the English statute that if a debtor is liable in respect of distinct contracts as a sole contractor, and also as a member of a firm, the circumstance that the sole contractor is also one of the joint contractors shall not prevent proof in respect of the contracts against the properties respectively liable on the contract,—was held in Re Parker (1887) L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 84, 56 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 338, 57 L. T. N. S. 198, 35 Week. Rep. 566, to authorize double proof where trust money is misappropriated by a firm of which one of the partners is one of the trustees of the estate. The court pointed out that there was a joint liability on the part of the partners to restore the money, and a separate and distinct individual liability of the individual partner, founded upon his duty as trustee. This case was followed in Re Macfadyen [1908] 2 K. B. 817, 77 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1027, 52 Sol. Jo. 727.

American cases—early bankruptcy acts.

In 1843 the Federal district court for Massachusetts expressly repudiated the English rule, in Re Farnum, Fed. Cas. No. 4,674, the court saying that in this country a creditor holding two valid obligations was entitled to the benefit of both. The court, although referring to the distinction made in Re Rowlandson between the joint and several bond involved in that case, and the situation in the case therein distinguished,

New York Trust Company under the deposit agreement. These 15 $62\frac{1}{2}\%$ bonds were pledged by E. H. Gay & Company, without authority from or knowledge of the New York Trust Company, as security for loans negotiated in the course of the firm business of E. H. Gay & Company for their own benefit. No notice was ever sent to the New York Trust Company that the Manistee Light & Traction Company bonds had been received by E. H. Gay & Company for the benefit of the New York Trust Company, and the trust company had no knowledge that E. H. Gay & Company had the bonds.

(3) No attempt is made by the New York Trust Company to show that the unauthorized pledge of the bonds was the individual act of E. H. Gay.

(4) It is hereby stipulated by parties that the market value of bonds of the Manistee Light & Traction Company at the time of conversion herein was $950 for each bond of $1,000 face value, and, if said claim of the petitioner is allowed as a claim against the individual estate of E. H. Gay, it is agreed that such allowance may be in the sum of $14,875.

The claim filed against the copartnership estate made no allegation of a conversion either by the copartnership or by E. H. Gay, but alleged merely the receipt by E. H. Gay & Company of bonds, for delivery to the trust company, and the nondelivery to the trust company.

which involved a separate and distinct obligation of the individual partner, nevertheless repudiated the English rule in its entirety, so far as it prevented double proof of a joint and several obligation, notwithstanding that distinction could have been invoked to differentiate the Farnum Case, since in that case the claimant was the holder of a bill of exchange drawn by the partnership and indorsed by the individual partner, thus presenting two separate and distinct obligations within the meaning of the distinction.

It is to be observed that the Farnum Case was decided under the bankruptcy act of 1841, § 14 of which provided, among other things, that the creditors of the company and the separate creditors of each partner should be allowed to prove their respective debts, and that "the net proceeds of the joint stock shall be appropriated to pay the creditors of the company, and the net proceeds of the separate estate of each partner shall be appropriated to pay his separate creditors; and if there shall be any balance of the separate estate of any partner after the payment of his separate debts, such balance shall be added to the joint stock for the payment of the joint creditors; and if there shall be any balance of the joint stock after the payment of the joint debts, such balance shall be divided and appropriated to and among the separate estates of the several partners, according to their respective rights and interest therein, and as it would have been if the partnership had been dissolved without any bankruptcy; and the sum so appropriated to the separate estate of each partner shall be applied to the payment of his separate debts; . . . and in all other respects the proceedings against partners shall be conducted in the like manner as if they had been commenced and prosecuted against one person alone." 5 Stat. at L. 448, chap. 9.

In Mead v. National Bank, (1868) 6 Blatchf. 180, Fed. Cas. No. 9,366, decided under the bankruptcy act of 1867, § 36 of which is substantially the same as § 14 of the act of 1841, the court intimated its inclination to indorse the position taken by 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Judge Sprague in the Farnum Case. Although the Mead Case has been cited as expressly taking the same position, the court essentially declared that it did not decide the question, and held merely that a creditor of a partnership who took the separate and respective obligations of the firm and of the individual partners, the aggregate amount of all those obligations being equal to the partnership debt, was entitled to prove the obligations respectively against the estate of each maker.

While double proof was not attempted in Re Bigelow, 3 Ben. 146, Fed. Cas. No. 1,397, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 371, involving a bond executed by persons composing a firm, by which they expressly bound themselves jointly and severally, the court declared it to be the American rule that double proof is allowable in such cases, although the actual decision was that the debt was provable against the several estates of the individual bankrupts, as against the objection that it should have been proved against the firm.

Where the claimant has the joint obligation of the partnership and a separate and distinct obligation of an individual partner, for the same debt, he may prove against, and claim a dividend from, both estates. Emery v. Canal Nat. Bank, 3 Cliff. 507, Fed. Cas. No. 4,446, 7 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 217. This case, like the Farnum Case, involved commercial paper signed by the firm and indorsed by an individual member of the firm, thus involving two separate and distinct obligations. The various assignees in bankruptcy, seeking to compel the creditors to elect between the estates, contended that the individual partner was not a "sole trader" within the meaning of § 21 of the bankruptcy act of 1867, providing that if any bankrupt shall, at the time of the adjudication, be liable upon any bill of exchange, promissory note, or other obligation in respect of distinct contracts, "as a sole trader and also as a member of a firm," the circumstance that the sole contractor is also one of the joint contractors shall not prevent proof and receipt of dividends in respect of such distinct contracts against the estates respectively liable upon such con-

The learned district judge was of the opinion that the claim allowed against the firm estate was neither presented nor allowed as a claim based on a liability in tort, and that, as against the firm, no liability in tort had been waived in order to rest the claim on an implied promise arising upon the waiver of tort; but that failure to comply with the firm's express promise was the sole basis of proof against the firm.

The claim against the individual estate of E. H. Gay is based solely upon the theory of an implied contract or quasi contract, arising from the conversion of the bonds by E. H. Gay & Company in the course of the firm business.

By its terms the claim against E. H. Gay tract. The court, however, held that, especially in view of the closing words of the provision, the words "sole trader" meant simply "sole contractor," and cited Ex parte Hinton, De G. Bankr. Cas. 550, as authority for this construction of a similar provision in one of the earlier English bankruptcy acts, and as also going further and declaring that the enactment was intended to include a joint and several promissory note, and that it ought not to be confined to cases where the parties had executed separate instruments.

So, essentially involving distinctive obligations, the case of Re Baxter, Fed. Cas. No. 1,119, 18 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 62, which follows Emery v. Canal Nat. Bank, holds that a corporation could prove a claim against a partnership which was its general business agent, and also against the estate of one of the partners, who was the treasurer of the corporation, where the treasurer, as such, collected certain stock subscriptions, and, without the knowledge or assent of the corporation, paid them over to the firm, which received them in violation of the express terms of their agency, the instrument creating the agency providing that the firm should receive and disburse all moneys of the corporation "except subscriptions to its capital stock."

Where a partnership enters into a composition with creditors in a bankruptcy proceeding to which one of the partners is not a party, the firm creditors are not, upon the bankruptcy of such individual partner, entitled, as against the individual creditors, to resort to the individual estate, except in the case of holders of notes signed by the firm, and indorsed by the individual partner, who may share with the individual creditors in the distribution of the partner's estate, notwithstanding they entered into the composition. Re Adams, 29 Fed. 843.

At least where there are no assets in the individual estate, the fact that proof has been made against the estate in bankruptcy of an executor, for funds misappropriated by him, does not prevent proof of the claim against the estate in bankruptcy of the partnership of which he was a member, the 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

individually alleged a conversion of the bonds by E. H. Gay. This allegation, however, becomes immaterial since the stipulation provides that no attempt is made to show that the unauthorized pledge was the individual act of E. H. Gay; and since it does not appear that E. H. Gay individually received benefit therefrom.

The trust company contends that the conversion was in course of the firm business, and that thereby the partners became jointly and severally liable in tort for the conversion; that upon the waiver of tort there arise implied contracts or quasi-contracts both of the firm and of the individual partners, to pay the value of the bonds converted to the use of the firm.

Where there are separate and distinct funds having been applied to the partnership business with the knowledge and consent of the other partners. Re Tesson, Fed. Cas. No. 13,844, 9 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 378. In this case the court stated that if there had been a separate estate applicable to the payment of this demand, more doubt might arise as to the propriety of proving against the partnership estate.

And it was held in Re Jordan, 2 Fed. 319, that the claim for funds misappropriated by an executor and applied to the use of a partnership of which he was a member, with the knowledge and consent of the other partners, was provable against his individual estate and the joint estate of the partners.

The doctrine of these cases was recognized in Re Thomas, 8 Biss. 139, Fed. Cas. No. 13,886, involving the question whether a creditor of the partnership, holding as security property of an individual partner, was bound to surrender the security before claiming recognition as a partnership creditor. In discussing the question the court said: "There is a class of cases in which it has been held that where a creditor holds notes signed by a firm, and signed or indorsed also by an individual member of the firm, he may prove against both estates, and receive dividends from both. Re Farnum, Fed. Cas. No. 4,674; Mead v. National Bank, 6 Blatchf. 180, Fed. Cas. No. 9,366; Emery v. Canal Nat. Bank, 3 Cliff. 507, Fed. Cas. No. 4,446. These cases established a rule opposed to the old rule on the subject in England, and the principle thus settled seems to reach out to the question involved in the case at bar. The scope of these decisions is that, when an individual member of a firm, as such, becomes surety upon or indorses an obligation of the firm, he thereby gives what is in the nature of security upon his separate estate to the firm creditor; and by reason of the individual liability, superadded to the joint obligation, he places the firm creditor in a position where he can go against the individual as well as the joint estate. Thus, it results that, without the indorsement or individual signature of one of the firm, the firm creditor would have express contracts of the firm and of a co-partner to pay a debt contracted by the firm, the right to prove against both estates may be conceded. If one dealing with a firm procures also the individual undertaking of a partner to answer for the firm debt, there are substantial reasons for permitting him to resort to both estates. Re McCoy, 80 C. C. A. 60, 150 Fed. 106; Chapman v. Bowen, 207 U. S. 89, 52 L. ed. 116, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 32.

The additional several contract of a partner is not implied from the firm transaction, but must be created by a distinct act of the copartner.

As the conversion in the present case was by the firm, in the course of firm business; as the actual participation of E. H. Gay is not proved; as there is no evidence that his individual estate benefited by the firm conversion,—there is difficulty in finding any substantial ground upon which to imply from the circumstances a separate contract of E. H. Gay, which corresponds to an express individual contract to answer for a firm debt.

While the partnership relation exposes one partner to liability for firm debts contracted by another partner without his consent, one partner has no authority to make an individual contract for another partner.

In the present case it is contended that because, under the partnership relation, partners, through firm dealings, may be made jointly and severally liable in tort, there arise quasi ex contractu on waiver of no right to claim against the individual assets until individual creditors had been first satisfied. But holding the individual indorsement or signature, the firm creditor may, in the first instance, prove against the separate as well as the joint estate."

And it was held that although there could be no contribution between the joint and the separate estates unless there should be a surplus of the one or the other, yet when the property of one was pledged for the debt of the other, a court of equity would apply the right of subrogation precisely as it would if the contracting parties were not partners, and thus do justice to the different sets of creditors. Ex parte Massachusetts Hospital L. Ins. Co. Fed. Cas. No. 9,327, 17 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 192. This case involved a note signed by the partnership and by one of the partners individually, who also executed a mortgage upon his individual property to secure the note; and the court held that the holder of the note not only might prove, but was bound to prove, at the request of the separate creditors, his whole debt without deduction, against the joint assets; and that, as against the separate assets of the individual partner, he could prove only for the deficiency after disposing of the security.

In addition to the early Federal cases already cited, holding that the holder of commercial paper in which a firm is bound as maker, and one or more of its partners as indorser or indorsers, may prove the debt against and receive dividend from, both the joint and separate estate, reference may be had to Re Bradley, 2 Biss. 515, Fed. Cas. No. 1,772.

So, also, where the note of a third person bears the separate indorsement of a firm and an individual partner. Re Howard, Fed. Cas. No. 6,750, 4 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 571.

—act of 1898.

Subdivision f of § 5 of the bankruptcy act of 1898 provides as follows: "The net proceeds of the partnership property shall be appropriated to the payment of the partnership debts, and the net proceeds of the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

individual estate of each partner to the payment of his individual debts. Should any surplus remain of the property of any partner after paying his individual debts, such surplus shall be added to the partnership assets, and be applied to the payment of the partnership debts. Should any surplus of the partnership property remain after paying the partnership debts, such surplus shall be added to the assets of the individual partners in the proportion of their respective interests in the partnership." 30 Stat. at L. 548, chap. 541, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3424.

One of the early cases decided under this act, although not involving the matter of double proof, may be cited as perhaps affording a foretaste of subsequent decisions on double proof. This case, Lamoille County Nat. Bank v. Stevens, 107 Fed. 245, 6 Am. Bankr. Rep. 164, holds that a firm note given for a firm debt, and bearing the indorsement of a member of the partnership, is a partnership obligation, irrespective of whether the partner's liability, as indorser has become fixed, and that it cannot therefore be proved against the individual estate. The court pointed out that § 5f makes a sharp distinction between partnership debts and individual debts in respect of participation in partnership and individual assets, and declared that the question in the case was whether the debts were, at the time of the adjudication, as between the individual and the firm, the separate debts of the individual or the joint debts of the firm, and not whether the individual was anyhow liable for the debts.

But it was held in Buckingham v. First Nat. Bank, 65 C. C. A. 498, 131 Fed. 192, 12 Am. Bankr. Rep. 465, that a note signed by a firm and indorsed by a member thereof was a claim against the individual estate of the indorser, and that the holder of the note could claim payment thereof out of the individual estate in preference to the claims of the firm creditors.

In Re Mosier, 112 Fed. 138, 7 Am. Bankr. Rep. 268, the court briefly declares that joint and several notes given by partners for partnership liabilities are none the less tort, not only a joint contract, but also several contracts of each partner to pay the amount of the firm debt. This contention seems also to involve the proposition that upon a conversion of bonds or stock by a partnership, there arise a number of debts; as many individual debts as there are partners, and also a firm debt.

The breach of an express contract to deliver the bonds of the trust company creates only a partnership debt, for payment of which resort must be had to the proceeds of the partnership property. Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, chap. 541, § 5f, 30 Stat. at L. 547, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3424. Upon a suit for such a breach of contract, only a single judgment could be had, a judgment against the firm, upon which resort would be had to the firm assets.

The claim against E. H. Gay is based entirely upon the fact, stated in the stipulation, though not in the claim, that the copartnership converted the bonds. Viewing both estates, we have asserted against E. H. Gay, as a joint debtor, either a breach of express contract of an implied contract to pay for value received; as an individual debtor, the conversion of the bonds, a tort, with a waiver of the remedy in tort. We now reach the important question, whether the fact that there was a conversion by the firm is in itself a sufficient basis for an implied or quasi contract of E. H. Gay individually.

As was said in the opinion of this court partnership debts because the partners are also individually liable, and that since, by the terms of § 5f of the bankruptcy act, no part of the separate property is to go for partnership debts till the separate creditors are fully paid, there can be no individual assets of the partner in which such partnership creditors can participate. Doubtless the notes involved in this case contain the name of the firm and also of the individual partners as makers, instead of bearing the signature of a partner as indorser, as in Buckingham v. First Nat. Bank, supra, and this difference between the two cases leaves room to distinguish them by invoking the distinction alluded to in the Rowlandson Case, between the case of a mere joint and several obligation, and the situation where the creditor's claim against the individual is based upon the latter's independent undertaking.

Re McCoy, 80 C. C. A. 60, 150 Fed. 106, 17 Am. Bankr. Rep. 760, quoting with approval from Re Thomas, supra, and declaring that the rule as so declared under the act of 1867 was not modified by § 5f of the act of 1898, holds that the holder of a note signed in the name of the firm and by the individual partners, and given for money used in the partnership business, could, after proof of the claim against, and receipt of a dividend from, the firm estate, prove his claim for the balance against the individual estate.

The case of Re Coe, 106 C. C. A. 181, 183 Fed. 745, affirming 169 Fed. 1002, which is criticized in REYNOLDS v. NEW YORK TRUST CO., really does not conflict with that case. In the Coe Case it appeared that the bankrupts were importers, and that an arrangement was entered into by them with the claimant bank whereby imported goods were consigned to the bank, which accepted drafts upon it for the purchase price, and upon the delivery of the goods, the bank paid the drafts and drew bills for an equivalent amount upon the bankrupts, to whom were delivered the imported property for sale upon the condition that the bankrupts collect the proceeds and pay them over to the bank. The bankrupt firm sold the goods, collected the money, but misappropriated it, and subsequently the firm and the partners were declared bankrupt, and, under a composition agreement between the creditors on one hand and the bankrupt firm and one of the partners on the other, the claimant filed a claim against the in- upon the amount owing to it. Thereafter the claimant filed a claim against the individual estate of the partner who did not enter into the composition agreement, for the balance of the advance less the dividend received, a wilful conversion being alleged. The referee held that the acceptance of the dividend from the partnership precluded the assertion of the claim against the individual partner, but this decision was reversed by the district court (169 Fed. 1002), which declared that the acceptance of the dividend could not be regarded as an election to treat the indebtedness as a simple contract indebtedness of the firm, since the bank could have originally put in a double proof against the firm assets and against the assets of the individual partners; and also pointed out that the composition in terms did not propose to make any arrangement for the settlement of the individual indebtedness of the one partner, and that therefore no occasion arose for the exercise of an election, even if the doctrine of election applied at all. It was also pointed out that counsel for the trustee in bankruptcy urged that the receipt by the claimant of the dividend under the composition was an admission that the claim made was a simple contract claim against the firm upon the acceptances. In reply, the court said that the stipulation made did not take any position as to the grounds of the claim, but that it simply fixed the amount of the claim, and expressly reserved the rights of the bank, and since the composition did not purport to settle any questions of the individual liability of the one partner, whatever rights the bank had against the individual estate remained unaffected. The circuit court of appeals (106 C. C. A. 181, 183 Fed. 745) stated that the referee regarded the acceptance of the composition as a bar to any in Clarke v. Rogers, 106 C. C. A. 64, 183 Fed. 518: "A claim based on a tort as known at common law is undoubtedly provable whenever it may be resolved into an implied contract. For example, it is a settled rule that where a tortfeasor, by conversion of personal property, has sold the property converted, and received cash therefor, the true owner may sue him for money had and received as on an implied contract."

The trustee, appellant, claims that it is a well-established law that "Unless there has been a sale of the property and a receipt of the proceeds of the same in money, the tort cannot be waived, and an action or claim will not lie as for money had and received upon an implied promise or quasi contract,"—citing Jones v. Hoar, 5 Pick. 285; Ladd v. Rogers, 11 Allen, 209; Allen v. Ford, 19 Pick. 217; Berkshire Glass Co. v. Wolcott, 2 Allen, 227, 79 Am. Dec. 781; Brown v. Holbrook, 4 Gray, 102; Hagar v. Norton, 188 Mass. 50, 73 N. E. 1073; Newmarket Mfg. Co. v. Coon, 150 Mass. 566, 23 N. E. 380; Cooper v. Cooper, 147 Mass. 373, 9 Am. St. Rep. 721, 17 N. E. 892.

While some of these cases might be distinguished on the ground that they relate merely to the scope of the special action for money had and received, yet it must be conceded that upon the whole they may be regarded as giving a somewhat narrow limitation to the doctrine of quasi contract. We should be reluctant, however, to rule that the claim should be disallowed on so limited a view of the scope of the law of quasi contracts.

It is difficult to find any substantial ground upon which the judicial conscience which admits the use of fiction to sustain an action of assumpsit for money had and received should refuse to adopt a similar fiction upon an action in assumpsit for goods sold and delivered. Where a person has converted personal property to his own use by keeping, concealing, or consuming it, there is every reason for requiring him to pay its value, and for giving the owner an option to sue upon contract. To hold him upon an implied contract if he has sold the goods for money and used the proceeds, but to refuse to hold him upon an implied contract for the value of goods consumed, but not sold, is to limit the doctrine of quasi contracts by an arbitrary distinction, which disregards the substantial similarity of the two cases.

If the plaintiff's goods are taken, his right to waive the tort and to sue in contract should be the same whether the de-claim against the individual estate, and that it would have been so if the liability asserted against his estate had been for his contractual liability on the acceptances, as to which the partners were jointly liable; but that such was not the case since the individual's liability was predicated of his conversion of the proceeds of the goods, instead of paying them over to the claimants, to whom they belonged. It is at this point that the language quoted in REYNOLDS v. NEW YORK TRUST CO. is used, but it should be noted that the court immediately thereafter used the following language: "The bank could prove two claims, one against the firm," i. e., the partners jointly on the acceptances, "and the other against the partners jointly and severally upon an implied contract (the tort being waived) to repay moneys of the bank wrongfully converted by them. The doctrine of election between inconsistent remedies on the same claim has no application." Really the Coe Case actually holds only that resorting to the partnership estate upon the basis of the debt as evidenced by the acceptances did not preclude the creditor from resorting to the estate of the individual upon the basis of the implied contract arising from his wrongful misappropriation. Of course, it is true that so far as the language just quoted seems to recognize the right to prove "against the partners jointly and severally upon an implied contract (the tort being waived)," it is in conflict with the REYNOLDS CASE. But 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the fact remains that the creditor in the Coe Case may be said to have elected to prove upon the implied contract against the partner individually; and therefore the language referred to was unnecessary to the decision of the case, for it is to be observed that, since the Coe Case involved distinctive obligations,—that is the joint liability of the firm upon the acceptances, and the individual liability of the partner upon the implied contract arising from the misappropriation,—the court in that case was not called upon to discuss the nice question involved in the REYNOLDS CASE, as to whether the obligation of the implied contract was "joint and several" or "joint or several."

In conclusion it may be said that while the American cases cannot be said to deny the right to make double proof of a mere joint and several obligation, they have not allowed recourse to both estates except where the double claim was based upon the joint obligation of the firm, and also an independent obligation or undertaking of the individual partner. This is true not only where the obligations were strictly contractual, but also where claim was made for wrongful misappropriation; for it will be noted that in the decisions involving misappropriation (with the exception of the REYNOLDS CASE), the partner as trustee, executor, etc., stood individually in a fiduciary relation with the claimant.

L. A. W.

fendant has sold the goods or has consumed them.

While the authorities in America are divided (Keener, Quasi Contr. 193 et seq.), there seems little doubt of the soundness of Mr. Keener's conclusion that "the two cases involve a common element which is universally recognized in the one case, and should be in the other, as furnishing a ground for recovery, namely, that the defendant has that for which in conscience he should give the plaintiff an equivalent in money." Keener, Quasi Contr. 195.

In Crawford v. Burke, 195 U. S. 176-194, 49 L. ed. 147-154, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 9, 13, where the defendants sold stocks and thereby converted them to their own use, the court said: "It is evident that the plaintiff might have sued them in an action on contract, charging them with the money advanced and with the value of the stock."

The trustee contends that upon the question whether there arises, from a mere conversion without a sale, an implied contract or a quasi contract to pay the value of the goods converted, we should be governed by the Massachusetts decisions, citing Fleitas v. Richardson, 147 U. S. 550, 37 L. ed. 276, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495; Humphrey v. Tatman, 198 U. S. 91, 49 L. ed. 956, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 567; Re Chantler Cloak & Suit Co. (C. C.) 151 Fed. 952; Thompson v. Fairbanks, 196 U. S. 516, 49 L. ed. 577, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306. These cases, however, are too restricted in scope to support the trustee's contention.

In the exercise of the jurisdiction in bankruptcy conferred under the Constitution, the courts of the United States have the right to resort to the principles of the common law, and therefrom to determine whether or not an obligation of a contractual character arises upon the conversion of goods, and is available to the owner upon waiver of his right to pursue his remedy for tort. See the learned opinion of Shiras, J., in Murray v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (C. C.) 62 Fed. 24, cited with approval in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Call Pub. Co. 181 U. S. 92-103, 45 L. ed. 765-771, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561.

The decisions of a state court, so far as they relate to the scope of particular forms of action, and as to the adoption or nonadoption of particular modes of procedure involving the use of ancient fictions, can hardly be regarded as conclusive upon the broader question of the existence of an obligation of a contractual character.

In Clarke v. Rogers, 106 C. C. A. 64, 183 Fed. 518-524, Judge Putnam clearly recognizes the distinction between the question of the existence of a contractual obligation and the question of the mode of recovery, in the following language: "Independently of the bond, we believe there is an obligation resting on a defaulting testamentary trustee to restore the value of the assets embezzled, which is of a contractual character. The method of recovering upon this would be so far purely incidental that the legislature might at any time provide for an action at common law in behalf of the successor as trustee, whatever might at any time be the preceding remedies, either by a suit in equity, or by a suit on the bond, or by a summary order of the court having jurisdiction in reference thereto."

As the bankruptcy statute suspends the special remedies under state laws, and substitutes its own procedure, it is important that the meaning of § 63, which defines debts which may be proved, should not be narrowed nor confused by reading into it local decisions denying a right of recovery under particular modes of procedure. Uniformity of construction is desirable, and we think the courts of bankruptcy are at liberty to give to the words "upon a contract express or implied," in § 63a4, a breadth of meaning which will include quasi contracts, in which the real ground of liability is that, for value received in money or in goods, a defendant should pay.

Assuming, therefore, that by the conversion there was created a contractual obligation, we have next to inquire what is its nature.

It is argued that as tortfeasors are jointly and severally liable, so the implied contract is both joint and several. The proposition that joint tortfeasors are "jointly and severally liable" requires careful consideration, however, since there is ground for thinking that the fundamental error in the trust company's argument arises from the inaccuracy of this expression.

The liability of one of the several tortfeasors is not both joint and several, but is joint or several at the election of the plaintiff. The plaintiff may have judgment against one or more, but he may not have two judgments against the same person on the same transaction.

If a tort is committed by several, it may be treated as joint or several at the election of the aggrieved party. Gould, Pl. chap. 4, § 66; Sessions v. Johnson, 95 U. S. 348, 24 L. ed. 596; Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Laird, 164 U. S. 393, 41 L. ed. 485, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Willard (1911) 220 U. S. 413, 55 L. ed. 521, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 460.

A joint judgment is a bar to a several action, and a several judgment to a joint action. At law, therefore, one whose goods were converted by partners could not have both a joint and several judgment, but could have either at his election. The present claims, therefore, if reduced to judgment in tort, would not be two, but one judgment only, joint or several, at the plaintiff's election. It seems impossible that the trust company should have greater rights before judgment than if it had proceeded to judgment.

In Bighy v. United States, 188 U. S. 400-409, 47 L. ed. 519-525, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468, 472, it was said: "A party may in some cases waive a tort, that is, he may forbear to sue in tort, and sue in contract, where the matter out of which his claim arises has in it the elements both of contract and tort. But it has been well said that 'a right of action in contract cannot be created by waiving a tort, and the duty to pay damages for a tort does not imply a promise to pay them upon which assumpsit can be maintained.'"

The individual tort imputed to E. H. Gay being waived, what elements remain to support an individual contract? That a partnership of which he is a member has had the bonds.

In Keener on Quasi Contracts it is said (page 160): "Assuming a defendant to be a tortfeasor, in order that the doctrine of waiver or tort may apply, the defendant must have unjustly enriched himself thereby," etc. If the right to recover on quasi contract upon a waiver of tort rests upon the doctrine of unjust enrichment, the difference between enrichment by money and by stocks or bonds of known market value, would be unsubstantial. To limit the right to recover on quasi contract, to cases where money had been received, would be arbitrary and hardly defensible in reason.

As there is no individual act of E. H. Gay, or benefit to his estate, which is separable from the act and benefit of the firm, what is there except the fact that the creditor once had a right to sue him individually as a tortfeasor, to support the theory of an individual promise or an individual quasi contract?

The trust company contends that both the claim against the firm and the claim against the individual were proved, on the theory of implied contract based on the conversion of the bonds, and that the proof against the firm was not an express contract. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. DeClow, 61 C. C. A. 34, 124 Fed. 142-148, is cited to sustain the proposition that there has been no election to proceed for breach of express contract, and thereby to waive any action on implied contract.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Assuming for the purposes of the case, however, that the trust company bases both claims upon the contractual obligations arising upon a waiver of the joint tort, we do not escape the fundamental difficulty in the case. If there is an implied contract of the firm, of E. H. Gay jointly with the other partners, growing out of the fact that the firm pledged the bonds as security for loans negotiated in the course of the firm business, and for the firm benefit, can it be said with consistency that E. H. Gay is also liable because he individually had the bonds or their proceeds?

It is apparent that in the decision of this case we can derive no assistance from those cases in which it appeared that a partner, or one of several joint tortfeasors, had individually converted property or funds and wrongfully appropriated them to the uses of a firm. The opinion of the district court correctly distinguishes between cases of that character and the present case. In such cases the individual, as well as the firm, has had the property,—the individual by using it as his contribution to the firm, and the firm by using it in the firm business. Both were under an obligation because both had received a benefit. Here are two distinct causes of action.

It is apparent that the present claim was allowed solely upon the authority of decisions in the second circuit. Re Coe (D. C.) 169 Fed. 1002, Re Coe, 106 C. C. A. 181, 183 Fed. 745. In the opinion of the district court (169 Fed. 1002) it was said that the members of a firm were jointly and severally liable upon a claim either in tort or upon quasi contract, at the creditor's election, for misappropriation, and that upon their bankruptcy the plaintiff could file double proof both against the partnership assets and against the individual assets of each partner, citing Re Baxter, Fed. Cas. No. 1,119; Re Jordan (D. C.) 2 Fed. 319; Re Blackford, 35 App. Div. 330, 54 N. Y. Supp. 972; Lindley, Partn. 5th ed. 703; Loveland Bankr. 315, and cases cited; Re Parkers, L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 84, 56 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 338, 57 L. T. N. S. 198, 35 Week. Rep. 566.

In the circuit court of appeals (106 C. C. A. 181, 183 Fed. 745) it was said: "It makes no difference that the partners acted without evil intent, nor that the firm got the benefit of what they did. It remains a wrongful conversion for which all the partners are liable, not jointly as partners, but jointly and severally as tortfeasors, whether they each actively participated in it or not; the acts of every one being imputed to every other."

The only additional authority cited by the circuit court of appeals was Blyth v. Fladgate, [1891] 1 Ch. 337, 60 L. J. Ch. N. S. 66, 63 L. T. N. S. 546, 39 Week. Rep. 422.

With the greatest respect for the opinions of the learned judges in both the district court and the circuit court of appeals, we are unable to accept the proposition that joint tortfeasors are jointly and severally liable, if by that is meant subject to both joint and several judgments. As we have said, a plaintiff is not entitled to two judgments against a tortfeasor, but is put to his election. He is permitted to deal with each of the tortfeasors as if he were the sole cause of the tort; but he may not subject a single defendant to two judgments, joint and several.

Had this creditor proceeded to reduce its tort claim to judgment before bankruptcy, and to prove on the judgment in tort under § 63a (1), he could have had but one judgment against E. H. Gay; at the creditor's election an individual judgment, or a judgment against E. H. Gay with others. In other words, he would have been compelled to elect between a joint and a several liability.

It is true that upon the joint judgment in tort he might have had execution against the individual estate, but this is equally true of a joint judgment on contract.

The bankruptcy statute intervenes to destroy the ordinary rights under execution, by § 5g, which divides the assets into partnership estate and individual estate, and gives priority of rights in the assets to creditors according to whether the debts are partnership or individual.

The brief of the trust company states, correctly we think, that "this is a question concerning the nature of legal rights." The creditor's legal right was to make his claim joint or several; he could not make it both, and must elect. The creditor's rights were in the alternative, and not cumulative; he is forced to an election,—not according to the early English rule that an election must be made even where there are distinct contract rights against both the firm and the individual, but on the ground that at law his right is to have his cause of action joint or several, but not both.

If it be granted for the purposes of the case that, upon a waiver of tort, there arise contractual obligations which correspond to the tort obligations, then it follows not that there are two contracts, one joint and one several, but one contract which is joint, or in the alternative a number of contracts which are several. But, as we have seen, the proposition that, upon a waiver of tort, there arise contractual obligations corresponding to liabilities in tort, is itself most doubtful.

If on principle the doctrine of quasi contracts is broader in scope than the action for money had and received, and should be extended to all cases in which a defendant has had that for which in conscience he should give the plaintiff an equivalent in money (Keener, Quasi Contr. 195), yet in the present case this reason applies only to the firm, and not to the individual who was not an actual participant, or beneficiary.

Under such conditions the rule that forbids contribution between wrongdoers abates, and the right arises to recover from the actual wrongdoer the damage imposed upon one who is not in fact a participant; the ultimate responsibility being cast upon the actual wrongdoers. Union Stock Yards Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 196 U. S. 217, 224, et seq., 49 L. ed. 453, 445, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 226, 2 Ann. Cas. 525.

Whether in any event the right to contribution would not cast this claim ultimately upon the partnership estate, under chapter 3, § 5g, through a claim of the individual estate, is a query which we need not solve, but simply refer to as a possible complication that might result from implying a contract against one who is held liable as a tortfeasor without actual participation or moral responsibility.

Furthermore, the fiction of a promise should not be extended beyond its legitimate purpose, and especially should it not be permitted to affect injuriously the rights of third persons.

There is an inconsistency between the requirement that a plaintiff should waive the tort and take his place with the other creditors, and a contention that, by virtue of the tort alone, he should have implied contracts which put him in a better position than other creditors, who have express contracts.

The bankruptcy act requires a distinction between firm and individual debts. The test of whether the debt is firm or individual is the character of the transaction from which it arises. Here there was no transaction other than a firm transaction; and a fiction of law which raises a promise based solely upon tort liability, and not upon an obligation to pay for value received by an individual, cannot be allowed without an infringement of the rights of the individual creditors, and of bankruptcy rules of equality.

Upon a review of the cases cited we find no sufficient authority for the allowance of double proof in a case like the present. Without questioning the correctness of the decisions in the cases in the second circuit, or considering the differences in facts, we nevertheless do not feel constrained to accept the proposition that, upon a waiver of tort, there arise contractual obligations corresponding to tort obligations, or the further proposition that, upon waiver of a joint tort, there arise both joint and several obligations ex contractu. The contractual obligation arises only when value has been received for which in good conscience a defendant should pay.

We are of the opinion that the claim against the individual estate of E. H. Gay should be disallowed on the ground that upon this record only a firm contract exists after the waiver of tort.

The judgment of the District Court is reversed, and the case remanded to that court with direction to disallow the claim of the New York Trust Company for the sum of $14,875 against the individual estate of E. H. Gay, and the appellant recovers costs in this court.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

SOUTHERN TELEPHONE COMPANY,
Appt.,
v.
J. E. KING.

(— Ark. —, 146 S. W. 489.)

Damages — negligence of telephone company — knowledge of consequences.

1. A telephone subscriber cannot hold the company, which fails to answer his call, liable for injury caused by going to the central office in a sick and weakened condition to obtain medical aid for a member of his family, where it had no notice that such injury was likely to result from its negligence.

Note. — Liability of telephone company for failure to make connections for subscriber.

The earlier cases on this subject are collected in the notes to Lebanon, L. & L. Teleph. Co. v. Lanham Lumber Co. 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 115, and Volquardsen v. Iowa Teleph. Co. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 554.

As to the right of withdrawing telephone service because of the abuse of the privilege by subscribers, see note to Huffman v. Marcy Mut. Teleph. Co. 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1010.

As to right to refuse telephone service to coerce payment of bill, see note to Danaher v. Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1027.
39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Telephones — statutory liability — telegraph.

2. A statute rendering telegraph companies liable for mental suffering due to negligence in receiving, transmitting, and delivering messages does not apply in case of the negligence of telephone companies.

Damages — punitive — negligence of telephone company.

3. Punitive damages cannot be assessed against a telephone company for mere neglect to answer the call of the subscriber, in the absence of anything to show intentional wrong or wilfulness, or conscious indifference to consequences, from which malice may be inferred.

(April 8, 1912.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Drew County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff because of defendant's failure to comply with its contract to furnish him telephone service. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Williamson & Williamson, for appellant:

The verdict as to punitive damages is erroneous.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hogue, 79 Ark. 36, 94 S. W. 924; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Whitten, 90 Ark. 467, 119 S. W. 835, 21 Ann. Cas. 726; 13 Cyc. 113-F. & notes 98, 99; Spellman v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 28 Am. St. Rep. 874, note; Anson, Contr. 311.

There is wholly lacking that element of brutal indifference and maliciousness that seems to be essential in praying penal vengeance.

Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Whitten, 90 Ark. 468, 119 S. W. 835, 21 Ann. Cas. 726; 2 Sutherland, Damages, 1101; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hall, 53 Ark. 7, 13 S. W. 138, 13 Cyc. 108, 109, and note 81, 13 Cyc. 110, and note 88; Spell-

As to right of addressee to recover damages for failure to summon him to receive a long-distance telephone message, see note to McLeod v. Pacific States Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 810.

As to the measure of damages for removal of telephone, see note to Carmichael v. Bell Teleph. Co. — L.R.A.(N.S.) —.

Telephone companies are under the duty of furnishing to their subscribers reasonably prompt and efficient service in the way of giving them connection with other subscribers. Glawson v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 9 Ga. App. 450, 71 S. E. 747.

In considering the actual quantum of diligence required, it has been said that "the delicacy of the instrumentalities involved and the difficulty of keeping them man v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 28 Am. St. Rep. 878, note.

No recovery can be had for mental anguish where there is no physical injury.

St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 84 Ark. 42, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 159, 104 S. W. 551; Pierce v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 94 Ark. 489, 127 S. W. 707; Peay v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 64 Ark. 538, 39 L.R.A. 463, 43 S. W. 965; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Groce, 99 Ark. 420, 138 S. W. 879; Texarkana & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Anderson, 67 Ark. 123, 53 S. W. 673; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bragg, 69 Ark. 402, 86 Am. St. Rep. 206, 64 S. W. 226; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wilson, 70 Ark. 136, 91 Am. St. Rep. 74, 66 S. W. 661.

Plaintiff had no right to sustain an action for his distress of mind on account of his wife's suffering.

Hyatt v. Adams, 16 Mich. 180; Bube v. Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. 140 Ala. 276, 103 Am. St. Rep. 33, 37 So. 285; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Reid, 120 Ky. 231, 70 L.R.A. 289, 85 S. W. 1171; 37 Cyc. 1781-1784; 13 Cyc. 196, 197; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hogue, 79 Ark. 33, 94 S. W. 924; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 84 Ark. 47, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 159, 104 S. W. 551; Woodstock Iron Works v. Stockdale, 143 Ala. 550, 39 So. 335, 5 Ann. Cas. 578; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Whitten, 90 Ark. 462, 119 S. W. 835, 21 Ann. Cas. 726; Chicago, R. I. &

in repair and in perfect working order must be considered;" and that "it may be said that a telephone company is held to only ordinary diligence in keeping its plants, instruments, etc., in working order for the purpose of facilitating conversations between its subscribers." Ibid.

Accordingly it was held that where the line is in order, the telephone company may be liable for the death of a member of a subscriber's family due to the inability to get the necessary medical or surgical attention, because of the negligence of the exchange operator. Ibid.

In answer to the objection that damages which result through the failure to get a physician so that the progress of a malady can be checked, or the effect of a wound can be allayed, and the injurious results prevented, are speculative and remote in character, the court pointed out that there was considerable conflict among the authorities on that question; that while there are some diseases, as to which the court might say as a matter of law (basing its conclusion upon the state of common knowledge) that the chances of recovery were always speculative and doubtful; that there were other diseases which perhaps the court might say as a matter of law, that they would yield to proper treatment; and that between these two classes exist a wide class as to which common knowledge is not so well established, and in these cases the question as to whether the results of a physician's or surgeon's services would or would not be doubtful or uncertain, is a question of fact and is for the jury. Ibid.

So in Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Allen, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 146 S. W. 1066, it was said that it cannot be said as a matter of law that the loss of a physician's services could not be considered as a reasonable and probable consequence likely to result from wrongfully disconnecting the telephone of a subscriber who resided in the country about 9 miles from the nearest physician, when the company had notice of the illness in the subscriber's family and that the attendance of a physician would probably be required.

39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

In the last cited case it was held that the wrongful refusal to receive further calls from a subscriber rendered the telephone company liable for such general damages which might reasonably be expected to follow as the natural and probable consequences of the act, and for such special damages as were the natural and probable result of the special conditions of which the company had notice.

Accordingly it was held that a subscriber who has informed the manager of the telephone company of the necessity for good service because of the illness of his wife is entitled to recover for mental anguish which he sustained by reason of witnessing the suffering of his wife occasioned by the failure to secure the attendance of a physician because of his inability to get telephone connections with the central office. Ibid.

But in Glawson v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. supra, it was held that no recovery can be had for mental suffering in an action by a husband for the death of the wife, under a statutory provision that the measure of damages shall be the "full value of the life of the deceased, as shown by the evidence."

A telephone company under contract to furnish the subscribers of another company with telephonic connections with various independent lines including the members of an unincorporated association, with the right to refuse further service in case a subscriber should be in default in payment of charges due, and under a contract with the unincorporated association which provided in effect that the primary obligation to pay exchange charges was upon the association, and not upon the members, cannot refuse telephonic connections to a subscriber who desires to communicate with a member of the association, upon the ground that the latter was in arrears for certain long-distance charges, without subjecting itself to liability for penalties imposed under a general statute for refusing to render the service. Osborne v. Reading Cent. Teleph. Co. 163 Mich. 545, 128 N. W. 745.

A. L. R.

P. R. Co. v. Moss, 89 Ark. 187, 116 S. W. 192.

The statute does not apply to telephone companies.

Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Oshkosh, 62 Wis. 32, 21 N. W. 828; Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Stroude, 77 Ark. 114, 113 Am. St. Rep. 130, 91 S. W. 18; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Crenshaw, 93 Ark. 419, 125 S. W. 420, 37 Cyc. 1704; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State, 82 Ark. 318, 101 S. W. 748, 12 Ann. Cas. 82; Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Lee, 79 Ark. 451, 96 S. W. 148.

To recover more than nominal damages, actual damages must be shown.

Emerson v. Turner, 95 Ark. 598, 130 S. W. 538.

The damages in the present case are all entirely too remote, too extraordinary, too speculative, and too contingent to enter as elements of damage based on the negligence complained of.

Woodstock Iron Works v. Stockdale, 143 Ala. 550, 39 So. 335, 5 Ann. Cas. 578, 37 Cyc. 1750-B, 1754-B; Kelly v. Altemus, 34 Ark. 184, 36 Am. Rep. 6; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bragg, 69 Ark. 402, 86 Am. St. Rep. 206, 64 S. W. 226; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Harrison, 76 Ark. 434, 89 S. W. 53; Rodgers v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. 76 Ark. 521, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1145, 113 Am. St. Rep. 102, 89 S. W. 468.

Mr. Patrick Henry for appellee.

McCulloch, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellee instituted this action below against appellant (a corporation operating a telephone system in the town of Monticello and vicinity) to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of negligence in failing to furnish telephone service. He alleged in his complaint the following state of facts, which the testimony established, viewed in its most favorable light: Appellee resided at Monticello, and was one of appellant's subscribers, having a telephone in his residence. His wife and son were both sick, and he was convalescent. About 3 o'clock in the morning his son grew worse, and needed immediate attention of a physician, and he attempted to call by telephone Dr. Kimbro, his family physician, who lived in another part of town. He got connection with Dr. Kimbro's residence, but the latter's wife informed him that the doctor had gone to the country to make a call, and could be reached by telephoning him at the Agricultural School. He then endeavored for a considerable time to get connection with the Agricultural School, but could not get a response to his call for the telephone central office. He walked uptown and tried to call from a telephone at a livery barn, and again failed to get a response from central. He went to the central office, and, finding it closed, knocked at the door. The operator answered, and, after giving his name, appellee told the operator that he had a sick child and wanted to telephone the doctor, and the latter replied: "We are closed until 6 o'clock. I am sorry, but can't do anything for you until 6 o'clock." He returned home and again telephoned Dr. Kimbro's residence, and finally secured the latter's attendance about 8 o'clock, after he returned from the country. The evidence tends to show that a telephone message to the Agricultural School would have been sent over by special messenger to Dr. Kimbro, at the residence of his patron in the neighborhood. Appellee alleged in his complaint that, "by reason of the excitement, exposure, and effort in coming to the office of defendant, his recovery was retarded, and that he was prevented for the period of one week from resuming his work, during which time he suffered physical pain," and he claimed damages in the sum of $25 for loss of a week's time, $25 for physical pain, and $15 for costs of additional medical attention. He alleged that he suffered great mental pain and anguish by reason of his inability to procure medical aid for his child, and claimed damages therefor in the sum of $250. He also prayed for punitive damages in the sum of $1,000. The jury returned a verdict for appellee and assessed damages as follows: "For actual damages, as alleged, $50; for mental pain and anguish on account of himself, wife, and child, as alleged, $100; for punitive or exemplary damages, as alleged, $200."

We are of the opinion that the testimony does not warrant a recovery of more than nominal damages. Even if the negligence of the operator in failing to respond to appellee's call could be said to have been the proximate cause of his injury, resulting from exertion and exposure in walking uptown to the central office, appellant is not liable, for the reason that it had no notice of the special circumstances out of which the damages might arise. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Raines, 78 Ark. 545, 94 S. W. 700; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hogue, 79 Ark. 33, 94 S. W. 924. It is not claimed that the operator was informed until appellee reached the central office that he desired to get connection with the Agricultural School for the purpose of communicating with his physician. Whatever physical injury appellee sustained by reason of his trip uptown had then accrued, and notice to the operator at that time would not render appellant liable for the damages already sustained. Crutcher v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. 74 Ark. 358, 85 S. W. 770.

No damages resulted from any act or omission of the operator after appellant notified her of his desire to communicate with the physician, except the mental pain and anguish which he suffered by reason of his inability to secure the attendance of his physician. This court has steadily adhered to the rule that "mental suffering alone, unaccompanied by physical injury or any other element of recoverable damages, cannot be made the subject of an independent action for damages . . . and that such suffering does not of itself constitute a cause of action." St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 84 Ark. 42, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 159, 104 S. W. 551; Peay v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 64 Ark. 538, 39 L.R.A. 463, 43 S. W. 965; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Minn. 334, 79 N. W. 315. But 192; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Whitten, 90 Ark. 462, 119 S. W. 835, 21 Ann. Cas. 726; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Groce, 99 Ark. 420, 138 S. W. 879. After the decision of this court in the Peay Case, the legislature changed the rule as to telegraph companies negligently failing to receive, transmit, or deliver telegraphic messages (Kirby's Dig. § 7947); but the statute only applies to companies doing a telegraph business, and not to telephones. While the telephone occupies to some extent the same field as the telegraph, and it is in some respects an improvement on the latter method of long-distance communication, still the former does not fall within the definition laid down by the lawmakers in providing that telegraph companies shall be liable for mental anguish. There are authorities which hold that, in the construction of statutes, the word "telegraph" embraces "telephone," and that statutes concerning telegraph companies include telephone companies as well. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 76 Minn. 334, 79 N. W. 315. But the method of carrying on the business of telephoning is dissimilar in many respects from the telegraph business, particularly in the method of transmission. Jones, Teleg. & Teleph. Companies, §§ 3 et seq. The statute declares that telegraph companies shall be liable for mental anguish or suffering on account of negligence "in receiving, transmitting, or delivering messages." Now, by a very strained construction of that language, it may be reasoned that a telephone company, in its method of furnishing an apparatus for transmitting sound, "receives, transmits and delivers messages;" but that construction is decidedly strained, for it is evident that if the lawmakers had had in mind a telephone company, with its methods of doing business, it would have used altogether different language. A telephone company does not receive a message, nor does it transmit and deliver it in the ordinary acceptation of those words. It merely furnishes to the patron facilities for carrying on a conversation at long distance. The choice of phraseology shows very plainly that, while it is possible to give the other construction to the language, the legislature would have chosen more appropriate words if that construction had been intended. It is not the business of the courts to legislate; and, if a change in the law in this respect is desired, the general assembly is the branch of government whence the change must come.

The facts of the case do not disclose any element of exemplary damages. At most, only negligence is proved; and that, however gross, is not sufficient to justify an award of damages by way of punishment, without any element of intentional wrong or wilfulness or conscious indifference to consequences, from which malice may be inferred. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Dysart, 89 Ark. 261, 116 S. W. 224.

The judgment is reversed, and judgment will be entered here in appellee's favor for nominal damages and costs in the lower court.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

THOMAS DYER, Appt.,
v.

CITY OF DANBURY et al.

(85 Conn. 128, 81 Atl. 958.)

Highway — defect — limb falling from tree.

1. Statutes making a municipality liable for injuries caused by defective highways do not apply to those caused by the fall of limbs from trees in the street.

Municipal corporation — failure to remove nuisance — liability.

2. A municipal corporation is not liable

Note. — Liability of municipality for personal injuries by trees.

Generally as to the liability of municipal corporation for defects or obstructions in streets, see Elam v. Mt. Sterling, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 512.

Falling tree or limb.

A city is liable in damages to one injured by the falling of a tree standing with-for injury to a traveler by its failure to remove a nuisance consisting of a dangerous limb on a tree in the street, since the duty to remove it is a governmental one.

Same — acceptance of charter — contract duty.

3. The acceptance by a municipality of a charter imposing upon it the duty of removing nuisances does not create a contract between it and the state that it will do so, a breach of which gives a right of action to one injured by its failure.

Same — attempted regulation of trees — effect.

4. Charter authority to regulate the planting and removal of trees, and an ordinance providing that no person shall remove or plant a tree in the street without a permit, do not impose upon the municipality the duty of removing dead limbs from trees, so as to render it liable for injury caused by its failure to do so, if under statutory authority a tree warden has been elected who is given the care and control of the public shade trees in the town.

Same — charter — construction — removing dead limbs.

5. Forbidding the removal of trees standing in the street without a permit does not prevent the owner of the tree from removing branches therefrom which have become dangerous to persons using the street.

(October Term, 1911.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Fairfield County sustaining demurrers to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for in the limits of the street or highway, where it knew, or might have known by the exercise of reasonable diligence, of its dangerous condition, and took no steps to remove the same or guard passers-by against it. 28 Cyc. 1378.

Thus, in Henderson v. Schlamp, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 575, where a city, by use of reasonable diligence, could have detected the decayed condition of a tree, it was held liable for injury caused by it falling upon a pedestrian.

So, in Chase v. Lowell, 149 Mass. 85, 21 N. E. 233, where a decayed shade tree standing in the street was blown down, striking and injuring a pedestrian, the conclusion was reached, after a review of all previous statutes, that a surveyor in a city or town had no power summarily to remove a shade tree standing in the highway, but that the question whether such tree incommoded or endangered travelers and ought to be removed should be determined by the adjudication of a tribunal designated by the statute for that purpose. The same case was again before the court in 151 Mass. 422, 24 N. E. 212, where the duty of a highway surveyor as to a dangerous shade tree in a public way, to apply to the authorities for an adjudication, was emphasized; and the municipality was held liable for injury to a traveler, if after notice of such dangerous tree the highway surveyor took no action. The court said: "The cases do not go upon the ground that notice to one or more than one of the inhabitants of a town constitutes notice to the town, but that such a state of facts may be shown as will warrant an inference that the authorities either knew, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence might have known, of the defect. "While the authorities are not to be held responsible for the neglect of citizens to inform them of the existence of a defect, the fact that it was generally talked about in the community is a circumstance which may properly be considered. In such a case, notoriety derives its force as evidence not merely from its suggestion that the defect was of such a kind that the authorities would have been likely to discover it, in the first instance, with their own eyes, but quite as much from the probability that their attention may have been brought by others to a matter which was generally talked about and in which they were interested. . . . In the performance of their duty to discover and repair defects, officers of cities and towns should avail themselves of all the means of information conveniently to be had. Among these is the general knowledge which the people are likely to have of what affects the common interest. It would be unjust to persons injured by defects, if cities and towns were held responsible only for such defects as the officers, regardless of information, should have first discovered with their own eyes." It was also said: "The decayed roots were visible to persons on the sidewalk opposite, and the evidence tended to show that large numbers saw them. All this was competent evidence of the notoriety of the defect, and was not objected to. The acts of persons in looking at the roots were an important part of the evidence. From this it might be inferred that they noticed the decayed condition of the roots, and so that knowledge of the defect became general. But that evidence might properly be strengthened by introducing as a part of the res gestæ, the declarations which accompanied the acts, and which characterized them as acts, and communicated intelligence of the condition of the tree to those who looked. The remarks made at the time rendered it certain that the view of the roots gave notice of the defect, to those who then saw them. If the fact that these persons looked at the decayed roots was competent as tending to show the notoriety of the defect, then clearly the accompanying declarations, which tended to show the nature of the act of looking, were also competent."

And in Morris v. Salt Lake City, 35 Utah, 474, 101 Pac. 313, although not an action for personal injuries, where a tree whose roots had been cut by an independent contractor employed by the city to lay a sidewalk was blown down, injuring the dwelling of an abutting owner, the city was injuries caused by a limb falling from a dead tree. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles M. Murphy for appellant.
Messrs. J. Moss Ives and Thomas A. Keating for appellee city.

Thayer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought against the city and town of Danbury. A separate demurrer was filed by each of the defendants, and each demurrer was sustained. The correctness of the judgment in favor of the city only is questioned by this appeal.

According to the allegations of the complaint, the plaintiff while passing along the sidewalk was hit upon the head and injured by a falling limb which had "become dislodged from," or was "broken off by the wind from," a dead tree which stood within the limits of the street, and overhung the sidewalk. The street was a public highway of the city, and it was the duty of the city to keep it in repair and in safe condition for public travel. The tree had existed in its dangerous condition for more than a year, and constituted a nuisance upon the highway. The city charter provides that the common council shall have power "to regulate the planting and removal, and provide for the protection, care, and preservation of trees in the public streets and parks." The common council has passed an ordinance which provides that "no person shall cut down any trees standing upon any held liable whether the independent contractor negligently cut the roots, or necessarily did so in the construction of the walk. The court said that the contractor would be liable because he caused the tree to become a menace and a danger, and for permitting it to remain in that condition, and the city is liable for failing to discharge its duty in not removing the tree from a public street, when deprived of its support, and in permitting it to remain in that condition so that it might be blown over at any time by an ordinary wind.

Where a tree standing beside a public highway, by reason of excavation near it done by order or permission of a municipality, had been a dangerous nuisance of which the municipality had notice sufficiently long to have removed it, the municipality in Steves v. South Vancouver, 6 B. C. 17, was held liable for the death of a person lawfully using the highway, caused by the tree being blown down upon him during a violent wind storm.

But it is held in East St. Louis v. Giblin, 3 Ill. App. 219, that, although a city is liable for a person's death caused by the negligence of its employees in felling a tree, it is not liable where the death was the result of the negligence of the assistants of an independent contractor employed by the city for a stipulated sum to cut down the tree.

So, in Watkins v. County Court, 30 W. Va. 657, 5 S. E. 654, it was held that a county court, a municipal corporation, is not responsible in an action brought by an individual for damages for an injury sustained by him in consequence of the county court, or any officer or agent of it, failing to perform any duty imposed upon it, except when by statute it is expressly or by necessary implication rendered liable to such action. Consequently where a dead tree standing within 5 feet of the edge of the public road fell upon and injured a passer-by as a result of the wilful neglect of duty by the surveyor of the road, it was held that such court could not be sued by the individual for injuries sustained, there being no statute providing, expressly or by 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) necessary implication, that a county court should be responsible at the suit of an individual for neglect of duty to have such trees cut down.

In Colorado Springs v. May, 20 Colo. App. 204, 77 Pac. 1093, where a city was held liable for injuries to one driving along an avenue, caused by its employee felling a tree which struck and frightened plaintiff's horse, overturning the buggy, it was held to be the city's duty, in felling such tree, to use reasonable and ordinary care to avoid injury to those traveling the avenue; and if such duty was observed there was no liability; if not, there was,—unless defeated by the alleged contributory negligence of the plaintiff.

Where a decayed tree, being struck by a heavy truck, fell upon and injured plaintiff, it was held in Gubasko v. New York, 14 Daly, 559, 1 N. Y. Supp. 215, affirming a judgment for defendant, that if the tree was dangerous, but appeared safe to outward observance, the defendant was not bound to examine a hole which had existed on one side of the tree, although by so doing it would have discovered the decay.

But in Vosper v. New York, 17 Jones & S. 296, an action for death of plaintiff's intestate, caused by the falling of a tree growing on the sidewalk, it appeared that the tree was rotten from the roots up to a dangerous degree. There was a conflict of evidence as to whether there was any exterior sign of the rottenness when the tree was standing. In affirming a judgment for the plaintiff, the court held that it was incumbent upon the city to use ordinary caution to anticipate the danger that could come into existence without manifesting itself to ordinary observers. "If the contingency of the facts," said the court, "were that a secret cause of danger might grow and increase, and yet be hidden, it could not be assumed that, as matter of law, the city was not bound to do anything except use ordinary means to ascertain when danger was imminent and imperiled the safety of passers-by. It would be a question for the jury as to whether the defendant should do or not do street or highway in the city, nor set out any trees between the curb and sidewalk, without a permit from the superintendent of public works," and that any person who shall violate these provisions shall pay a fine. The town of Danbury has elected a tree warden, and has assumed the exclusive control, care, and protection of all the trees upon the streets in the town and city. These are the essential facts alleged in the complaint.

The overhanging limb did not constitute a defect in the highway. It did not obstruct travel thereon, and the city was not bound to remove it as a part of its duty "to build and repair" the highways within its limits. Hewison v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 136, 143, 144, 91 Am. Dec. 718. The complaint therefore does not state a cause of action under § 2020 of the General Statutes, which provides that any person injured by a defective road or bridge may recover damages from the party bound to keep it in repair.

If the overhanging limb by reason of its liability to fall upon the traveled part of the highway constituted a nuisance, as alleged, it ought to have been removed. If it endangered travel upon the highway, it was a public nuisance, and the city could and should have caused its removal. But this duty of the city was a public governmental one, for the neglect of which no liability at common law ensued to the city, and no statute imposes any. Hewison v. New Haven, 37 Conn. 475, 483, 9 Am. Rep. 342.

something, even to cutting down the tree, to prevent the danger. . . . The city would be bound to act upon their knowledge or obligation to gain knowledge, as to the intrinsic qualities of the tree and the soil, although these were not manifested in the outward appearances of the tree."

The injury complained of in the Hewison Case, relied upon in DYER v. DANBURY, was not by trees, but by an iron weight insecurely attached to a flag suspended over the street, falling upon a passer-by. When this case was before the court in 34 Conn. 140, 91 Am. Dec. 718, an attempt was made to maintain an action for the injury, grounded on a breach of an imposed statutory duty to keep the highway free from defects, but the court was satisfied that the suspended flag and weight which produced the injury did not constitute a defect in the highway within the meaning of the statute. The cause of action for the same injury alleged in 37 Conn. 475, 9 Am. Rep. 342, was a breach of duty which it was claimed grew out of the acceptance by the city of a charter from the state, by force of which it agreed to keep highways from being rendered unsafe by nuisances; and the suspension of a flag and weight over the way upon which the injury occurred constituted a nuisance. It was held that the duty to remove such nuisance was a governmental duty, for the nonperformance or negligent performance of which the city was not liable. In distinguishing Jones v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 1, where the city under its charter, giving it exclusive control of the public parks, was held liable for a personal injury caused by the falling of a decayed limb from a tree in a public park, the court in the Hewison Case, 37 Conn. 483, said: "In that case the duty which the city had contracted with the state to perform was a strictly private duty. The city asked of the general assembly and received power to control the trees of the city, standing on its streets and squares, and assumed the entire and exclusive control of them. The owners of trees standing on the highway are liable at common law for injuries occurring in consequence of their neglect to trim and keep them safe; and the city, assuming the exclusive control and forbidding the owners to cut and therefore to trim them, assumed the duty and liability which would otherwise have rested on the owners. It was a private duty so far as the city owned the trees, and equally a private duty if they assumed it in exclusion of the owners; and being a private duty and unperformed, they were undoubtedly liable for the injury which resulted from their neglect."

A city was held liable in Wright v. Chelsea, 207 Mass. 460, 93 N. E. 840, for injuries to travelers by falling of a limb of a shade tree which stood within the limits of a public way, where the evidence showed that plaintiffs were in the exercise of due care, that the limb had been so dangerous by reason of decay and consequent liability to be blown down by ordinary winds as to attract attention for more than a year, and the officer whose duty it was to report any such danger to the proper authorities testified that he had never done so.

In McGarey v. New York, 89 App. Div. 500, 85 N. Y. Supp. 861, a city was held liable for injury to a person by being struck by a falling limb of a tree while walking along a public street, there being evidence to support the finding of the jury that notice of the rotten and dangerous condition of the limb would have been communicated to defendant had proper inspection or examination been made. The court said it was the duty of the municipality to inspect trees in public places to ascertain their true condition.

But in Miller v. Detroit, 156 Mich. 630, 132 Am. St. Rep. 537, 121 N. W. 490, 16 Ann. Cas. 832, it is held that a municipal corporation is not, under a statute requiring it to keep its highways, streets, and sidewalks in reasonable repair, liable for injuries to a pedestrian caused by the falling of a dead limb from a tree growing between the sidewalk and the curb, since the statute mentioned refers only to the traveled way, and imposed no obligation upon the city to trim trees growing between

The complaint therefore states no cause of action arising from the city's failure to abate the nuisance. For the nonperformance or misperformance of a merely governmental duty imposed upon a city or town it is not liable in damages, unless a right of action against it is given by statute. Jones v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 1, 13; Greenwood v. Westport, 63 Conn. 587, 60 Fed. 560; Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury, 72 Conn. 531, 48 L.R.A. 691, 77 Am. St. Rep. 335, 45 Atl. 154.

The acceptance of a charter imposing such a duty upon a city does not create a contract between it and the state, rendering it liable in damages at common law for a neglect to perform or a negligent performance of the duty. Hewison v. New Haven, 37 Conn. 475, 482, 9 Am. Rep. 342. Where, however, some special power or privilege out of which grow public duties primarily for the benefit of its own citizens is granted to a municipality at its request, or where with its consent some special duty, not belonging to it under the general laws, is imposed upon it, the case is different. In such cases the municipality is in a sense performing a private duty, and, although no liability for damages is imposed by statute for negligence in the performance of such duties, the municipality is nevertheless liable for it. Jones v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 14; Hewison v. New Haven, 37 Conn. 483, 9 Am. Rep. 342; Hourigan v. Norwich, 77 Conn. 358, 365, 59 Atl. 487.

In the Jones Case, above cited, as in the

the sidewalk and the curb in a city street. The court in distinguishing McGarey v. New York, supra, calls attention to the fact that New York state, where the decision in that case was made, recognized a common-law right of recovery of private damages whenever a duty was imposed upon a municipal corporation, a rule which does not obtain in Michigan.

So, where plaintiff was passing along when a limb fell from a tree standing on the edge of the sidewalk, injuring him, the city in Jones v. Greensboro, 124 N. C. 310, 32 S. E. 675, was held not liable; in the absence of evidence that the limb was materially decayed, or that anyone had seen it, or that any city officer knew of it, or could by reasonable diligence have discovered its condition before the accident. The court said: "No more than reasonable care to discover the defects will be required of the corporation, and notice will not be inferred from the notoriety of the defect open to reasonable discovery; but if it be concealed or obscured in any way so as to escape attentive observance on the part of the defendant, notice will not be attributed to it. The burden of showing the defect and notice rests upon the plaintiff."

The law of Missouri imposes upon cities the duty to keep their streets in a reasonably safe condition for travelers passing over them; and a city is held liable for an injury resulting from a defect in a street of which it had notice, or which it could have discovered by the exercise of reasonable care, not that it had become notoriously defective so as to impart notice to the general traveling public. Thus in Lundy v. Sedalia, — Mo. App. —, 144 S. W. 889, a city was held liable for injury to a person passing along the sidewalk by the falling of a dead limb of a tree growing between the sidewalk and the curb, where it had long been in a rotten condition, and the defect was one which could have been discovered by reasonable care. The court said if the city, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, could have made the discovery and removed the limb before plaintiff's injury, it was liable for its want of 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) proper diligence. Whatever may be the law as interpreted by the courts of other states, the courts of this state adhere to the doctrine that a city must exercise proper care to keep its streets reasonably safe for travel from sources of danger overhead as well as on the surface. The fact that passers-by failed to notice the condition of the limb does not preclude the conclusion that defendant's street commissioner should not have made the discovery while in the performance of his duty as such. He was not required to make a particular examination of each tree to see if there was a rotten limb, but it was expected that he would observe defects in the trees or overhead dangers which the ordinary passer-by perhaps would fail to notice, because he has the right to assume that everything is reasonably safe, and therefore does not bestow the same attention that the law imposes upon the city's officials.

Projecting limb.

In Embler v. Wallkill, 132 N. Y. 222, 30 N. E. 404 affirming 57 Hun, 384, 10 N. Y. Supp. 797, a town was held liable where a traveler on a highway was swept off from a load of hay by an overhanging limb of a tree growing at the side of the road, the commissioners of highways in such a case being liable for not knowing of an obstruction which had existed so long that a vigilant officer should have known of its existence, and the fact that thousands passed there without injury being of no consequence. In determining whether there was sufficient evidence to charge the commissioners with notice of the alleged defect, the court said that the jury had the right to consider the circumstance that people driving on loads of hay had passed under this tree without difficulty, and also the circumstance that no complaint was made to the commissioners.

So in Ferguson v. Southwold, 27 Ont. Rep. 66, a municipality, under its duty to keep the highway in repair, was held liable for injuries sustained by a person by being brushed off a load of hay by a branch present case, a dead limb fell from a tree upon the plaintiff, and caused the injury complained of. The declaration in that case alleged that the city charter provided that the defendants, through their common council, might make such by-laws as they saw fit in relation to the cutting, breaking, or injury to trees, and the protection and preservation of trees in the streets, highways, and public squares of the city; that by their common council they had passed a by-law by which it was provided that no person should, without the approbation in writing of the mayor and aldermen first obtained, cut, bruise, destroy, or aid in the cutting, bruising, or destroying or injuring any tree which had been or should be planted, set out, or standing for shade, ornament, or use in any of the public streets or highways; that the defendants had assumed upon themselves the task of superintending, regulating, and putting in proper condition trees so situated, and had agreed that they would so superintend, regulate, and put in proper condition such trees; that it thereby became and was the duty of the defendants to take proper care of such trees, and to use due care and diligence in and about superintending and regulating them, and particularly to remove all dead, decayed, and broken limbs remaining upon said trees; and that the defendants neglected this duty, and through such negligence the plaintiff received her injury. In that case we held that the declaration stated a good cause of action, upon the ground that it therein appeared that the state had authorized the city as a special privilege to assume control of the "protection and preservation" of the trees, of which the pruning and removal of the dead limbs was a part, and that the city had assumed the exclusive control of the trees and the duty of protecting them for the special benefit of its own inhabitants, and that the duty was a private as distinguished from a governmental one. It is claimed that the allegations of the complaint now in question bring the present case within the principle upon which the Jones Case was decided.

The complaint contains no allegation of a duty on the part of the city to care for the trees, and none that it had undertaken or assumed the care and control of them. On the contrary, it is alleged that the tree warden of the town of Danbury had assumed the exclusive control, care, and protection of all the trees upon the street. Gen. Stat. § 4443, as amended by chapter 83, Pub. Acts 1903, p. 54, and chapter 114, Pub. Acts 1905, p. 325, provides for the election of such a tree warden by the towns, and provides that such wardens shall have the care and control of all public shade trees in the town except those in public parks and open places (and of these under of a tree which, to defendant's knowledge, extended over the line of travel at a height of about 11 feet.

So, in Louisville v. Michels, 114 Ky. 551, 71 S. W. 511, a city, under its duty to keep its streets clear of obstructions, is held liable where one driving a patrol wagon was, without contributory negligence upon his part, thrown therefrom by coming in contact with a limb of a tree projecting dangerously low. The court approved of an instruction that, "unless you shall believe from the evidence that the limb of the tree in question was a dangerous obstruction to the use of the street by persons in vehicles, or that the city did not know of the obstruction, and could not have discovered it by the exercise of ordinary care, then the law is for the defendant, and you should so find, unless you shall believe that the limb had existed in its dangerous condition for such a length of time that the city or its officers knew or could have ascertained the dangerous condition of the limb with reference to people using the highway, by the exercise of ordinary care."

Miscellaneous.

It is held in Nestor v. Fall River, 183 Mass. 265, 67 N. E. 248, that the loose and rotten roots of a tree which had stood in the sidewalk for over sixty years is a defect in the highway, and a city is liable by 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

statute for injury to a pedestrian caused by tripping over such root. Under the statute, however, giving damages for personal injuries caused by defects in highways, it is held that compensation can be recovered only for injuries to the person, and not for expense of medical attendance made necessary by the accident.

And in Lamb v. Cedar Rapids, 108 Iowa, 629, 79 N. W. 366, a city was held liable to a person injured while attempting to remove a piano from a dray, by falling over a stump in the space along the road; since a city is bound to keep its streets, which have been opened to public use, free from defects and obstructions, although that duty extends only to so much of each street as is customarily used by the public.

But in Washburn v. Easton, 172 Mass. 525, 52 N. E. 1070, it was held that a town was not liable under a statute authorizing the commissioners to plant shade trees whenever it will not interfere with the public travel or private rights, where one traveling along a highway with his team was injured by colliding with shade trees; no contention being made that the accident was due to any defect in the trees themselves, there being nothing to show that there had been any change since the road commissioner located the trees, and the law declaring that such trees did not incommode or endanger public travel. J. D. C.

certain circumstances), and that they shall enforce all provisions of law for the preservation of such trees, provided such provisions do not conflict with any city or borough ordinance. This act does not apply to towns which have within their limits a city whose boundaries are identical with those of the town. The act is applicable to Danbury, which is not such a town. There is no conflict between this general law for the care and custody of the trees upon the highways, and the ordinances of the city of Danbury, recited in the complaint. The section of the charter quoted in the complaint gives to the city permission "to regulate the planting and removal, and provide for the protection, care, and preservation of trees in the public streets and parks." The ordinances provide only that no person shall cut down any tree standing in any street or highway, nor set out any trees between the curb and sidewalk without a permit from a city officer. Here is no attempt to provide for the protection, care, and preservation of the trees. It is simply an attempt "to regulate the planting and removal" of trees in the city highways. After they are planted, and while they remain upon the street, the care and control of them is, under the allegations of the complaint, left to the town tree warden, who is charged with that duty, and who, according to the allegations of the complaint, has assumed the exclusive control of them. There is nothing in the ordinance or regulation which would prevent the tree warden or the owner of the tree in question from removing the dead branch which overhung the sidewalk and constituted the nuisance complained of as causing the plaintiff's injury. The complaint does not specifically charge a duty upon the defendant to remove this limb, and it states no facts which raise such a duty. It therefore fails to state a cause of action, and the demurrer to it was properly sustained.

There is no error.

The other Judges concur.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

CITY OF LUDLOW, Appt.,
v.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY.

(147 Ky. 706, 145 S. W. 406.)

Municipal corporations — nuisance in highway — criminal liability.

1. A city is criminally liable if its officers permit one of its streets, which it is required by statute to maintain, to become so out of repair that it constitutes a public nuisance.

Trial — instruction — liability for nuisance — definition of offense.

2. The court need not make use of the word "nuisance" in instructing the jury as to what will render a city liable for permitting one of its streets to become so out of repair as to constitute a public nuisance, but it is sufficient if it tells the jury that the city may be found guilty if it finds certain facts with respect to the condition of the street.

(April 12, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Kenton County convicting it of maintaining a public nuisance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Jackson & Woodward, for appellant:

The city council, and not the city itself, should have been indicted, because the council had exclusive jurisdiction to repair the streets.

Georgetown v. Com. 115 Ky. 382, 61 L.R.A. 673, 73 S. W. 1011, 1 Ann. Cas. 961; Hammar v. Covington, 3 Met. (Ky.) 494.

The court should have given all the law of the case to the jury.

Buckles v. Com. 113 Ky. 795, 68 S. W. 1084.

Note. — Criminal responsibility of municipality for maintaining or permitting a nuisance.

A municipal corporation is liable to indictment for malfeasance as well as nonfeasance with respect to duties which it owes the public. 28 Cyc. 1775, 4 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 1597. This rule applies with reference to nuisances.

Thus in Paris v. Com. 4 Ky. L. Rep. 597, a case relating to nuisance resulting from obstruction of streets by boisterous crowds, the rule is stated that a municipal corporation may be indicted for a nonfeasance in not carrying out the powers of its charter, and for such misfeasance as are either treasonable, felonious, or attended with violence; but in order that the municipality be indictable for a nonfeasance, it must have the power to do the act omitted, and for a misfeasance the act done must come within the scope of its corporate duty. Only an abstract of Com. v. Paducah, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 292, is reported, but from this it appears that the municipality is not liable for nonfeasance unless, in addition to having the power to abate the nuisance, it is its duty to do so through its ministerial officers. This latter view, that it must be the duty of the municipality to abate the nuisance, is taken in State v. Portland, 74 Me. 271, 43 Am. Rep. 586; but in the latter case it is held that where the power is ex-

Messrs. James Garnett, Attorney General, and M. M. Logan, Assistant Attorney General, for the Commonwealth:

A city may be indicted and punished for maintaining and continuing a public nuisance by failure to keep its streets in repair.

Georgetown v. Com. 115 Ky. 382, 61 L.R.A. 673, 73 S. W. 1011, 1 Ann. Cas. 961; Hammar v. Covington, 3 Met. (Ky.) 494; Com. v. Somerset, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 238.

Mr. R. G. Williams also for the Commonwealth.

Hobson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The city of Ludlow was indicted by the grand jury of Kenton county for maintaining a common nuisance, in failing to keep in a safe condition for the use of the traveling public one of the city highways. On a trial of the case it was fined $200, and appeals.

Ludlow is a city of the fourth class. It has no board of public works, and under the statute the duties imposed upon the board are performed by the council. By § 3583, Ky. Stat. "the board of public works shall have the exclusive power and control over the construction, . . . repairing, . . . and improving of all streets." The chief point made on appeal is that the city cannot be indicted for the failure of the council to repair the streets, but that the council must be indicted. In support of this contention we are referred to the case pressly conferred upon a public corporation in a matter such as sewers, it carries with it by implication the powers necessary for its proper performance, and also the corresponding duty and obligation which grow out of the exercise of the power. So it was held in People v. Albany, 11 Wend. 539, 27 Am. Dec. 95, and State v. Shelbyville, 4 Sneed, 176, that the municipality is bound to exercise its powers in this regard when demanded by the public interests.

But the remedy by indictment is not available where the duty is imposed not by charter, but by a general law of the state, if such general law does not expressly provide for the remedy by indictment. State v. Burlington, 36 Vt. 521. This point was not expressly noted in State v. Portland, 74 Me. 268, 43 Am. Rep. 586, although the power to abate the nuisance was conferred by statute in that case. So, in Saukville v. State, 69 Wis. 178, 33 N. W. 88 (not treated as a nuisance) where the duty to repair a bridge was one imposed by statute, the town was held criminally liable. In neither of the last two-named cases does it appear as to whether or not the law expressly provided for the remedy by indictment.

In State v. Portland, supra, a municipality was held criminally liable for a permissive nuisance arising from sewage matter deposited in tide water, although there was no allegation in the indictment of defect in the plan of the sewer (and all the difficulty there was arose from the plan), in adopting which the city exercised its best judgment as to the proper location of the outflows of the sewers, and had been guilty of no negligence, having constructed the sewers upon a system as good as anyone knew how to build at the time of their construction.

In People v. Albany, supra, a municipality, which had power to remove nuisances, was held criminally liable for failure to exercise the same in removing a nuisance caused by permitting the basin in a river at the termination of a canal to be filled with dirt and filth so as to become offensive.

And in Com. v. Gloucester, 110 Mass. 491, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a town was held criminally liable for constructing a dam and dike across a cove, whereby navigation to and from the open sea was greatly obstructed and confined. A statute in this case, supplemental to one authorizing the county to construct a highway over the cove, authorized the town to erect certain convenient and suitable sluice ways or water courses through said highway, and flood gates suitable for admitting and stopping the tide waters, for the purpose of creating mill privileges. The case was heard on demurrer, and so far as it appears there had been no highway constructed by county, nor no authority given town to obstruct navigation. It is further stated that whether or not the structure actually erected was within the authorization was a question of fact, which could not be passed upon in the case, but at any event if it should appear to have been beyond the authorization, the town would be liable.

So, in Com. v. Bredin, 165 Pa. 224, 30 Atl. 921, the burgess and councilmen of a borough in their corporate capacity were held indictable for maintaining a common nuisance consisting of a sewer, partly covered and partly open, into which was dumped a drain and sewage from a large area. In this case the defendants had power to prohibit and remove any nuisance or offensive matter, and also to make such other regulations as might be necessary for the health and cleanliness of the borough, but it did not appear that any such regulations had been made.

Where a borough, which is not bound to construct a sewer system, determines in the exercise of its discretion upon the construction of such a system, it must so complete the work as not to create a public nuisance; and it is no defense to its liability for such a nuisance that it is without means to complete the system so as to obviate the nuisance. Neither is it a defense that others maintain a nuisance which in a measure contributes to the nuisance created by the sewer system. Com. v. Wilkinsburg, 37 Pa. Super. Ct. 160.

Neither is it a defense to an indictment for maintaining a sewer whereby the waters of Georgetown v. Com. 115 Ky. 382, 61 L.R.A. 673, 73 S. W. 1011, 1 Ann. Cas. 961. In that case the city allowed an open drain between the gas plant and the Big Spring branch to become filled with filth and to be a nuisance. But the city did not own the gas plant. The nuisance, while within the city, was not on the property of the city, or created by it. The city had passed ordinances punishing the creating of such a nuisance, but it had failed to enforce its ordinances. It was held in that case that in enforcing its ordinances the city acts in a governmental capacity, and that it may not be indicted for suffering a common nuisance because it failed to enforce its criminal or penal laws. But in the opinion the distinction between that case and such of a stream are polluted that the waters of the stream were not shown to have been used by the lower riparian owners for "drinking or domestic purposes." Com. v. Ashley, 37 Pa. Super. Ct. 254.

In Paris v. Com. 29 Ky. L. Rep. 483, 93 S. W. 907, a municipality was held criminally liable for permitting blasting on a lot owned by the city in a residence district, notwithstanding the city claimed that the blasting was done by one who was its tenant, but it did not show that the lot had passed beyond its control.

It is no defense to a liability under an indictment for suffering and permitting a city employee and garbage contractor to put the garbage on a city lot, that there was an ordinance providing punishment for maintaining a nuisance in the city. Newport v. State, 108 Ky. 151, 55 S. W. 914.

Where the indictment charges the suffering of assemblages and boisterous crowds upon the streets so as to obstruct the same, the city is not liable where it has provided the necessary ministerial officers for the abatement and prevention of the nuisance, and such officers have in good faith attempted to do so. Paris v. Com. 4 Ky. L. Rep. 597.

But this rule yields to public necessity; and the municipality is not liable for burning the bedding, bedsteads, and clothing that has been used in and about a smallpox hospital that had been established by the municipality during a smallpox epidemic, where it is shown that such burning was the best means known of preventing the spread of infection, and that it was the uniform practice in hospitals where such diseases were being treated, and was the recognized and accredited mode recommended and indorsed by the medical profession; and where such burning was done in good faith. The court states that the temporary inconvenience which resulted to parties near by could not be considered, but the rights of such parties must yield in a matter such as this where public necessity demands the action. State v. Knoxville, 12 Lea, 146, 47 Am. Rep. 331.

Neither is a municipality liable for fail-
 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a case as we have here is expressly pointed out. In Davis v. Bangor, 42 Me. 522, it was held that, in all cases where the municipality may be held for damages for a defective highway in a suit by the person sustaining special damages thereby, the municipality may be indicted for a common nuisance, if its acts amount to a common nuisance. It seems to us that this is a sound principle. We have held in a number of cases that the title to a city street is in the city, and that the city is liable to persons injured by reason of its negligence in failing to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition. This ruling necessarily rests upon the ground that the city is liable for the negligence of its officers in failing to keep the streets in repair; and if the failure ure to abate a nuisance resulting from drainage and sewage being conducted into a ditch by the side of the road, where the duty so to do is imposed not by a charter, but by a general law of the state, and the remedy by indictment is not expressly made applicable by the statute itself. A further fact relieving the municipality from liability in this case was that the state imposed the duty of the removal or abatement of the nuisance erected or created by private persons, upon the selectmen, conditioned upon the exercise of their judgment and discretion, and imposed no liability upon the municipality. State v. Burlington, 36 Vt. 521.

In People v. Albany, 11 Wend. 539, 27 Am. Dec. 95, there was held to be no criminal liability for failure to abate a nuisance if, in order to do so, it was necessary to cut down and remove a bulkhead which had been erected under legislative authority and consented to by municipality, as there was no duty or power created by charter to do this.

See Com. v. Bredin, supra, where the power to abate the nuisance was conferred by a general borough act.

Where the nuisance is the result of conditions created by private parties on private ground.

In State v. Shelbyville, 4 Sneed, 176, the mayor and alderman of a municipality were held criminally liable for a nuisance in permitting a slaughterhouse to be kept by certain citizens within the town, upon a lot owned by them, where the defendants had power to abate the nuisance. The indictment in this case was treated as one against the municipality.

In Com. v. Paducah, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 292, the liability of a municipality for such nuisances is recognized, but it is held that there is no liability for permitting a nuisance in that it did not prevent a "bawdy-house" from being kept, and punish the keeper and those who assembled there, as it was not the duty of the municipality to abate nuisances except such as were defined to keep the streets in repair is a wrongful act of the city, we cannot see upon what principle it can be maintained that the city may not be prosecuted for maintaining a common nuisance, when its acts in the matter amount to creating a nuisance. That the rule that the city may be indicted has been held in Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, and Canada. State v. Madison, 63 Me. 546; Com. v. Boston, 16 Pick. 442; Com. v. New Bedford Bridge, 2 Gray, 339; State v. Dover, 46 N. H. 452; Com. v. Bredin, 165 Pa. 224, 30 Atl. 921; Chattanooga v. State, 5 Sneed, 578; Reg. v. London, 32 Ont. Rep. 326; Dill. Mun. Corp. last ed. §§ 1597, 1598; 1 Smith, Modern Law of Mun. Corp. § 823; Elliott, Roads & Streets, § 662, and cases cited.

In Saukville v. State, 69 Wis. 178, 33 N. W. 88, a conviction was sustained against a city for failing to repair a bridge, which was a public highway within the city limits. In State v. Portland, 74 Me. 268, 43 Am. Rep. 586, the city was indicted for creating a common nuisance by allowing a sewer to overflow. It seems to us that these cases rest upon a sound principle, and that, as the city is liable to a person injured by reason of its negligence in the care of its sewers, bridges, or highways, it may be indicted by the state if it thus creates a common nuisance. The rule declared by the English courts is that, where the town may be indicted for a nuisance, an action for redress may be maintained by the person injured. Henly v. Lyme, 5 Bing. 91, 6 L. J. C. P. 222, 30 Revised Rep. 542. The city officers may be fined and imprisoned if they create or maintain a nuisance. Com. v. Hopkinsville, 7 B. Mon. 38. But the city whom they represent may at the election of the state be indicted, as the duty is by the statute imposed on the city. Section 3560, Ky. Stat. provides: "Public ways, as used in this act, shall mean all public streets, alleys, sidewalks, roads, lanes, avenues, highways, and thoroughfares, and the same shall be under the exclusive management and control of the city, with powers to improve them by original construction, or to reconstruct them, as may be prescribed by ordinance."

It is true that the county may not be indicted for a common nuisance for failing to keep its highways safe; but a county is only a political subdivision of the state. The title to the highway is not in the county, and the county is not answerable in damages to a person who is injured by reason of a defect in the highway. In such cases the county authorities who are negligent must be indicted for creating the nuisance. The distinction is an old one, and comes to us with the common law from England. It appears to rest on this ground: The counties in England are merely political subdivisions, created for convenience for governmental purposes. On the other hand, city charters in England are by it, and it did not appear that the acts permitted had been defined by it to be a nuisance.

In Georgetown v. Com. 115 Ky. 382, 61 L.R.A. 673, 73 S. W. 1011, 1 Ann. Cas. 961, the liability of a municipality for permitting the pollution of a drain on private property within the municipal limits was denied, notwithstanding it had passed ordinances making it an offense to cause, maintain, or permit noxious or unhealthy matter in such a drain within the city. The liability in this case is distinctly denied on the theory that the abatement of the nuisance was a matter which concerned the public or governmental function of the municipality. In the course of the opinion, the court refers to State v. Shelbyville, and Com. v. Paducah, and disapproves of the holding in these cases in so far as they recognize the abatement of nuisances to be a matter belonging to the municipality in its private or corporate capacity. In the course of the opinion the court states that nuisances are an offense at common law, and the person creating or permitting them are liable to indictment wherever committed, and when the state grants to a city the power to abate or pass ordinances to punish persons guilty of such offenses, this right is exercised only in aid of sovereignty in the enforcement of its laws for the comfort, safety, and health of the public. A city in such a case becomes a part of the sovereignty, and therefore is not liable to indictment.

The case of Paris v. Com. supra, agrees with this case in holding that there can be no indictment of a municipality for matters which concern its public or governmental functions; the difference arises as to whether or not a nuisance is concerned with such public or governmental function. In so far as Paris v. Com. supra, holds that it is not, it is overruled by Georgetown v. Com. although it should be noted that Paris v. Com. is a case which concerns a nuisance upon the streets, a distinction that was not discussed by the court.

In Frankfort v. Com. 25 Ky. L. Rep. 311, 75 S. W. 217, the indictment, while against the board of councilmen, was treated as an indictment against the municipality, and there was held to be no criminal liability for permitting a nuisance to exist on private property.

Nonrepair of streets.

In some cases the nonrepair of streets has royal grants, and confer privileges upon the citizens of the city not possessed by the people of England at large. Thus the charter of the city of London confers upon the people of London many exclusive privileges, and the same is true of the charters of the other English cities, especially those that are very old. So it was that the cities of these favored communities, possessing peculiar privileges under royal grants, were held to a different responsibility from that imposed upon mere political subdivisions. Our ancestors brought the common law with them to this country, and originally all cities were incorporated by a special act of the general assembly, conferring privileges more or less valuable; and so a common-law distinction between these municipalities and the counties has been steadily maintained in this country, although under recent legislation much of the reason upon which the rule rested has been abolished. Still the rule has yet some foundation in the greater density of population, and the fact that under our general laws the cities still enjoy some special privileges.

It is also insisted that the court misinstructed the jury, in that it did not tell the jury that the city was accused of maintaining a common nuisance. The instructions of the court are as follows:

"(1) If you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant, in this county and state, and on the ——— day of June, and for many weeks prior thereto, and within one year previous to the finding of the indictment herein, did unreasonably and unnecessarily, and for an unreasonable and unnecessary length of time, suffer and permit deep holes or depressions to be and remain in the street or highway described in the proof, or did suffer and permit said street to be so worn as to cause the street car rails to project above the surface of said street or highway; and you further believe that said street or highway was thereby rendered dangerous, unsuitable, or unsafe to the public traveling, passing, and repassing thereon, and having the right then and there to travel, pass, and repass thereon,—you will find defendant guilty, and fix its punishment at a fine in any amount in your discretion, governed by the proof.

"(2) Unless you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant has been proven guilty, you must acquit it."

The instruction follows the indictment, which aptly informed the defendant of the offense it was charged with. It was not necessary that the court should use in the instruction the words "common nuisance." It submitted to the jury the facts which make out a case of nuisance, and when the jury found these facts to exist the legal conclusion followed.

Judgment affirmed.

been treated as constituting a nuisance, and the municipality liable therefor.

Thus in State v. Murfreesboro, 11 Humph. 217, a municipality was held liable for failing to keep one of the public streets in repair.

It is no defense to an indictment for suffering one of the public streets of a municipality to remain out of repair, that the street was in a remote and sparsely inhabited part of the town, that it had been very little used, and that its use was not essential to the public convenience; that it had never been opened or worked by the corporation, and to open and put it in order would be attended by an expense beyond the means of the corporation.

So, in Byron v. State, 35 Wis. 313, the municipality was held liable for neglecting to keep a public highway in proper repair, but this case turned on other points.

So, in Reg. v. London, 32 Ont. Rep. 326, the liability of a municipality for neglect in repairing and keeping in repair one of its public streets is recognized.

In State v. Canterbury, 28 N. H. 195, a municipality was held liable for failure to build a bridge over a river and connecting the parts of a highway.

In State v. Boscawen, 32 N. H. 331, the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

municipality was held liable notwithstanding such highway may not have been regularly laid out, but existed under such circumstances as to create an estoppel.

So, a municipality has been held criminally liable for failure to repair highways or bridges in cases in which such failure does not appear to have been treated as a nuisance.—Highways: State v. Dover, 46 N. H. 452; State v. Barksdale, 5 Humph. 154;—Bridges: State v. Gorham, 37 Me. 451; State v. Madison, 63 Me. 546; State v. Whittingham, 7 Vt. 390; Saukville v. State, 69 Wis. 178, 33 N. W. 88.

In Com. v. Boston, 16 Pick. 442, a municipality which had annexed outlying territory, and had, by its proper officers, power to lay out streets therein, but was not obliged to complete such streets sooner than might be deemed expedient so to do, is criminally liable for failure to prepare and fit out such street for public use, within a reasonable time after having declared it expedient so to complete it.

Cases, however, in which municipalities have been held criminally liable for failure to comply with their duty to keep streets and bridges in repair, irrespective of the question of nuisance, have, in general, been excluded from the note.

W. A. E.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

FRANCIS J. SCHAUB, Appt.,

v.

JOHN P. O'FERRALL et al.

(116 Md. 131, 81 Atl. 789.)

Conspiracy — to defeat action by perjury — liability.

1. An attorney to whom his client has assigned an interest in the property for which the suit is brought cannot maintain an action against defendants and the witness for conspiring to defeat the claim by perjured testimony, which is successful, although he is thereby deprived of the interest assigned to him.

Witness — perjury — civil liability.

2. A witness is not liable in a civil action for giving perjured testimony in pursuance of a conspiracy which deprives one of property and injures him in his business.

(October 25, 1911.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court of Baltimore City sustaining a demurrer to a declaration filed to recover the loss alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff in his failure to recover for his client from the defendant in a former suit and one of the defendants in this case the alleged money or property of his client, in which he alleges an interest by assignment from her. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James Fluegel for appellant.

Mr. John P. O'Ferrall for appellees.

Pattison, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented by this appeal is one of pleading, and involves only the sufficiency of the averments of the third amended declaration. To this declaration the defendants demurred, and the court below sustained the demurrer and entered judgment for the defendants for costs, from which judgment this appeal was taken.

As we are to determine whether the ruling of the lower court was correct in sustaining the demurrer to the declaration, it will be well for us to set forth the declaration, which is as follows: "For that this plaintiff (Schaub) was in the month of September, 1909, and had been for many years prior thereto, a practising attorney at law in Maryland and particularly in Baltimore city, where he enjoyed a lucrative practice as a lawyer. That he had been retained by one Margaret A. Boland in the year 1909 to represent her professionally as her lawyer in a pending divorce case between her and her husband, the defendant John H. Boland, and to recover for her a large sum of money and considerable personal property which her husband had covenanted to give her, irrespective of the said divorce case, and which said claim for money and personal property due to the said Margaret A. Boland had been by her in part assigned to this plaintiff for a valuable consideration. That in a cause then pending in the circuit court No. 2 of Baltimore city, the said Margaret A. Boland had obtained a divorce from the defendant, John H. Boland, on the ground of his adultery, but had not as yet received from him the moneys and property so due to her as aforesaid, in which this plaintiff had an interest. That to recover the same the said Margaret A. Boland filed a petition in said court to require the said John H. Boland to pay the same to her. That the payment of the same to her had also been guaranteed to her by the joint obligation of the defendant John H. Boland and that of the defendant Edward L. Kaufman, who was then his copartner in the glass and paint business in Baltimore city. That the defendants Boland and Kaufman had failed and refused to pay the said moneys or deliver the said chattels to the said Margaret A. Boland, or to this plaintiff as her solicitor and lawyer, as demanded by him. That the said defendants were represented by a lawyer, who is the defendant John P. O'Ferrall. That the defendant John H. Boland became acquainted and socially intimate with the defendant Pearl R. Ohle, a lewd woman and a prostitute, in the fall of the year 1909, and introduced her to the defendants Kaufman and O'Ferrall. That the said John H. Boland did thereupon, after unlawfully, wilfully, corruptly, and wickedly conspiring with the other defendants in this case to ruin, injure, and defame this plaintiff in his profession as a lawyer, and particularly as the attorney for the said Margaret A. Boland, threaten him that, if he persisted in pressing her claim as aforesaid against him, the defendants would injure and ruin the plaintiff in his profession, and would have the said prostitute, Pearl R. Ohle, falsely testify in the said pending case of Margaret A. Boland versus John H. Boland in the circuit court No. 2 of Baltimore city, that she had seen the plaintiff in the home of his said client in Baltimore city in her bedroom. That the plaintiff and his said client appeared to be affectionate toward each other, and that in the month of September, 1909, the plaintiff and his said client had occupied a bedroom together in a hotel in New York city, while being registered under the name of Tremane, and while the said divorce suit as afore stated was then pending in said court." That the plaintiff, well knowing that such testimony on the part of the said Ohle would be rank perjury, refused to be swerved from his duty as the attorney for the said Margaret A. Boland, and proceeded in the circuit court No. 2 in the case then pending, to press her said claim as aforementioned. That the defendant Pearl R. Ohle did thereupon, in pursuance of the said unlawful, wicked, malicious, and corrupt conspiracy and combination with the other defendants herein named, and after she had received various sums of money and presents from the said John H. Boland, falsely testify to the said matters and things aforementioned, in accordance with the threat so made to this plaintiff by the said John H. Boland (and which matters and things all the defendants knew to be false and unfounded in fact), in the said cause then pending for the recovery of the moneys and property so due to the plaintiff's client, in which he had an interest in the circuit court No. 2 of Baltimore city. That, as a result of the said perjury of the said Ohle in pursuance of said conspiracy, the course of justice was perverted in said cause, and the said avowed and corrupt object of the said conspiracy was accomplished by the plaintiff being thus injured in his good name, fame, and reputation as a practising lawyer and as the attorney for the said Margaret A. Boland; and he and the said Margaret A. Boland were thereby deprived of the moneys and chattels which, but for said foul, corrupt, unlawful, and wilful conspiracy they would, in the cause then pending in the circuit court No. 2, have obtained. "That, in consequence of the said perjury by the said defendant Ohle, the decree for an absolute divorce that was obtained by the said Margaret A. Boland against the defendant John H. Boland therefore, and in which divorce case this plaintiff had acted as her lawyer and solicitor, was set aside, and her bill of complaint was dismissed; and this plaintiff says that thereby he was unjustly caused to suffer in his reputation as a practising attorney in said cause, and in his profession as a lawyer, and other wrongs, financial losses, and damages did he thereby sustain."

Note. — For perjury or subornation of perjury as ground of civil actions. see note to Godette v. Gaskill, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 265. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The lower court in sustaining the demurrer held that the facts alleged in the declaration, if true, do not constitute a valid cause of action. The record, however, does not disclose the grounds upon which the trial judge based his decision. It will be seen that the declaration, consisting only of one count, avers that the plaintiff "had been retained by one Margaret A. Boland . . . to represent her professionally as her lawyer in a pending divorce case between her and her husband, the defendant John H. Boland, and to recover for her a large sum of money and considerable personal property which her husband had covenanted to give her, . . . and which said claim for money and personal property due to the said Margaret A. Boland had been by her in part assigned to this plaintiff for a valuable consideration. . . . That to recover the same the said Margaret A. Boland filed a petition in said court (in the divorce proceeding aforesaid) to require the said John H. Boland to pay the same to her. . . . That the defendant Pearl R. Ohle did thereupon, in pursuance of said unlawful, wicked, malicious, and corrupt conspiracy and combination (such conspiracy and combination being set out in the declaration), with the other defendants herein named, falsely testify to said matters and things aforementioned . . . in said cause then pending for the recovery of the money and property so due to the plaintiff's client, in which he had an interest in the circuit court No. 2 of Baltimore city. That, as a result of the said perjury of said Ohle in pursuance of said conspiracy, the course of justice was perverted in said cause, . . . and he and the said Margaret A. Boland were thereby deprived of the money and chattels, which, but for said false, corrupt, unlawful, and wilful conspiracy, they would, in the cause then pending in the circuit court No. 2, have obtained."

1. The plaintiff, as shown by that part of the declaration immediately above quoted, seeks to recover in this suit, by reason of said alleged perjury, the loss alleged to have been sustained by him in his failure to recover for his client from the defendant in that case, and one of the defendants in this case, the alleged money or property of his client, in which, as the declaration herein alleges, he had an interest by assignment from her. All the authorities we have found are against his right to recover in this suit for such alleged loss. There does not appear to be any conflict of authority on this point. This court said in the recent case of Roschen v. Packard, — Md. —, 81 Atl. 174, and others, decided at the April term, 1911, and not yet reported: "The allegations that the appellees made false statements in their answer to the petition for mandamus, and that certain of them committed perjury at the trial of that case, do not state a cause of action. The controverted questions of fact which were in issue in the mandamus case and which were disposed of there cannot be again retried. Upon all the questions involved in that case the judgment therein rendered is conclusive upon the plaintiff, and the findings of the jury in that case cannot be reviewed or inquired into in this suit." Smith v. Lewis, 3 Johns. 157, 3 Am. Dec. 469; Homer v. Fish, 1 Pick. 441, 11 Am. Dec. 218; Dunlap v. Glidden, 31 Me. 436, 52 Am. Dec. 625. In the case of Smith v. Lewis the declaration sets forth a suit brought by Lewis against Smith and others, in Connecticut, in which Lewis obtained a judgment. It is then alleged therein that Lewis, in order to prove the matters necessary to maintain his suit, unlawfully and corruptly, and with the view and design to deceive the court and jury and to injure the plaintiff, procured one Stephen Burritt to commit wilful and corrupt perjury by making a deposition altogether false, and known to be so by the defendant, and which was given in evidence in the trial, on which evidence, and no other, the plaintiff in the former suit prevailed. Chief Justice Kent, in passing upon the rulings of the court below in sustaining the demurrer to the declaration in that case, said: "This suit is an attempt to overhaul the merits of the verdict and recovery in Connecticut. . . . If this be not an effort to try over again the merits of the former recovery, I must be greatly mistaken in my view of the case. . . . It would be against public policy and convenience, it would be productive of endless litigation, and it would be contrary to established precedent to allow the losing party to try the cause over again in a counter suit, because he was not prepared to meet his adversary at the trial of the first suit." As was said in the case of Dunlap v. Glidden: "If the judgment was obtained, as is contended, by fraud and perjury, the plaintiff has ample remedy by law. The court which rendered the judgment, upon proof of these allegations, would be bound to grant a new trial so that upon a further investigation justice might be done. The witnesses, if guilty, might be indicted for perjury, and so might all those be indicted who have unlawfully conspired together to deprive the plaintiff of his rights, and their conviction would afford the most convincing evidence that a review of the action should take place." The plaintiff in this suit, it is true, was not the plaintiff in the former suit, but the alleged loss sustained by him, as stated in this declaration, resulted from his failure to recover for his client the property and money sued for in such former suit, and in which property and money he had, as he alleges, an interest by assignment from her.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The recovery by Schaub in the former suit was dependent upon the recovery by his client, the plaintiff, in such suit. Thus the plaintiff here is governed and controlled by the principles of law stated in the above-mentioned authorities, and his right to recover in this suit for such alleged loss is thereby prevented.

2. Moreover, whatever may be the liability, if any, of the other defendants in this case for procuring the said Pearl R. Ohle to testify falsely, as it is alleged, to the defamatory words concerning the plaintiff in this case set forth in the declaration, it is clear from all the authorities that no action would lie against the witness, Pearl R. Ohle, even though such testimony was in pursuance of the conspiracy charged against the defendants, including the witness, in this suit. This court in the case of Hunkel v. Voneiff, 69 Md. 188, 9 Am. St. Rep. 413, 14 Atl. 501, quotes approvingly from Starkie on Slander, in which that author said: "Witnesses, like jurors, appear in court in obedience to the authority of the law, and therefore may be considered, as well as jurors, to be acting in the discharge of a public duty; and, though convenience requires that they should be liable to a prosecution for perjury committed in the course of their evidence, or for conspiracy in case of a combination of two or more to give false evidence, they are not responsible in a civil action for any reflections thrown out in delivering their testimony." In the same opinion the court also quoted from the opinion of the court in Dawkins v. Rokeby, L. R. 8 Q. B. 255, in which the court there said: "A long series of decisions has settled that no action will lie against a witness for what he says or writes in giving evidence before a court of justice. This does not proceed on the ground that the occasion rebuts the prima facie presumption that words disparaging to another are maliciously spoken or written. If that were all, evidence of express malice would remove this ground. But the principle we apprehend is that public policy requires that witnesses should give their testimony free from any fear of being harassed by an action on an allegation, whether true or false, that they acted from malice." After Dawkins v. Rokeby came the case of Seaman v. Netherclift, which is also cited by this court in the case last referred to, and which was tried before Coleridge, Ch. J., at nisi prius and afterwards decided by him and Brett, J., in L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 540, and subsequently by the court of appeals in L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 53. The judges who heard the case on appeal said: "If there is anything as to which the authority is overwhelming, it is that a witness is privileged to the extent of what he says in course of his examination. Neither is that privilege affected by the relevancy or irrelevancy of what he says; for then he would be obliged to judge of what is relevant or irrelevant, and questions might be, and are, constantly asked which are not strictly relevant to the issue." This court in Hunkel v. Voneiff, after citing other English authorities in which the same principle is laid down, said: "A different view as to the extent of the privilege has been taken by the courts of many of the states, and it may be conceded that the weight of authority in this country is in favor of a much greater restriction upon the privilege than is sanctioned by the English decisions. But we are not controlled by any decision of our own courts, and are at liberty to settle the law for this state according to our best judgment. After a most careful consideration of the subject, we are convinced that the privilege of a witness should be as absolute as it has been decided to be by the English authorities we have cited; and we accordingly adopt the law on this subject as they have laid it down." And in the case of Kimball v. Harman, 34 Md. 410, 6 Am. Rep. 340, this court said: "It is clear, therefore, as well upon the authority of other cases as that of Saville v. Roberts, 1 Ld. Raym. 374, that an act which, if done by one alone, constitutes no ground of an action on the case, cannot be made the ground of such action by alleging it to have been done by and through a conspiracy of several." From what we have said it is clear that no action lies against the defendant Ohle. The defects that we have pointed out are sufficient, in our opinion, to render the declaration bad. We will therefore affirm the judgment of the court below in sustaining the demurrer to the declaration.

Judgment affirmed, as per Per Curiam heretofore filed, with costs to the appellees.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

EVA HOTENBRINK

v.

BOSTON ELEVATED RAILWAY COMPANY.

(211 Mass. 77, 97 N. E. 624.)

Carrier — tobacco juice on step — injury — liability.

A street car company is not liable for injury to a passenger who falls from the step of a car which is slippery because of tobacco juice which has been expectorated there, if there is nothing to show that it had been there any length of time, and the conductor is not shown to have been negligent in failing to discover it before the accident happened.

(February 27, 1912.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Superior Court for Suffolk County made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries due to a fall from defendant's car which was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. P. Murray and E. F. Hodgdon, for plaintiff:

It was the duty of the conductor to look for, see, and take proper precautions to prevent injuries from this danger.

Anjou v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 208 Mass. 273, 94 N. E. 386, 21 Ann. Cas. 1143.

The question of his negligence was indicated in the declaration, and should have been submitted to the jury.

Joslyn v. Milford, H. & F. Street R. Co. 184 Mass. 65, 67 N. E. 866.

The company had, by its practice and rules, made it the duty of the conductor to put sand, provided for that and other purposes, on any slippery substances on the step of the car. The breach of this duty is negligence.

Foster v. Old Colony Street R. Co. 182 Mass. 380, 65 N. E. 795; Anjou v. Boston

Note. — Duty of carrier of passengers to keep steps of car free from slippery substances other than snow and ice.

As to duty of carrier of passengers to keep steps of cars free from snow and ice, see note to Riley v. Rhode Island Co. 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 523, and the supplemental note thereto which is appended to Murphy v. North Jersey Street R. Co. 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 592.

A carrier owes the duty to its passengers of exercising as high degree of care to keep the steps provided for passengers to alight from its coaches in a reasonably safe condition to so alight as would be exercised by every prudent person under the same circumstances. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Gresham, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 140 S. W. 483.

And while it is the duty of a railroad company to inspect its trains, it is not bound to keep up a continuous inspection, or to know at each moment the condition of every part of the train. Proud v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 64 N. J. L. 702, 50 L.R.A. 469, 46 Atl. 710, wherein it was held that the failure of a railroad company to discover filth on the steps of a passenger car in the nighttime, within half an hour after the car had been inspected and found to which were disposed of there cannot be again retried. Upon all the questions involved in that case the judgment therein rendered is conclusive upon the plaintiff, and the findings of the jury in that case cannot be reviewed or inquired into in this suit." Smith v. Lewis, 3 Johns. 157, 3 Am. Dec. 469; Homer v. Fish, 1 Pick. 441, 11 Am. Dec. 218; Dunlap v. Glidden, 31 Me. 436, 52 Am. Dec. 625. In the case of Smith v. Lewis the declaration sets forth a suit brought by Lewis against Smith and others, in Connecticut, in which Lewis obtained a judgment. It is then alleged therein that Lewis, in order to prove the matters necessary to maintain his suit, unlawfully and corruptly, and with the view and design to deceive the court and jury and to injure the plaintiff, procured one Stephen Burrutt to commit wilful and corrupt perjury by making a deposition altogether false, and known to be so by the defendant, and which was given in evidence in the trial, on which evidence, and no other, the plaintiff in the former suit prevailed. Chief Justice Kent, in passing upon the rulings of the court below in sustaining the demurrer to the declaration in that case, said: "This suit is an attempt to overhaul the merits of the verdict and recovery in Connecticut. . . . If this be not an effort to try over again the merits of the former recovery, I must be greatly mistaken in my view of the case. . . . It would be against public policy and convenience, it would be productive of endless litigation, and it would be contrary to established precedent to allow the losing party to try the cause over again in a counter suit, because he was not prepared to meet his adversary at the trial of the first suit." As was said in the case of Dunlap v. Glidden: "If the judgment was obtained, as is contended, by fraud and perjury, the plaintiff has ample remedy by law. The court which rendered the judgment, upon proof of these allegations, would be bound to grant a new trial so that upon a further investigation justice might be done. The witnesses, if guilty, might be indicted for perjury, and so might all those be indicted who have unlawfully conspired together to deprive the plaintiff of his rights, and their conviction would afford the most convincing evidence that a review of the action should take place." The plaintiff in this suit, it is true, was not the plaintiff in the former suit, but the alleged loss sustained by him, as stated in this declaration, resulted from his failure to recover for his client the property and money sued for in such former suit, and in which property and money he had, as he alleges, an interest by assignment from her. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The recovery by Schaub in the former suit was dependent upon the recovery by his client, the plaintiff, in such suit. Thus the plaintiff here is governed and controlled by the principles of law stated in the above-mentioned authorities, and his right to recover in this suit for such alleged loss is thereby prevented.

2. Moreover, whatever may be the liability, if any, of the other defendants in this case for procuring the said Pearl R. Ohle to testify falsely, as it is alleged, to the defamatory words concerning the plaintiff in this case set forth in the declaration, it is clear from all the authorities that no action would lie against the witness, Pearl R. Ohle, even though such testimony was in pursuance of the conspiracy charged against the defendants, including the witness, in this suit. This court in the case of Hunckel v. Voneiff, 69 Md. 188, 9 Am. St. Rep. 413, 14 Atl. 501, quotes approvingly from Starkie on Slander, in which that author said: "Witnesses, like jurors, appear in court in obedience to the authority of the law, and therefore may be considered, as well as jurors, to be acting in the discharge of a public duty; and, though convenience requires that they should be liable to a prosecution for perjury committed in the course of their evidence, or for conspiracy in case of a combination of two or more to give false evidence, they are not responsible in a civil action for any reflections thrown out in delivering their testimony." In the same opinion the court also quoted from the opinion of the court in Dawkins v. Rokeby, L. R. 8 Q. B. 255, in which the court there said: "A long series of decisions has settled that no action will lie against a witness for what he says or writes in giving evidence before a court of justice. This does not proceed on the ground that the occasion rebuts the prima facie presumption that words disparaging to another are maliciously spoken or written. If that were all, evidence of express malice would remove this ground. But the principle we apprehend is that public policy requires that witnesses should give their testimony free from any fear of being harassed by an action on an allegation, whether true or false, that they acted from malice." After Dawkins v. Rokeby came the case of Seaman v. Netherclift, which is also cited by this court in the case last referred to, and which was tried before Coleridge, Ch. J., at nisi prius and afterwards decided by him and Brett, J., in L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 540, and subsequently by the court of appeals in L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 53. The judges who heard the case on appeal said: "If there is anything as to which the authority is overwhelming, it is that a witness is privileged to the extent of what he says in course of his examination. Neither is that privilege affected by the relevancy or irrelevancy of what he says; for then he would be obliged to judge of what is relevant or irrelevant, and questions might be, and are, constantly asked which are not strictly relevant to the issue." This court in Hunckel v. Voneiff, after citing other English authorities in which the same principle is laid down, said: "A different view as to the extent of the privilege has been taken by the courts of many of the states, and it may be conceded that the weight of authority in this country is in favor of a much greater restriction upon the privilege than is sanctioned by the English decisions. But we are not controlled by any decision of our own courts, and are at liberty to settle the law for this state according to our best judgment. After a most careful consideration of the subject, we are convinced that the privilege of a witness should be as absolute as it has been decided to be by the English authorities we have cited; and we accordingly adopt the law on this subject as they have laid it down." And in the case of Kimball v. Harman, 34 Md. 410, 6 Am. Rep. 340, this court said: "It is clear, therefore, as well upon the authority of other cases as that of Saville v. Roberts, 1 Ld. Raym. 374, that an act which, if done by one alone, constitutes no ground of an action on the case, cannot be made the ground of such action by alleging it to have been done by and through a conspiracy of several." From what we have said it is clear that no action lies against the defendant Ohle. The defects that we have pointed out are sufficient, in our opinion, to render the declaration bad. We will therefore affirm the judgment of the court below in sustaining the demurrer to the declaration.

Judgment affirmed, as per Per Curiam heretofore filed, with costs to the appellees.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

EVA HOTENBRINK

v.

BOSTON ELEVATED RAILWAY COMPANY.

(211 Mass. 77, 97 N. E. 624.)

Carrier — tobacco juice on step — injury — liability.

A street car company is not liable for injury to a passenger who falls from the step of a car which is slippery because of tobacco juice which has been expectorated there, if there is nothing to show that it had been there any length of time, and the conductor is not shown to have been negligent in failing to discover it before the accident happened.

(February 27, 1912.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Superior Court for Suffolk County made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries due to a fall from defendant's car which was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. P. Murray and E. F. Hodgdon, for plaintiff:

It was the duty of the conductor to look for, see, and take proper precautions to prevent injuries from this danger.

Anjou v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 208 Mass. 273, 94 N. E. 386, 21 Ann. Cas. 1143.

The question of his negligence was indicated in the declaration, and should have been submitted to the jury.

Joslyn v. Milford, H. & F. Street R. Co. 184 Mass. 65, 87 N. E. 866.

The company had, by its practice and rules, made it the duty of the conductor to put sand, provided for that and other purposes, on any slippery substances on the step of the car. The breach of this duty is negligence.

Foster v. Old Colony Street R. Co. 182 Mass. 380, 65 N. E. 795; Anjou v. Boston

Note. — Duty of carrier of passengers to keep steps of car free from slippery substances other than snow and ice.

As to duty of carrier of passengers to keep steps of cars free from snow and ice, see note to Riley v. Rhode Island Co. 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 523, and the supplemental note thereto which is appended to Murphy v. North Jersey Street R. Co. 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 592.

A carrier owes the duty to its passengers of exercising as high degree of care to keep the steps provided for passengers to alight from its coaches in a reasonably safe condition to so alight as would be exercised by every prudent person under the same circumstances. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Gresham, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 140 S. W. 483.

And while it is the duty of a railroad company to inspect its trains, it is not bound to keep up a continuous inspection, or to know at each moment the condition of every part of the train. Proud v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 64 N. J. L. 702, 50 L.R.A. 469, 46 Atl. 710, wherein it was held that the failure of a railroad company to discover filth on the steps of a passenger car in the nighttime, within half an hour after the car had been inspected and found to Elev. R. Co. 208 Mass. 273, 94 N. E. 386, 21 Ann. Cas. 1143; Kingston v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 207 Mass. 457, 93 N. E. 573.

Mr. Sheldon E. Wardwell, for defendant:

There was no evidence from which the jury could have found that the defendant was negligent.

Goddard v. Boston & M. R. Co. 179 Mass. 52, 60 N. E. 486; Lyons v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 204 Mass. 227, 90 N. E. 419; Anjou v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 208 Mass. 273, 94 N. E. 386, 21 Ann. Cas. 1143; Toland v. Paine Furniture Co. 175 Mass. 476, 56 N. E. 608; Proud v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 64 N. J. L. 702, 50 L.R.A. 468, 46 Atl. 710; Jennings v. Tompkins, 180 Mass. 302, 62 N. E. 265.

De Courcy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There was evidence for the jury of the plaintiff's due care, and we do not understand that the defendant contends to the contrary. The sole question here is that of the defendant's negligence; involved in the presence of some tobacco spit of the size of a silver dollar or half dollar on the rear step of the car.

Even if it be assumed that the presence of tobacco spit would produce a slippery condition on the car step, the plaintiff was bound to show that the defendant's conductor knew it was there, or by the exercise of the care owed to the plaintiff would have seen and removed it.

There is no evidence that the conductor knew the saliva was there. No witness in the case, with the exception of the plaintiff and the child Clausina Bookhaut, testified that the alleged condition existed even at the time of the accident; and no witness testified to its existence before the plaintiff alighted. The momentary presence of such a substance on the step would not render the defendant liable. Goddard v. Boston & M. R. Co. 179 Mass. 52, 60 N. E. 486; Lyons v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 204 Mass. 227, 90 N. E. 419. There was nothing in its appearance from which the inference could be drawn that it had been upon the step for a considerable period of time. Anjou v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 208 Mass. 273, 94 N. E. 386, 21 Ann. Cas. 1143. The inference that it must have been there for two minutes, or since the preceding stop at H or I street, is merely conjectural, for it might have come from some passing teamster or pedestrian or otherwise.

And the evidence fails to show that the conductor was negligent in failing to see this substance on the step before the plain-be in good condition, will not render the company liable to a passenger who is injured by slipping on the step, where the proof does not show that due care would have prevented the accident.

So, where a passenger is injured by slipping on the smooth edge of the step of a boat, and the stairs are finished in the same manner as upon the best river boats, he cannot recover for his injury, since no evidence of negligence appears. Crocheron v. North Shore Staten Island Ferry Co. 56 N. Y. 656, reversing 1 Thomp. & C. 446, wherein it appeared that the boat had been in use a year, and had carried, on an average, a thousand passengers a day, and no injury of the kind had occurred.

A carrier is not bound to anticipate unusual and unexpected causes of peril. Thus in Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Rose, 40 Ind. App. 240, 79 N. E. 1094, where the plaintiff was injured by slipping on a banana peel, which was lying on a step of a car, and the evidence showed that the plaintiff and others got aboard the train about four or five minutes before it left the station, without seeing the peel,—although two passengers embarking at the same station testified that they did see it,—and all the while the train was at the station the brakeman and conductor thereof were completely occupied by their duties in making up the train, helping the passengers on board, and taking up tickets, from the time the peel could have been dropped on the step until the plaintiff met with the accident, it was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. It was said: "It was not a danger reasonably to be apprehended; not such a one as would require the unremitting vigilance of the carrier to guard his passengers against. Successfully to have guarded against an accident of this kind, the company would be compelled to keep a servant at the steps of every car during all the time it was receiving and discharging passengers. No such degree of vigilance is required of a carrier to guard against a peril of this character."

But where the rules of the carrier made it incumbent upon the conductor to clean the step of the car, and put sand on it provided for the purpose, whenever it was necessary to prevent passengers from slipping, it was held in Kingston v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 207 Mass. 457, 93 N. E. 573, that the carrier was liable for injuries to the plaintiff caused by slipping on the muddy step of the car; its conductor having been negligent in not cleaning it off, and notwithstanding the mud reached the step by the natural tracking thereon during the course of the journey.

And where one was injured by slipping from the steps of a car it has been held to be a question for the jury whether the carrier negligently permitted the steps to become slippery and muddy after a very recent rain during the course of the journey, or failed to equip the steps in a reasonably safe manner. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Gresham, supra.

E. M. S.

tiff fell. His position on the rear platform, to the left of the controller, would enable him to see only the outer edge of the step. It was not something to be anticipated, like the accumulation of mud and slime on rainy days (Kingston v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 207 Mass. 457, 93 N. E. 573), or of snow and ice during our winter season (Foster v. Old Colony Street R. Co. 182 Mass. 378, 65 N. E. 795). Nor did the testimony disclose any rule of the company imposing upon the conductor a special duty to examine the car steps for tobacco spit. Kingston v. Boston Elev. R. Co. supra.

On the evidence presented the plaintiff was not entitled to go to the jury on the issue of the defendant's negligence.

Exceptions overruled.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

JOSEPH F. SULZNER

v.

CAPPEAU-LEMLEY & MILLER COMPANIES
NY, Appt.

(234 Pa. 162, 83 Atl. 103.)

Contracts — duress — threat of imprisonment.

A transfer of stock cannot be set aside for duress, because of a threat to imprison the son of the transferrer, who made the contract for the transfer, if it was not carried out.

(January 2, 1912.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, Number 4, for Allegheny County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover possession of a certificate of the stock of a mining company. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles A. O'Brien for appellant.
Messrs. Harvey A. Miller and U. G. Vogan for appellee.

Moschzisker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff deposited a certificate for 2,500 shares of the stock of a mining company with the defendants for the purpose of sale. A few days later a meeting took place at the office of the defendants in relation to this sale, and certain other persons appeared and claimed to be purchasers of portions of the stock through a son of the plaintiff and another man who they asserted acted as his agents. The plaintiff recognized these claims, accepted in cash what the alleged purchasers declared to be the unpaid balance due, signed a receipt for the purchase money, and executed appropriate papers to carry out a proper division and a transfer of the stock. Subsequently he instituted this action of replevin to recover the certificate for the stock in question. At the trial of the cause the plaintiff did not deny the identity of the papers executed by him, but asserted that they were obtained by duress. This issue was submitted to the jury, and they found a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the value of the stock, judgment was entered thereon, and the defendant has appealed.

The appellant states the questions involved to be: (1) Was the charge of the court correct and adequate on the question of duress? (2) Was the plaintiff entitled to recover on the whole evidence in the case? We shall consider the latter question before passing upon the former.

There is no sufficient testimony to show that the plaintiff was either old or infirm at the time of the transaction complained of. The only evidence bearing upon that point was a statement by him that a few months previous thereto he had been in Texas for his health, "about my nervous system." The alleged coercion was thus described by the plaintiff: "Mr. Taylor says, 'Mr. Sulzner, are you aware that your son has sold 1,000 shares to Mr. Volquarts of this stock?' I says: 'No, sir; I don't know anything about it.' He says, 'He has;' and he says also: 'Mr. Kirker sold 1,000 shares to Mr. Cappeau-Lemley. George sold his at 19 cents, and Cappeau-Lemley for 26 cents.' I said, 'I won't stand for anything like that, because,' I said, 'they had no business.' I said: 'Why didn't you tell me all this before you got my stock here, because this wasn't the deal we were to get now? You were to give me my money for it.' And then Mr. Taylor says, 'Mr. Volquarts, tender $125 to Mr. Sulzner, the balance of $190 which George gave a check for $65 on account.' 'Well, now,' I said, 'this is a snap judgment you are taking on me.' I says, 'I don't know anything about this.' He says, 'Well, here is the money.' And he says then, 'Mr. Lemley, you tender $260;' and he says: 'I don't think I have that much in the office. I will go in and see.' And he went in the office and brought out $260, and then laid that down to me. And Mr. Taylor says, 'Now, Mr. Sulzner, we have tendered you this money for 2,000 shares;'

Note.—The question involved in the above case, as to the validity of contracts procured by threats of prosecution of a relative, is covered in notes to the cases of City Nat. Bank v. Kusworm, 26 L.R.A. 48; Williamson-Halsell Frazier Co. v. Ackerman, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 484, and Ball v. Ball, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 539.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

and he says, 'Take that,' and he had a paper in his hand; and he says, 'We will put your son in the pen.' He says, 'It is either take that or take the consequences.' Then I broke down and started to cry. I got so bewildered. . . . After that they had me so confused I didn't know what I was doing. I wanted to go home, and I picked up the money, and I says to George, I says: 'George, you are getting me into all kinds of trouble. You had no business doing this.' And I took the money up and went home." The plaintiff further said that he took the money and signed the papers "to save my son from being arrested." The son described the incident practically as his father, adding: "Mr. Taylor was walking around there flashing the paper, going to send me to prison, send me to the penitentiary, . . . and father got all bewildered and broke down, did not know what to do, and he said, 'You've got me into this, and I have got to pay or you will go to prison.' I said, 'There is nothing to it at all.'"

Under both the civil and common law, threats, in order to constitute duress, had to be of "such a character as to induce a well-grounded fear in the mind of a firm and courageous man;" but "the doctrine which is now approved by the judicial mind, both of this country and of England, is that any contract produced by actual intimidation ought to be held void, whether as arising from a result of merely personal infirmity or from circumstances which might produce a like effect upon persons of ordinary firmness." Jordan v. Elliott, 12 W. N. C. 56, 59.

A person is supposed to possess ordinary firmness unless it is shown that by reason of age or other sufficient cause he is weak or infirm. Union Nat. Bank v. Dersham, 15 W. N. C. 541. "The constraint that takes away free agency and destroys the power of withholding assent to a contract must be one that is imminent and without immediate means of protection, and such as would operate upon the mind of a person of reasonable firmness." Motz v. Mitchell, 91 Pa. 114, 117.

Ordinarily, when no proceedings have been commenced, threats of arrest, prosecution or imprisonment do not constitute legal duress to avoid a contract. The threats must be made under such circumstances that they excite the fear of imminent and immediate imprisonment. Moyer v. Dodson, 212 Pa. 344, 61 Atl. 937; Harmon v. Harmon, 61 Me. 227, 14 Am. Rep. 556; Higgins v. Brown, 78 Me. 473, 5 Atl. 269; Hilborn v. Bucknam, 78 Me. 482, 57 Am. Rep. 816, 7 Atl. 272; Sieber v. Weiden, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

17 Neb. 582, 24 N. W. 215; Wilkerson v. Hood, 65 Mo. App. 491; Russell v. McCarty, 45 Ga. 197. The decision in Jordan v. Elliott, 12 W. N. C. 56, cited by the appellant, does not control the present case. There the plaintiff, who was an infirm widow, seventy-seven years of age, knew of the defendant, as a man of violent disposition. His threat was to put her son in jail before night, and at the time of the execution of the papers she was laboring under great agitation. This court in its opinion states: "The circumstances which surrounded the old lady, and which induced, or rather compelled her, to execute the paper in controversy, were of an extraordinarily rough, impudent, and fraudulent character;" and, further, that she had a "conviction that she was dealing with a dangerous man whose will it would not be safe to resist." Although the English case of Williams v. Bayley, L. R. 1 H. L. 200, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 455, is referred to, the law of that case was not adopted as necessary to the decision of Jordan v. Elliott. After citing it, we expressly stated: "How aptly these authorities bear on the case in hand. I need not say, for anyone who reads the evidence will at once see that Mrs. Elliott was so thoroughly overcome by fear, produced by the conduct of the plaintiff, that in the execution of the note in suit she was anything but a free and voluntary agent."

The plaintiff had been president of the mining company whose stock was in controversy, and so far as the evidence shows he was a man of ordinary firmness. He himself was not threatened with arrest at any time, and, upon the occasion when he signed the contract which he is endeavoring to avoid, both the plaintiff and his son were at liberty to come and go as they chose, and had ample time to consult an attorney, had they so desired. The evidence as presented was not sufficient to sustain a finding that the plaintiff's signature had been obtained by duress, and, had the defendant requested binding instructions, he would have been entitled thereto, but the record shows no such request or no question of law reserved.

Under these circumstances, the defendant was not within the act of April 22, 1905 (P. L. 286), and had no right to judgment non obstante veredicto upon the whole record; and, since there is no assignment of error complaining of the judgment for the plaintiff, we will not enter a final judgment the other way. However, the charge of the trial judge was inadequate, in that it did not sufficiently define the applicable rules of law as we have stated them.

The last two assignments of error, which complain of the refusal to enter judgment non obstante veredicto, are overruled. The first two, which go to the charge, are sustained. The judgment is reversed, with a venire facias de novo.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

JOHN HORTON, Plff. in Err.,

v.

STATE OF OHIO.

(85 Ohio St. 13, 96 N. E. 797.)

Indictment — false pretense — certainty.

1. An indictment under § 7076, Revised Statutes, for obtaining money by false pretenses, must set forth the alleged false pretenses with such certainty and precision as will reasonably appraise the defendant of what he will be required to answer, and so that the court may determine what evidence is admissible, and must allege that the pretenses were in fact false and made with intent to defraud.

False pretense — defense — unlawful transaction.

2. It is no defense to an indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses that the Headnotes by the COURT.

Note. — Illegal intent of prosecutor as affecting guilt in obtaining property by false pretense or confidence game.

This note is supplemental to the note to People v. Turpin, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 276, where the earlier cases are collected.

The decision in Horton v. State, to the effect that the wrongful purpose of the prosecutor is no defense to the action, is in accordance with the weight of authority shown by the previous note.

In State v. Martin, 226 Mo. 538, 126 S. W. 442, where a conviction was affirmed for obtaining money from one Bull by false and fraudulent representations, which were chiefly in falsely personating the owner of land on which Bull had cut timber without leave; and there was evidence that the inducement to the prosecutor was, at least in part, the escape from criminal prosecution, the court, in holding that such purpose of the prosecutor was immaterial, said: "Concede that Bull and his neighbors had been trespassing upon the lands of Wilcox and cutting the timber thereon without authority, and that they might have been prosecuted criminally therefor, how does it lessen the offense of these defendants, who were not the owners of the land and timber, that, seizing upon their knowledge of the illegal taking of the timber, they concocted the scheme of extorting money from Bull and his neighbors by representing Denton to be Wilcox, and causing him to make a demand for payment for the timber, which neither he nor transaction in which the money was so obtained was unlawful.

(Davis, J., dissents from proposition 2.)

(October 31, 1911.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Mercer County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas convicting defendant of obtaining money by false pretenses. Reversed.

Statement by Johnson, J.:

John Horton was indicted for obtaining money under false pretenses. At the October term, 1909, of the court of common pleas of Mercer county, the grand jury returned an indictment against John Horton for obtaining money under false pretenses from one Frank Linneman. Omitting formal parts, the indictment is as follows: "That John Horton unlawfully did falsely pretend, with intent to defraud one Frank Linneman, that he was selling counterfeit money, by which said false pretenses the said John Horton then and there unlawfully did obtain from said Frank Linneman $65 in money, of the value of $65 of the personal property of said Frank Linneman; whereas in truth and in fact said John Horton was not selling, and they were entitled to. We think the court properly brushed aside this instruction. Whatever offense Bull was guilty of, it formed no justification for the criminal conduct of these defendants in extorting money from him by means of the false and fraudulent representations and fraudulent simulation of Mr. Wilcox."

In Foster v. State, 8 Ga. App. 119, 68 S. E. 739, where the prosecutrix went to Florida at the instigation of the defendant, and there paid him $100, for which he was to get her $500 in counterfeit money, and she also paid certain expenses both within and without the state of Georgia, the court stated that what had happened without the county could not be considered except as giving point to what occurred within the county, and held that "a person may be guilty of cheating and swindling in a transaction in which both parties know that they are violating or about to violate the law, provided that the one therein cheats and swindles the other out of something of value. But neither counterfeit money itself, nor the possession thereof, is a thing of value; and therefore one person cannot cheat and swindle the other by representing to him that if he will go to certain expense he can procure at a certain time and place a designated amount of counterfeit money, though the latter fails to get the expected spurious currency." The court said: "Was Mrs. Robertson deceived in Hall county? Yes; she was deceived into believing that if she would go to Jacksonville, Florida, she could get had no intention at said time to sell and deliver, any counterfeit money; and said Horton at the time he so falsely pretended as aforesaid well knew the said false pretenses to be false." A motion to quash and a demurrer were filed to this indictment, and were overruled. On the trial at the close of the state's case, the defendant interposed a demurrer to the evidence, and moved the court to instruct the jury to return a verdict for defendant. This was also overruled. The defendant was convicted and sentenced. On error to the circuit court this judgment was affirmed, and error is prosecuted here to reverse the judgments of the courts below.

Messrs. John E. Egan, George W. Mannix, Jr., and Robert R. Nevin for plaintiff in error.

Mr. John G. Romer for the State.

Johnson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant contends that the indictment is defective, in that it is indefinite, and does not sufficiently set forth the alleged false pretenses, and does not allege that the pretenses were in fact false, and, further, that the indictment does not charge a crime under the law.

This court has many times declared that $500 in spurious currency in return for $100. She makes no complaint of not getting all she expected to get out of the trip and in return for the money she expended in connection therewith, except that she did not get the counterfeit money. The transaction in Jacksonville, whereby she was induced to turn the $100 over to Foster, must be eliminated; for that occurred in Florida.

We are not to be understood as holding that cheating and swindling cannot be predicated of an unlawful transaction. There are many transactions for which the state can prosecute, where the parties, by reason of the uncleanness of their hands, would not be allowed to maintain a civil action. Thus, although the sale of liquor is a crime in this state, yet if the keeper of a 'blind tiger' should represent to a prospective purchaser that a bottle contained corn whisky, and should sell it as a bottle of corn whisky, receiving therefor the purchaser's money, when in fact it contained water only, he could be held for cheating and swindling. Or, if in a similar case the prospective purchaser should palm off on the keeper of a 'blind tiger,' in the nighttime, a worthless slip of paper as a dollar bill, and receive in exchange therefor a quart of whisky, the person so deceiving the seller of the liquor could be convicted of cheating and swindling. However, it must be noticed in each of these illustrations that the person deceived parts with something of value. It is true that in this state a criminal offense must be charged with reasonable certainty in the indictment so as to apprise the defendant of that which he may expect to meet and be required to answer; so that the court and jury may know what they are to try, and the court may determine without unreasonable difficulty what evidence is admissible. And an indictment for obtaining money or property by false pretenses must aver all of the material facts necessary to be proven in order to convict, and that the false pretenses were false in fact and induced the owner to part with his property. Dillingham v. State, 5 Ohio St. 280; Schleisinger v. State, 11 Ohio St. 669; Du Brul v. State, 80 Ohio St. 52, 87 N. E. 837; People v. Behee, 90 Mich. 356, 51 N. W. 515.

First. It will be noted that this indictment contains no averment that there was any attempt by Horton to induce Linneman to purchase any counterfeit money, or that Linneman did purchase any such money. There is no allegation that Horton sold or agreed to sell or deliver any counterfeit money or any other thing to Linneman by which Linneman was induced to and did pay him the $65. In Schleisinger v. State, 11 Ohio St. 669, the court say at page 673: "There is, however, no colloquium set forth in the indictment, showing a negotiation between the parties, and that the repre-liquor cannot be said to have any marked value in the full sense of the words; yet it is a thing of value. Mance v. State, 5 Ga. App. 229, 62 S. E. 1053. But in no sense is counterfeit money a thing of value. The very possession of it is criminal. It is a violation of law to make it, to own it, or use it. It is utterly without value. Suppose that the defendant had said to the prosecutrix, 'Your sworn enemy is in Jacksonville; if you will go there with me and pay me $100, I will show that enemy to you that you may poison him.' Suppose the defendants statement were a lie, could the transaction be treated as cheating and swindling? The privilege of poisoning one's enemy is not a thing of value."

(It may be noted in view of the recommendations of the New York courts; mentioned in the former note, that the legislature relieve them from their doctrine that the illegal intent of the prosecutor is a defense, that the following provision has been placed in the statute: "Hereafter it shall not be a defense to a prosecution for larceny, or for an attempt or for conspiracy to commit the same, or for being accessory thereto, that the purpose for which the owner was induced, by color or aid of fraudulent or false representation or pretense, or of any false token or writing, to part with his property or the possession thereof, was illegal, immoral, or unworthy." N. Y. Penal Law, § 1290.)

B. B. B.

sentations and pretenses were made with the intent to thereby obtain from said Woods and Pew any goods of any kind whatsoever."

The important matter is that there is no allegation of any transaction, contract, or negotiation in which, by reason of the false pretenses referred to, Horton obtained the money from Linneman. On the trial the prosecuting witness described the transaction in question, and testified that defendant told him he was selling counterfeit money three for one, and that he (Linneman) gave defendant $65, for which defendant promised to give him $300 counterfeit money in eight days. As pointed out already, the indictment charges only that defendant falsely pretended that he was selling counterfeit money. It is not alleged that he pretended to have counterfeit money, or that he was delivering it. But, according to the testimony of the prosecuting witness, that pretense was not a false pretense, because he was then selling and did sell to him counterfeit money to be delivered at a future time. The promise to deliver the counterfeit money at a future time could not be made the basis of a conviction for crime. Dillingham v. State, 5 Ohio St. 280; State v. Petty, 119 Mo. 425, 24 S. W. 1010; Com. v. Drew, 19 Pick. 179; People v. Miller, 169 N. Y. 339, 88 Am. St. Rep. 546, 62 N. E. 418.

Plaintiff in error challenges the indictment on two other grounds: (1) That the false representations averred in the indictment were such as no man had the right to rely on, and that, in the absence of any alleged disability on the part of the prosecutor, they are not sufficient to sustain a conviction. (2) That there was a common criminal design between the parties.

Many decisions are cited by the parties in support of their respective views of these questions, and they disclose much conflict of authority.

As to the first proposition, there are cases which hold that where the pretense is absurd or irrational, and the prosecutor had at the time the means of detection, such pretense is not within the law of crimes. It would not be profitable here to discuss these cases in detail. We agree with the view that many of such holdings have gone too far. The weak and feeble have equal rights with the strong. The careless or unwary are entitled to the protection of these false pretense statutes as well as of all other statutes. Most people think the fanciful story of a confidence man who sells a gold brick is absurd, and should carry its own refutation; but many inexperienced, unwary, but honest, men, have been caught by it, and no one would think the offense was not an indictable one.

The second of the above contentions presents a different question, and one as to which there is a diversity of decisions. Can there be a conviction for obtaining money by false pretenses when the transaction, on the part of the person from whom the money is obtained, would have been unlawful if the representations of the defendant had been true; or if one pretends to be engaged in the commission of a particular crime, when, in fact, he is not so engaged, can he be convicted for obtaining money by false pretense from one who desired to participate in the same crime, and who parted with his money in that behalf?

In McCord v. People, 46 N. Y. 470, the accused falsely pretended to be an officer with a warrant to arrest the prosecuting witness, and he thereby induced the witness to deliver to him certain property. The court held that the prosecutor parted with his property as an inducement to a supposed officer to violate the law and his duty, and that the indictment could not be sustained. The court say at page 472 of 46 N. Y.: "Neither the law or public policy designs the protection of rogues in their dealings with each other, or to insure fair dealing and truthfulness as between each other in their dishonest practices. The design of the law is to protect those who for some honest purpose are induced, upon false and fraudulent representations, to give credit or part with their property to another, and not to protect those who for unworthy or illegal purposes part with their goods." This case has been followed in a number of New York cases and in some other jurisdictions. People v. Klock, 55 Misc. 48, 106 N. Y. Supp. 267; People v. Stetson, 4 Barb. 152; People v. Tompkins, 186 N. Y. 413, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1081, 79 N. E. 326; State v. Crowley, 41 Wis. 272, 22 Am. Rep. 719, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 33; Foster v. State, 8 Ga. App. 119, 68 S. E. 739. State v. Crowley and Foster v. State were cases in which the false representations were made in transactions for the sale of counterfeit money. The court in Foster v. State say: "This case is also to be distinguished from those cases in which the defendant, by imposing on the credulity or weakmindedness of the prosecutor, has caused him to pay money for something which could not be of value, but which the prosecutor was led to believe was in fact so. In such cases a prosecution for cheating and swindling may lie. But in this case the prosecutrix acted with her eyes open. She admitted that she knew that the money she was to get would not be good money."

A different rule has been adopted in a number of states. Generally stated, the rule in those states is that it is no defense to an indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses that the transaction in which the money was paid was illegal. Com. v. O'Brien, 172 Mass. 248, 52 N. E. 77; People v. Martin, 102 Cal. 558, 36 Pac. 952; People v. Watson, 75 Mich. 582, 42 N. W. 1005; Lovell v. State, 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 85, 86 S. W. 758, 13 Ann. Cas. 561; Re Cummins, 16 Colo. 451, 13 L.R.A. 752, 25 Am. St. Rep. 291, 27 Pac. 887; Com. v. Henry, 22 Pa. 253; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 469.

In Com. v. O'Brien, 172 Mass. 248, 52 N. E. 77, after a discussion of the different views taken of the question, the court says: "With the greatest respect for the New York and Wisconsin courts, we think this end is more effectually reached if we do not read into the absolute words of the statute . . . an implied exception, which allows a knave to cheat anyone out of his money, if the knave can succeed in persuading his victim into a scheme, which has any technical element of illegality on the victim's side. The question of allowing the latter a personal remedy is entirely different." In People v. Tompkins, 186 N. Y. 413, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1081, 79 N. E. 326, defendant induced one Felix to part with a large sum of money on the false representation that defendant, as an employee of the Western Union Telegraph Company, had means of obtaining advance information as to results of horse races, which were being betted on in a certain pool room. Felix went to the pool room and made a bet on a certain horse falsely named as winner. The court, while yielding to the authority of McCord v. People and of what it states to be a firmly established rule in that state, yet questions the soundness of the rule, and in its syllabus suggests the "alteration of the rule to the legislature." In the opinion it is stated that the rule is at variance with a more reasonable view and the decisions in at least twelve states.

The primary object sought to be accomplished in prosecutions for crime is the suppression of crime. The effort is one to protect the public and prevent wrongdoing. If it were a civil proceeding of course where the injured person is a party to the unlawful enterprise, he would not be heard to complain, and the law would leave the parties where it finds them. There is a natural feeling that, where two persons are co-offenders, it is unjust that one should be punished and the other not; especially that one should be permitted to invoke the aid of the courts to punish his confederate, while he escapes himself.

But the dissatisfaction should be not that one is punished, but rather that the other is not. It is no argument in favor of either that the other equally deserves conviction. The statute of Ohio (§ 7076, Revised Statutes), which denounces obtaining money or property by false pretenses, is broad and complete,—“Whoever, by any false pretense, with intent to defraud, obtains from any person, anything of value.”

Shall we read into this criminal statute the principle of civil jurisprudence which requires the complaining party to come into court with clean hands, and thus deny to the state (in the effort to prevent wrongdoing) the equally sound principle of criminal law that the guilt of one man shall not be received as an excuse for that of another? We think to so hold would in some degree throw around crime the protection of the law. If a sharper working a confidence game or a scheme to obtain money by false pretenses could weave into his tricky negotiation some element which is unlawful and criminal, he could hold it over the head of his victim, and could call it to his aid in escaping prosecution.

However, for the reasons already given in this opinion, we feel forced to the conclusion that the indictment in this case does not state the accusation against defendant in such a manner as to directly and specifically advise him of what he must prepare to meet, and that it does not meet the requirements of well-settled rules so as to secure to him the constitutional safeguard of the right to demand the nature and cause of the charge against him, and therefore the motion to quash and the demurrer should have been sustained.

For error in overruling, the judgments of the courts below are reversed.

Judgments reversed and judgment for plaintiff in error.

Spear, Ch. J., and Davis, Shauck, Price, and Donahue, JJ., concur in the judgment.

Davis, J., dissents to second proposition of syllabus.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

TALYOR, Admr., etc., of Nancy M. Taylor, Deceased, Plff. in Err.,
v.

PROTESTANT HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION.

(85 Ohio St. 90, 96 N. E. 1089.)

Charity — hospital — receiving pay.

1. The fact that a public charitable hospital receives pay from a patient for lodging and care does not affect its character as a "charitable institution," nor its rights or liabilities as such in relation to such a patient.

Same — liability for negligence.

2. A public charitable hospital, organized as such and open to all persons, although conducted under private management, is not liable for injuries to a patient of the hospital, resulting from the negligence of a nurse employed by it.

(November 21, 1911.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Franklin County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of a Court of Common Pleas in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, which was alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servant. Affirmed.

Statement by Johnson, J.:

Plaintiff in error brought suit in the common pleas court of Franklin county. His petition alleges, in substance, his appointment and qualification as administrator, the incorporation of defendant under the laws of Ohio, and that it maintains and operates a hospital at the city of Columbus, Ohio, for hire and reward. That defendant received said Nancy M. Taylor at its hospital as a pay patient, and agreed, for a valuable consideration, to furnish her with board, lodging, and nursing, provide an operating room and table, and assist in and about an operation to be performed on her by a certain named surgeon. That defendant provided for said operation certain gauze sponges necessary to be used in said operation, which consisted of two abdominal incisions, and that defendant provided one of its employees to assist in said operation, to wit, a nurse, whose duty it was to keep account of the sponges so provided for use of the surgeon. That the nurse negligently failed to keep a proper count of the sponges which had been used in the operation, and that by reason of her negligence one of the sponges which had been used was left in the body of the decedent and caused her death, to the damage of plaintiff and the next of kin of decedent, for which judgment is prayed. The first defense of the answer of defendant admits appointment of plaintiff as administrator; the incorporation of defendant; that deceased was received at the hospital as a pay patient, and that defendant agreed, for $10 a week, to furnish her with board, lodging, and nursing; that an operation was performed on her by the surgeon named; that it provided certain gauze sponges for the operation and one of its employees, a nurse, to assist in said operation, and denied the other allegations in the petition.

The material portion of the second defense is as follows:

"Defendant says that it is now, and has been ever since it was organized, a public and charitable corporation; that it was incorporated and organized, and has been operated, exclusively for the purpose of providing hospital accommodations for the sick and injured; and that it never has had, has not now, and cannot have, any capital stock; that it never has declared, and cannot declare, dividends; and that it never made, and cannot make, any profits, either for the corporation or its members; that its funds and income have always been, and will continue to be, derived from the rents, donations, devises and bequests, moneys and supplies, from and by benevolent persons; that such funds and income have been heretofore used for the erection, support, and maintenance of a public and charitable hospital for the sick and injured, and they will have to be used in the future for the improvement of said hospital, and the support and maintenance of the sick and injured therein lodged; that the persons who have heretofore made such donations, grants, devises, bequests, and subscriptions are so numerous that they could not be stated in this pleading.

"Defendant further says that said hospital has always been, and is now, open to all persons who apply for its benefits and accommodations, as long as it has rooms to accommodate them; that it has had and now has six wards, which will accommodate forty-five patients, and which are for the occupation of patients who are gratuitously lodged and cared for, and it has had and now has forty-five rooms for those who are able to and willing to pay for lodging and care a reasonable compensation, and the income so received from pay patients has always been used to support and maintain the said hospital.

Headnotes by the Court.

Note. — Generally as to the liability of charitable institutions, including those conducting hospitals, for personal injuries, see notes to Farrigan v. Pevear, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 481; Bruce v. Central M. E. Church, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 74; Thornton v. Franklin Square House, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 486; and Hordern v. Salvation Army, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 62.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"Defendant further says that the said Nancy M. Taylor engaged and agreed to pay this defendant ten ($10) dollars per week for her boarding and nursing during the time she was at the hospital. She occupied a room, and was furnished board and nursing from the 25th day of May until the 30th day of June, 1899, for which she paid the hospital the sum of $51.40; that such sum so paid to this defendant was wholly inadequate as compensation for the board and nursing so furnished to the said Nancy M. Taylor."

Plaintiff in error filed a general demurrer to the second defense, which was overruled by the trial court, and, plaintiff not desiring to plead further, judgment was entered for defendant. This judgment was affirmed by the circuit court, and error is prosecuted to this court by the plaintiff to reverse the judgments of the courts below.

Mr. Ulric Sloane for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Pugh & Pugh for defendant in error.

Johnson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented by the demurrer to the second defense of the answer is whether, under the facts set out in that defense, the defendant is liable for the negligence of the nurse in leaving the sponge in the body of the deceased. More definitely: Do the averments that the defendant is a public and charitable corporation, engaged in operating, maintaining, and supporting a public charitable hospital in the manner and for the purposes set forth, exempt defendant from liability for the negligence of the nurse in connection with the operation on the decedent at the time she was a pay patient of the hospital? This question has been decided in some other jurisdictions, and counsel have rendered valuable assistance by able and exhaustive briefs.

Defendant contends that the judgments of the courts below may be sustained on all or any of several grounds, the first of which is that, being a charitable corporation operating a charitable hospital, it was not liable for the negligence of its employees, if such employees were selected with reasonable care. The position of plaintiff is that the doctrine of respondet superior applies, and should be enforced, notwithstanding the character of the corporation or the nature of its undertakings; and that, having accepted deceased as a pay patient, a contractual relation existed between the parties, which imposed obligations on the defendant different from those to one who did not sustain such relation. Section 3240, Revised Statutes, provides for the election of trustees of a corporation, such as defendant, and § 3261, Revised Statutes, provides that the trustees of a corporation, created other than for profit, shall be personally liable for all debts of the corporation contracted by them.

There is a direct allegation in the answer in this case that defendant is a public and charitable corporation maintaining a public and charitable hospital. We think this hospital, owned and operated in the manner set out, is a public charity, and this without reference to whether some of the patients are what are termed pay patients or not.

In Gerke v. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 229, the court declare: "The fact that the use of property is free is not a necessary element in determining whether the use is public or not. If the use is of such a nature as concerns the public, and the right to its enjoyment is open to the public upon equal terms, the use will be public, whether a compensation be exacted or not."

In McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529, the corporation, from the description of its objects and the manner of its creation and operation, was similar to the defendant in this case. The court say in deciding the case: "The fact that its funds are supplemented by such amounts as it may receive from those who are able to pay wholly or entirely for the accommodation they receive does not render it the less a public charity. All sums thus obtained are held upon the same trust as those which are the gifts of pure benevolence. . . . If, however, any contract can be inferred from the relation of the parties, it can be only on the part of the corporation that it shall use due and reasonable care in the selection of its agents. . . . The liability of the defendant corporation can extend no further than this: If there has been no neglect on the part of those who administer the trust and control its management, and if due care has been used by them in the selection of their inferior agents, even if injury has occurred by the negligence of such agents, it cannot be made responsible. The funds intrusted to it are not to be diminished by such casualties, if those immediately controlling them have done their whole duty in reference to those who have sought to obtain the benefit of them."

In Hearns v. Waterbury Hospital, 66

Conn. 98, 31 L.R.A. 224, 33 Atl. 595, the court state that the only question was the liability of the defendant for the negligent conduct of physicians and nurses employed by it, and in the selection of whom it has exercised due care. In this case there is a very full discussion of English and American cases touching the question; and the conclusion arrived at was that the hospital corporation was not liable, on grounds of public policy, for injuries caused by personal neglect of duty by a servant whom it has selected with due care.

The plaintiff, in Powers v. Massachusetts Homoeopathic Hospital, 65 L.R.A. 372, 47 C. C. A. 122, 109 Fed. 294, was a pay patient, and was injured by the negligence of a nurse in placing a rubber bag full of hot water against her side, burning her. Her counsel contended, as counsel for plaintiff in this case contend, that, she being a pay patient, the hospital was liable, because she was not the recipient of its charity; but the court denied the relief, and say: "In our opinion, a paying patient in the defendant hospital, as well as a nonpaying patient, seeks and receives the services of a public charity."

Liability to a pay patient was denied in Downes v. Harper Hospital, 101 Mich. 555, 25 L.R.A. 602, 45 Am. St. Rep. 427, 60 N. W. 42, and one of the grounds on which the court put its decision was that decedent, having accepted the benefit of the charity, did so on the understanding that the fund could not be diverted by the torts of the managers of the fund or their employees. The court say: "The fact that patients who are able to pay are required to do so does not deprive the defendant of its eleemosynary character, nor permit a recovery for damages on account of the existence of contract relations."

Other cases in which the same conclusion was arrived at, some of the courts adopting a somewhat different line of reasoning, are: Farrigan v. Pevear, 193 Mass. 147, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 481, 118 Am. St. Rep. 484, 78 N. E. 855, 8 Ann. Cas. 1109; Fire Ins. Patrol v. Boyd, 120 Pa. 624, 1 L.R.A. 417, 6 Am. St. Rep. 745, 15 Atl. 553; Union P. R. Co. v. Artist, 23 L.R.A. 581, 9 C. C. A. 14, 19 U. S. App. 612, 60 Fed. 365.

Judge Stewart, in his excellent work on Legal Medicine (§ 96), after an examination of the cases on the subject, says: "The doctrine of the Massachusetts cases may be said to be the law followed by other states, and is the proper legal view to take of this question; the reasoning of the court being so sound as to seem irrefutable."

Counsel for plaintiff suggests that some of the American cases are predicated on the English case of Holliday v. St. Leonard, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

11 C. B. N. S. 192, 30 L. J. C. P. N. S. 361, 8 Jur. N. S. 79, 4 L. T. N. S. 406, 9 Week. Rep. 694, and some other cases which, he insists, have been impliedly repudiated by the later case of Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs, L. R. 1 H. L. 93, 11 H. L. Cas. 686, 35 L. J. Exch. N. S. 225, 12 Jur. N. S. 571, 14 L. T. N. S. 677, 14 Week. Rep. 872, which enforced the doctrine of respondent superior.

We think this contention is not sound, because the company in the latter case was a trading company, and not a public charity in the sense that defendant here and similar corporations are. Mr. Justice Blackburn, who gave opinions in the cases referred to, said, in Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Cameron, 11 H. L. Cas. 465, 22 Eng. Rul. Cas. 378: "Whatever may be the law as to exemption of property occupied for charitable purposes, it is clear that the docks in question can come within no such exemption."

But, even if it appears that the greater weight of authority outside of Ohio falls against his view, counsel for plaintiff insists that such authority is not in harmony with the established doctrine in this state, and refers to the cases of Goodloe v. Cincinnati, 4 Ohio, 500-514; Dayton v. Pease, 4 Ohio St. 80; Dunn v. Brown County Agri. Soc. 46 Ohio St. 96, 1 L.R.A. 754, 15 Am. St. Rep. 556, 18 N. E. 496; Toledo v. Cone, 41 Ohio St. 149; Murphy v. Holbrook, 20 Ohio St. 137, 5 Am. Rep. 633. We do not think these cases sustain plaintiff's view of the question made by this answer. Goodloe v. Cincinnati, Dayton v. Pease, and Toledo v. Cone, were cases in which the injury was done by employees of the cities, in the performance of public works undertaken for the benefit of the cities, and in the exercise of powers and duties granted and imposed on them as municipal corporations. Of course, under familiar rules, they were liable for the wrongful acts of their servants.

In Dunn v. Brown County Agri. Soc. the fair grounds were kept and the fair conducted, not as a thing free to the public. Judge Williams, in declaring the judgment of the court, says, as to the rule of exemption from liability, that it "has no application to corporations called into being by the voluntary action of the individuals forming them for their own advantage, convenience, or pleasure."

In Murphy v. Holbrook, the receivers of a railroad company were held liable for injuries to plaintiff's intestate, and it was held to be "no defense in such action that the receiver was a public officer, or that he was an agent or trustee." But the receivers of a railroad company or other corporation hold the property in trust for the benefit of the company and its creditors; and when operated by the receivers under order of court the object is to preserve the property and, if possible, earn something for the benefit of the company and its creditors. It is not an enterprise to serve and benefit the public solely.

There is disclosed in some of the cases and in the argument for defendant a singular disposition to question the fundamental soundness of the doctrine of respondet superior. We are not disposed to lend support to such tendency. Experience has shown that the ends of justice are best secured by holding the master responsible for injuries caused by the wrongful acts of his servant, done in the prosecution of his private ends and for his benefit.

Doubtless the rule will be extended to meet the requirements of manifold new conditions brought about by growth and advance. Courts are constantly confronted with the necessity of extending established principles to new conditions. But in this case it is sought to extend the rule to masters different from others, and who do not come within its reason, and to hold a public charity involving no private profit responsible for the negligence of servants employed solely for a public use and a public benefit. We think such extension is not justified. Public policy should and does encourage enterprises with the aims and purposes of defendant, and requires that they should be exempted from the operation of the rule.

We think there is no error in the record, and the judgments of the courts below are affirmed.

Spear, Ch. J., and Davis, Shauck, Price, and Donahue, JJ., concur.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

WELLINGTON R. HARE, Admr., etc., of Patrick O'Brien, Deceased.

v.

ROBERT P. O'BRIEN, Appt.

(233 Pa. 330, 82 Atl. 475.)

Executors — domiciliary — judgment — right to enforce.

1. A statute declaring that foreign letters of administration shall not confer any of the powers or authority conferred by domestic letters does not prevent a domiciliary administrator who has obtained a judgment in the state of his residence from maintaining an action on it in the local courts.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — enforcement of judgment — conflict of laws.

2. A judgment obtained by a domiciliary executor, at the place of his residence, is an asset located within that state; and he, in his individual capacity, and not an ancillary administrator appointed at the debtor's residence, in another state, has the right to sue in the courts of the latter state, to enforce the judgment.

Action — capacity in which brought — surplusage.

3. That a domiciliary administrator having a right to enforce in his own name, in the courts of another state, a judgment obtained in the courts of his appointment, institutes the suit in his representative capacity, is immaterial, since the official title is surplusage and may be disregarded.

(January 2, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Armstrong County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to enforce payment of a judgment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. A. McCullough and R. L. Ralston, for appellant:

The authority of executors and administrators does not extend beyond the territory of the government appointing them.

Sayre v. Helme, 61 Pa. 299; Mansfield v. McFarland, 202 Pa. 173, 51 Atl. 763; Vioeca's Estate (Engelskirger's Appeal) 197 Pa. 280, 51 L.R.A. 876, 47 Atl. 233; Laughlin v. Solomon, 180 Pa. 177, 57 Am. St. Rep. 633, 36 Atl. 704; Moore v. Fields, 42 Pa. 467.

The Ohio judgment is a nullity in Pennsylvania. A court with equity jurisdiction will exercise that jurisdiction to give to its citizens the protection of its own laws.

Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107, 138, 33 L. ed. 538, 550, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269; Galbraith v. Rutter, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 554; Sweeny v. Hunter, 145 Pa. 363, 14 L.R.A. 594, 22 Atl. 653; Com. v. Stambaugh, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 386; Davis v. Headley, 22 N. J. Eq. 115.

Note. — Right of domiciliary administrator to sue on judgment in another state.

The general rule is that, in the absence of statute, an executor or administrator cannot, in his representative capacity, maintain a suit in one state or country by virtue of letters granted in another. 18 Cyc. 1237.

There seems to be an exception to this rule, however, in cases where the administrator has recovered a judgment in an action brought by him in his representative capacity in the jurisdiction of his appointment, and in such cases he may sue thereon

A foreign judgment for fraud may be impeached.

Story, Confli. L. § 608; Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 40 L. ed. 95, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 139; Lines v. Lines, 142 Pa. 149, 24 Am. St. Rep. 487, 21 Atl. 809; Davis v. Headley, 22 N. J. Eq. 115.

Messrs. H. L. Golden and Harry C. Golden, for appellee:

Where a debt, fixed by the decree of a court of competent jurisdiction in another state, is due by citizens of Pennsylvania to the estate of one who had his domicile at the time of his death in said foreign state, the administrator of the domicile may sue for and recover the debt, in the courts of this state, without first taking out letters of administration here.

in his own name in another jurisdiction without taking out ancillary letters of administration.

"But there is a wide distinction between an attempt on the part of a foreign executor to bring a suit in this state upon an original cause of action due the decedent, and his right to enforce the payment of a judgment already recovered by him in the state where his letters testamentary were granted. In the latter case, the judgment becomes a new debt due to him as administrator, and his right to sue for the same does not depend upon his letters of administration." Barton v. Higgins, 41 Md. 539.

In § 522 of Story's Conflict of Laws, it is said that in view of the fact that there is no privity between persons to whom administration is granted in different states, an ancillary administrator in one state may not sue upon a judgment obtained in another state by the administrator there, but that the foreign administrator himself may, in such case, maintain a personal suit against the debtor in another state, because the judgment would as to him merge in the original debt and become personally due to the administrator in his own right.

The following cases support the rule laid down above, that a domiciliary administrator may sue in another state on a judgment obtained by him in the state of his appointment, without taking out ancillary letters: Biddle v. Wilkins, 1 Pet. 686, 7 L. ed. 315; Newberry v. Robinson, 36 Fed. 841; Moore v. Kraft, 103 C. C. A. 231, 179 Fed. 685; Arizona Cattle Co. v. Huber, 4 Ariz. 69, 33 Pac. 555; McCarthy v. Troll, 90 Ark. 199, 118 S. W. 416; Lewis v. Adams, 70 Cal. 403, 59 Am. Rep. 423, 11 Pac. 833; Greason v. Davis, 9 Iowa, 219; Wayland v. Porterfield, 1 Met. (Ky.) 638; Barton v. Higgins, 41 Md. 539; Talmadge v. Chapel, 16 Mass. 71; Tittman v. Thornton, 107 Mo. 500, 16 L.R.A. 410, 17 S. W. 979; Rogers v. Hatch, 8 Nev. 35; Nichols v. Smith, 7 Hun, 580; Moore v. Fields, 42 Pa. 467; Hunt v. Lyle, 6 Yerg. 412; Page v. Cravens, 3 Head, 383; Nelson v. Bagby, 25 Tex. Supp. 305.

The same rule was announced in Green v. Heritage, 63 N. J. L. 455, 43 Atl. 698, but 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Moore v. Fields, 42 Pa. 467; Shakespeare v. Fidelity Ins. Trust & S. D. Co. 97 Pa. 173; Shinn's Appeal, 166 Pa. 128, 30 Atl. 1028, 1030; Wilkins v. Ellett, 108 U. S. 256, 258, 27 L. ed. 718, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 641; Talmadge v. Chapel, 16 Mass. 72; Tittman v. Thornton, 107 Mo. 500, 16 L.R.A. 410, 17 S. W. 979; Arizona Cattle Co. v. Huber, 4 Ariz. 69, 33 Pac. 555; McCarthy v. Troll, 90 Ark. 199, 118 S. W. 416; Miller v. Hoover, 121 Mo. App. 568, 97 S. W. 210.

A foreign administrator may sue personally in this state on a judgment recovered by him, as administrator, out of this state.

Freeman, Judgm. 217; Talmadge v. Chapel, 16 Mass. 71; Biddle v. Wilkins, 1 Pet. 686, 7 L. ed. 315; Low v. Burrows, 12 Cal.

this case was reversed upon a jurisdictional point in 64 N. J. L. 567, 46 Atl. 634, without any expression of opinion upon the merits of the case.

And this rule applies although an ancillary administrator has been appointed in the state in which suit is brought. HARE v. O'BRIEN.

In such a suit by the administrator, a plea in defense that the defendant was first appointed administrator of the estate of the deceased in the state where the suit was brought, tenders an immaterial issue, and is bad on demurrer. Biddle v. Wilkins, 1 Pet. 686, 7 L. ed. 315.

In Crawford v. Whittall, reported in note to 1 Dougl. K. B. 4, note, it is held that the administrator may sue without profert of letters, and without showing the grounds of the judgment; and Biddle v. Wilkins, supra, agrees that the administrator is not bound to make profert of his letters.

Such a judgment in legal effect creates a new debt, and this may be enforced in another state. Newberry v. Robinson, 36 Fed. 841.

Such foreign administrator is not bound to sue as administrator, and if he does so name himself, the description will be regarded as surplusage. Biddle v. Wilkins, supra; Talmadge v. Chapel, 16 Mass. 71.

Naming himself as administrator does not alter his character or his right to sue. Page v. Cravens, 3 Head, 383.

The debt is merged in the judgment and is due to the administrator (Biddle v. Wilkins, supra; Wayland v. Porterfield, 1 Met. [Ky.] 638; Talmadge v. Chapel, 16 Mass. 71), and becomes an asset in the state wherein it was originally rendered. Arizona Cattle Co. v. Huber, 4 Ariz. 69, 33 Pac. 555.

So, where an action begun by the testator is revived by his executor and judgment is recovered therein, the executor may sue upon such judgment in another state without complying with the terms of a statute regarding debts "due to decedents." Wayland v. Porterfield, supra.

An administrator who has recovered judgment in the state where he received his appointment may sue upon the judgment in his own name in a different state, and upon his death the suit may be revived in the name of his administrator appointed under the laws of that other state. Tittman v. Thornton, 107 Mo. 500, 16 L.R.A. 410, 17 S. W. 979.

188; Lewis v. Adams, 70 Cal. 403, 59 Am. Rep. 423, 11 Pac. 833; Barton v. Higgins, 41 Md. 539; Rogers v. Hatch, 8 Nev. 35; Page v. Cravens, 3 Head, 383; State use of Minot v. Kaime, 4 Mo. App. 481; Rucks v. Taylor, 49 Miss. 552; McCully v. Cooper, 114 Cal. 258, 35 L.R.A. 494, 55 Am. St. Rep. 66, 46 Pac. 82; Cherry v. Speight, 28 Tex. 503; Boulden v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 205 Pa. 264, 54 Atl. 906; Viosca's Estate (Engelskirger's Appeal) 197 Pa. 280, 51 L.R.A. 876, 47 Atl. 233; McCullough v. Railway Mail Assn. 225 Pa. 118, 73 Atl. 1007.

Mestrezat, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Patrick O'Brien died intestate, in 1903, in the state of Ohio, and domiciliary letters of administration were granted to his widow. She resigned, and letters de bonis non were granted to Wellington R. Hare, the plaintiff in this case, who duly qualified.

Where an administrator is sued in the state of his appointment by parties from another state and, prevailing, he recovers judgment for costs, he may sue in the other state on the judgment without filing an exemplified copy of his letters; he is not suing in the right of his intestate, but in his own right, though an administrator. Green v. Heritage, 63 N. J. L. 455, 43 Atl. 698. This case was reversed upon a jurisdictional point in 64 N. J. L. 567, 46 Atl. 634, but no opinion was expressed upon the merits of the case.

Executors having recovered judgment in Canada may sue on it in New York in their individual names; the judgment is in the nature of a chose in action, and is to be used to establish their title and show the amount they are entitled to recover. Nichols v. Smith, 7 Hun, 580.

A superseding administrator may sue his predecessors in another state upon a judgment recovered by him against them in the state of his appointment, no matter whether he is called administrator in the record of the judgment or not. Moore v. Fields, 42 Pa. 467.

He may sue, or he may verify a judgment as a claim against the representative of the debtor in the other state. Cherry v. Speight, 28 Tex. 503.

Where an executor recovered judgment in Tennessee upon a cause of action arising after the death of his testator, and later compromised by accepting a certain amount of money and an assignment to him, and other beneficial owners of the debt, of rights under a conveyance of property in Mississippi, the executor and his coassignees may

Some time prior to his death, O'Brien had placed various sums of money in the hands of his son Robert, the defendant, in trust, to be invested and the interest or income to be paid Patrick. Hare brought an action against Robert in the court of common pleas of Wyandot county, Ohio, to enforce payment of the money alleged to have been placed in Robert's hands, and recovered a decree or judgment against Robert for $18,000. The suit was in the nature of a foreign attachment; and certain real and personal estate of Robert, in Wyandot county, was attached in the hands of garnishees. Robert was not personally served, but appeared by counsel, put in an answer, and contested the suit. The decree or judgment entered against him in the common pleas was subsequently, on his appeal, affirmed by the supreme court of Ohio. About $6,000 was realized on the judgment out of Robert's property in Ohio. On October 11, 1909, Hare brought maintain an action upon the assignment in the latter state. Rucks v. Taylor, 49 Miss. 552.

In Hall v. Harrison, 21 Mo. 227, 64 Am. Dec. 225, the same rule is laid down with reference to judgments against defendants who might be citizens of the state where the judgments were recovered at the death of the intestate, but the court suggests a query as to whether the rule would apply in case the debtor were a citizen of the other state at that time and his property were situated there.

In Macnicol v. Macnicol, L. R. 19 Eq. 81, 31 L. T. N. S. 566, 23 Week. Rep. 67, where an administrator had obtained judgment in India, he was allowed to collect the amount due from the debtor's estate in England without taking out letters of administration.

But under the statutes of Pennsylvania, a foreign administrator cannot sue there for any part of an estate which is subject to administration under their laws. Moore v. Fields, 42 Pa. 467.

And where plaintiff sues on a foreign judgment obtained by deceased, claiming to be his widow and executrix of his will, under which she claims to have become owner of all his property after payment of his debts, but where no proof is offered of these allegations, although the answer puts them in issue, her proof fails upon the essential point of title to the judgment, and her case falls. Winham v. Kline, 72 Mo. App. 615.

Since it is but an act of comity for a state to open its courts so as to allow one clothed with power from a foreign authority to enter to assert the rights of his testator or intestate, the state having done so, it is only a reasonable rule that such state should also require such foreign representative to produce properly authenticated exemplification of his letters testamentary or of administration, and when he fails to the present action in the common pleas of Armstrong county, Pennsylvania, on the decree or judgment obtained by him in Ohio, and seeks to recover the balance due thereon. On the trial of the cause, the court directed a verdict for the defendant, but subsequently entered judgment non obstante veredicto for the plaintiff. The defendant has taken this appeal. Hare has not administered on O'Brien's estate in Pennsylvania, but on September 1, 1909, letters of administration were issued in Armstrong county to Carl A. O'Brien.

The appellant denies the right of the plaintiff to recover, and contends that § 6 of the act of March 15, 1832 (P. L. 136; 1 Purdon's Dig. 13th ed. p. 1074), prohibits the plaintiff, a foreign administrator, from suing on the Ohio judgment in this state, and especially as there is an ancillary administrator here; that to allow a recovery would authorize the assets of the decedent to be removed from this state to the injury of our citizens who are creditors, and that the Ohio court did not have jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the action.

At common law, a foreign executor or administrator had no authority as such to bring an action outside the jurisdiction of his appointment. Our act of 1705 (2 Stat. at L. p. 195) changed the common law in this respect, and provided that a foreign executor or administrator, producing letters here, could bring an action in any court of this province. The present law on the subject is the 6th section of the act of March 15, 1832 (P. L. 136; 1 Purdon's Dig. 13th ed. p. 1074), which re-established the common law, and provides as follows: "No letters testamentary or of administration, or otherwise purporting to authorize any person to intermeddle with the estate of a decedent, which may be granted out of this commonwealth, shall confer upon such person any of the produce them according to the provisions of the statute, a nonsuit is proper. Buck v. Johnson, 67 Ga. 82.

In Cobb v. Norwood, 11 Tex. 556, it was held that, since a foreign administrator has no right to collect a debt from an administrator in Texas, a presentation of a claim by an agent of such foreign administrator based upon a sworn copy of the foreign judgment against the Texas administrator's intestate, and its rejection, was not sufficient to start the statute of limitations running against he claim.

It has also been held that a statute authorizing a foreign administrator, upon certain conditions, "to prosecute suits in any court in this state," also authorizes him to take out an execution on a judgment obtained by his intestate in the latter's lifetime, and such administrator need not resort first to a judgment in his own name and then sue on the judgment. Keefer v. Mason, 36 Ill. 406.

And when an executor is substituted as party plaintiff on the record of a judgment obtained by his testator in Pennsylvania, and by the practice of that state the executor thereupon becomes a party to the judgment, and may revive and bring an action upon it in his own name, such executor thus substituted may sue upon the judgment in Iowa in his own name. Greason v. Davis, 9 Iowa, 219.

But aside from statute or special rules of practice, the rule seems to be otherwise with regard to judgments obtained by the testator. Thus, it is said that in these cases, the administrator has become vested with the full legal title to the property, is in fact the trustee of an express trust, and as such can maintain an action relating to the property in his individual capacity. He obtained the judgment himself. But where the judgment is obtained by the testator or intestate, his executor or administrator is no party of record to that judgment, and cannot sue upon it in another state as an individual; nor can he sue in his representative capacity; for the general rule against an administrator or executor appointed in one state maintaining an action in another state in his representative capacity would forbid it. Miller v. Hoover, 121 Mo. App. 568, 97 S. W. 210.

"To permit him to exercise this right in his representative capacity would be to permit him to use the courts of this state and their processes to collect a debt due the estate, and to withdraw to a foreign jurisdiction the proceeds realized, without in any way providing for the protection of the rights of our own citizens, who may be creditors of the estate. And to permit him to sue in his individual capacity could be justified only on the theory that the judgment itself is a species of chattel and, as such, had been reduced to actual possession by the Virginia administrator and by him brought into this state for enforcement. To indulge in this hypothesis would permit a mere fiction relating to the theoretical situs of an incorporeal thing to override the settled policy of our law, which has for its prime object the protection of the rights of our own citizens. The object of that policy will best be promoted by . . . adopting for the purposes of administration the common-sense doctrine, that a debt due the estate of a deceased person from a debtor, who resides in a different state from that in which the creditor was domiciled at the time of his death, is an asset at the place where the debtor resides, whether such debt be evidenced by simple contract, specialty, or judgment recovered prior to the death of the creditor." Miller v. Hoover, 121 Mo. App. 568, 97 S. W. 210. H. C. Sh.

powers and authorities possessed by an executor or administrator, under letters granted within this state." This act, it may be observed, is limited in its operation, and in terms simply prohibits a foreign representative from exercising in Pennsylvania "any of the powers and authorities possessed by an executor or administrator under letters granted within this state." A foreign administrator cannot sue here for choses in action or other assets of the decedent's estate whose situs is in this state. Under the statute, they must be administered by an ancillary administrator; and hence the domiciliary administrator cannot intermeddle with them. What the former may do, the latter cannot do. This is the settled law of the state. In this case, we are not dealing with assets of the decedent within this jurisdiction which can be administered by an ancillary administrator. The present action was brought on a judgment obtained by the plaintiff in Ohio, the domicile of the decedent, on a claim against the defendant, who appeared and resisted a recovery. The situs of the judgment was in Ohio, and it was an asset of decedent's estate in Ohio, and not in Pennsylvania. Viosca's Estate (Engelskirger's Appeal) 197 Pa. 280, 287, 51 L.R.A. 876, 47 Atl. 233; Arizona Cattle Co. v. Huber, 4 Ariz. 69, 33 Pac. 555; Atty. Gen. v. Bouwens, 4 Mees. & W. 171, 1 Horn & H. 319, 7 L. J. Exch. N. S. 297. As said by Woodward, J., in Moore v. Fields, 42 Pa. 467, 472, an action brought here by a foreign administrator on a decree obtained in another state: "That money was never subject to administration in Pennsylvania. It was an administered fund before it was brought here." The suit in Ohio was brought to enforce the payment of a claim for money placed in the hands of the defendant by the decedent in his lifetime, and to be subsequently accounted for to the decedent, and was not brought to recover specific securities of the decedent's estate in this jurisdiction in the possession of the defendant, a resident of this state.

The debt was merged in the judgment which belonged to the administrator personally, subject to the duty to account to the estate of the decedent in the state of the latter's domicile. He holds the legal title, subject only to his trust as administrator. 1 Freeman, Judgments, 4th ed. § 217. He is fixed for the amount of the judgment, and can relieve himself only by showing that he exercised reasonable diligence to recover it. It is his duty to pursue the judgment debtor wherever he may be found, if, by doing so, payment may be enforced.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The domiciliary administrator may therefore sue in his own name in another state on a judgment recovered by him in his representative character in the state of the domicile. 1 Freeman, Judgments, 4th ed. § 217; 2 Wharton, Conf. L. 3d ed. § 615½; 18 Cyc. 1239, and cases cited in the notes. The administrator sues as an individual, and not in a representative capacity; and it may be added that he may bring a transitory action in any state where the defendant may be found, and on service of its process the court will acquire jurisdiction, regardless of where the cause of action arose. Alley v. Caspari, 80 Me. 234, 6 Am. St. Rep. 178, 14 Atl. 12; Fisher v. Fielding, 67 Conn. 91, 32 L.R.A. 236, 52 Am. St. Rep. 270, 34 Atl. 714; Mowry v. Chase, 100 Mass. 79. Judge Freeman says (§ 217): "He [the domiciliary administrator] may sue upon the judgment in his own name, without describing himself as administrator, and may therefore pursue the judgment defendant, by action on the judgment, in a different state from that in which the letters of administration were issued; and there can scarcely be a doubt that a judgment rendered in favor of an administrator so merges the debt that it may be treated as his personal effects so far as to authorize him to maintain suit thereon in a foreign country, without there taking out letters of administration." Moore v. Fields, supra, was an action of debt brought in the district court of Philadelphia by the public administrator of the city of New York on the record of a decree entered by the surrogate's court of New York. After saying that the decree, unappealed from, was conclusive between the parties, Woodward, J., delivering the opinion, continued (p. 472): "It is of no moment that he is called administrator in the surrogate's record. Had he been called trustee for creditors and heirs, or had no title whatever been given him, his right to recover in our courts upon such a record would have been the same as it is now. A judicial decree that a man receive a certain sum of money from defendants, who were duly warned and fairly subject to the jurisdiction, entitles him to sue for it in a Pennsylvania court, with or without his official title."

The ancillary administrator cannot sue on the judgment or for the debt, as he is not a party to the judgment nor in privity with the foreign administrator. Talmage v. Chapel, 16 Mass. 71. "An administrator under grant of administration in one state," says Grier, J., in Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. 44, 59, 12 L. ed. 337, 343, "stands in none of these relations to an administrator in another. Each is privy to the testator and would be estopped by a judgment against him; but they have no privity with each other in law or in estate. They receive their authority from different sovereignties, and over different property. The authority of each is paramount to the other." The same principle is recognized and applied in Brodie v. Bickley, 2 Rawle, 431, 437; Lewis v. Adams, 70 Cal. 403, 59 Am. Rep. 423, 11 Pac. 833; and Arizona Cattle Co. v. Huber, 4 Ariz. 69, 33 Pac. 555.

It is equally clear that the ancillary administrator cannot bring an action against the defendant in this jurisdiction to recover the original indebtedness. The suit in Ohio was brought by the domiciliary administrator to recover a money judgment in the court of common pleas, which had jurisdiction of the cause of action, so far as the record discloses. The action was in personam, and not in rem. The defendant voluntarily appeared and contested the merits of the plaintiff's right to recover; and therefore the court had jurisdiction of his person. The judgment is conclusive between the parties (Guthrie v. Lowry, 84 Pa. 533), and is a bar to another suit for the same cause of action. The debt was merged in the judgment, which bars a new action, and the defendant can successfully interpose the judgment as a defense to a suit brought by the ancillary administrator.

There is no question of fraud in the case. The suit in Ohio was not brought to defeat the rights of Pennsylvania creditors to assets of the decedent in this state, but to assert a claim which was judicially determined to be legally due the plaintiff from the defendant. The domicile of the decedent being in Ohio, his administrator could lawfully sue in that state to recover the claim in question, and, the defendant having voluntarily appeared and contested the claim, he is concluded by the judgment of the Ohio court. It is not a fraud, nor any evidence of fraud, for a party to compel payment of a claim in a court of competent jurisdiction.

For the reasons stated, we are of opinion that the act of 1832 has no application to the facts of this case, and that the plaintiff can maintain the action on the Ohio judgment in this state. It is immaterial that he instituted the suit in his representative character as the domiciliary administrator of the decedent. The proper parties are on the record, and his official title is surplusage, and may be disregarded. 2 Wharton, Conf. L. 3d ed. § 615j.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The judgment is affirmed.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(Department No. 2.)

LESLIE G. SLOCUM, Respt.,
v.

SEATTLE TAXICAB COMPANY, Appt.

(67 Wash. 220, 121 Pac. 67.)

Master and servant — right of superintendent to employ men — secret limitation.

A corporation cannot avoid liability upon a contract signed by its superintendent, who had authority to employ men, engaging a person to do a particular part of the work required by the corporation for a term of one year, because his authority was limited to employing help orally from day to day, since the other contracting party had a right to rely upon his apparent possession of the authority which he assumed to exercise.

(February 15, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for breach of a contract to employ plaintiff to do the repair work for defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Brightman & Tenuant for appellant.

Messrs. Shorett, McLaren, & Shorett for respondent.

Mount, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant prosecutes this appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. There is no substantial dispute upon the following facts: In May, 1909, the defendant corporation occupied a building in Seattle, in which building the corporation kept and repaired a number of automobiles. This building was occupied by defendant as a tenant from month to month. Mr. A. C. Stevens was in active charge of the building, and was designated by the president of the company as superintendent. He had authority to employ and discharge such men as were needed about the business.

Note.—As to the time for which contracts of employment may be made on behalf of a corporation by its officers, directors, and agents, see notes to Carney v. New York L. Ins. Co. 49 L.R.A. 471, and Laird v. Michigan Lubricator Co. 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 177.

On May 1, 1909, Mr. Stevens and the plaintiff entered into the following written agreement:

Seattle Taxi-Cab Company.
Broadway, Corner Union Street, Seattle.
Date May 1st, '09.
Contract.

Leslie G. Slocum agrees to pay the sum of $25 per Mo. to Seattle Taxi-Cab Co. for shop on second floor for trimming & painting, and to do all the said Co.'s work at 25 per cent less than other shops. As long as above contract is fulfilled he is to have said shop one year from date.

A. C. Stevens,
Supt. of Taxi-Cab Co.
[Signed] Leslie G. Slocum.

The plaintiff thereupon partitioned off a room on the second floor of the building, and occupied the same, and did the defendant's work in a satisfactory manner. Bills for work done were rendered weekly by plaintiff, and the agreed rent was deducted therefrom. The balance was paid by the defendant until about January 3, 1910, when the defendant refused, apparently arbitrarily, to give the plaintiff any more work, and ejected him from the building. The president of the corporation did not know about the contract. It was shown to him by the plaintiff at that time. He thereupon informed plaintiff that the contract was void because Mr. Stevens had no authority to make it. The plaintiff at that time had done some work for which he had not been paid. He presented a bill therefor, amounting to $89.05. The defendant issued a check to the plaintiff in payment of the bill. The plaintiff presented this check to the bank for payment, but payment was refused unless plaintiff would sign a receipt "in full of all claims to date" against the defendant company. Plaintiff refused to sign such receipt, but retained the check. He thereafter brought this action to recover upon three alleged causes of action. By the first cause he sought to recover $1,773, alleged damages for failure to furnish him work for the balance of the year according to the contract. By the second cause he sought to recover $1,000 for the alleged breach of the lease. By the third cause he sought to recover upon the check $89.05. Upon the trial of the case the court found that the plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $316.35 by reason of the failure of the defendant to supply him with work. The court found upon the second cause of action that he was not entitled to recover for a breach of the contract of lease. The court found that he was entitled to recover $89.05 upon the check.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The defense made in the lower court and insisted upon here is that the contract was void because the superintendent, Mr. A. C. Stevens, had no authority to make it. The president of the company testified that Mr. Stevens had authority from him to superintend and look after the business, and employ and discharge men from day to day, but had no authority to enter into a written contract either of employment or for a lease of the building; that under the by-laws of the corporation the president only had such authority. We are satisfied that it was not incumbent upon the plaintiff or any other employee to hunt up the president of the company, or to obtain the charter or the by-laws of the company, in order to determine the authority of one who occupies the position of superintendent of a business, so as to make a valid contract of employment. It is conceded that the superintendent in charge had authority to employ men, and that he did so. The fact that he prepared and signed the written contract in this case as superintendent was sufficient to bind the company, because the contract was made in the course of his apparent authority as well as his expressed authority to hire and discharge men. This is especially true in this case, where the plaintiff acted in good faith and did not know, and had no reason to suspect, that the superintendent had no authority to reduce the contract to writing, or that he was limited in the employment of men to a day by day employment. In Brace v. Northern P. R. Co. 63 Wash. 417, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1135, 115 Pac. 841, this court said: "If each and every individual having business with such a corporation must at his peril ascertain and determine the exact scope and limitation of the agent's authority, it is manifest that he could not safely deal with the acknowledged agent, and that the business of the corporation itself would be materially impaired. The public is compelled to rely upon the apparent authority of the conceded agents of such corporations, especially when, as managers or superintendents, they are placed in control of departmental affairs." In Livieratos v. Commonwealth Security Co. 57 Wash. 376, 106 Pac. 1125, we said: "In this day and age, when so large a part of the business of the commercial world is transacted through the agency of corporations, those dealing with them cannot be expected to prove the authority of corporate agents by producing a power of attorney under the corporate seal. They have a right to rely upon the apparent authority of those with whom they deal, and for acts done within the scope of that authority the corporation is bound."

We are of the opinion, therefore, that the company was bound by the contract in so far as it related to an employment of the plaintiff for the year.

The judgment must therefore be affirmed.

Dunbar, Ch. J., and Morris, Fullerton, and Ellis, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH OF DE KALB, Appt.,
v.
BOARD OF REVIEW OF DE KALB
COUNTY.

(254 Ill. 220, 98 N. E. 275.)

Tax — exemption — parsonage.

An exemption from taxation of property used exclusively for religious work does not include a parsonage used as a residence for the pastor of a church and his family, and such religious work as naturally would center around the pastor's residence.

(Carter, Ch. J., and Farmer and Vickers, JJ., dissent.)

(April 18, 1912.)

Note. — Exemption of parsonage from taxation.

Generally, as to the effect of using property for a religious, charitable, or educational institution in secular business or for revenue upon its right to exemption from taxation, see note to Book Agents of Methodist Episcopal Church, South, v. Hinton, 19 L.R.A. 289.

As to the exemption from taxation of a "parish house," which is not the residence of the minister, pastor, or priest of a church, but was erected primarily for use, and is used, in connection with a principal church building, for the observance of religious services usually deemed essential in the support and maintenance of public worship, see St. Paul's Church v. Concord, and note thereto, in 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 910.

A parsonage, rectory, or parish house, owned by a church society or corporation and occupied as a residence by the pastor, rector, or priest of the church, is not included within an exemption from taxation of "houses used exclusively for public worship" (St. Peter's Church v. Scott County, 12 Minn. 395, Gil. 280; Hennepin County v. Grace, 27 Minn. 503, 8 N. W. 761; Ramsey County v. Church of the Good Shepherd, 45 Minn. 229, 11 L.R.A. 175, 47 N. W. 783; Watterson v. Halliday, 77 Ohio St. 150, 82 N. E. 962, 11 Ann. Cas. 1096); or an exemption of property or places used exclusively for religious purposes (Muldoon 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

CERTIFICATION by the auditor of public accounts for De Kalb County for the opinion of the Supreme Court of a question as to the correctness of a determination by the board of review assessing a parsonage for taxes. Approved.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McGoorty & Pollock, with Messrs. Cliffe & Cliffe, A. G. Kennedy and H. W. McEwen for appellant.

Messrs. W. H. Stead, Attorney General, Charles E. Woodward, Assistant Attorney General, and Edward M. Burst, for appellee:

One claiming a benefit under the statute is required to show clearly that the property is exempt within the contemplation of the law.

People ex rel. McCullough v. Deutsche Gemeinde, 249 Ill. 132, 94 N. E. 162; Montgomery v. Wyman, 130 Ill. 17, 22 N. E. 845; People ex rel. Gore v. Peoria Mercantile Library Asso. 157 Ill. 369, 41 N. E. 557; People ex rel. Brey Meyer v. Watseka Camp Meeting Asso. 160 Ill. 576, 43 N. E. 716; Bloomington Cemetery Asso. v. People, 170 Ill. 377, 48 N. E. 905; Sanitary Dist. v. Martin, 173 Ill. 243, 64 Am. St. Rep. 110, 50 N. E. 201; State Council, C. K. v. Effingham County, 198 Ill. 441, 64 N. E. 1104; Re Walker, 200 Ill. 566, 66 N. E. 144.

v. De Kalb County, 254 Ill. 336, 98 N. E. 673; Vail v. Beach, 10 Kan. 214; People ex rel. Thompson v. First Cong. Church, 232 Ill. 158, 83 N. E. 536); or of "public buildings for religious worship . . . and lots of ground thereto appurtenant and used therewith, so long as the same shall be actually used for that purpose, only" (First Presby. Church v. New Orleans, 30 La. Ann. 259, 31 Am. Rep. 224); or "buildings for religious worship," so far as they are occupied and used exclusively for religious purposes (St. Joseph's Church v. Assessors of Taxes, 12 R. I. 19, 34 Am. Rep. 597); — although it is also used for various incidental purposes connected with the church (Ramsey County v. Church of the Good Shepherd, 45 Minn. 229, 11 L.R.A. 175, 47 N. W. 783), or is also used to a great extent for services of the church and for its religious, charitable, and educational work (Watterson v. Halliday, 77 Ohio St. 150, 82 N. E. 962, 11 Ann. Cas. 1096), or contains a room which is used as a chapel in the celebration of certain services and sacraments of the church (St. Joseph's Church v. Assessors of Taxes, supra); or contains a chapel and is put to incidental religious uses (Muldoon v. De Kalb County, supra).

And under a statute exempting from taxation "houses used exclusively for public worship . . . and the grounds attached to such buildings necessary for the proper occupancy, use, and enjoyment of the same," a parsonage is not exempt, although built

The primary use to which the property is devoted determines its right to exemption, under the cause of the statute invoked.

People ex rel. McCullough v. Deutsche Gemeinde, 249 Ill. 132, 94 N. E. 162; People ex rel. Thompson v. First Cong. Church, 232 Ill. 158, 83 N. E. 536.

A parsonage, or residence of a minister or priest, is not within the meaning of a constitutional or statutory provision exempting from taxation all property used exclusively for religious purposes.

People ex rel. Thompson v. First Cong. Church, supra; State, Church of the Redeemer, Prosecutor, v. Axtell, 41 N. J. L. 117; Vail v. Beach, 10 Kan. 214; Ramsey

v. Church of the Good Shepherd, 45 Minn. 229, 11 L.R.A. 175, 47 N. W. 783.

A parsonage in which a minister or priest eats, sleeps, lodges, receives social callers, and discharges the proper and pleasant amenities of life, is devoted to a secular, and not to a religious, purpose.

Ibid.; St. Peter's Church v. Scott County, 12 Minn. 395, Gil. 280; Hennepin County v. Grace, 27 Minn. 503, 8 N. W. 761; People ex rel. Church of St. Mary v. Feitner, 168 N. Y. 494, 61 N. E. 762; St. Joseph's Church v. Assessors of Taxes, 12 R. I. 19, 34 Am. Rep. 597; Gerke v. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 229; Watterson v. Halliday, 77 Ohio St. 150, 82 N. E. 962, 11 Ann. Cas. 1096.

on ground which might otherwise be exempt as attached to the church edifice. Gerke v. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 229.

Nor is a parsonage, owned by a religious corporation and located on a portion of the same parcel of land with a church and used solely as a residence for the pastor of the church, exempt from taxation under a statute exempting "every building for public worship . . . and the several lots whereon such buildings so used are situated." People ex rel. Hutchinson v. O'Brien, 53 Hun, 580, 6 N. Y. Supp. 862, affirming People ex rel. Hutchinson v. Collison, 22 Abb. N. C. 52, 6 N. Y. Supp. 711.

Under a constitutional provision that the legislature may exempt from taxation "places of religious worship," it cannot exempt a parsonage belonging to a church and in which the rector of the church resides, as a parsonage is not a place of public worship. St. Mark's Church v. Brunswick, 78 Ga. 541, 3 S. E. 561.

And a statute exempting from taxation "every building erected for religious worship" does not exempt a parsonage which has been erected by a church corporation for the convenience and accommodation of the pastor of the church. Methodist Episcopal Church v. Ellis, 38 Ind. 3.

Under a statute exempting houses of religious worship, and expressly providing that "portions of such houses appropriated for purposes other than religious worship shall be taxed," a parsonage occupied by the settled minister of the religious society owning it, and used by him and his family as a dwelling house, free of rent, is not exempt from taxation, though erected upon land which had formed a part of that surrounding the church. Third Cong. Soc. v. Springfield, 147 Mass. 396, 18 N. E. 68.

Nor does an exemption from taxation conferred on places of religious worship include property adjoining a church and used as a residence by the bishop. State ex rel. Cunningham v. Board of Assessors, 52 La. Ann. 223, 26 So. 872.

But a devise to a church society of a dwelling house, "to be used and occupied only as a parsonage for said church," is 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

exempt from succession tax under a statute exempting therefrom property which shall pass "to or for the use of . . . religious societies or institutions the property of which is by law exempt from taxation," although the property devised will not be exempt from yearly taxation under general laws,—real estate used as a parsonage not being included within the provision that "houses of religious worship owned by a religious society" shall be exempt. First Universalist Soc. v. Bradford, 185 Mass. 310, 70 N. E. 204.

Under a statute exempting "all churches, meeting houses, or other regular places of stated religious worship, with the grounds thereto annexed for the occupancy and better enjoyment of the same," a parsonage located on a lot separated by other property and a street from the church property is not exempt from taxation,—although "had the parsonage, in the present case, been built on the same lot with the church it might present a different question. Being erected on part of the curtilage, used for the better and more conformable enjoyment of the church, it would have stood on ground exempted from taxation while so held, and being used by the rector, a portion of the corporation, for the benefit of the church, it might possibly have claimed a part of the immunity conferred on the soil. It certainly could, with more plausibility be said to be 'annexed' to the church." Dauphin County v. St. Stephen's Church, 3 Phila. 189.

But a parsonage or rectory, though built on ground appurtenant to a church, but not an integral part of the church building, is not within a constitutional provision for the exemption from taxation of "actual places of religious worship." Church of Our Savior v. Montgomery County, 10 W. N. C. 170.

And a church parsonage, although erected on a portion of a church lot which would otherwise be exempt, and occupied by the minister or pastor of the church as a residence, free of rent, is not exempt from taxation under a constitutional provision exempting "places actually used for religious Hand, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The board of review of De Kalb county held that the parsonage of the First Congregational Church of the city of De Kalb was subject to taxation; and that decision has been certified to this court for review by the auditor of public accounts, under the provisions of the revenue act (Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1909, chap. 120).

The First Congregational Church of De Kalb owns two adjoining lots in the city of De Kalb, upon one of which is located its church building and upon the other its parsonage, which latter building is occupied by the pastor and his wife and two children as a home. The pastor was called and examined before the board of review as worship, with the grounds thereto annexed and used and appurtenant to the house of worship" (Broadway Christian Church v. Com. 112 Ky. 448, 66 S. W. 32), or under a statute exempting "buildings erected and used for religious purposes" (State, Church of the Redeemer, Prosecutor, v. Axtell, 41 N. J. L. 117).

Nor does either a constitutional provision for the exemption from taxation of "actual places of religious worship," or a statute exempting "all churches, meeting houses, or other regular places of stated worship, with the grounds thereto annexed necessary for the occupancy and enjoyment of the same," include a church parsonage occupied by the pastor of the church as a residence, which is under the same continuous roof as the church, but is distinct from the church proper, separated therefrom by a party wall (Re Taxation of Central M. E. Church, 11 Kulp, 131); or a parsonage erected on ground appurtenant to a church, although religious services are occasionally held and ceremonies performed in the parsonage (Wood v. Moore, 1 Chester Co. Rep. 265).

And a parsonage used primarily as a home for the minister of a church and his family is not exempt from taxation under the Pennsylvania Constitution or statute, although it is physically annexed to the church edifice, with an entrance from it into a room in the church, used by the minister as a study, from which he ascends the pulpit, and although the parsonage is used at times for religious services and the dissemination of religious instruction. Re Parsonage Taxes, 25 Pa. Co. Ct. 570.

Nor is a clergy house or rectory, maintained by a church corporation as and for a residence for the rector of the parish and his assistant as a part of the compensation paid for their services, exempt from taxation, under the same constitutional or statutory provisions, although it is combined with and attached to the church edifice, but is separated from that part of the church building which is devoted exclusively to public worship by a wall of sufficient thickness and strength for an outside a witness. His testimony was not contradicted, and it appears therefrom the parsonage stands about 30 feet from the church and is two stories high. On the first floor there are a hall and five rooms; that is, a parlor, sitting room, dining room, kitchen, and the pastor's study. On the second floor there are a hall and five rooms intended for sleeping rooms, and bath. The house is fitted up with the ordinary furniture and utensils for housekeeping. In the study the pastor has a desk and books, and there prepares his sermons, etc.; and he and his family have no other dwelling house or home in the city of De Kalb. The pastor also testified the duties of the pastor were to have entire charge of the spiritual work of the church and to have a share in wall of either of the buildings, through which wall the only connection or means of communication between the clergy house and the church is a door in the basement and another on the first floor, the latter of which frequently serves as a secondary public entrance to the wholly public part of the church; and although on the lower floor of the clergy house are the parish offices, where the business of the parish is conducted and where the governing body of the church meets to transact the business of the parish. Philadelphia v. St. Elizabeth's Church, 45 Pa. Super. Ct. 363.

But where it appears only that a "part" of a church building is "in use as a parsonage," the building itself being concededly within constitutional and statutory exemptions from taxation, as "an actual place of religious worship" and a "regular place of stated worship," the whole building is exempt. Northampton County v. St. Peter's Church, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 416.

In this case the court said: "We are not informed what part or how much of the building is thus used. As far as we know, the parson may live in the basement. This we think is not enough. . . . Had the fact been that the church and parsonage were essentially distinct, but cunningly constructed together so as to present to the public but one building, with the possible purpose of avoiding taxation, the learned counsel for the plaintiff is too careful a lawyer not to have had that fact spread upon the record, and in that event a more serious question would have arisen. But nothing of that kind is pretended; and in the absence of some such averment, and on the meager facts before us, it would seem to be clear that judgment should be entered for the defendant." Ibid.

A parsonage owned by a church is not exempt from taxation under a statutory provision exempting "the endowment or fund of any religious society," although the money for its purchase was raised by voluntary contributions of the members of the congregation. State, First Reformed Dutch Church, Prosecutor, v. Lyon, 32 N. J. L. 360.

the counsels and conferences by which the temporal work of the church was managed; that the officers and committees of the church and other organizations of the church meet at the parsonage; that the pastor is there consulted by people in reference to their spiritual welfare and in regard to their desire to live a godly life; that the marriage rite is solemnized there and also the rite of baptism; that classes meet there at stated intervals for religious instruction, and sometimes Sunday school is held in the parsonage; that the keys of the church and chapel are kept there, as well as decorations used on stated special occasions; and that the utensils of the communion service and the elements used in celebrating the Lord's Supper are kept and pre-

And a church rectory occupied by the rector, his family, and servants as a residence, is not exempt from taxation under a statute exempting "the real property of a corporation or association organized exclusively for the moral or mental improvement of men or women, or for religious, bible, tract, charitable, benevolent, missionary, . . . or for two or more such purposes, and used exclusively for carrying out thereupon one or more of such purposes." People ex rel. Church of St. Mary v. Feitner, 168 N. Y. 494, 61 N. E. 762.

Nor are "priests' houses," belonging to the Roman Catholic Church and used primarily as places of residence for the priests and their assistants, exempt from taxation under a statute exempting "buildings belonging to institutions of purely public charity." Watterson v. Halliday, 77 Ohio St. 150, 82 N. E. 962, 11 Ann. Cas. 1096.

But a building owned by a church corporation and occupied solely as a parsonage, or as the residence of the rector of the church, without payment to the corporation, is exempt from taxation under a statute exempting all buildings of religious institutions and societies, devoted solely to the appropriate objects of these institutions, and not leased or otherwise used with a view to pecuniary profit. Griwold College v. State, 46 Iowa, 275, 26 Am. Rep. 138; Cook v. Hutchins, 46 Iowa, 706.

And a parsonage owned and maintained by an independently organized charitable corporation, by means of voluntary contributions, for the use and occupancy of such bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church as may from time to time be designated to reside in the city where the parsonage is located, is exempt from taxation under a statute exempting all property used for purely charitable purposes. Bishop's Residence Co. v. Hudson, 91 Mo. 671, 4 S. W. 435.

Under a statute exempting from taxation "parsonages, whether of local churches or districts, and whether occupied by the pastor permanently or rented for his benefit," property rented of the owner by a religious association for a parsonage, and occupied as such by its pastor, the association owning no parsonage, is exempt from taxation. Gray v. LaFayette County, 65 Wis. 567, 27 N. W. 311.

And under a constitutional provision that "there shall be exempt from taxation all . . . parsonages . . . provided, that as to real estate, this exemption shall not extend beyond the buildings and premises actually occupied by such . . . parson-ages, . . . although connected with charitable objects," a lot and buildings owned by a church and constituting its parsonage, are exempt from taxation, although not actually occupied by the rector or parson of the church, but temporarily rented out and the rent appropriated to the hiring of another residence for him, in another locality, for his personal convenience. Protestant Episcopal Church v. Prioleau, 63 S. C. 70, 57 L.R.A. 606, 40 S. E. 1026.

But a church parsonage which is not occupied by the minister, who owns and resides in another house, but which, by an arrangement between him and the trustees of the church, is rented out and the rent paid to him, is not exempt from taxation, under a constitutional provision exempting "all parsonages or residences owned by any religious society, and occupied as a home, and for no other purpose, by the minister of any religion." Broadway Christian Church v. Com. 112 Ky. 448, 66 S. W. 32.

And a church parsonage situated on a lot entirely separate from the lot on which the church is situated, is not exempt from taxation under a statute exempting all churches and the ground whereon they are built, together with the parsonages thereon. Foley v. Oberlin Cong. Church, 67 Wash. 280, 121 Pac. 65.

In Harris v. Whitby Twp. briefly reported in 34 Can. L. J. 240, where a church and subsequently a parsonage had been erected upon land conveyed to the church society in trust for a churchyard and burial ground for the use of the members of the Church of England, it was "held that since 1890 the parsonage and a reasonable curtilage surrounding it were liable to taxation for municipal purposes."

Under a constitutional provision that property used exclusively for religious purposes may be exempted from taxation by general law, a statute purporting to exempt "all parsonages or residences actually and exclusively used by persons devoting their entire time to church work, when . . . owned by the congregation or the church authorities, and not used for pecuniary profit," is unconstitutional and void, as beyond the power of the legislature,—the use of a parsonage primarily for a family residence by the pastor of a church being primarily for a secular and temporal purpose, and not exclusively for religious purposes within the meaning of the Constitution. People ex rel. Thompson v. First Cong. Church, 232 Ill. 158, 83 N. E. 536.

C. W.

pared in the parsonage; that the religious and educational work of the church is conducted from the parsonage; that parents of the children in the Sunday school, teachers, and others interested in the work of the church and the various societies, consult together and with the pastor at the parsonage; that two thirds of the six days of the week are spent in the parsonage in religious work; that in the parsonage the pastor devotes his time to study, meditation, and prayer, and the preparation of discourses for the congregation; that the pastor's wife is also engaged in religious work in connection with the church, assisting the pastor in the preparation of the sermons, in the church work, and in religious instruction, and shares with the officers of the Ladies' Aid Society, at intervals, in the work of that society; that the parsonage was acquired in order to carry on the work of the church mere efficiently, by voluntary contributions from the congregation, and is maintained by like contributions, and the taxes are paid by voluntary contributions raised for the purpose of church work.

Section 3 of article 9 of the Constitution of 1870 authorizes the legislature to exempt from taxation, by general law, such property as may be used exclusively for religious purposes; and the statute in force at the time of the hearing before the board of review, which exempts church property from taxes, reads as follows: "All property used exclusively for religious purposes, . . . and not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit." And the question to be determined upon this record is: Does the Constitution and the statute exempt the parsonage of appellant from taxation?

Under the act of 1872 (Laws 1871-72, p. 1), the legislature exempted from taxation all church property actually and exclusively used for "public worship." That statute was held not broad enough to exempt from taxation a building which stood upon a lot which was separated from the church property by a 16-foot alley, and which was used by the church organization as a place in which to hold Sunday school, and for the social purposes of the church, and in which the janitor of the church had a room, on the ground that the use to which the building was put was not "public worship." Re Walker, 200 Ill. 566, 66 N. E. 144. The legislature amended the statute thereafter so that it exempted from taxation "all church property actually and exclusively used for public worship, and all parsonages or residences actually and exclusively used by persons devoting their entire time to church work, when the said buildings and the land on which said buildings are located (said land to be of reasonable size for the location of said buildings) are owned by the congregation or the church authorities, and not used for pecuniary profit." This statute was held unconstitutional in People ex rel. Thompson v. First Cong. Church, 232 Ill. 158, 83 N. E. 536, in so far as it attempted to exempt from taxation parsonages; and the present statute was passed, which follows substantially the language of the Constitution.

In determining whether the parsonage of the appellant is exempt from taxation under the statute now in force, it must be borne in mind that all property in this state is subject to taxation unless it is relieved from taxation by the Constitution, and the statutes which are passed in accordance with the Constitution, and that in determining the question whether property is exempt from taxation all statutes must be strictly construed and resolved against the exemption if there is any doubt upon the subject; that is, the exemption is not to be made by judicial construction, and one claiming benefit under the statute is required to show clearly that the property is exempt within the contemplation of the law. Montgomery v. Wyman, 130 Ill. 17, 22 N. E. 845; People ex rel. Gore v. Peoria Mercantile Library Asso. 157 Ill. 369, 41 N. E. 557; People ex rel. Brey Meyer v. Watseka Camp Meeting Asso. 160 Ill. 576, 43 N. E. 716; Bloomington Cemetery Asso. v. People, 170 Ill. 377, 48 N. E. 905; Sanitary Dist. v. Martin, 173 Ill. 243, 64 Am. St. Rep. 110, 50 N. E. 201; State Council, C. K. v. Effingham County, 198 Ill. 441, 64 N. E. 1104; People ex rel. McCullough v. Deutsche Gemeinde, 249 Ill. 132, 94 N. E. 162.

And in determining whether property falls within the terms of the exemption, whether it be constitutional or statutory, it is the primary use to which the property is put which must be considered, and not its secondary use. People ex rel. Thompson v. First Cong. Church, supra; Ramsey County v. Church of the Good Shepherd, 45 Minn. 229, 11 L.R.A. 175, 47 N. W. 783. And if the property is devoted, in a primary sense, to a religious purpose, the fact that it is incidentally used for secular purposes will not destroy the exemption, or if the primary use of the property is secular, the fact that a portion of it is incidentally used for a religious purpose will not make it exempt from taxation. People ex rel. Thompson v. First Cong. Church, and Ramsey County v. Church of the Good Shepherd, supra.

We think it obvious, therefore, that all would understand and readily concede that a church is a building which in its primary sense is used for a religious purpose; that is, such use is its principal and general use, and that its occasional use as a lecture room or for other similar use would not destroy the exemption. On the contrary, we think it is equally well understood by all, as the very name signifies, that the primary use of a parsonage is as a home for the pastor and his family,—that is, that such use is its principal and general use,—and that the fact that some parts of the parsonage are used for purposes connected with the pastor's work or the work of the church would not make it a building used exclusively for religious purposes and exempt it from taxation.

We think it clear, therefore, that, as was held in People ex rel. Thompson v. First Cong. Church, supra, the primary purpose for which the parsonage in question was acquired and possessed by the appellant is not religious, but is secular, and that it is not exempt from taxation, and that the amendment of the statute after that case was decided did not change the law in this state so as to exempt the parsonage of the appellant from taxation. This case, in principle, differs in no way from that case, except here we have a little more elaboration, and the evidence points out perhaps more fully the incidental uses of this parsonage than was shown in that case. There is, however, no evidence found in this record which shows that the primary use of the parsonage in this case is other than that of a home provided by the church for the pastor and his family. We think therefore it is clear that the parsonage of the appellant does not fall within the terms of the present statute, which exempt church property which is used exclusively for religious purposes. While the statute is undoubtedly a valid enactment in so far as it applies to church property exclusively used for religious purposes and exempts such property from taxation, it does not apply to the parsonage in question, as that property is not used exclusively for religious purposes within the meaning of that constitutional provision.

The courts of last resort in numerous states of the Union have had the question here presented for decision before them, and it has very generally been held that residence property belonging to a church and used by its pastor as a home is not exempt from taxation under constitutional provisions similar to those in force in this state; and while many of the Constitutions of those states are not worded precisely as is ours, the general principle of taxation announced in those Constitutions is very similar to that announced in our Constitution, and some of the provisions found in 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

those Constitutions are substantially identical with ours. At least what has been said by the courts of other states in determining this question is, while not conclusive, very persuasive. St. Peter's Church v. Scott County, 12 Minn. 395, Gil. 280; Hennepin County v. Grace, 27 Minn. 503, 8 N. W. 761; People ex rel. Church of St. Mary v. Feitner, 168 N. Y. 494, 61 N. E. 762; Ramsey County v. Church of the Good Shepherd, supra; St. Joseph's Church v. Assessors of Taxes, 12 R. I. 19, 34 Am. Rep. 597; Gerke v. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 229; Watterson v. Halliday, 77 Ohio St. 150, 82 N. E. 962, 11 Ann. Cas. 1096; Vail v. Beach, 10 Kan. 214. The case of Vail v. Beach, supra, is very nearly in point. There the property exempted was such property as was "used exclusively for religious purposes," and the question then determined was that a dwelling used by the pastor of the church as a home was not exempt from taxation; and in Ramsey County v. Church of the Good Shepherd, supra, it was held that a parsonage used by the pastor of the church as a home was not used for a religious purpose in a primary sense, but for a secular purpose, and was not exempt from taxation. Those cases were cited and relied upon in People ex rel. Thompson v. First Cong. Church, supra. This shows, we think, conclusively, that it was the view of the court at that time that the legislature was without power, under the Constitution of 1870, to exempt from taxation a parsonage owned by a church organization and used by its pastor as a home. The cases of Watterson v. Halliday, 77 Ohio St. 150, 82 N. E. 962, 11 Ann. Cas. 1096; Hennepin County v. Grace, 27 Minn. 503, 8 N. W. 761, and People ex rel. Church of St. Mary v. Feitner, 168 N. Y. 494, 61 N. E. 762, clearly establish the proposition that the fact that a parsonage is used by a minister who devotes himself entirely to the services of God and to works of religion and charity, whereby the interests of his church are subserved, does not convert the parsonage from a secular into a religious use.

From a careful examination of this record we have reached the conclusion that the parsonage of the appellant is not used exclusively for religious purposes, but is, under the authorities and under the evidence, devoted principally and primarily to secular purposes, and that the board of review did not err in holding that it was subject to taxation.

The decision of the board of review of De Kalb county will therefore be approved.

Farmer, J., dissenting:

I am unable to agree to the opinion of the court in this case. It seems to me the Constitution is broad enough to authorize the exemption of such church property as is sought to be taxed in this case. It is very evident from the legislation upon this subject that the legislature intended to exempt church parsonages. When it was held the act of 1872 was not as broad as the Constitution, and only exempted property exclusively used for "public worship," it was sought to remedy the defect by the act of 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 357). But that act failed to follow the Constitution. In addition to exempting property used exclusively for "public worship," it went beyond the power conferred by the Constitution, and purported to exempt property that might not come within the designation of property used exclusively for "religious purposes." The present act, so far as it applies to church property, is free from any constitutional objection, and whether it embraces property of the character here sought to be taxed is before us for the first time. We were not called upon in People ex rel. Thompson v. First Cong. Church, 232 Ill. 158, 83 N. E. 536, to determine what property would be embraced under the language of the Constitution, authorizing the legislature, by general law, to exempt property used exclusively for "religious purposes," as the statute then before the court did not contain the language. Of course, the parsonage would not be exempt, under the statute then before the court, as property used exclusively for "religious worship," but its exemption was claimed under the clause exempting "parsonages or residences actually and exclusively used by persons devoting their entire time to church work."

Section 3 of article 9 of the Constitution authorizes the exemption, by general law, of all property used exclusively for school purposes. Pursuant to the constitutional power, the legislature passed an act exempting "all property of institutions of learning, including the real estate on which the institutions are located, not leased by such institutions, or otherwise used with a view to profit." The case of Monticello Female Seminary v. People, 106 Ill. 398, 400, 46 Am. Rep. 702, arose under that statute. The institution was originally located upon an 8-acre tract of land. Afterwards it became the owner of about 75 acres more land, part of which was used for raising vegetables and fruit for use by the institution, part for raising hay, corn, an oats to feed cows and horses kept by the school, and part of it for pasture for the stock. This land was assessed for taxation by the tax authorities, and the institution claimed it was exempt under the statute. This court sustained that claim, and said: "The evidence further shows that all this property is necessary for the proper carrying on of the institution; that said tracts of land are used exclusively for the purposes of the institution, and that no part of the same has been leased or otherwise used with a view to profit; that it is necessary, in connection with the institution, to have cows to supply milk for the scholars and teachers, all of whom, numbering about 175 persons, reside and live within and upon the grounds of the institution; that horses are required to do the necessary hauling connected with the seminary, and that all the hay, corn, and oats raised on the place go to the feeding of the stock thereon; that nothing is ever sold off the premises, and that what is raised is but a partial supply for the institution; that the object of the institution is, as far as possible, to make it a self-sustaining one; and that what is realized over and above actual expenses is used as a fund for the education of indigent females." If that land was held and "used exclusively for the purposes of the institution," and the facts brought the case, as said by the court, "within the very words of the exemption from taxation of the Constitution and the legislation upon the subject," I am unable to see why the facts in this case do not bring it within the exemption of the Constitution and the legislation upon the subject. If land devoted to raising vegetables and fruit for use by the teachers and students, and grain and hay for live stock owned by the institution, is, within the meaning of the Constitution, used exclusively for school purposes, it would seem a church parsonage owned and used as shown by the record in this case is used exclusively for religious purposes. The Monticello Seminary Case, 249 Ill. 481, 94 N. E. 938, has never been overruled, but has been frequently cited in subsequent cases.

In Monticello Seminary v. Madison County, 249 Ill. 481, 94 N. E. 938, the school was assessed on credits. It was the owner of interest-bearing securities amounting to $127,411.71 and claimed it was all exempt from taxation. Of that amount $25,000 was donations or endowment funds to be loaned and the income used in providing and maintaining scholarships in the school. The principal was not to be used. The rest of the fund ($92,411.71) was derived from tuition, board, and other income of the institution. This court held that the $35,000 was exempt, but that the other credits were subject to taxation, although three members of the court dissented and stated that in their opinion all of the credits were exempt.

It does not require a resort to the rule of liberal construction to hold that property acquired, owned, and used as is this property, is used exclusively for religious purposes within the meaning of the Constitution and statute. The exemption authorized by the Constitution is not restricted to property used exclusively for public worship, but embraces all property exclusively—that is, primarily—used for religious purposes. A church building for public worship is essential to the successful carrying out of the work of the church, and a pastor or priest is also necessary for efficient work. The pastor or priest is a man who feels himself called of God to devote his time, energies, and talents to the work of his church and the persuading of men and women to accept religion and lead pure and holy lives. No church, society, or congregation builds a church for other than a religious purpose. A purpose is “the idea or ideal kept before the mind as an end of effort or action.” The purpose of building church houses is to promote the cause of religion, and this requires the services of a pastor or minister. As he is usually a man who devotes all his time to the work of the church and has no income except such as is paid by his congregation, it is customary to provide a place for him to live. Sometimes such provision is made a part of or connected with the church building, and sometimes, as in the case before us, a house is built on a lot adjoining the church lot. But wherever the building in which the pastor is to live is located, it is a part of the plan of the congregation to benefit mankind by preaching and teaching religion. The idea before the mind in furnishing the pastor a house is to make efficient the religious work and purpose of the church. The use to which the property is devoted, as well as its ownership, must be considered in determining whether it is exempt from taxation. If the primary object and purpose of the building is religious, its character as property exclusively used for religious purposes would not be destroyed by the fact that some uses made of it are not of a religious character. In People ex rel. Thompson v. First Cong. Church, supra, it was said when a building is used primarily for religious purposes and secondarily for a secular purpose, or if there should be in a church building some room used as a lodging room by the sexton or some other person employed by the church, the building would not thereby lose its character as a building used for religious purposes. The evidence in this case is that the work of the church cannot be carried on efficiently without the constant care and attention of the pastor. The parsonage was paid for with contributions made by the church congregation. It was erected for the benefit it would be in promoting the work of the church, and not for the benefit of the pastor. There is nothing in the Constitution or statute which limits church property that may be exempted from taxation to that necessarily used for public worship. The limitation is to property exclusively or primarily provided and used for religious purposes.

In my opinion the board of review erred in deciding the property was not exempt and in ordering it taxed.

Carter, Ch. J., and Vickers, J.: We concur in the foregoing dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Farmer.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT. (Division No. 2.)

NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE, Plff.
in Err.,
v.
OKLAHOMA CITY.

(— Okla. —, 122 Pac. 644.)

Pleading — variance — issuance of municipal certificates.

1. The allegation that by gross negligence of city officers duplicate certificates were issued and placed on the market is not sustained by proof that they were never delivered by any one having authority to deliver them, but that they were taken without right by one having no authority to deliver them.

Municipal corporation — tax certificates — wrongful issuance — liability.

2. A mayor and city clerk, by an oversight, signed duplicate paying tax certificates in favor of the contractor. An employee in one of the city offices stole the duplicates, and he, or some one in collusion,

Headnotes by ROSSER, C.

Note. — Liability of government or other public body for its own obligations, stolen from it.

It will be observed that in NATIONAL BANK v. OKLAHOMA CITY, among a considerable number of assessment certificates to order, charged against particular lots of land, several were signed in duplicate by mistake of the city officers, and these duplicates were abstracted from the office by a clerk and through a forged indorsement came into the hands of an innocent holder for value; and that it was held that the instruments were not negotiable, and that in relying upon the honesty of the clerk the forged the indorsement of the contractor and delivered them to plaintiff as collateral for a loan. Plaintiff made no investigation as to whether the certificates had been delivered, or as to the genuineness of the indorsement. The loan was not paid. In a suit by plaintiff against the city for negligence of its officers in signing the duplicates, held:

(1) That plaintiff was negligent in accepting the certificates without making investigation as to whether they had been regularly issued.

(2) That the fact that duplicate certificates were signed was not the proximate cause of the bank's loss. The proximate cause was the fraudulent acts of the city employee.

(March 19, 1912.)

city was no more negligent than the plaintiff in lending him money upon the certificates.

It will be seen that in the few cases on the subject of this note the courts are not agreed as to whether an obligation of a government or other public body can be given vitality by theft before delivery or after redemption.

Theft of obligations before issue.

In Trust & Loan Co. v. Hamilton, 7 U. C. C. P. 98, where the debentures of a city made out to a certain person or bearer were stolen before issue, it was held that under the applicable statute the debentures were negotiable instruments like promissory notes, and that they were good in the hands of a bona fide holder for value.

But it was held in Germania Sav. Bank v. Suspension Bridge, 73 Hun, 590, 26 N. Y. Supp. 98, that there could be no valid inception of a paper without delivery. In that case the board of water commissioners caused certain bonds to be prepared, three of which they delivered to a contractor illegally for temporary use, but these three were afterwards redeemed by the board, and the court held that the contractor had never had any title to them. The board directed the treasurer to destroy all the first bonds, and, supposing them to have been destroyed, issued other bonds of the same nature and number but at a larger rate of interest. The three bonds aforesaid and one other of the first lot of bonds, which was never delivered to anyone by the board, were stolen and sold by the treasurer, and reached the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value. The court, in holding the bonds void, said they had "disposed of the case under the theory that these bonds never were issued," and that while they did not intimate that there had been any carelessness on the part of the board, it was "unnecessary to inquire or determine whether the members of the board of water commissioners were careless or negligent in failing to insure the destruction of the bonds in question, because the defendant cannot be charged with liability 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ERROR to the District Court for Oklahoma County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the negligent issuance of certain paving warrants by defendant which were taken by plaintiff as collateral for a loan to a third party. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Devereux & Hildreth, for plaintiff in error:

The city is liable.

Wichita Sav. Bank v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 20 Kan. 519; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Adams, 4 Kan. App. 305, 45 Pac. 920; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 56 Ohio St. 351, 43 L.R.A. 777, 47 N. E. 249; Allen v. South Boston R. Co. 150 Mass. 200, 5

upon that ground; they could only impose liability upon the defendant in the manner prescribed by the law which created them."

It may be allowable in this connection to refer to Cooke v. United States, 91 U. S. 389, 23 L. ed. 237, where in holding that if the genuine treasury notes of the United States were fraudulently and surreptitiously issued and unlawfully and surreptitiously put into circulation, the government was liable therefor in the hands of a bona fide holder, the court said: "The notes were perfect and complete as soon as printed. They did not require the signature of any officer. As soon as they had received the impression of all the plates and dies necessary to perfect their form, they were ready for circulation and use. In this respect they did not differ from the coins of the mint, when fully stamped and prepared for issue. Coin is the money of commerce, and circulates from hand to hand as such. These notes represent the promise of the government to pay money, and were intended to circulate and take the place of money, to some extent, for commercial purposes. Although not made legal tender as between individuals, they were, for their then face value, exclusive of interest, as between the government and its creditors."

—fraud of issuing officers.

There are some cases where the theft or embezzlement has been on the part of the issuing officers.

Thus in Ronede v. Jersey City, Fed. Cas. No. 12,031a, where city bonds had been prepared and delivered to the city treasurer, to be used in settlement of claims as presented according to a specified list, and he absconded, taking with him certain of the bonds, the court, in giving judgment for the holder, said the only questions were as to the authority to issue the bonds and the bona fides of the holder, as the principle was "well settled by the supreme court that in a suit by a bona fide holder against a municipal corporation to recover the amount of coupons due or bonds issued under authority conferred by law, no question of

L.R.A. 716, 15 Am. St. Rep. 185, 22 N. E. 917; Archer v. Dunham, 89 Hun, 387, 35 N. Y. Supp. 387; Fifth Avenue Bank v. 42d Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 137 N. Y. 231, 10 L.R.A. 331, 33 Am. St. Rep. 712, 33 N. E. 378; Jarvis v. Manhattan Beach Co. 148 N. Y. 652, 31 L.R.A. 776, 51 Am. St. Rep. 727, 43 N. E. 68; Richardson v. Delaware Loan Asso. 9 Houst. (Del.) 354, 32 Atl. 980; Havens v. Bank of Taboro, 132 N. C. 214, 95 Am. St. Rep. 627, 43 S. E. 639; Rogers v. Burlington, 3 Wall. 654, 18 L. ed. 79; East Lincoln v. Davenport, 94 U. S. 801, 24 L. ed. 322; Pompton Twp. v. Cooper Union, 101 U. S. 196, 25 L. ed. 803; Ronede v. Jersey City, Fed. Cas. No. 12,031a; Hainer, Modern Law of Municipal Securities, § 432; National L. Ins. Co. v. Board of Education, 10 C. C. A. 637, 27 U. S. App. 244, 62 Fed. 778; West Plains Twp. v. Sage, 16 C. C. A. 553, 32 U. S. App. 725, 69 Fed. 943; Cadillac v. Woonsocket Inst. for Savings, 7 C. C. A. 574, 16 U. S. App. 545, 58 Fed. 935; Seward County v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 32 C. C. A. 585, 61 U. S. App. 41, 90 Fed. 222; 2 Smith, Modern Law of Mun. Corp. § 1671; Black v. Cohen, 52 Ga. 621; Lane v. Schomp, 20 N. J. Eq. 82; Moran v. Miami County, 2 Black, 722, 17 L. ed. 342; Farr v. Lyons, 21 Blatchf. 110, 13 Fed. 377; Bartholomew County v. Bright, 18 Ind. 93; Copper v. Jersey City, 44 N. J. L. 634; Comanche County v. Lewis, 133 U. S. 198, 33 L. ed. 604, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 286; State v. Wichita County, 62 Kan. 494, 64 Pac. 45.

Mr. James S. Twyford for defendant in error.

Rosser, C., filed the following opinion:

In 1903 Oklahoma City entered into a contract with the Barber Asphalt Paving Company, by which that company was to do certain curbing and paving on Harvey avenue in the city of Oklahoma City. The contract was lawful and entered into in pursuance of a valid ordinance of the city. The company did the work in compliance with its contract. As compensation for its work, there was issued to the company form merely, or irregularity or fraud, or misconduct on the part of the agents of the corporation, can be considered."

The same theft was the cause of Copper v. Jersey City, 44 N. J. L. 634, where the court, in holding that a bona fide holder of the bonds might recover of the city, places its decision expressly on the point that here the bonds had been issued to the city's agent, and said: "If this bond had been executed by the municipal corporation, and locked up in its safe depository for future negotiation, and Hamilton, being without authority either to issue or negotiate it, had feloniously obtained possession of it, and put it in circulation, a different question would be presented."

In Montvale v. People's Bank, 74 N. J. L. 464, 67 Atl. 67, where certain city bonds payable to bearer were signed by the mayor and sealed, and duly attested by the borough clerk, some of them were sold by the borough, and the remainder left by it in the custody of the mayor until some further disposition of them should be made by it. In an action by the borough against a bank to recover certain of the bonds pledged with the bank by the mayor to secure a loan to him, it was held that the bonds were negotiable instruments, that the bank was a holder in due course under the 52d section of the negotiable instruments law, and that the bank was entitled to retain them under the provision of the 16th section of that law, providing that "where the instrument is in the hands of a holder in due course, a valid delivery thereof by all parties prior to him, so as to make them liable to him, is conclusively presumed."

In School List No. 16 v. State Bank, 8 Neb. 168, where a school district placed its bonds in the hands of an agent for sale, and there was doubt as to whether the agent had pledged the bonds to secure his own debt, the court, in holding that there had been no pledge of the bonds, was of opinion that any disposition of the bonds made by the agent to a bona fide holder for value would be binding upon the school district.

(It should be noted that in Portsmouth Sav. Bank v. Ashley, 91 Mich. 670, 30 Am. St. Rep. 511, 52 N. W. 74, referred to at length in the opinion of the court in NATIONAL BANK v. OKLAHOMA CITY, it does not appear how the bonds reached the railroad company.)

Obligations stolen after redemption.

In District of Columbia v. Cornell, 130 U. S. 655, 32 L. ed. 1041, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 694, the district had issued certificates payable to bearer, secured by the pledge of assessments on special property, and these certificates were redeemed and canceled by the district, and so stamped. Afterwards they were stolen by one of the clerks, the cancellation marks more or less removed, and they were placed upon the market before their date of maturity; and it was held that the district was not liable therefor; that although the instruments were negotiable instruments they did not partake of the character of commercial paper so as to make them good in the hands of bona fide holders for value; and that the omission to obey the provision of the act of Congress requiring that certificates on redemption should be destroyed by burning did not make the district liable therefor after they had been unmistakably canceled.

In Branch v. Sinking Fund Com'rs, 80 Va. 427, 56 Am. Rep. 590, where bonds were redeemed by the state, and were afterwards stolen from the treasurer's office, and certificates, in which the cost of the work was assessed and charged against the tracts of land liable therefor. These certificates were issued in large numbers, and the mayor and clerk of the city signed and sealed them without checking them up. Duplicate numbers from 145 to 160, both inclusive, having a face value of $3,026.01, were signed. A man named Roundtree was working in some of the city offices of Oklahoma City, though the evidence does not show in what office he was working. He wrote to the plaintiff, National Bank of Commerce, at Guthrie, and inquired if the bank would lend a friend of his $1,200 on certain paving certificates. The plaintiff replied that if the paving certificates were regular it would make the loan, and asked him to forward copies of the original ordinance, under which the paving certificates were issued, and also a blank of the form used in the certificates. He did that, and the note was prepared at the bank and mailed to him. It was returned to the bank, signed by C. E. Biller; and what purported to be sixteen paving certificates, numbered from 145 to 160, inclusive, were inclosed with the note as collateral security for its payment. The bank then sent Roundtree a draft for $50 and the balance of the amount to Biller. The paving certificates purported to be indorsed by the Barber Asphalt Paving Company, by E. B. Demarest, attorney in fact, and were also indorsed by C. E. Biller. The indorsement of the Barber Asphalt Paving Company was a forgery, and the certificates inclosed were never issued or delivered by the city, but were duplicates of the certificates issued to the Barber Asphalt Paving Company. The bank did not correspond with any of the officials of Oklahoma City, or with anyone else, except Roundtree, with reference to the certificates. It appears that Roundtree has absconded. There is some doubt whether such a person as Biller ever existed. If so, he was never produced.

When the first instalment came due, the certificates were presented by the bank and reached the hands of bona fide holders for value, the court said that the holders were negligent in not making inquiry as to the bonds, as there were many reports at the time of missing state bonds, but placed its decision mainly on the ground that the bonds had ceased to be the obligation of the state, saying: "We are of opinion that, after these bonds with their appurtenances had been redeemed by the state, and taken into her possession and custody, they ceased to be her obligations, and could not again become such unless she voluntarily redelivered or reissued them. They had run their career, and fulfilled their mission, and had returned to the dusty depository of dead matter in the treasury; and they had been substituted by outstanding equivalents which represent the legal and moral obligations of the state. They had no longer any legal inception or existence as the bonds of the state, and they were and are as though they never had been; and their vitality could never be restored without intentional and voluntary redelivery by the state: certainly they could not be resurected to the righteous judgment of a court of justice by robbery or theft."

But in Ehrlich v. Jennings, 78 S. C. 269, 125 Am. St. Rep. 795, 58 S. E. 922, 13 Ann. Cas. 1166, it was held where a bond payable to bearer redeemed by the state was stolen by a clerk from the vault, the state was liable upon the bond to a bona fide holder for value. The bond was unmarked in disobedience of the statute, which provided that a surrendered bond "shall immediately upon such surrender be canceled and filed by the state treasurer with the permanent records of his office." The court distinguished the case of Branch v. Sinking Fund Comrs. supra, as being based in part on the negligence of the holders in failing to inform themselves as to the genuineness of the bonds, and points out that in the Cornell Case, supra, the court declined to class the certificates with commercial paper.

In State v. Wells, F. & Co. 15 Cal. 336, various warrants of the state of California, made out to order, were duly delivered to the payees, indorsed by them in blank, and later paid and discharged by the treasurer, but were not, as required by statute, receipted for on their back with the date. Thereafter they were stolen, and were later presented anew by a bona fide holder, to the treasurer, who in ignorance of their prior payment exchanged bonds of the state therefor payable to bearer, and it was held that the state could not recover the bonds from such bona fide holder. The court said: "The principle applies in such case, that the loss should fall on him by whose fault or confidence it came. The condition of the person in possession would be the better under such a state of facts. We see no difference between a state and an individual in the application of this principle. A state should act with as much justice, and be held to as strict responsibility, as one of her own citizens in these matters of dealing and contract; and it is better that she should be held responsible for the acts of her agents, than that she should reap the benefits of fraud committed upon innocent third persons by those agents, under cover and color of authority."

In Arents v. Com. 18 Gratt. 750, coupons on the bonds of the city of Wheeling, guaranteed by the state of Virginia, were paid by the state and thereafter stolen from the auditor and, after maturity, acquired by a bona fide purchaser for value, and it was held that he could not hold them as against the state.

B. B. B.

the first instalment paid. When the second instalment came due, the Barber Asphalt Paving Company produced the valid certificates and collected the amount, and the city refused to make further payment to the plaintiff upon the certificates held by it.

The defendant filed a demurrer to the original petition, and the court took the demurrer under advisement from March, 1900, until November 15, 1907. On the last-mentioned date, the demurrer was overruled. The plaintiff contends that when the demurrer was overruled the law, as decided upon the demurrer, became the law of the case, and that the finding of law upon the demurrer could not be questioned during the further progress of the case, except by appeal. It further contends that every material allegation in the petition was proven by the testimony, and that therefore its right to recover was fixed by the overruling of the demurrer. It contends, further, that, the demurrer having been overruled November 15, 1907, all questions adjudicated in the demurrer became res judicata upon the expiration of one year after the demurrer was sustained, and that the order overruling the demurrer could not be appealed from after the expiration of one year.

The evidence did not prove all the material allegations of the petition. The petition, after alleging, in substance, the facts as stated above, and after alleging the issuance of valid certificates, alleges: "That by the gross negligence and carelessness of the defendant corporation and of the defendants Van Winkle and Blaise, duplicate certificates for the numbers hereinafter set out were issued by said city, and were placed on the market." The proof showed that the city did not issue the certificates. So far as the proof went, it tended to show that the certificates were fraudulently abstracted from the offices of the city and transferred to the plaintiff by forged indorsements. There is no proof whatever that the city issued the certificates; but, on the other hand, all the evidence shows that it did not do so.

The city is not liable. The tax certificates were not negotiable instruments. It is admitted that the city is not liable upon the certificates; but it is claimed that it is liable for the negligent act of its officers, by which Biller or Roundtree, or whoever committed the fraud, was enabled to defraud the bank. It is claimed that the mayor and city clerk were negligent in signing the certificates. The only act of negligence that can be charged against the mayor and clerk is that they did something which permitted a dishonest man to perpetrate a wrong. If the officials of the city had all been honest—in other words, if Roundtree had been honest—there would have been no danger in signing the certificates. But it is claimed here that, because those certificates were duplicates of valid certificates, the city would be responsible, because the mayor and clerk did not investigate to see whether they were signing duplicate certificates. The face of the certificate covers almost two printed pages, and it appears that there were 160 of them. To have read each certificate, and compared each of the 160, would have been quite a task. Of course, the numbering might have been observed; but the mere numbering of the certificate was a matter which, of all others, would most likely be left to a subordinate employee. If, in issuing certificates of this sort, it is necessary for the mayor or chief official to check over the numbers, and to attend to such mere clerical matters, then it will not be safe for cities to employ clerical help at all; such help would be practically valueless.

In relying upon Roundtree's honesty, the city did no more than the plaintiff itself did in lending him the money upon the faith of the certificates. In the case of Fuller v. Mower, 81 Me. 380, 17 Atl. 312, where a town order was signed in blank by a selectman and delivered to the chairman of the board of selectmen, to be used for legitimate purposes, the chairman issued it to the plaintiff, who loaned to him certain money, relying upon his assurance that the town was in need of money to pay debts, and that the board had authority to borrow the money. The town had not authorized the borrowing of the money, and suit was brought against the selectmen who had signed the order. It was held that he was not liable. In the course of the opinion, the court said: "It is urged that the defendant was careless in signing a blank order and leaving it with Skinner. Perhaps he was. It can now be seen that it was dangerous to do so. But the defendant was not more careless in trusting Skinner with a blank order than the plaintiff was in trusting him with money when no other member of the board was present to witness or sanction the transaction. And in this particular they are pari delicto. And if it be true, as counsel urge, that Skinner's fraud would not have been possible but for the defendant's negligence, it is equally true that the fraud would not have been possible but for the plaintiff's negligence. Both trusted him, and both were deceived by him."

In Portsmouth Sav. Bank v. Ashley, 91 Mich. 670, 30 Am. St. Rep. 511, 52 N. W. 74, the village council authorized the president and clerk to sign certain bonds, but did not authorize them to deliver them. The bonds were delivered to a railroad company, which sold them to a bona fide purchaser. It was held that the purchaser could not recover. The court said: "The mere signing of bonds did not bind the village to the payment of them. They were still incomplete, and remained in the hands of the village, subject to the direction and control of the council. The village council was the only power, under the statutes, which had authority to direct the issue or delivery for the purposes for which the bonds were executed. No direction whatever was given by it to deliver the bonds, and, until authority was given by the council, the president had no more power to dispose of them than a stranger to the proceedings; and a disposition of them by the president would not confer upon the holder any greater right to enforce payment than though they were stolen from the village treasury."

In Gould v. Wise, 97 Cal. 532, 32 Pac. 576, 33 Pac. 323, the grantee in a deed took the deed from the table where it was lying while a purchase-money mortgage was being prepared, carried it out of the room, and executed a mortgage on the land to an innocent third person, and then returned and signed the note and mortgage for the purchase money. The court held that permitting him to take the deed out of the room was not such negligence as estopped the grantor from asserting his mortgage in preference to that of the innocent third person.

In the case at bar, the bank had no more right to trust Roundtree than did the city. Though the instrument was not negotiable, the bank made no effort to ascertain how it came into Biller's hands, made no effort to ascertain who Biller was, and relied entirely upon Roundtree to ascertain whether or not the certificates were genuine.

In Merchants' Exch. Nat. Bank v. Bergen County, 115 U. S. 384, 24 L. ed. 430, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 88, the court, speaking by Mr. Justice Field, said: "This is not a case where there existed in the board a general power to issue negotiable securities of the county, so that parties would be justified in taking them when properly executed in form by its officers. It is a case where there was no power, except as specially delegated by law for a particular purpose. All persons taking securities of municipalities having only such special power must see to it that the conditions prescribed for the exercise of the power existed. As an essential preliminary to protection as a bona fide holder, authority to issue them must appear."

In Anthony v. Jasper County, 101 U. S. 693, 25 L. ed. 1005, which was an action to recover upon certain bonds issued to a township in the state of Missouri, the court said: "In order to recover in this case, it became necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the bonds from which the coupons sued on were cut had been executed according to law. He did prove that they were signed by the presiding justice and clerk of the court, and were sealed with the seal of the court. This, before the act of March 30, 1872, would have been enough; but after that more was necessary. The public can act only through its authorized agents; and it is not bound until all who are to participate in what is to be done have performed their respective duties. The authority of a public agent depends on the law as it is when he acts. He has only such powers as are specifically granted; and he cannot bind his principal under powers that have been taken away by simply antedating his contracts. Under such circumstances, a false date is equivalent to a false signature; and the public, in the absence of any ratification of its own, is no more estopped by the one than it would be by the other. After the power of an agent of a private person has been revoked, he cannot bind his principal by simply dating back what he does. A retiring partner, after due notice of dissolution, cannot charge his firm for the payment of a negotiable promissory note, even in the hands of an innocent holder, by giving it a date within the period of the existence of the partnership. Antedating, under such circumstances, partakes of the character of a forgery, and is always open to inquiry, no matter who relies on it. The question is one of the authority of him who attempts to bind another. Every person who deals with or through an agent assumes all the risks of a lack of authority in the agent to do what he does."

In Terry v. Allis, 20 Wis. 32, the first paragraph of the syllabus is as follows: "Where a city order has never been delivered to or indorsed by the payee, no one can acquire such a title to it as will enable him to collect its amount of the city."

It must not be forgotten that the certificates were not obligations of the city. They were tax certificates creating a lien on certain lots for paving tax, and were payable by the lot owners.

The distinction between liability upon the certificates and liability for negligence in signing them has not been overlooked. The term "negligence," in this connection, though commonly used, is probably inaccurate. It seems to be more a question of estoppel. If the question were one of negligence, it would be easy of solution. "In order to render a person liable for negligence, it must be shown that the damage was the ordinary or probable consequence of the act." It will not do to reverse the ordinary presumption that people are honest, and say that the ordinary or probable consequence of signing too many certificates is that some one will steal them and place them in circulation. See Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 436, 4 Am. Rep. 497. Besides the act of signing was not the proximate cause of the bank's loss. The proximate cause was the theft of Roundtree, which was not necessarily connected with the signing of the certificates. The signing of the duplicates, at most, was only a condition, and not a cause of plaintiff's loss. The principle here involved is discussed in O'Herron v. Gray, 168 Mass. 573, 40 L.R.A. 498, 60 Am. St. Rep. 411, 47 N. E. 429. Among other things, it is said: "If the negligence is such as might be an appropriate foundation for an action at law to recover damages by one who advances his money, it may be availed of by way of estoppel, to avoid circuitry of action. But the facts of this case fall short of showing such negligence. The guardian intrusted the certificates to a national bank of good reputation. Neither she nor anybody else had any reason to anticipate larceny or embezzlement of the property, and a fraudulent use of it, to deceive others, by a trusted officer of the bank. She had no reason to expect that, if the certificates were stolen, anybody would take them without inquiring whether, as trust property, they had been disposed of by the guardian for the benefit of her wards. The conduct of the guardian was not a cause, but a mere condition of the defendant's advance of money upon the faith of the certificates. A criminal act of Francis intervened as the cause of the defendant's loss; and this the guardian had no reason to anticipate."

The cases cited by plaintiff are not in point. In all the cases cited, the securities on which recovery was had were actually delivered by the person authorized to deliver them. In this case, the certificates were never delivered. They were stolen.

The principle that when one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he who first trusted must first suffer, does not apply. The city did not trust Roundtree any further than it did any other employee. It in no way clothed him with evidence of ownership. The fact that the certificates were issued in duplicate possibly made it easier to perpetrate the fraud. At least, it probably prevented the fraud from being discovered as soon as if there had been only one set of certificates. It may be that the opportunity to perpetrate the fraud may have tempted Roundtree to attempt it; but the bona fide purchaser from the thief, who entered by an unlocked door, cannot defend against the owner because of his negligence in leaving the door unlocked. Roundtree could have stolen valid certificates and defrauded the bank in the same way.

It is not necessary to enter into the questions arising out of the fact that the instruments, out of which this cause of action arises, were special tax certificates, upon which, if genuine, the city would not be liable, and out of the distinctions that might be urged as existing between the liability of a public and private corporation under the same circumstances.

The judgment of the lower court should be affirmed.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

H. W. CALDWELL, Appt.,
v.

JOSEPH W. LITTLE, Admr., etc., of D. T. McCulloch, Resp't.

(158 N. C. 351, 74 S. E. 10.)

Insurance — legal dependents — definition.

Brothers and sisters and nephews and nieces not living with or supported by assured are not legal dependents within the meaning of a provision making the proceeds of a benefit insurance policy payable to such persons, and the proceeds are therefore assets in the hands of the administrator.

(March 13, 1912.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for New Hanover County holding the proceeds of a mutual benefit policy to be assets in the hands of the administrator for payment of debts as against the claims of brothers, sisters, nephews, and nieces. Affirmed.

Note. — The question, Who is a "dependent," within the statutes or rules defining beneficiaries of mutual benefit societies, is covered in the notes to Caldwell v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 653; Royal League v. Shields, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 208; and Goff v. Supreme Lodge, R. A. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1191.

As to who is a member of a "family" within contract of benefit society, see note to Supreme Lodge, O. M. P. v. Nevins, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 334.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Rountree & Carr for plaintiff.

No counsel for defendant.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only assignment of error relates to the correctness of the following ruling of the judge: "Second. That the funds received from the Junior Order of United American Mechanics are hereby declared to be assets in the hands of the administrator for the payment of debts of D. T. McCulloch, and the court finds as a fact, on the admission of all parties, that the deceased was a bachelor and died without leaving children, or any relative living with him, but did have brothers, sisters, and nephews and nieces, whom the court holds not 'legal dependents' under the terms of the certificate offered in evidence." It appears that the membership certificate in the Junior Order of United American Mechanics provides that any benefit accruing thereunder shall be payable to the legal dependents of the deceased. The benefit for $500 was paid over to the administrator by the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, with the understanding that it was to be distributed as provided by law, and the administrator desires to disburse it among creditors, or among the brothers and sisters and nephews and nieces of the deceased, as the court may hold is proper.

Upon the findings of fact, we agree with the court below that the deceased died leaving no "legal dependents" within the meaning of the certificate of membership. His brothers and sisters did not live with him, and, for aught that appears, were in no legal sense dependent upon him, any more than he was dependent upon them. While the meaning of the term "legal dependent" has not been defined in any case before this court, we have abundant authority from other courts, as well as text writers, in support of our decision. Webster's Dictionary defines the word "dependent" primarily to mean "one who depends; one who is sustained by another, or who relies on another for support or favor." In Keener v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 38 Mo. App. 543, the "legal dependents" of a person were restricted to those whom he was legally bound to support. Upon this theory a mistress is held not to be a legal dependent, and the same as to servants and retainers. Ibid. West v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 14 Tex. Civ. App. 471; 37 S. W. 966. In a Wisconsin case the supreme court defined the word "dependent" as follows: "We think the true meaning of the word 'dependent,' in this connection, means some person or persons dependent for support in some way upon the deceased." Ballou v. Gile, 50 Wis. 614, 7 N. W. 561. Mr. Bacon, in his work on Benefit Societies, vol. 1, § 261, after reviewing the cases, says: "We are forced to the conclusion that they limit the term 'dependents' to those who reasonably rely upon another for subsistence, nourishment, and support." In Massachusetts it is held a mother not living with her son, and not relying on him for support, is not a legal dependent. McCarthy v. Supreme Lodge, N. E. O. P. 153 Mass. 314, 11 L.R.A. 144, 25 Am. St. Rep. 637, 26 N. E. 866. And the same ruling as to a brother is made in Supreme Council, A. L. H. v. Smith, 45 N. J. Eq. 466, 17 Atl. 770. In Supreme Council, A. L. H. v. Perry, 140 Mass. 580, 5 N. E. 634, it is held that a sister (nothing else appearing) is not a legal dependent. In 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 969, it is said: "In passing upon the designation of 'dependents,' the courts have generally construed it strictly, and held it to mean those relying upon the insured for support." In 2 Words & Phrases, pp. 1991, 1992, many cases are cited and quoted from at length, sustaining this definition of the term.

As there are no "legal dependents," it follows that the administrator is entitled to the fund to be applied to the debts of the deceased, if any, and otherwise distributed in due course of administration. Affirmed.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

THOMAS C. CAMPBELL, Appt.,

v.

CITY OF CHILLICOTHE, Resp't.

(239 Mo. 455, 144 S. W. 408.)

Highway — gate across sidewalk — liability of municipality.

1. A municipal corporation is liable for injury to a pedestrian on a sidewalk by collision, in the night, with a gate which is so constructed that it will stand open across the walk so as to obstruct it, if the municipality had notice of, or, by the exercise of

Note. — For exhaustive discussion of the liability of a municipal corporation for permitting an obstruction to be placed in the street, see note to McKim v. Philadelphia, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 507.

The whole matter of the liability of municipality corporations for defects or obstructions in streets is covered by a note to Elam v. Mt. Sterling, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 513.

ordinary care, could have discovered, the defect in time to remedy it prior to the injury.

Same — sufficiency of notice.

2. It is error to make the right to recover against a municipal corporation for injury caused by a defect in a sidewalk depend upon actual notice for the defect, if there is evidence tending to show that it was chargeable with constructive notice.

Evidence — absence of light on highway — action for injury.

3. Although the fact that an electric light located near the place where an accident occurred on a public street, was not burning at the time of the accident, is not evidence of negligence on the part of the municipality, it may be considered by the jury as tending to show why the injured person did not avoid the obstruction.

Appeal — instruction — absence of objection.

4. An exception to an instruction is sufficient to raise the question of its correctness, although no objection is made to it.

(February 6, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Linn County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Scott J. Miller and Charles M. Miller, for appellant:

It is negligence to hang a gate so that when open it swings over and on the sidewalk.

Decatur v. Hamilton, 89 Ill. App. 561; Bohen v. Waseca, 32 Minn. 176, 50 Am. Rep. 564, 19 N. W. 730; Jarrell v. Wilmington, 4 Penn. (Del.) 454, 56 Atl. 379; Bieling v. Brooklyn, 120 N. Y. 98, 24 N. E. 389; Hume v. New York, 74 N. Y. 264; Mansfield v. New York, 119 App. Div. 199, 104 N. Y. Supp. 386; Kiley v. Kansas City, 69 Mo. 102, 33 Am. Rep. 491; Barr v. Kansas City, 105 Mo. 550, 16 S. W. 483.

Instruction 7 is erroneous and should not, under the evidence, have been given. It was prejudicial to plaintiff and reversible error.

Clark v. Brookfield, 97 Mo. App. 16, 70 S. W. 934; Deland v. Cameron, 112 Mo. App. 708, 87 S. W. 597; Cropper v. Mexico, 62 Mo. App. 388; Maus v. Springfield, 101 Mo. 613, 20 Am. St. Rep. 634, 14 S. W. 630; Sneed v. Salisbury, 94 Mo. App. 429, 68 S. W. 369; Huff v. Marshall, 97 Mo. App. 547, 71 S. W. 477; Young v. Webb City, 150 Mo. 342, 51 S. W. 709; Market v. St. Louis, 56 Mo. 189; Shipley v. Bolivar, 42 Mo. App. 401.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. Frank W. Ashby and Frank Sheetz & Son, for respondent:

If the gate was properly constructed, in reasonably good repair, and afforded, when closed, a reasonably safe sidewalk for public use, it was a nuisance per se.

Fehlauer v. St. Louis, 178 Mo. 635, 77 S. W. 843; Stoetzele v. Swearingen, 90 Mo. App. 588.

Roy, C., filed the following opinion:

This is a suit to recover damages for personal injuries, tried in the circuit court of Linn county, at Brookfield, on a change of venue from Livingston county. The verdict being for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

The defendant is a municipal corporation under a special charter, having at the time of the trial a population of about 10,000.

The facts constituting the negligence are stated in the petition as follows: "That on or about February 20, 1906, and for a long time prior thereto, there was a certain gate (which was about 3 feet high and 3½ feet long) so hung or fastened to a post or fence, so that in opening said gate, or when opened, it would swing out over and stand on said street and sidewalk within and upon the east side of Elm street, and in front of a house and lot situated and abutting on said sidewalk and street, known as No. 823 Elm street, in said city. That said gate, when so hung or fastened, as aforesaid, and when open on said street and sidewalk, constituted a dangerous obstruction and a nuisance on said street and sidewalk, and persons passing thereon were liable to be injured by reason of said gate and obstruction. Plaintiff further states on or about February 20, 1906, and for a long time prior thereto, that the defendant carelessly and negligently maintained and caused or permitted said gate to be so hung or fastened, as aforesaid, well knowing that said gate was dangerous, and that it would be open many times a day and night, and when open it would stand out on and over said sidewalk and street, and would constitute a dangerous obstruction and a nuisance in and upon said sidewalk and street; and that persons passing along and over said sidewalk and street would be liable to be injured thereby, and that said gate and obstruction was negligently and carelessly caused or permitted by said defendant to be and remain in a dangerous and defective condition, and to habitually stand open in and on said sidewalk and street for a great length of time prior to and including the 20th day of February, 1906; that the defendant knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care would have known, of the existence of said gate, and that it was so hung or fastened, as aforesaid, and was in a defective condition, and habitually stood open in and on said sidewalk and street, and of the dangerous condition of said sidewalk and street by reason thereof, in time, by the exercise of ordinary care, to have caused said gate and obstruction to be removed, and said sidewalk and street made secure and safe, before plaintiff was injured, but carelessly and negligently failed and neglected to do so." The answer is a general denial, with a plea of contributory negligence.

Plaintiff was a citizen of Chillicothe, a traveling salesman, and on returning home on the night of February 20, 1906, a dark night, with a misting rain, he ran into or against a wooden picket gate in front of the residence of Mr. Theodore Carpenter, and broke both bones of his leg just above the ankle. The gate was standing more or less open out, on, or across the sidewalk. The nearest street light, about a block distant, was out. The gate was about two blocks from the public square, and about one block from the plaintiff's residence. The gate, having been removed from its place in the gateway, was rehung some time in November, 1906, and, after being up a few weeks, was knocked down or torn down in some way, and, after setting in the yard for a considerable time, was again rehung in its old place, with a strap hinge below and a door screen hinge, with a spring, at the top. Plaintiff's evidence tended to show that it was hung the last time six or eight weeks before the injury, and that the top hinge was broken, so as not to hold the gate, for a week or more before the injury. Defendant's evidence tended to show that the last hanging of the gate was a week or ten days before the injury, and the breaking of the top hinge two days before the injury. Mr. Grace, a member of the city council, passed there on the sidewalk three or four times a day. There was evidence tending to show that the gate usually stood open, and evidence to the effect that it was kept closed. A witness for defendant testified the gate would naturally lean out if not kept closed; and another testified that the latch would not fasten, but by pulling the gate in between the posts it would remain there tight.

Among other instructions, the court gave the following at the instance of defendant:

"(2) The court instructs the jury that the fact that the electric light was not burning on the corner of Calhoun and Elm streets at the time the plaintiff alleges he was injured is no evidence against the defendant of any negligence, and you will not therefore consider it."

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"(3) The court instructs the jury that the city is not an insurer or warrantor of the condition of its sidewalks; nor is every obstruction thereon actionable, though it may have caused the injury sued for. And, though you may believe from the evidence that the gate in question did, when open, swing over the line of the sidewalk, still a property owner abutting on a sidewalk has a right to make a proper and reasonable use thereof, as long as such use is consistent with the easement of the public to pass over it. Therefore, if you believe from the evidence that the gate in question, when closed, afforded a reasonably safe sidewalk for public use, you cannot find for plaintiff because of the fact that said gate did, when in a proper condition of repair and opened for the purpose of enabling persons to pass in and out of the premises, open and swing outward and partially across the sidewalk at a point where the injury is said to have occurred."

"(7) The court instructs the jury that there is no evidence in this case that the defendant city had any actual notice that the gate mentioned in the evidence was standing upon or over the sidewalk."

"(8) The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the gate mentioned in the evidence was put in place on February 13, 1906, then, before the plaintiff can recover in this case, he must show to your satisfaction, by a preponderance of the evidence, not only that the gate was standing or hanging over the sidewalk after that date, but, also, that said gate was so standing open over said sidewalk a sufficient length of time prior to the accident that the defendant, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have discovered the same, and, unless the plaintiff has so shown, your verdict must be for the defendant."

1. The obligation of a city to keep its streets and sidewalks in repair is not limited to the defects existing in a street. Dangerous ditches, excavations, and walls by the side of a sidewalk are within the rule holding a city liable. Kiley v. Kansas City, 87 Mo. 103, 56 Am. Rep. 443; Bassett v. St. Joseph, 53 Mo. 290, 14 Am. Rep. 446; Halpin v. Kansas City, 76 Mo. 335; Wiggin v. St. Louis, 135 Mo. 558, 37 S. W. 528.

In Kiley v. Kansas City, supra, it was held the duty of the city to guard against injuries to persons using a sidewalk by the falling of a dangerous wall standing on the side of the street; and in Franke v. St. Louis, 110 Mo. 516, 19 S. W. 938, the city was held liable for negligently permitting the wall of a burned building to stand on the side of the sidewalk with loose stones therein, which fell and injured the passer-by on the sidewalk.

It has been very recently held in Massachusetts, in Keating v. Boston, 206 Mass. 327, 92 N. E. 431, 19 Ann. Cas. 464, that a jury is warranted in finding that a coal-hole cover which, when stepped upon, will tip up unless fastened, is so likely to be unfastened that a city which used reasonable diligence after it had, or in the exercise of proper care might have had, notice of this condition, would not allow it to be there at all.

If the gate was so constructed and used that at times, while no one was passing through or holding the same, it would stand open on or across the sidewalk, so as to be an obstruction to the sidewalk, and if its condition and use in that respect were such that an ordinarily prudent person, responsible for and knowing its condition and use, would have remedied the same, then the city is liable, provided it had notice of that condition, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have discovered it, in time to remedy it prior to the injury. In order that a city be held responsible for injury by a falling wall, it is not necessary that the city should know that the wall is falling. It is sufficient that it knows the wall is so liable to fall that ordinary care requires its abatement. So in this case it was not necessary that the city should know that the gate was standing open at the particular time of the injury. It was sufficient if the city knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care and caution would have known, the condition and use of said gate, in time to remedy the same before the injury. Such being the law, instructions numbered 3 and 8, given for defendant, were clearly wrong.

2. Instruction No. 7 is erroneous. It is true that there was no direct evidence of notice; but there was circumstantial evidence from which the jury might infer notice. This same instruction was held reversible error in the case of Clark v. Brookfield, 97 Mo. App. 16, 70 S. W. 934. The evidence, as above stated, shows that Mr. Grace, a member of the city council, passed several times a day along the sidewalk by that gate, and from that fact the jury might have inferred that the city had notice. Besides, there was other evidence tending to the same effect.

3. Instruction No. 2 is erroneous. The fact that the electric light was not burning was not evidence of negligence on the part of defendant; but it was proper evidence going to show why it was that plaintiff did not see the obstruction, and the jury had a right to consider it for that purpose.

Respondent makes the point that, although there was an exception to the giving of defendant's instructions, there was no objection made to such instructions. It is insisted that under the ruling in Sheets v. Iowa State Ins. Co. 225 Mo. 613, 126 S. W. 413, the question is not properly before the court. That case was expressly overruled as to that point in Harding v. Missouri P. R. Co. 232 Mo. 444, 134 S. W. 641, Ann. Cas. 1912 B. 1221.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

Bond, C., concurs.

Per Curiam:

The foregoing opinion of Roy, C., is adopted by the court.

All the Judges concur.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

WALTER ACKER, JR., Plff. in Err.,
v.

WILLOCK L. BELL.

(— Fla. —, 57 So. 356.)

Militia — enlistment of minor — validity.

Under the Constitution and statutes of Florida, a minor over the age of eighteen years is bound by his enlistment into the military service of the state, even though the consent of his parents was not obtained for such enlistment.

(December 12, 1911.)

Headnote by PARKHILL, J.

Note. — Enlistment of minor without parent's consent in army, navy, or militia.

This note is confined strictly to the question as to whether the enlistment of a minor in the army or navy without the consent of parent or guardian is, under the statute regulating such enlistments then in force, a valid contract; and also as to whether such statute is for the benefit of the minor, or for the benefit of the parent or guardian only. The question of the right of a minor unlawfully enlisted in the army and navy, to discharge on habeas corpus from custody of court-martial under charge of desertion or fraudulent enlistment, is considered in a note attached to Dillingham v. Booker, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 956, and so is not touched upon in this note. That Congress, under the Constitution of the United States, has power to enlist minors in the army and navy without the consent of the parents, guardians, or masters, is not questioned, but the effect of statutes prohibiting the enlistment of minors without such consent has given rise to many decisions many of which are ERROR to the Circuit Court for Escambia County to review a judgment granting a writ of habeas corpus for the discharge of petitioner's minor son from the custody of respondent. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Emmett Wilson for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Scott M. Loftin for defendant in error.

Parkhill, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 2d day of August, 1911, the defendant in error filed his petition for a writ of habeas corpus, seeking the discharge of Bryant Merritt Bell, the son of petitioner, from the custody of Walter Acker, Jr., as the commanding officer of Company M, First Regiment of the National Guard of Florida. The discharge of Bryant Merritt Bell was sought upon the ground that his enlistment as a private in said company was illegal and without authority of law, in that he enlisted on the 1st day of June, 1911, when twenty years old, being then and now under the age of twenty-one years, and without the consent and against the wishes of his father, and that his father is entitled to the custody of his said minor son.

The writ issued, and Acker, for return thereto, alleged that he is the captain commanding said Company M, First Regiment, Florida National Guard, and that he only requires said Bryant Merritt Bell to appear conflicting. The cases have been classified with reference to the acts in force when they were decided, so as to enable the reader the better to judge of their value as precedents in cases arising under the acts now in force.

Regular army—1802.

The act of 1802 provided that no person under the age of twenty-one should be enlisted by any officer without the consent of his parent, guardian, or master first had or obtained; and this provision was in force until 1872, when § 1117 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 813), went into effect, except when it was suspended to meet the exigencies of the War of 1812, the Mexican War, and the Civil War. And so enlistments of minors during the period that such provision was in force, which were made without the consent of parent or guardian, were held to be illegal in the following cases: Re Keeler, 1 Hempst. 306, Fed. Cas. No. 7,637; Re McDonald, 1 Low. Dec. 100, Fed. Cas. No. 8,752; Seavey v. Seymour, 3 Cliff. 439, Fed. Cas. No. 12,596; United States v. Anderson, Cooke, 143, Fed. Cas. No. 14,449; Re Carlton, 7 Cow. 471; Re Wiesenberger, 7 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 529; United States ex rel. Henderson v. Wright, 5 Phila. 299, Fed. Cas. No. 16,778; Com. ex rel. Webster v. Fox, 7 Pa. 336; Com. ex rel. Leake v. Blake, 8 Phila. 523; United States v. Anderson, Cooke (Tenn.) 143.

And in Re Andrews, 1 Haskell, 87, Fed. Cas. No. 369, it was held that a minor who enlisted in the army without the parent's or guardian's consent must be discharged on request of the father.

But in Re Riley, 1 Ben. 408, Fed. Cas. No. 11,834 (decided in 1867), it was held that enlistment of a minor over eighteen years without the consent of the father was valid, and his release was, on the petition of the father, refused. This decision was based on the opinion that the provision of the act of 1802 prohibiting the enlistment of minors under twenty-one years of age without the consent of parent or guardian was in effect repealed and superseded by the act of 1814, which authorized the enlistment of men between the ages of eighteen and fifty, and that such act was then still in force. This decision is in direct conflict with Re Andrews, supra, decided in the same year, where it was held that enlistment of any minor without the consent of guardian or parent was invalid, the court there stating that the act of 1815, which was not noted in Re Riley, and which provided that men should be recruited in the same manner and with the same limitations as were authorized by the act of 1802, repealed the act of 1814, and revived the provision of the act of 1802 in respect to the validity of enlistment of minors without the consent of parent or guardian. And the same opinion was expressed in Re McDonald, 1 Low. Dec. 100, Fed. Cas. No. 8,752. And in Seavey v. Seymour, 3 Cliff. 439, Fed. Cas. No. 12,596, it was said that in Re Riley, the court, in making its decision, overlooked the act of 1815.

And Phelan's Case, 9 Abb. Pr. 286, which held that enlistment of minors of eighteen without the parent's consent was valid, is cited in Re McDonald, 1 Low. Dec. 100, Fed. Cas. No. 8,752, as being of little weight, as the act of 1815 was overlooked.

And in Dabbs's Case, 12 Abb. Pr. 113, 21 How. Pr. 68, it was held that the provision of the act of 1802 requiring consent of parents of minors to enlistment, which had been abrogated by the act of 1814, was restored by the act of 1815.

—section 1117, U. S. Rev. Stat.

Section 1117 of U. S. Rev. Stat. provides that no person under the age of twenty-one years shall be enlisted or mustered into the military service of the United States without the written consent of his parents or guardian, provided that such minor has parents or guardian entitled to his custody and control.

And so in Re Von Dieselskie, 5 Mackey, 485, it was held that under such section a minor cannot be legally enlisted in the for regular and special drills of said company, and that otherwise he has not restrained the liberty of the said Bell. A motion to quash the return was sustained, and Bryant Merritt Bell was discharged from custody of said Acker. Thereupon a writ of error was sued out to this court.

Under the assignments of error and pleadings herein, the only question presented is whether the consent in writing of parents or guardians of a minor over the age of eighteen years is necessary for the valid enlistment of such minor in the National Guard of Florida.

According to the provisions of § 1 of article 14 of the Constitution of 1885 of this state, "all able-bodied male inhabitants of the state, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, that are citizens of the United States, or have declared their intention to become citizens thereof, shall constitute the militia of the state."

Section 670 of the General Statutes of 1906 of this state provides: "That portion of the militia organized as a land force shall be known and designated as the Florida State Troops, and shall be composed of able-bodied volunteers between eighteen and forty-five years of age. Every applicant for enlistment shall furnish satisfactory proof of good character, and shall, before taking the oath of enlistment, be subjected to a physical examination conforming, as nearly as possible, to the requirements for enlistment in the United States Army."

Like unto the statute of this state is the United States army without the consent of his parent or guardian.

And in Re Chapman, 2 L.R.A. 332, 37 Fed. 327, and United States ex rel. Deming v. Hanchett, 18 Fed. 26, it was held that under such section the enlistment of a minor without the written consent of parent or guardian was illegal and of no effect.

And to same effect are Re Kaufman, 41 Fed. 876, and Ex parte Houghton, 129 Fed. 239.

But in Re Dowd, 90 Fed. 718, and Ex parte Lewkowitz, 163 Fed. 646, it was held that under § 1117 the enlistment of a minor without his parent's consent was voidable only.

And also in Re Morrissey, 137 U. S. 157, 34 L. ed. 644, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57, and Re Miller, 52 C. C.A. 472, 114 Fed. 838, it was held that the enlistment of a minor under twenty-one, under § 1117, was valid as to the infant.

In Re Perrone, 89 Fed. 150, it was held that § 1117 did not authorize the release of a minor whose parents are nonresident aliens, on petition of a guardian appointed since the enlistment.

In Ex parte Hubbard, 182 Fed. 76, it was held that a minor under sixteen who enlisted in violation of § 1118 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, prohibiting enlistments at such age, and who remained in the army until he passed the age of sixteen, stands like a minor who has enlisted without his parent's consent when over sixteen years of age.

And so the rule seems now to be that the enlistment of a minor under § 1117 is valid as to the infant, but that it is voidable at the instance of the parent or guardian entitled to his services.

Enlistment in volunteer army.

In United States v. Lipscomb, 4 Gratt. 41, it was held that a minor who enlisted as a volunteer without the consent of his father, under the act of 1846, for the prosecution of the Mexican War, would not be discharged either on application of himself or his father, as such act did not forbid 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

enlistment of infants under twenty-one years in the volunteer corps.

And in United States v. Blakeney, 3 Gratt. 405, it was held that the master to whom a minor who had enlisted under the same act was apprenticed could not secure his release.

In Lenahan v. Birge, 30 Conn. 438, it was held that the provisions of the acts of Congress of 1802, 1808, and 1815, prohibiting enlistments of minors without the parent's consent, had no application to enlistments of volunteers under authority of the state for the service of the United States, and so the parent's petition for the discharge of a minor over eighteen, who enlisted without his consent as a member of a regiment of volunteers organized under an act of the state of 1861, which prescribed no limit as to age of volunteers, was refused.

And in Re Disinger, 12 Ohio St. 256; Re Gregg, 15 Wis. 479; and Re Higgins, 16 Wis. 351, it was held that, under the act of 1862, which abrogated requirement of consent of parent or guardian to enlistment of a minor, and provided only that no minor under eighteen years should be enlisted, the enlistment of a minor over eighteen without the parent's consent was valid, and so his discharge on habeas corpus at the suit of the father was refused.

And in Re Beswick, 25 How. Pr. 149, it was held that under the act of 1862 the consent of parents was unnecessary to the enlistment of a minor over eighteen years in the volunteer service.

State militia.

In Stevens v. Foss, 18 Me. 19; Porter v. Sherburne, 21 Me. 258, and Re Dewey, 11 Pick. 265, it was held that the enlistment of a minor between eighteen and twenty-one in a state militia without the consent of parent, guardian, or master was binding upon such minor.

Navy.

In United States v. Bainbridge, 1 Mason, 71, Fed. Cas. No. 14,497, Judge Story was of the opinion that, under the naval acts then in force, the consent of the father was act of Congress entitled "An Act to Promote Efficiency of the Militia, and for Other Purposes,"—Act Jan. 21, 1903, chap. 196, 32 Stat. at L. 775, (U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1909, p. 377), as amended by Act May 27, 1908, chap. 204, 35 Stat. at L. 399, (U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1909, p. 379), and as amended by Act April 21, 1910, chap. 185, 36 Stat. at L. 329, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 429,—declaring in § 1:

"That the militia shall consist of every able-bodied male citizen of the respective states and territories and the District of Columbia, . . . who is more than eighteen and less than forty-five years of age, and shall be divided into two classes: The organized militia, to be known as the National Guard of the state, territory, or District of Columbia, or by such other designations as may be given them by the laws of the respective states or territories; the remainder to be known as the reserve militia," etc.

"An enlistment," said Mr. Justice Brewer, in the case of Re Morrissey, 137 U. S. 157, 34 L. ed. 644, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57, "is not a contract only, but effects a change of status. . . . It is not, therefore, like an ordinary contract, voidable by the infant. At common law an enlistment was not voidable either by the infant or by his parents or guardians. Rex v. Rotherfield Greys, 2 Dowl. & R. 628, text 634, s. c. 1 Barn. & C. 345, text 350; Rex v. Lytchet Matraverse, 1 Mann. & R. 25, text 31, s. c. 7 Barn. & C. 226, text 231, 6 L. J. Mag. Cas. 11; Com. v.

not necessary to the valid enlistment of the minors, while District Judge Davis was of the contrary opinion.

In Com. v. Downes, 24 Pick. 227 (decided in 1836), it was held that a minor who enlisted in the navy should be discharged on application of his nonconsenting guardian.

—act of 1837.

The act of 1837 provided that "it shall be lawful to enlist boys for the navy with the consent of their parents or guardians, not being under thirteen nor over eighteen years of age, to serve until they shall arrive at the age of twenty-one; and it shall be lawful to enlist other persons for the navy, to serve for a period not exceeding five years. . . ." 5 Stat. at L. 153, chap. 21.

And so in Re Collins, 25 How. Pr. 157; Gormley's Case, 12 Ops. Atty. Gen. 258, and in 21 Ops. Atty. Gen. 327, it was held that under such act a minor over eighteen could enlist in the navy without the consent of parent or guardian, such minors being considered as included in term such "other persons." And to the same effect is United States ex rel. Rush v. Watson, 2 Hayw. & H. 226, Fed. Cas. No. 16,650a.

But in Re McLave, 8 Blatchf. 67, Fed. Cas. No. 8,876, it was held that a proper construction of the act of 1837 made unlawful the enlistment of boys for the navy, unless they were boys not under thirteen nor over eighteen, and unless, when they were of that description, they enlisted with the consent of their parents or guardians; and so the enlistment of a minor eighteen years and five months old was held illegal, and he was discharged on petition of his father, who had not consented to the enlistment.

—sections 1418 and, 1419 U. S. Rev. Stat., U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1007.

Section 1418, U. S. Rev. Stat. provides that boys between the ages of fourteen and eighteen may be enlisted to serve in the navy until they reach twenty-one; other persons may be enlisted to serve for a period not exceeding five years, etc. Section 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

1419 provides that minors between fourteen and eighteen shall not be enlisted without the consent of their parents or guardians. These sections were enacted in 1837, and have been carried forward in various revisions of the statute since that time.

In Thomas v. Winne, 58 C. C. A. 613, 122 Fed. 395, and Re Oliver, 1 Alaska, 1, it was held that under § 1418, a minor over eighteen could be enlisted without the consent of the parents or guardians.

And in Re Norton, 98 Fed. 606, discharge of a minor over eighteen when he enlisted was refused on habeas corpus at the suit of the parent.

And in Re Hayes, Fed. Cas. No. 6,261a, a minor twenty years of age who had enlisted in the navy without the consent of his mother, who was the only surviving parent, was discharged on habeas corpus proceedings upon refunding the amount of advance made upon enlistment.

In Re Falconer, 91 Fed. 649, it was held that under § 1419 enlistment of a minor under eighteen without the parent's consent was void, though he had falsely stated that his parent was dead. And it was further said that the father's failure to take out a writ until after his son was eighteen years of age did not validate the enlistment, nor was the continued service of the son after eighteen tantamount to a re-enlistment; and so his release was granted on petition of his father.

And in Ex parte Lisk, 145 Fed. 860, it was held that a minor between fourteen and eighteen cannot, under any circumstances, under § 1419, be lawfully enlisted without the consent of parent or guardian.

But in United States v. Reaves, 60 C. C. A. 675, 126 Fed. 127, it was held that under § 1419 enlistment in the navy of a minor under eighteen was valid as to the minor, but voidable at the instance of the parent, reversing 121 Fed. 848, which held that the enlistment of a minor without the father's consent was void from the beginning as to the father.

In Ex parte Bakley, 148 Fed. 56, affirmed in 82 C. C. A. 659, 152 Fed. 1022, it was held that the parents of a boy seven-Gamble, 11 Serg. & R. 93; United States v. Blakeney, 3 Gratt. 405, text 411-413."

In United States v. Blakeney, supra, Baldwin, J., said: "Thus it will be seen that in England neither the common law nor the statute law protects minors from the effect of their contracts of enlistment; and no one has ever supposed that parents or guardians have the right to reclaim them from military service." He points out that the whole difficulty in the subject arises from the failure to discriminate between the public or national law and the municipal or domestic law. "It seems to me obvious," says he, "that the enlistment of a minor capable of bearing arms does not fall within the general rule of the municipal law in regard to the incapacity of infants under the age of twenty-one, to bind themselves by contract. Nor am I disposed to regard the enlistment as an exception to that rule. The rule, I think, has no application to the subject. The capacity of all citizens or subjects to bear arms to bind themselves to do so by voluntary enlistment is in itself a high rule of the public law, to which the artificial and arbitrary rule of the municipal law forms no exception. The rule of the public law is subject to but two conditions, the ability [of the party] to carry arms, and his con-teen were, under § 1419, entitled to his release on habeas corpus.

Marine corps.

In Com. ex rel Gormley v. Selfridge, 7 Phila. 76, it was held that under the act of Congress of 1858, providing for enlistment in the marine corps of boys between eleven and seventeen years with consent of parent or guardian, the enlistment of a minor under seventeen in the United States marine corps without the consent of parent or guardian was illegal and void.

There seems to be a decided conflict of opinion as to whether enlistments in the marine corps are governed by statutes relative to enlistments in the navy or those to enlistments in the army.

In Re McNulty, 2 Low. Dec. 270, Fed. Cas. No. 8,917 (decided in 1873), it was held that the marine corps follows the rule of the army and a minor between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one cannot be lawfully enlisted in the marine corps without the parent's consent.

And in Re Doyle, 18 Fed. 369 (decided in 1883), in dismissing habeas corpus proceedings prosecuted by a minor, it was held that the marine corps is a part of the naval service, and that, under §§ 1418 and 1608 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1007, 1095, a minor over eighteen years of age may be enlisted therein without the consent of his parents.

But in Re Shugrue, 3 Mackey, 324 (decided in 1883), it was held that § 1419, relating to enlistment in the navy, does not apply to the marine corps, but such enlistments are governed by § 1117, U. S. Rev. Stat. relative to enlistments in the army, and so a minor cannot be enlisted therein without the consent of the parent, who retains control of such minor.

Again in Elliott v. Harris, 24 App. D. C. 11 (decided in 1904), it was held that the marine corps is a part of the navy rather than the army, and so under § 1419 a minor over eighteen years of age who enlists without the consent of the parent will not be discharged on habeas corpus proceedings brought by such parent, the court citing Re Doyle, supra, as authority, and criticizing Re Shugrue, supra.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

But in McCalla v. Facer, 75 C. C. A. 219, 144 Fed. 61 (decided in 1906), it was held that the marine corps is not a part of the navy, and so § 1419 does not apply to enlistments therein, and that therefore no minor can enlist in the marine corps without the consent of his parents or guardians as required by § 1117, the court citing with approval Re Shugrue, supra, as presenting the true construction of the law, rather than Re Doyle, supra, and not referring to Elliott v. Harris, supra.

Who may prosecute writ for discharge.

In State v. Dimick, 12 N. H. 194, 37 Am. Dec. 197, it was held that though a minor who enlisted in the United States army without his parents consent might avoid such enlistment at majority, the contract could be ratified, and continuance in service one year after majority, receiving pay and rations, without dissent and without any reasonable excuse for not making application for discharge, amounted to a ratification, and so discharge was refused.

In Com. v. Harrison, 11 Mass. 63 (decided in 1814), it was held that the United States statutes prohibiting the enlistment of minors without the consent of parents or guardian applied to foreigners, and so a minor belonging in Russia was discharged on habeas corpus at the suit of the master of the Russian vessel to whom such minor had been apprenticed, and even though the minor consented to the restraint.

In Re McNulty, supra, it was held that a minor himself may avoid an enlistment in the marine corps which is invalid because without the consent of his parent.

—enlistment under § 1117, U. S. Rev. Stat.

Under § 1117 the minor may prosecute the writ for discharge. United States ex rel. Deming v. Hanchett, 18 Fed. 26; Re Chapman, 2 L.R.A. 332, 37 Fed. 327.

But in Re Cosenow, 37 Fed. 668, it was held that under such section no one but the parents or guardian could claim the minor's discharge, the court stating that the position taken by courts holding that a minor himself may prosecute the writ is unsound.

And in Re Davison, 21 Fed. 618, and in Re Hearn, 32 Fed. 141, it was held that such sent to do so; and these conditions may exist in as full force at the age of eighteen as at the age of twenty-one. . . . We know as a matter of fact that at the age of eighteen a man is capable intellectually and physically of bearing arms; and that it is the military age recognized by the whole legislation of Congress, and of the state of Virginia, and of all the states of the Union, perhaps without exception."

In Com. v. Gamble, 11 Serg. & R. 93, Gibson, Ch. J., put the case on the broad ground of public policy, which requires that a minor be at liberty to enter into a contract to serve the state, whenever such contract is not positively forbidden by the state itself, during which service parental authority over him is suspended, though not annihilated. This, he said, is the common law of England.

It is competent for the legislature to declare by a new statute a minor to be of full age and capable of acting for himself at eighteen instead of twenty-one years, and emancipate the child from the control of its parents. And so it seems clear that the statutes governing this case contemplate the military, not the civil, age of consent to obligatory engagements.

It will be observed that by the statutes section was not for the protection or benefit of the minor, Re Hearn citing Re Davison, supra, and United States ex rel. Deming v. Hanchett, as the only cases holding to the contrary.

And also in Solomon v. Davenport, 30 C. C. A. 664, 59 U. S. App. 52, 87 Fed. 318, it was held that such section gives no privilege to the minor, but is for the benefit of the parent or guardian. And to the same effect is Re Morrissey, 137 U. S. 157, 34 L. ed. 644, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57.

In Re Scott, 75 C. C. A. 237, 144 Fed. 79, it was said that since the decision in the Morrissey Case, supra, it is settled law that the enlistment of a minor in the army or navy without the written consent of his parent or guardians, and against the prohibition of the statutes of the United States, is not void, but voidable only, and that only at the instance of the parent or guardian.

And in Re Baker, 23 Fed. 30, it was held that under § 1117 the father of a minor who enlisted without his written consent was entitled to his release on habeas corpus, the court declining to express an opinion as to whether the minor would be discharged on his own application.

In Doane v. Burkman, 111 C. C. A. 373, 190 Fed. 541, it was held that under § 1117 one to whom, by articles of agreement, the control, care, and custody of a child has been given by the child's mother, has a right to maintain proceedings for the discharge of the minor, who enlisted without his consent.

—enlistment in navy under § 1419, U. S. Rev. Stat.

Section 1419 is intended for the protection of the parent or guardian, and a minor between the ages of fourteen and eighteen cannot question the validity of the enlistment. United States ex rel. Hendricks v. Pendleton, 167 Fed. 690. And to the same effect is United States ex rel. Wagner v. Gibbon, 24 Fed. 135.

—right of mother of minor without father or guardian.

In Com. v. Murray, 4 Binn. 487, 5 Am. Dec. 412 (decided in 1812), it was held that a mother had no legal authority over a minor between seventeen and eighteen, though he had no father, guardian, or master, and so enlistment in the navy without and against her consent was legal. This is the only case found which decided that the mother of an infant had no right to prosecute a writ for his release.

In Com. v. Callan, 6 Binn. 255 (decided in 1814), it was held that the mother is a parent within the act of 1813 for the enlistment of minors, and so where such minor had no father, guardian, or master, his enlistment without her written consent was held invalid.

And in Ex parte Mason, 5 N. C. (1 Murph.) 336 (decided in 1809), it was held that the consent of the mother was necessary to the enlistment of a minor, where the father was dead and the boy was without guardian or master; and so he was discharged at the suit of the mother.

And in Shomer's Case, Fed. Cas. No. 12,808, it was held that the provision in act of 1812 which prohibited the enlistment of minors without consent of parent, guardian, or master included a mother, where the father was dead and there was no guardian or master, and so enlistment without her consent was void.

In Ex parte Burke, Fed. Cas. No. 2,156a (decided in 1863), a minor seventeen who had enlisted into the army without her consent was discharged on habeas corpus at the suit of the mother.

In Re McNulty, 2 Low. Dec. 270, Fed. Cas. No. 8,917 (decided in 1873), was held that a mother who is the surviving parent can secure the release of a minor who enlisted in the marine corps without her consent.

In Dies v. Hurtel, 34 Ga. 109, it was held that a minor under seventeen who enlisted in the Confederate army without his mother's consent, she being the only surviving parent, was entitled to his discharge on habeas corpus.

In Re Hayes, Fed. Cas. No. 6,261a, it was held that under § 1419, where the mother is the only surviving parent, she may secure a minor son's release from the navy, when enlistment was without her consent.

So the weight of opinion seems to be that a mother who is the only surviving parent will succeed to the rights of the father in the procuring of the release of a minor from either the army or navy, when such enlistment was without her consent. J. H. B.

above quoted no consent in writing or otherwise is required from parents or guardians, and no exception is given to minors who do not obtain such consent. As Congress and the legislature have authorized the minor Bell in this case to engage in the service of this state by enlisting in the militia or National Guard, without requiring the previous consent of his parent to the contract of enlistment, and no contention being made that such contract has not been fairly made with an infant of reasonable discretion, his contract will be deemed to have a semblance of benefit to him, and to be essential to the public welfare, and therefore binding to all intents and purposes upon him and his parent.

The enlistment of the minor Bell is not controlled by the provisions of § 1117 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 813) which is as follows: "No person under the age of twenty-one years shall be enlisted or mustered into the military service of the United States without the written consent of his parents or guardians, provided that such minor has such parents or guardians entitled to his custody and control."

The minor Bell has not been enlisted in the military service of the United States. The provisions of § 1117 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are not made applicable to the enlistment of Bell by the act of Congress of May 27, 1908, that "the organization, armament, and discipline of the organized militia in the several states . . . shall be the same as that which is now or may hereafter be prescribed for the regular army of the United States," and the provisions of § 872 of the General Statutes of 1906 of Florida to the same effect. The word "organization," as used in said act, does not relate to or include the enlistment of a soldier. Organization relates to the distribution of the personnel of the army or militia, both commissioned and enlisted, into units. It provides for the distribution of the personnel into different arms and corps, such as infantry, cavalry, artillery, staff corps, medical corps, signal corps, etc., and the distribution of the personnel in each arm of the service corps into different units, such as divisions, brigades, companies, platoons, section, squads, etc., and, further, into different ranks or grades, such as generals, colonels, lieutenant colonels, majors, captains, lieutenants, sergeants, corporals, privates, etc. Enlistment is the contract of service that a soldier, as distinguished from the officer, enters into with the state or the United States. The enlistment may be different in each state, some for seven years, some for five years, some for three years, with varying provisions for enlistment, and 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

yet the organization of all may be the same; but it is essential to the effectiveness and efficiency of the forces called into the national service, that the organization thereof should be the same,—one harmonious whole.

Neither are the provisions of § 1117 of the Revised Statutes of the United States made applicable to or controlling of the enlistment of Bell by the provision "that every officer and enlisted man of the militia who shall be called forth . . . [by the President] shall be mustered for service without further enlistment, and without further medical examination," etc. Section 5, Act May 27, 1908, chap. 204, 35 Stat. at L. 399, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1909, p. 380.

The provision that, when called into service of the President, no further enlistment is necessary, simply does away with the delay necessary to the physical examination or other prerequisites of a similar nature to the enlistment of the soldier, and has no reference to the necessity of the consent of his parents or guardian. In the provision of § 5, chap. 204, quoted above, the words "mustered" and "enlistment" are both used. A soldier may be either enlisted or mustered into the military service of the United States. If a man be already enlisted in the National Guard of Florida, he may be called forth by the President without further enlistment, but he must be mustered into the service of the United States; but when he presents himself upon the call of the President to be mustered into the service of the United States, and it appears that the enlisted man is a minor and the consent of his parents or guardian has not been given thereto, he shall not be mustered by the provisions of § 1117 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The enactment of § 1117 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, requiring the consent of the parents or guardians of the minor to his enlistment, shows the necessity for just such a provision, and that when the duty to serve is by law placed upon minors over eighteen years of age, and they are allowed by law to enter into a contract of enlistment, and no right is reserved by the law specifically to the parents or guardians to object, then the right of the state to the services of such minors must be considered paramount to the control of the parents or guardians. And so we find that the Congress has sometimes changed the law in reference to requiring the consent of the parents or guardians, leaving that provision or reservation out of the statute when the exigencies of war arose, and restoring it upon the return of peace.

If the minor Bell had been mustered into the service of the United States, either the volunteer or regular army thereof, or upon the call of the President, he would be clearly entitled to his discharge, as was done in the case of Re Burns (C. C.) 87 Fed. 796. In that case Malachi G. Burns, being nineteen years of age, enlisted in the Massachusetts militia as a private, on May 4, 1898. On May 9, 1898, he was mustered into the service of the United States volunteer army; his parents not having consented thereto. The contention of counsel in the instant case that this conclusion would lead to the anomalous situation "of the parent of a minor being bound by his enlistment until the National Guard was called into the service of the United States, and then the parents or guardian could step in and secure the discharge of all minors who had not obtained the consent of their parents or guardian, at a time above all others when it would be most embarrassing to the government," is fully answered by District Judge Lowell in the case of Re Burns, supra, as follows: "If it be said that this construction of the statutes which permits the parents or guardian of a minor to prevent his enlistment in the active military forces of the United States unduly hampers the national government in the prosecution of the present war, it may be answered that the entire matter is within the control of Congress, which can require military service from any citizen of the United States, whatever his age, and without the consent of anyone. If the Acts of 1864 and 1865, as amended by the Act of 1872, are unwise, they can be repealed or modified at once."

This young man, however, seeks his discharge from the National Guard of Florida. We think it clear that, by the statutes of this state and the United States, the militia, known as the National Guard of the state, consists of able-bodied male citizens or volunteers between eighteen and forty-five years of age, and that, so long as it is not sought to muster them into the service of the United States, the contract of enlistment of a minor is not voidable, either by the infant or by his parents or guardians. Re Morrissey, 137 U. S. 157, 34 L. ed. 644, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57.

The legislation on this subject by the United States is simply this: That the militia known as the National Guard of the state consists of able-bodied male citizens who are more than eighteen and less than forty-five years of age (32 Stat. at L. 775, chap. 196, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1909, p. 377); but when under the age of twenty-one years, they shall not be mustered into the military service of the United States without the written consent of their parents or guardians. Section 1117, U. S. Rev. Stat. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

If the legislation is unwise, or if it unduly hampers the national government, it may be repealed or modified, as Judge Lowell said in the case of Re Burns, supra.

It seems, however, that this legislation is founded on reason, and has been enacted with deliberation. There is reason for requiring the consent of parents or guardians for enlistment of a minor in the regular or volunteer army of the United States that does not exist when he enlists in the militia of his own state. In the service of the United States the minor is taken entirely away from parental control, from civil life and labor, and becomes solely a soldier for a protracted period of time, exposed to the hardships and dangers of actual service. In the militia he remains at home, devoting practically all his time to civil occupations, and only doing military service in his home state, under local officers and for short periods of time, and, when the exigency calling him into active service passes, he returns to his home and civil life at once. Service in the militia is of a personal benefit to the minor, too, as it gives him the training that will fit him for service in the time of war, when the national government may force him into its service, and he will be the better able to take care of himself, and find it easier to become an officer and enjoy the privileges and opportunities attendant thereon. In this way, too, the state is enabled to train its youth for military life at a time when the ability to learn and physical development is easiest.

The judgment discharging the minor Bryant Merritt Bell, from custody, is erroneous, and is hereby reversed.

Taylor and Hocker, JJ., concur.

Whitfield, Ch. J., and Shackelford and Cockrell, JJ., concur in the opinion.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

E. O. McDERMOTT

v.

KIMBALL LUMBER MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Impleaded, etc.

(— Ark. —, 144 S. W. 524.)

Sale — delivery of lumber in stacks — sufficiency.

Sufficient delivery of lumber stacked in

Note. — As to sufficiency of selection or designation of goods sold out of a larger lot, in order to pass title, see note to Barber v. Andrews, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1, in which, at page 40, may be found the decisions involving the same specific aspect of the question as is presented by the case above reported.

the mill yard to pass title as against subsequent purchasers is effected by the agent of the buyer, upon paying a portion of the purchase price, estimating the quantity and marking the stacks with the name of the purchaser, the intention of both parties being thereby to transfer the title, and that the balance of the purchase money shall be paid when the lumber is smoothed and barked.

(February 12, 1912.)

CROSS APPEALS from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Ashley County in defendant's favor for an amount less than the alleged value of the property in a replevin suit to recover possession of certain lumber; plaintiff appealing from so much of the judgment as refused to recognize its title, and defendant appealing from so much as fixed the value of the property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James C. Norman, for appellant: The Kimball Lumber Company had no title.

Deutsch v. Dunham, 72 Ark. 141, 105 Am. St. Rep. 21, 78 S. W. 767; Newmark, Sales, chap. 10, § 115; Hardwick v. American Can. Co. 113 Tenn. 657, 88 S. W. 797; Gibson v. Ray, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 444, 89 S. W. 474; Baird Bros. v. Pratt, 6 Ind. Terr. 38, 89 S. W. 648; Com. v. Adair, 121 Ky. 689, 89 S. W. 1130.

Messrs. George & Butler for appellee.

Frauenthal, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of replevin, instituted by E. O. McDermott, to recover a certain lot of lumber said to be about 22,000 feet. It was instituted against J. M. and W. H. Cox and the Kimball Lumber Company, and the latter defendant alone made defense. The lumber was manufactured by said J. M. Cox, who owned and operated a sawmill situated about 1 mile from Cypress, a railroad station.

It appears that said Cox was operating his sawmill in December, 1909, at Wilmot, and then traded with plaintiff, who was conducting a mercantile business at that place. He continued doing business with plaintiff and became indebted to him, and this indebtedness continued until in April or May, 1910, when it amounted to between eight and nine hundred dollars. In January, 1910, the manager of the Kimball Lumber Company wrote to said Cox that if he would move his plant to land owned by it near Cypress, it would buy the lumber manufactured by him; that it would advance thereon $10 per thousand feet when the lumber was on the sticks at the mill, and would pay therefor, when loaded on the cars at said railroad station, certain named prices for specified grades of the lumber, ranging from $10 per thousand for No. 1 common to $28 per thousand for firsts and seconds. And it appears that said Cox accepted this proposition and proceeded to move the mill to a point near Cypress. On March 5, 1910, when the mill plant was about half completed, Cox obtained from the Kimball Lumber Company $400, and gave a receipt therefor, in which it was stated that he agreed to deliver lumber therefor in accordance with the terms of the above letter, during the months of March and April, 1910, or for a period of sixty days thereafter, in event that that time was needed to make such delivery. Of this sum, Cox paid to plaintiff $175 on the indebtedness due by him, and informed him of the correspondence and agreement he had made with the Kimball Lumber Company for the sale of his lumber. On April 1, 1910, Cox began sawing lumber, and in the latter part of that month notified the Kimball Lumber Company to send its agent to estimate the amount of lumber then stacked at the mill.

In pursuance of this request, the Kimball Lumber Company sent its agent, who, on April 29, 1910, estimated the lumber then on the yard. At that time, the lumber was stacked in piles at the mill, and this agent estimated the amount in each pile, and then placed upon each pile the amount so estimated by him, and also tagged or marked each pile with the name of the Kimball Lumber Company. This agent and said J. M. Cox, and his son and manager, W. H. Cox, testified that said J. M. Cox then sold and delivered the lumber to the Kimball Lumber Company, and that it was understood by the parties that the lumber was then the property of the Kimball Lumber Company. They testified that they estimated the lumber at 22,000 feet; that according to the contract Mr. Cox was to receive $10 per thousand on such estimate, but had already received $400 thereon, which was more than the estimate entitled him to; that the remainder of the purchase money for said lumber was to be paid after it had been hauled to the railroad station, and there graded and measured and placed on board the cars. The testimony on the part of the defendant tended further to prove that the Kimball Lumber Company directed and employed said Cox to move this lumber to the railroad station, which he did in the early part of June. Thereafter the plaintiff instituted this action and replevined the lumber.

It appears from the testimony in behalf of plaintiff that on May 2, 1910, said J. M. Cox was indebted to him in the sum of $860.80, and that they then entered into a written contract whereby, amongst other things, it was provided that said Cox did release and sell to said plaintiff "all the lumber stacked in the yards of the mill at Cypress or near that place, with the exception of the lumber taken up and sold to the Kimball Lumber Company." On May 28, 1910, Cox gave to plaintiff an order upon the Kimball Lumber Company for $424, which said company refused to honor or pay. Thereupon, and on June 1, 1910, in consideration of $424 due by him to the plaintiff, said Cox executed a bill of sale to the plaintiff, in which it was stated that he did sell and deliver to him "the lumber [22,000 feet] that was inspected by the Kimball Lumber Company, they having refused to pay my order in favor of Dr. McDermott;" and it is under this bill of sale that plaintiff claims title to the lumber.

The case was tried by a jury, which returned a verdict in favor of the Kimball Lumber Company for the lumber, and placed its value at $400. From the judgment entered upon this verdict, both parties have appealed. Plaintiff has appealed, for the purpose of reversing the judgment, chiefly upon the ground that there was no delivery of the lumber to the Kimball Lumber Company, so as to complete the alleged sale thereof to it. The Kimball Lumber Company has appealed on the ground that the uncontroverted testimony shows that the value of the lumber was largely in excess of $400.

The court gave a number of instructions, both at the request of the plaintiff and of the defendant, relative to the question as to whether or not the alleged sale of the lumber to the Kimball Lumber Company was completed, and the title passed to it. We do not think that it would serve any useful purpose to set these instructions out or to note them in detail. We are of the opinion that the court committed no prejudicial error in its rulings relative to the instructions given or refused, and that those given sufficiently presented to the jury the law applicable to this case. The question then to determine is whether or not there is sufficient evidence to sustain the finding of the jury that the alleged sale of the lumber to the Kimball Lumber Company was consummated by sufficient delivery thereof.

It is urged by counsel for plaintiff that a sale is not complete as long as anything remains to be done between the buyer and seller in relation to the goods, and that for this reason the alleged sale to the defendant under the evidence was not complete. If there was a sufficient delivery of the lumber to the defendant, then, under the testimony, the only thing that remained to be done between him and the seller, J. M. Cox, was for defendant to pay the remainder of the purchase money for the lumber, after grading and measuring it. In the case of Beller v. Block, 19 Ark. 573, it was said: "The purchase money may remain to be paid, and yet the sale may be complete, if the goods be delivered." It has been uniformly held by this court that the title to personal property will pass, and the sale be complete, if it is the intention of the parties to transfer the title, on the one part, and to accept the property, on the other, and in pursuance thereof a delivery is made, even though something remains to be done, as, for example, the fixing of the quantity or amount of the property or the payment of the purchase money. Chamblee v. McKenzie, 31 Ark. 155; Gans v. Holland, 37 Ark. 483; Shaul v. Harrington, 54 Ark. 305, 15 S. W. 835; Priest v. Hodges, 90 Ark. 131, 118 S. W. 253; Guion Mercantile Co. v. Campbell, 91 Ark. 240, 121 S. W. 164.

Thus, in the case of Lynch v. Daggett, 62 Ark. 592, 37 S. W. 227, it was held that a contract of sale was complete, although the property was thereafter to be moved by the seller to the place named. In the case of Anderson-Tully Co. v. Rozelle, 68 Ark. 307, 57 S. W. 1102, it was held that a sale was complete, and the title to lumber passed to the buyer, although it was thereafter to be hauled to another place and there measured, and the balance of the purchase price determined by such measurement was then to be paid.

The question then recurs, Was there a sufficient delivery of the lumber to the Kimball Lumber Company to make the sale complete as against the rights of the subsequent purchaser? In the sale of personal property, the delivery of the thing sold is essential as against the rights of third parties asserting a title, right, or interest therein subsequently acquired from the seller. A delivery may be either actual or constructive, and in either event it will be effective to pass title. Where property is of such a nature and so situated that actual delivery thereof can be made, then that is necessary. Where the property is too ponderous and bulky for an actual change of its possession, a symbolic or constructive delivery thereof will be equivalent to and effective as an actual delivery. The delivery of such property may be made by doing everything necessary to identify it, and by placing on it outward indicia to show a change of the possession and ownership.

In the case of Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Page, 35 Ark. 304, it was held (quoting syllabus): "What constitutes delivery depends upon the situation and character of the property. Removal from the premises is not necessary. It is sufficient if the contract of sale has been definite and unconditional, and everything has been done in pursuance of it by the vendor which is necessary to identify the property and separate it from the other, so that it may be known what, specifically, has been sold."

In the case of Smith v. Jones, 63 Ark. 232, 37 S. W. 1052, it was held (quoting syllabus): "Proof that the vendors of a large quantity of lumber directed the vendees to mark it in their name, which was accordingly done, is sufficient to support a finding that there was a delivery of the lumber in pursuance of the sale." See also King v. Jarman, 35 Ark. 190, 37 Am. Rep. 11.

It will thus be seen from these cases that the question as to whether or not a contract of sale is complete, so as to pass title as against those subsequently obtaining an interest or claim to the property, is determined by whether or not it was the intention of the parties to fully consummate the sale and pass the title, and as to whether or not such a delivery thereof was made as the nature of the property would admit of, and such outward indicia or marks of a change of ownership had been made, so as to advise third parties dealing therewith of such change of the ownership. Lee Wilson & Co. v. Crittenden & County Bank & T. Co. 98 Ark. 379, 135 S. W. 885.

In the case at bar, the testimony on the part of the defendant shows that its agent was sent to the mill to estimate the lumber then stacked upon the yards, and to take it up for the defendant. The lumber was stacked in piles, and this agent then estimated it in the presence of the seller, and after doing so marked upon each pile the number of feet it contained, and also the name of the Kimball Lumber Company, to whom the owner then sold it; and by these outward indicia of possession both the seller and the buyer intended to show that the lumber was actually delivered to the Kimball Lumber Company. Both the seller and the agent of the buyer testified that it was the intention then to make a complete sale of the lumber and pass the title thereto to the defendant. Of this the plaintiff was notified, because thereafter, on May 2d, he entered into the above-written contract with said Cox, by 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) which said Cox sold to him the other lumber, and in this contract it is expressly stated that the lumber in controversy had been taken up and sold to the Kimball Lumber Company, and was excepted from said contract of sale to the plaintiff. In addition to this, at the time the lumber was estimated and marked in the name of the Kimball Lumber Company, an agreement was made between the defendant's agent and said Cox, the seller, that Cox would haul the lumber to the railroad station for the defendant, which was done; and this suit was not instituted until after such removal had been made.

* We are of the opinion that there was sufficient evidence adduced upon the trial of this case to show a delivery of the lumber by said Cox to the Kimball Lumber Company on April 29th, and that such delivery was made in pursuance of a sale which, according to the intention of both buyer and seller, was then complete, and that the title then passed to the Kimball Lumber Company, although it was understood that the balance of the purchase money was thereafter to be paid after the lumber had been graded and exact measurement made thereof. The title to the lumber having passed to the defendant on April 29, 1910, the plaintiff could not obtain title thereto from Cox by the bill of sale executed to him on June 1, 1910.

It is urged by counsel for defendant that the uncontroverted evidence shows that the value of the lumber was far in excess of $400, and that it amounted at the lowest sum to $680, the price at which it was subsequently sold by the plaintiff. The defendant asks that the judgment be affirmed, in so far as it adjudges a recovery of the property to it, and it only seeks to have this judgment modified in regard to the value of the property. The verdict upon which this judgment is based is entire, and, even if it should be held that the judgment could be in part affirmed and in part modified, we do not think that such modification is warranted by the testimony relative to the value of this lumber. The lumber never had been graded, and there is no testimony as to its exact grades, or as to the amount that there was in the different grades. It appears from the letter of defendant introduced in evidence, that the lumber of this character runs from common No. 1 to firsts and seconds, and that the value thereof ranges from $10 per M. to $28 per M. There were 22,000 feet of lumber replevined, and we cannot say from this testimony whether it was of the value of $10 per M. or more. We cannot say, therefore, from the testimony adduced, that the jury were not warranted in finding the value of this lumber to be $400.

The judgment is accordingly affirmed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

PEASLEE-GAULBERT COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

D. D. McMATH, Admr., etc., of Herbert McMath, Deceased.

(148 Ky. 265, 146 S. W. 770.)

Venue — explosion of paint dryer — negligence — injury.

1. An action to recover damages for injury caused by the explosion of a paint dryer because of failure to put a caution signal on the package may be brought in the county where the injury occurred, under a statute permitting actions in tort against corporations to be brought in the county where the tort was committed, although the package was sold at defendant's place of business in another county.

Negligence — dangerous substance — failure to label — liability of dealer.

2. A wholesale dealer who buys a standard paint dryer in the open market without knowledge that it is explosive or inflammable if used with ordinary care is not bound to ascertain its qualities or warn consumers of possible danger in its use, or liable to one for injury by an explosion when he attempts to transfer it from one receptacle to another by artificial light.

(Winn, J., dissents from proposition 1.)

(May 9, 1912.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Christian County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — As to liability of dealer for personal injuries from article not obviously dangerous, see note to Clement v. Rommeck, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382, and subsequent cases in this series: Cunningham v. C. R. Pease House Furnishing Co. 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 236, and Gately v. Taylor, post, 472.

As to liability of druggist for injury to stranger from drug or poison sold by him, see note to McKibbin v. Bax, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 646.

As to liability of manufacturer, packer, or vendor to persons not in privity of contract, for injury from defect in article sold, see note to Tomlinson v. Armour & Co. 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 923, and later cases: Wolcho 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Messrs. Trabue, Doolan, & Cox and Trimble & Bell, with Mr. Selden Y. Trimble, for appellant:

If the appellant committed any tort at all, it was committed in Jefferson county, and not in Christian county. Therefore, the venue of this action was improperly laid in Christian county.

Charles Brown Grocery Co. v. Becket, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 393, 57 S. W. 458; John Matthews' Apparatus Co. v. Renz, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1528, 61 S. W. 9; Seven Hills Chautauqua Co. v. Chase Bros. Co. 26 Ky. L. Rep. 334, 81 S. W. 238; Com. v. Gast, C. & Co. 143 Ky. 674, 137 S. W. 515; Kahn's Sons v. Com. 143 Ky. 297, 136 S. W. 638; Whitmire v. Com. 140 Ky. 734, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 135 S. W. 767; McDermott v. Com. 29 Ky. L. Rep. 750, 96 S. W. 474; Com. v. Price & L. Cider & Vinegar Co. 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1356, 105 S. W. 102; Com. v. Hogan, M. & T. Co. 25 Ky. L. Rep. 41, 74 S. W. 737; Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719, 4 Inter. Com. Rep. 658, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829; Pabst Brewing Co. v. Com. 32 Ky. L. Rep. 1010, 107 S. W. 728; Com. v. Read Phosphate Co. 113 Ky. 39, 67 S. W. 45; Brown v. Wieland, 116 Iowa, 711, 61 L.R.A. 417, 80 N. W. 17; Loveland v. Dinnan, 81 Conn. 111, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1119, 70 Atl. 634; 3 Page, Contr. 2592; Benjamin, Sales, §§ 520, 521; May v. Hoaglan, 9 Bush, 171.

Appellant bought and sold to Whitlow & Son this can of dryer and could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have known its dangerous qualities; Whitlow & Son in turn bought the can and actually knew its dangerous qualities, and failed to label and failed to notify their servant, McMath. The clearest case of negligence is set up in the petition against Whitlow & Son, but no cause of action at all against appellant.

King v. Creekmore, 117 Ky. 172, 77 S. W. 689; Standard Oil Co. v. Tierney, 92 Ky. 367, 14 L.R.A. 677, 36 Am. St. Rep. 595, 17 S. W. 1025; Simons v. Gregory, 120 Ky. 116, 85 S. W. 751; Heindirk v. Louisville Elevator Co. 122 Ky. 675, 5 L.R.A.

v. A. J. Rosenbluth & Co. 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 571, and Pizzo v. Wiemann, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 678.

As to liability of manufacturer or dealer for personal injuries caused by defects in automobile, see note to Olds Motor Works v. Shaffer, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 560.

As to implied warranty of goods bought for a special purpose, see note to Nettograph Mach. Co. v. Brown, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 737, and earlier notes there referred to.

As to applicability of rule res ipsa loquitur in action for personal injuries from defects in articles manufactured or sold by defendant, see Dail v. Taylor, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 949, and note.

(N.S.) 1103, 92 S. W. 608; Berger v. Standard Oil Co. 126 Ky. 155, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 238, 103 S. W. 245; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Deselms, 212 U. S. 159, 53 L. ed. 453, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 270; Clement v. Rommeck, 149 Mich. 595, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 382, 119 Am. St. Rep. 695, 113 N. W. 286; Leavitt v. Fiberloid Co. 196 Mass. 440, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 855, 82 N. E. 682; Tomlinson v. Armour & Co. 75 N. J. L. 748, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 925, 70 Atl. 314; Standard Oil Co. v. Murray, 57 C. C. A. 1, 119 Fed. 572; O'Neill v. James, 138 Mich. 567, 98 L.R.A. 342, 110 Am. St. Rep. 321, 101 N. W. 828, 5 Ann. Cas. 177; Heizer v. Kingsland & D. Mfg. Co. 110 Mo. 605, 15 L.R.A. 821, 33 Am. St. Rep. 482, 19 S. W. 630; Slattery v. Colgate, 25 R. I. 220, 55 Atl. 639; Olds Motor Works v. Shaffer, 145 Ky. 616, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 560, 140 S. W. 1047.

Messrs. Hunter Wood & Son and C. H. Bush for appellee.

Carroll, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Herbert McMath, an experienced house painter, was killed in Christian county, Kentucky, by the explosion of a can of "No. 1, T Japan Dryer." His administrator brought this action against the Peaslee-Gaulbert Company, wholesale dealers in paints and varnishes, who sold the dryer to Whitlow & Sons, for whom McMath worked, and recovered judgment for $5,000. Before taking up the merits of the case, we will dispose of the question of jurisdiction raised by counsel for appellant in the lower court and in this. The action was brought in Christian county, Kentucky, and the summons served on an officer of the appellant company in Jefferson county, Kentucky, at which place is located its home office and chief place of business. Whitlow & Sons were merchants doing business in Christian county, Kentucky, and they gave an order at their place of business in Christian county to a traveling salesman for Peaslee-Gaulbert Company for the Japan dryer. This salesman only had authority to take orders for goods, and send them to the home office of the Peaslee-Gaulbert Company, at which place they were accepted or rejected by the company. The order sent by the salesman was accepted by the company, and the goods were shipped f. o. b., Louisville, Kentucky, to Whitlow & Sons, who paid the freight. The basis of the cause of action, which sounded in tort, was the failure of Peaslee-Gaulbert Company to put a danger or caution mark, sign, or label on the can of Japan dryer. It was shipped without anything indicating its contents, except an attached tag showing that the can contained "No. 1 T Japan Dryer."

It is insisted for appellant that, under these facts, the circuit court of Christian county had no jurisdiction of the cause of action, and that it should have been brought in Jefferson county. Section 72 of the Civil Code, which fixes the venue of the action, provides in part that " . . . an action against a corporation which has an office or place of business in this state, or a chief officer or agent residing in this state, must be brought in the county in which such office or place of business is situated, or in which such officer or agent resides; or, if it be upon a contract, in the above-named county, or in the county in which the contract is made or to be performed; or, if it be for a tort, in the first-named county, or the county in which the tort is committed." Under this section, an action for tort may be brought against a corporation which has an office or place of business in this state, or chief officer or agent residing in this state, in the county in which such office or place of business is situated or in which such officer or agent resides, or in the county in which the tort is committed. It is, of course, conceded that the action might have been brought in Jefferson county; and, if the tort complained of was committed in Christian county, it is obvious that the Christian circuit court had jurisdiction of the action. This being so, the precise question for decision is, Was the tort committed in Christian county? as the only ground upon which it is claimed that the Christian circuit court had jurisdiction is the fact that the tort was committed in that county. Assuming that the failure to put a danger or caution mark on the can containing this dryer was actionable, it is the contention of counsel for the appellant that the tort was committed in Jefferson county, at which place the dryer was sold by the appellant company and delivered, as the property of Whitlow & Sons, to a common carrier for shipment to their place of business. On the other hand, it is insisted by counsel for appellee that, although the cause of action was based upon the failure to put a danger or caution mark on the can containing the dryer, the tort, in the meaning of the Code, was committed in the county where the injury resulting from this failure occurred.

A good deal is said in argument concerning the place where the Japan dryer was sold, one side insisting that the sale took place in Jefferson county, the other that it took place in Christian county. But we do not deem it important or necessary, in disposing of the question, to enter into a discussion of the place where the sale took place. We will assume that the sale was made in Louisville, at which place the order was accepted and the goods delivered to a common carrier to be transported at the risk of the consignees to their place of business. If there had been no explosion, no person could have maintained an action against the appellant company for selling and sending out this article without a caution or danger sign attached to it. In other words, no actionable tort would have been committed either in Jefferson county or in Christian county. It is the fact that the explosion occurred with resulting injury that furnished the basis for the cause of action. The thing that gave life to the cause of action occurred in Christian county, where the accident happened; and so it would naturally seem that in Christian county, if at all, the tort complained of was committed.

It is said, however, that, as the failure to put the caution or danger sign on the can is the sole ground upon which the action rests, this negligence or tort on the part of the appellant company was necessarily committed in Jefferson county. Undoubtedly, if appellant company was guilty of negligence or tort in this respect, it was committed in that county; but, conceding this much, it does not follow that that county was the only county in which the tort was committed or the negligence done. The negligence and wrongdoing, if any, had its beginning in Jefferson county, but it was, if anything, a continuing act of negligence or wrongdoing, for which an action might be brought in any county in which injury resulted therefrom, and the cause of action did not arise until some person suffered injury or loss by reason of the wrongful act. As no actionable tort could have been committed until either person or property was injured, it seems quite clear that, if the words of the Code are to be given their reasonable meaning, the venue of the action was in the county where the tort was in fact committed by the infliction of injury, as well as in the county where the tort feisor resided. There may be a continuing species of wrongdoing that only becomes actionable when injury results therefrom; and in such a state of case we know of no reason why the venue of the action should not lie in the county where the overt act of wrongdoing, if we may so term it, is committed. A tort is nothing more than an injury or wrong for which a civil action may be brought by the injured party against the wrongdoer; and, to give full effect to the Code provision that the action to recover damages may be brought in the county where the tort was committed, it should be construed to mean that it may be brought in that county in which the injury or wrong complained of was committed. To give to this section the construction contended for by appellant would in many instances confine the jurisdiction to the county of the defendant's residence, when it was intended that it might also be brought in the county where the person or property was in fact injured, which is usually the county of the residence of the complaining party. If it had been intended to limit the jurisdiction to the county in which the corporation resided or had its chief office, there would have been no reason for inserting the provision that the action might also be brought in the county where the tort was committed; and, as in the present case, the tort could not have been committed in any other county than that in which the injury complained of occurred, we have no doubt that the Christian circuit court had jurisdiction.

A case strongly supporting this construction of the Code is Mitchell v. Ripy, 82 Ky. 516. In that case it appears that an action was brought in Marion county by Mitchell against Ripy, Cohen, and Edwards, to recover damages for false imprisonment. The affidavit upon which Mitchell was arrested was made by Edwards in Anderson county, and a warrant of arrest was issued against Mitchell in that county and returned "not found." Thereupon it was sent to Marion county, where Mitchell was arrested and brought to Anderson county, and acquitted of the charge. Section 74 of the Code, which regulated the venue of the action in that case, provides that "every other action for an injury to the person of the plaintiff, and every action for an injury to the character of the plaintiff, against a defendant residing in this state, must be brought in the county in which the defendant resides, or in which the injury is done." In holding that the Marion court had jurisdiction, the court said: "As all the defendants resided in the county of Anderson when the action was brought, the jurisdiction of the Marion circuit court depends upon the meaning of the words 'in which the injury was done.' In determining this question, the first and most natural inquiry that arises is, For what injury to the person of the plaintiff was this action brought? The affidavit was made and the warrant for the arrest was issued in the county of Anderson. But it is clear that, if nothing more had been done, the plaintiff could not have maintained this action in any court. The personal injury of which the plaintiff complains, and for which this action was brought, is his arrest and imprisonment.

That was accomplished—done—in Marion county. The action is against defendants, who, it is alleged, maliciously and without probable cause procured the warrant of arrest to issue, by means of which the injury complained of was done; and in our opinion the jurisdiction of such an action is, in the meaning of the Code, no more determined by the county in which the criminal law may be wrongfully put in motion than it is controlled in an action for assault and battery by the place where a conspiracy may be hatched to accomplish the beating or wounding. Necessarily, every injury to the person, accompanied with force, must be done at the place where the person is at the time of the injury." See also Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Carroll, 97 Ala. 126, 18 L.R.A. 433, 38 Am. St. Rep. 163, 11 So. 803; Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Doyle, 60 Miss. 977; Smith v. Southern R. Co. 136 Ky. 162, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 927, 123 S. W. 678. The cases of Com. v. Grand Central Bldg. & L. Asso. 97 Ky. 325, 30 S. W. 626, and Com. v. Remington Typewriter Co. 127 Ky. 177, 105 S. W. 399, relied on by counsel for appellant, are not in conflict with the views we have expressed. The question of jurisdiction raised in these cases came up under a statute very different from § 72 of the Code, and under a statute intended to meet very different conditions from the Code provision.

On the merits of the case, a recovery was sought upon the ground, as stated in the petition, that there had been shipped by Peaslee-Gaulbert Company to Whitlow & Sons a supply of paints and oils, including a can of dryer, "but the said can was not labeled, and there was nothing about it to indicate that there was any explosive substance in it, and nothing to warn any person that it contained anything of the kind that was dangerous or explosive; and it was not known by the said Whitlow & Sons, or either of them, or plaintiff's intestate, or anyone in the employ of the said Whitlow & Sons, so far as the plaintiff knows or believes, that the said can did contain any explosive or dangerous substance. Plaintiff further states that the said intestate, Herbert McMath, exercised care and caution in handling said dryer, and that he did not know, and could not have known, by the exercise of ordinary or reasonable care, that it was explosive or dangerous. He further states that the defendant, Peaslee-Gaulbert Company, did know, or could have known by the exercise of ordinary care, that said dryer was explosive and dangerous, and also knew that it had to be handled by workmen engaged in painting, and that in shipping and delivering same to the said Whitlow & Sons, knowing that it was purchased to be used in drying paint, and had to be used by the workmen of Whitlow & Sons, without labeling it so as to give notice or warning of its being dangerous, and being an explosive, or containing explosive substances, the said defendant was guilty of gross negligence, and by reason of its negligence aforesaid the said Herbert McMath came to his death." And it is earnestly insisted that, although the evidence may not show that Peaslee-Gaulbert Company knew the explosive and dangerous quality of the dryer, they are yet liable if, by the exercise of ordinary care, they could have known its explosive and dangerous character.

The evidence shows that McMath had been engaged for several years in the business of house painting. At the time of the accident he was in the employ of Whitlow & Sons, and went to their place of business after dark for the purpose of getting a small can that he had with him filled with dryer, and, in company with W. H. Payne, went to the wareroom in which Whitlow & Sons kept their paints and varnishes. The room was quite dark, and Payne carried a lighted candle in his hand. When McMath, who was holding the 5 gallon can of dryer, first commenced to pour it into the small can he had brought for the purpose of having filled. Payne held the lighted candle a few feet from the can of dryer; but, discovering that McMath had some difficulty in pouring the dryer into the small can, Payne asked McMath if it was dangerous, and upon his answering "No, not a bit," he put the lighted candle close to the mouth of the can out of which the dryer was being poured, and at once the explosion occurred that resulted in the death of McMath. It is evident that the flame from the candle came in actual contact with the dryer as it was being poured out by McMath, or else so close to it that it caused it to ignite and explode. McMath did not request Payne to hold the candle closer, nor does it appear, except from inference, that he knew how close Payne was holding the candle to the mouth of the can. Payne did not know anything about the danger that would attend contact between the dryer and the lighted candle, nor, indeed, does it appear that he knew what kind of material McMath was pouring into the can. There was only attached to the can a label with the words "No. 1 T Japan Dryer" on it, and no danger or caution sign or mark on the can, or anything to indicate that it was dangerous to hold a lighted candle near to the liquid when it was being poured out. It also appears from the evidence that the name "No. 1 T Japan Dryer" is merely a trade-name, having no significance outside of the trade, and giving no evidence of the contents or ingredients of the dryer to persons not familiar with the article. It is a standard dryer, in general use by painters, and is manufactured by a large number of concerns in different parts of the country; there being six firms in Louisville alone that manufacture and sell it. Peaslee-Gaulbert Company, although wholesale dealers in paints and varnishes, had never manufactured this article of trade, but had been buying it for a number of years from the Louisville Varnish Company, a concern that manufactured it, and it was from this company that the can was bought that was sold to Whitlow & Sons.

A number of witnesses who were qualified to testify from experience in its use, and who knew the ingredients and qualities of this dryer, said that it was not explosive or dangerous unless brought in contact with a lighted flame. Practically all of them testified that all varnishes were inflammable, and that it was not safe to go with a burning lamp or light into a room where varnishes were kept; that these varnishes, including this dryer, gave off gases that were easily ignited, and that almost any kind of varnish would explode, or at least catch on fire, if brought in contact with a light of any kind. They also testified that this dryer, as well as other varnishes, were not regarded by the trade as dangerous, but that it was necessary to exercise some care in handling and using them to keep a light or flame from coming in contact with the varnishes or the gases that might escape therefrom. It was further shown, without contradiction, by a number of manufacturers and wholesale dealers who made and sold the dryer in question, that no caution or danger sign or tag was ever put on the can or receptacle containing the article. The superintendent of the Louisville Varnish Company testified that he had been making for about fifteen years "No. 1 T Japan Dryer" from the same formula as that by which the dryer Peaslee-Gaulbert Company sold was made, and had been selling it to the trade all over the country, and that his company had never placed any caution or danger sign on it. This witness gave the ingredients of the dryer, which consist, among other things, of linseed oil, turpentine, and naphtha. As illustrating the character of evidence, we may take Frank A. Lane, who had many years' experience in the manufacture and use of varnishes, including "No. 1 T Japan Dryer." He testified that it was a type of standard dryer used by practically every varnish maker in the business; that it was not considered explosive, but was inflammable, and would easily flash and burn if exposed to an open flame, or, if agitated or stirred up in a confined space and then subjected to an open flame, the vapors from the material would cause an explosion, the extent of which would depend entirely upon the amount of gas that had been generated and how close it was confined; that it would not explode or take fire spontaneously, or unless it came in contact with an open flame or a live spark. He also said that it had never been the custom of manufacturers, dealers, or handlers of dryer to put caution or danger labels on the packages, indicating any hazard in using or handling them.

In brief, the substance of all the evidence is that this dryer was not explosive or inflammable, unless brought in contact with a lighted flame, and was not inherently or imminently dangerous or dangerous at all if handled or used with ordinary care; that "No. 1 T Japan Dryer" was manufactured substantially by the same formula all over the country, and sold to the trade generally as an article of common use in the varnish business; that none of the manufacturers or dealers ever placed on their cans containing this dryer any danger or caution sign or mark or other thing to indicate that care should be used in handling it. It might also be here remarked that there is no statute in this state requiring a danger or caution mark of any kind to be placed on articles like this.

There is no evidence in the record that Peaslee-Gaulbert Company knew that this dryer was explosive or inherently or imminently dangerous, or at all dangerous if used with reasonable care, nor is there any evidence that they had ever heard of any accident caused by its ignition or explosion.

If we should assume that this dryer was an explosive or an inherently or imminently dangerous article of trade, there is no evidence that Peaslee-Gaulbert Company had any knowledge of its dangerous qualities when they sold it to Whitlow & Sons. Nor is there any suggestion that they made any representations or warranties concerning it, or concealed from the purchaser any fact in connection with it. It was bought by them on the open market in the ordinary and usual course of business as an article of general and common use all over the country that they and other dealers in paints and varnishes had been buying and selling for many years. In all their experience and observation no can or receptacle containing it, either bought or sold by them, or by other dealers, ever had a caution or danger label or sign on it. They doubtless knew, as would other persons of ordinary intelligence who were accustomed to the use of paints and varnishes, that it was dangerous to bring a lighted flame in contact with varnish or dryer, as it was a very inflammable article; but, so far as the evidence shows, they had never heard of any person being injured by its use. Nor is there any evidence that their attention had ever been directed by any person or by any incident to the inflammable or explosive quality of this dryer. Of course, if Peaslee-Gaulbert Company could be made liable in an action like this, so could any other merchant or dealer to whom they sold the article, and who bought it and sold it as they did. No difference in respect to liability can be made between the wholesale dealer and the retail dealer, or between the merchant who buys from the manufacturer and the merchant who sells directly to the consumer. If the conditions and circumstances surrounding the purchase and sale are alike, the measure of responsibility of all merchants and dealers is the same.

If a dealer or merchant, whether he be a wholesale dealer or a retail dealer, or the original purchaser of the article, or the person who makes the sale to the consumer, knows that the article is inherently or imminently dangerous in the use for which it is intended, because of its inflammable or explosive qualities, it is his duty to label or mark the package containing the article in such a way as to indicate its dangerous contents.

But the dealer who purchases and sells an article in common and general use in the usual course of trade and business, without knowledge of its dangerous qualities, is not under a duty to exercise ordinary care to discover whether it is dangerous or not. He may take it as he finds it on the market. He is not required to investigate its qualities, or endeavor to ascertain whether it is dangerous for the use intended before he can absolve himself from liability in the event injury results from its use. There are many necessary articles and things in common and general use throughout the country that are dangerous unless used with care, but the dealer who buys and sells them in the open market in the usual and ordinary course of his business, and who makes no representations or concealments, and who does not know that the article is explosive or dangerous in its ordinary use, is not to be made liable merely because some person is injured or killed while handling it.

The merchant or dealer can only be made responsible in damages to a party who has no contractual relations with him when the article is imminently or inherently dangerous in the ordinary use for which it is intended, or the use to which it may reasonably be expected the article will be put or applied; and when with knowledge of this fact he sells or puts it on the market without giving notice to the purchaser of its dangerous quality, or when he represents the thing as being safe for the use intended, when, in fact, it is not. As stated in Wellington v. Downer Kerosene Oil Co. 104 Mass. 64: "It is well settled that a man who delivers an article which he knows to be dangerous or noxious to another person, without notice of its nature and qualities, is liable for any injury which may reasonably be contemplated as likely to result and which does in fact result therefrom to that person or any other who is not himself in fault." To hold dealers who buy and sell articles that are in general and common use, and that are dangerous only when carelessly or inattentively used, liable in damages for the failure to give notice of their qualities or the danger in their use when the dealer does not know of the danger, would be to impose a greater burden than the protection of the public requires, and to put on dealers a higher degree of care in the conduct of their business than they should be expected to bear. But if the dealer knows that the article is inherently or imminently dangerous, or is highly explosive, or if he conceals or misrepresents its qualities, or warrants or represents it to be safe for the use intended, when it is not, there is no reason why he should not be held chargeable with the reasonable and proximate consequences of his act in selling it without notice of the danger in its use.

Questions like this have come before this court, as well as courts of other states, in many cases, but they have generally arisen in actions against manufacturers for selling and putting on the market without proper notice articles that were inherently or imminently dangerous.

The authorities are practically agreed that, when a manufacturer puts on the market for use without notice of its dangerous quality an article that is imminently or inherently dangerous, he will be liable in damages to any person who, while himself in the exercise of ordinary care, suffers injury as a result of the dangerous quality of the article, and the manufacturer as a rule will be charged with notice of the quality of the article that he himself has made, and cannot excuse himself upon the ground that he did not know its dangerous qualities. It is not, however, necessary or indeed pertinent to the matter in hand that we should extend this opinion in a discussion of the duty and liability of the manufacturer, or the degree of care he must exercise in the sale of his products. Full discussion of these questions may be found in the cases of Clement v. Crosby & Co. 148 Mich. 293, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 588, 111 N. W. 745, 12 Ann. Cas. 265; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455; Leavitt v. Fibroid Co. 196 Mass. 440, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 855, 82 N. E. 682; Tomlinson v. Armour & Co. 75 N. J. L. 748, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 923, 70 Atl. 314; Watson v. Augusta Brewing 124 Ga. 121, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1178, 110 Am. St. Rep. 157, 52 S. E. 152; Heindirk v. Louisville Elevator Co. 122 Ky. 675, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1103, 92 S. W. 608; Standard Oil Co. v. Tierney, 92 Ky. 367, 14 L.R.A. 677, 36 Am. St. Rep. 595, 17 S. W. 1025; Berger v. Standard Oil Co. 126 Ky. 155, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 238, 103 S. W. 245; Olds Motor Works v. Shaffer, 145 Ky. 616, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 560, 140 S. W. 1047; Huset v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. 61 L.R.A. 303, 57 C. C. A. 237, 120 Fed. 865; Woodward v. Miller, 119 Ga. 618, 64 L.R.A. 932, 100 Am. St. Rep. 188, 46 S. E. 847; Weiser v. Holzman, 33 Wash. 87, 99 Am. St. Rep. 932, 73 Pac. 797. But there is and should be a difference between the liability of the manufacturer and the liability of the dealer in this class of cases. The manufacturer should be and is held to a higher degree of care than the dealer in putting on the market dangerous compounds, because he knows or should be charged with notice of the quality and contents of the article that he manufactures; and, being the originator of it, should be required to give notice of the danger in its use, if it is dangerous. But the dealer who buys from the manufacturer occupies practically the same position as does the purchaser from the dealer, and is not presumed to know the formula by which the article is made, or whether it is inherently dangerous or not, and it is doubtless due to the limited liability of the dealer when he is not guilty of misrepresentation or fraud that so few cases can be found presenting the precise question here involved. A case in point is Clement v. Rommeck, 149 Mich. 595, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382, 119 Am. St. Rep. 695, 113 N. W. 286. There the action was brought by a third party against Crosby & Company, the manufacturer, and Rommeck, the merchant who sold the article, to recover damages for injuries sustained in the use of a stove polish. A demurrer to the petition was sustained on behalf of the merchant, and in affirming this ruling the court said: "It is manifest from a reading of this declaration that the theory fairly to be deduced from it is that, though the defendant Rommeck bought the preparation from Crosby & Company, properly labeled in the open market, and sold it in the open market, the positive duty rested upon him to know the property of the goods and their inflammable nature, and to communicate the facts to the purchaser. It is to be noted that the declaration contains no averment that the defendant Rommeck had actual knowledge of the inflammable nature of the goods; nor is it averred in what manner he was negligent in not knowing their inflammable nature. It gets down to this: Whether a dealer—a hardware merchant, for example—who buys in the open market stove polish which purports to be safe and proper for use, and sells the article for a purpose for which it is apparently intended, is liable, in the absence of negligence, if it turn out that the article is not adapted to the use, and causes injury. We think it clear, upon principle, that no such liability exists." Another similar case is West v. Emanuel, 198 Pa. 180, 53 L.R.A. 330, 47 Atl. 965. There an action was brought against a retail druggist to recover damages for injuries sustained in the use of a headache powder. In holding the druggist not liable, the court said: "The Kohler headache powders were in demand at least twelve or fifteen years ago, and from that time on they were to be found for sale in most, if not all, of the principal drug stores. They were recognized and regarded as an efficient and proper remedy for headaches, and were mainly used to relieve them. They were a patent or proprietary medicine manufactured by Kohler, and sold by him to the drug stores, which sold them to their customers. In the sales of patent or proprietary medicines furnished by the compounder of the ingredients which compose them, the druggist is not required to analyze the contents of each bottle or package he receives. If he delivers to the customer the article called for, with the label of the proprietary or patentee upon it, he cannot be justly charged with negligence in so doing." See also White v. Oakes, 88 Me. 367, 32 L.R.A. 593, 34 Atl. 175. In our opinion the petition was defective, and evidence was not sufficient to take the case to the jury. The court should have sustained the motion for a peremptory instruction requested in behalf of appellant.

Wherefore the judgment is reversed for proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

Winn, J., dissenting in part:

I dissent from so much of the court's opinion herein as holds that the Christian circuit court had jurisdiction of this action. The cause of action arose upon a tort committed by the sale of an explosive substance without any notice or label of its dangerous nature. The evidence is conclusive that every act done by appellant in connection with this substance was done in Jefferson county, and there the appellant parted with all ownership of or control over it. The wrong it committed was in permitting the article to go out without brand. The failure to brand it was a failure in Jefferson county. No part of the tort, whether of commission or omission, was done in Christian county, and therefore § 72 did not give the circuit court of that county any jurisdiction of the action. The case of Mitchell v. Ripy, 82 Ky. 516, cited in the opinion herein as controlling, is not in point. That case arose under § 74 of the Civil Code. It was in damages for false arrest. The arrest was made in Marion county, "the injury was done" there, and, of course, under the express provision of § 74, the county where the injury was done was the county of the jurisdiction; while under § 72, not the place where the injury is done, but the place where the wrong itself is committed, is the place of jurisdiction. In my judgment the court's opinion in the case at bar confuses the commission of the tort named in § 72 with the injury suffered named in § 74, as fixing the jurisdiction. The theory of a continuing wrong or of a continuous act will not bear analysis. It is not a case of a continuous action or motion, as where, for instance, a man might stand in one county and fire a pistol, injuring one in another county. On the contrary, the sale of the unlabeled article was entire and complete in Jefferson county; and, since the Code makers said that the jurisdiction should be in the county where the tort was committed, it is not within our province to add to the Code that the action can as well be brought in any county where anyone may suffer injury.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

MATTHEW E. GATELY, Admr., etc.,
v.

JOSEPH B. TAYLOR et al.

(211 Mass. 60, 97 N. E. 619.)

Trial — jury — composition of stove polish — naphtha.

1. The jury must determine whether or not stove polish composed of naphtha, colored and slightly thickened so as to make the mixture adhesive when applied, is merely naphtha under an assumed name, the sale of which is prohibited by statute.
39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Negligence — sale of dangerous article — liability for injury — retailer.

2. A retailer who sells a stove polish which is merely naphtha under an assumed name, the sale of which is prohibited by a statute, is liable for injury caused by its attempted use, although he had no knowledge of the constituent parts of the article.

Pleading — duplicity — remedy.

3. Objections to a pleading for duplicity can be raised only by motions to strike out or to compel the pleader to elect.

Negligence — illegal sale of naphtha — injury — other offenders.

4. A merchant cannot escape liability for injuries caused by his selling naphtha as stove polish contrary to statute, by the fact that other dealers did the same thing.

(February 26, 1912.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendants to rulings of the Superior Court for Middlesex County made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for the suffering of plaintiff's intestate prior to death which occurred through the ignition of her clothing by the explosion of stove polish purchased from defendants. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. G. L. Mayberry for defendants.

Messrs. James E. Cotter and Michael J. Connolly, for plaintiff:

An obligation rests upon the one who delivers an article which he knows, or ought to know, to be peculiarly dangerous, to give notice of its character, or bear the natural consequences of his failure to do so.

Leavitt v. Fiberloid Co. 196 Mass. 440, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 855, 82 N. E. 682; Provost v. Cook, 184 Mass. 315, 68 N. E. 336; Norton v. Sewall, 106 Mass. 143, 8 Am. Rep. 298.

There was evidence from which the jury might have found that the defendants sold naphtha under an assumed name, in violation of chapter 102, § 108.

Such violation constituted evidence of negligence to be considered by the jury under the second count.

Finnegan v. Winslow Skate Mfg. Co. 189 Mass. 580, 76 N. E. 192; Ives v. Welden, 114 Iowa, 476, 54 L.R.A. 864, 89 Am. St. Rep. 379, 87 N. W. 408.

There was evidence that the deceased was in the exercise of due care.

Thompson v. Cambridge Gaslight Co. 201 Mass. 77, 87 N. E. 486; Smith v. Boston

Note. — As to liability of dealer for personal injuries from article not obviously dangerous, see Peaslee-Gaulbert Co. v. McMath, ante, 465.

Gaslight Co. 129 Mass. 318; Hilton v. Boston, 171 Mass. 478, 51 N. E. 114.

Braley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff sues in tort under Rev. Laws, chap. 102, § 108, and at common law to recover damages for the conscious suffering of his wife and intestate, alleged to have been caused by the wrongful acts of the defendants. The refusal to give the first three requests, that upon all the evidence and the pleadings the plaintiff could not recover under either count, presents for decision, as the principal question, whether the jury were warranted in returning a general verdict for the plaintiff. Oulighan v. Butler, 189 Mass. 287, 289, 75 N. E. 726; Murphy v. Russell, 202 Mass. 480, 89 N. E. 107. The defendants, as retail dealers in hardware and stoves, kept for sale and sold, with other stove polishes, a liquid stove polish known as "6-5-4 Self-Shining Stove Lusta." It was contained in small round cans with a label, on which, under the heading of directions, the excellencies of the preparation, as a stove polish and the manner of application were elaborately printed. The article, with the knowledge and assent of the defendants, as appeared by their testimony, had been advertised in the local papers by the manufacturers from whom they purchased it in bulk, as being kept for sale by them, and although the advertisement recommended its use they were ignorant of its composition. The conflicting expert testimony left to the jury the credibility of the witnesses, and the weight of the evidence; and they could accept the opinion of the plaintiff's witness, who positively stated that it was "naphtha with some pigment, and a little thickening," and "notwithstanding all that is said about qualifying phrases it is naphtha just as much as half a dollar is silver," rather than the conclusion of the defendants' expert, that it was "an asphalt paint." The son of the decedent at her request bought a can of the defendants, and in the afternoon of the day of purchase, while she was using the contents on a cooking range in which the fire had not been extinguished, an explosion suddenly followed, enveloping her in flame and causing such grave injuries that her death followed after a period of intense pain. If it were not that the defendants urge the question of her due care, it would be unnecessary to add that the "directions" specified, "if a greater luster is desired apply when iron is warm," and that generally stove polishes in common experience do not explode, even when applied to heated surfaces. It is sufficient that as matter of law, she was not shown to have been careless. Baldwin v. American Writing Paper Co. 196 Mass. 402, 407, 82 N. E. 1; Thompson v. Cambridge Gaslight Co. 201 Mass. 77, 87 N. E. 486.

The substantial inquiry upon this evidence is the construction to be given to Rev. Laws, chap. 102, § 108, making it a penal offense to sell, offer, or keep for sale, "naphtha under an assumed name." Naphtha has been defined as a product of petroleum intermediate between the associate products of gasolene and benzine, all of which do not differ in their essential nature, but vary only in the degree of inflammability when brought into contact with radiant heat. Webster, New Int. Dict.; Morse v. Buffalo F. & M. Ins. Co. 30 Wis. 534, 536, 11 Am. Rep. 587. The inflammable and explosive qualities of petroleum and its products have been generally recognized, as calling for statutory regulations governing their storage and sale, for the protection of the public; and in this jurisdiction the first legislation upon the general subject is Stat. 1865, chap. 244. The statute, however, and the succeeding Stat. 1866, chap. 285, which repealed the previous act, went no farther than to provide that crude petroleum or any of its products should not be kept, manufactured, or refined in quantities exceeding 500 gallons without a license from the public authorities, unless "stored, kept, manufactured, or refined in detached and properly ventilated buildings specially adapted to the purpose, and surrounded by an embankment so constructed as to effectually prevent the overflow of said petroleum or any of its products" beyond the premises. The next enactment, the Stat. of 1867, chap. 286, which repealed the Stat. of 1866, chap. 262, is entitled, "An Act Regulating the Sale of Coal and Petroleum Oils." By § 5, any person who sold, kept, or offered for sale naphtha under the name of oil was, upon conviction, subject to fine or imprisonment or both, and by § 3 also was made liable in damages to any person suffering injuries from the explosion or ignition of such oil unlawfully sold. Wellington v. Downer Kerosene Oil Co. 104 Mass. 64. Stat. 1869, chap. 152, followed, and while by § 2 no person shall mix for sale naphtha and illuminating oils, or shall sell or offer for sale such mixtures, unless for the purposes of remanufacture into illuminating oil made from coal or petroleum, which would not ignite beyond a fixed standard of temperature, by § 4, the sale of naphtha under an assumed name was for the first time generally prohibited. This section appears without change in Pub. Stat.

1882, chap. 102, § 71, and Rev. Laws, chap. 102, § 108. It is not impossible to say that the prohibition refers only to the sale of naphtha under the name of petroleum or some of its other enumerated products. But this would not reach the mischief which the statute obviously was intended to prevent. The designations under which naphtha might be sold would be as various as its fluid nature would permit, and the seller would not be subject to a penalty. A commercial compound of which one of the substantial parts might be naphtha, yet when combined with other ingredients it became as a whole a distinct and independent product, would not come within the statute. But if the contributed parts merely supplied coloring to the fluid, with a slight thickening, making the mixture adhesive when applied, then the jury must determine whether the article sold does not remain really and essentially naphtha. Com. v. Wentworth, 118 Mass. 441, 442.

The statutory regulation is absolute, and in a criminal prosecution want of knowledge by the seller would not be a defense. He violates the statute, which is a police regulation, at his peril. Com. v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 202 Mass. 399, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 350, 132 Am. St. Rep. 507, 88 N. E. 764, 16 Ann. Cas. 587; Com. v. Mixer, 287 Mass. 141, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 467, 93 N. E. 249, 20 Ann. Cas. 1152. Section 108, however, not only imposes a penalty, but under § 106 the defendants, if found to have transgressed, also were made liable in a civil action for any damage suffered by the decedent from the explosion or ignition of the naphtha, independently of any question of negligence on their part. Wellington v. Downer Kerosene Oil Co. 104 Mass. 64, 70; Hourigan v. Nowell, 110 Mass. 470, 473. The allegations of the first count were sufficient under the statute, and the jury were warranted in finding that they had been sustained by the evidence to which sufficient reference has been made. The plaintiff under the second count offered no affirmative evidence that the defendants knew of the nature of the contents of the can. or had any information of its dangerous qualities which should have put them upon inquiry. The defendants, however, sold the article illegally; and their illegal act, having contributed to the decedent's injury, the plaintiff, under the second count, could sue at common law as well as under the statute. Coffin v. Field, 7 Cush. 355, 358; Wellington v. Downer Kerosene Oil Co. 104 Mass. 64; Pollock v. Eastern R. Co. 124 Mass. 158; Ransom v. Boston, 192 Mass. 299, 78 N. E. 481, 7 Ann. Cas. 733; 1 Comyn's 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Digest, Action upon Statutes, 442. See Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. 1408, note 96, and Wharton, Neg. § 443n, for a collection of cases.

The duty imposed is for the safety and welfare of the members of the community, and "as a general rule," said Mr. Justice Devens in Parker v. Barnard, 135 Mass. 116, 120, 46 Am. Rep. 450, following Salisbury v. Herchenroder, 106 Mass. 458, 460, 8 Am. Rep. 354, "where an act is enjoined or forbidden under a statutory penalty, and the failure to do the act enjoined, or the doing of the act forbidden has contributed to an injury, the party thus in default is liable therefor to the party injured, notwithstanding he may also be subject to a penalty." If the jury were satisfied of the violation of the statute there was evidence for their consideration of the defendants' negligence, which was aptly charged in the allegations of this count. Brunelle v. Lowell Electric Light Corp. 188 Mass. 493, 498, 74 N. E. 676; Finnegan v. Winslow Skate Mfg. Co. 189 Mass. 580, 582, 76 N. E. 192; McCarthy v. Morse, 197 Mass. 332, 337, 83 N. E. 1109; Field v. Gowdy, 199 Mass. 568, 573, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 236, 85 N. E. 884; Davis v. John L. Whiting & Son Co. 201 Mass. 91, 96, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 87 N. E. 199; Moran v. Dickinson, 204 Mass. 559, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 90 N. E. 1150; Horsman v. Brockton & P. Street R. Co. 205 Mass. 519, 522, 523, 91 N. E. 897; Siemers v. Eisen, 54 Cal. 418; Corrigan v. Stillwell, 97 Me. 247, 61 L.R.A. 163, 54 Atl. 389; Baxter v. Coughlin, 70 Minn. 1, 72 N. W. 797; Horton v. Wylie, 115 Wis. 505, 95 Am. St. Rep. 953, 92 N. W. 245; Brannock v. Elmore, 114 Mo. 55, 21 S. W. 451; McRickard v. Flint, 114 N. Y. 222, 226, 21 N. E. 153.

The objection that because of some of the expressions used by the pleader the second count might be objectionable for duplicity could be raised, if at all, only by a motion to strike out, or a motion to compel the plaintiff to elect at the close of the evidence. King v. Howard, 1 Cush. 137, 141; Burns v. Scooffy, 98 Cal. 271, 33 Pac. 86; Golding v. Wharton Salt Works Co. L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 374, 34 L. T. N. S. 474, 24 Week. Rep. 423. And whatever apprehension the defendants may have had, that they might be held liable in deceit for misrepresentations as to the nature of the article sold as "lusta," was removed by the giving of their requests on this point, accompanied with appropriate comments. No exceptions were taken to the instructions, except so far as they were inconsistent with the first, second, third, fifth, and ninth requests, which for reasons sufficiently stated the judge properly declined to give. If the defendants deemed the instructions as to the second count insufficient or erroneous, they should have specifically excepted; but not having done so, this part of the charge cannot be reviewed. Ridenour v. H. C. Dexter Chair Co. 209 Mass. 70, 78, 95 N. E. 409, and cases cited.

Nor were the rulings upon questions of evidence incorrect. The answer of the defendants put in issue every material allegation of the declaration, and the advertisement that they kept "lusta" for sale was clearly relevant, while the evidence offered by them that it was an article generally sold in the market before as well as since the injury to the decedent was rightly excluded. If other dealers, whether within or without this commonwealth, sold naphtha as "lusta," this fact afforded the defendants no justification for their violation of the statute.

Exceptions overruled.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

JOSEPHINE K. MATHESON

v.

JOSEPH O'KANE.

(211 Mass. 91, 97 N. E. 638.)

Trial — jury — payment by joint tort feisor — effect.

1. The jury must determine the effect of evidence tending to show that money received from one of several joint tort feisors was not intended as a satisfaction of the claim.

Joint tort feisor — covenant not to sue — effect on liability of others.

2. A covenant not to sue one of several joint tort feisors, upon receiving from him a consideration therefor, does not operate to discharge the others, who contribute no part of the consideration, from liability to suit.

Action — joint — partial discontinuance — effect.

3. The discontinuance as to some of the defendants of an action against several joint tort feisors has no effect upon the liability of the others.

(February 27, 1912.)

R EPORT by the Superior Court for Suffolk County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court after direction of verdict in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries through a fall on a sidewalk which was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Joseph O'Kane, Frank T. Horgan, and Edward B. Townsend, as trustee, owned adjoining houses on East Canton street, in Boston. A common gutter conducted the water from these houses down upon the sidewalk. Water so conducted accumulated and froze upon the walk, and plaintiff, in attempting to pass over it, fell and was injured. Horgan and Townsend had indemnity insurance and the insurers paid plaintiff three hundred and two hundred dollars respectively, and she executed to Horgan and Townsend an instrument of which the following is a copy:

"Know All Men by These Presents: That I, Josephine K. Matheson, of Boston, in the County of Suffolk, in the commonwealth of Massachusetts, in consideration of two hundred ($200) dollars and other valuable considerations, to me duly paid, do hereby covenant with Edward B. Townsend, trustee, that I will never sue or attach the said Townsend, trustee, or his estate, for or on account of a certain claim for damages described in the plaintiff's declaration in a certain action brought by her against said Townsend, trustee, and others, in the superior court in the county of Suffolk, which action is numbered 51-303, and that these presents may be pleaded as a defense to any action or other proceeding which may be brought, instituted, or taken by me against the said Townsend, trustee, or his estate, in breach of this covenant. In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal this twenty-fifth day of August, A. D. 1909."

The action was originally brought against

Note. — The decisions upon the effect of a covenant not to sue one joint tort feisor, as a release of another, are collated in notes to Abb v. Northern P. R. Co. 58 L.R.A. 299, and Musolf v. Duluth Edison Electric Co. 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 451.

As to the effect of a release of one joint tort feisor of a reservation of right as against others, see Eden v. Fletcher, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 618, and note.

As to the right to show by extrinsic evidence that the payment of a judgment against, or consideration for the release of, an alleged joint tort feisor, was not a satisfaction of the claim, see notes to Ryan v. Becker, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 330, and Fitzgerald v. Union Stock Yards Co. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 983.

As to the effect of the release of one person from liability for a tort to release another, where the former was not in fact or law liable, see note to Snyder v. Mutual Teleph. Co. 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 321.

As to the effect of obtaining a judgment against one joint tort feisor upon the liability of the other, see note to Blackman v. Simpson, 58 L.R.A. 410.

all three, but, upon the execution of these instruments, it was discontinued against Horgan and Townsend, and O'Kane thereupon set up an accord and satisfaction and asked that the action be discontinued as to him.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Boutwell & Hastings and F. P. Miller, for plaintiff:

A covenant never to sue an existing demand is not technical release, and will not operate as a defense in favor of a person who is not a party to such covenant, and from whom comes no part of the consideration paid.

Perkins v. Gilman, 8 Pick. 229; Allen v. Kimball, 23 Pick. 473; Kenworthy v. Sawyer, 125 Mass. 28; Saunders v. Saunders, 154 Mass. 337, 28 N. E. 270; Clare v. Hatch, 180 Mass. 194, 62 N. E. 250; Clark v. Bullard, 208 Mass. 586, 94 N. E. 1042; Walsh v. Hanan, 93 App. Div. 580, 87 N. Y. Supp. 930; Gilbert v. Finch, 173 N. Y. 455, 61 L.R.A. 807, 93 Am. St. Rep. 623, 66 N. E. 133; Hirschfeld v. Alsberg, 47 Misc. 141, 93 N. Y. Supp. 617; McCrillis v. Hawes, 38 Me. 566; Ellis v. Esson, 50 Wis. 138, 36 Am. Rep. 830, 6 N. W. 518; Sloan v. Herrick, 49 Vt. 327; Edens v. Fletcher, 79 Kan. 139, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 618, 98 Pac. 784; Carey v. Bilby, 63 C. C. A. 361, 129 Fed. 203; El Paso & S. R. Co. v. Darr, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 93 S. W. 166; Snow v. Chandler, 10 N. H. 92, 34 Am. Dec. 140; Texarkana Teleph. Co. v. Pemberton, 86 Ark. 329, 111 S. W. 257; Arnett v. Missouri P. R. Co. 64 Mo. App. 368; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Averill, 224 Ill. 516, 79 N. E. 654.

Messrs. Dolan & Dolan and Damon E. Hall, for defendant:

For an injury arising from the tort of two or more wrongdoers there can be but one satisfaction, and if a plaintiff accepts money in satisfaction of her claim from any one of them, she thereby discharges all.

Brown v. Cambridge, 3 Allen, 474; Stone v. Dickinson, 5 Allen, 29, 81 Am. Dec. 727; Curley v. Harris, 11 Allen, 113; Goss v. Ellison, 136 Mass. 503; Stimpson v. Poole, 141 Mass. 502, 6 N. E. 705; Aldrich v. Parnell, 147 Mass. 409, 18 N. E. 170; Brewer v. Casey, 196 Mass. 385, 82 N. E. 45; Ellis v. Bitzer, 2 Ohio, 89, 15 Am. Dec. 534; Ruble v. Turner, 2 Hen. & M. 38; Ayer v. Ashmead, 31 Conn. 447, 83 Am. Dec. 154; Brown v. Kencheloe, 3 Coldw. 192; Chetwood v. California Nat. Bank, 113 Cal. 414, 45 Pac. 704; Turner v. Hitchcock, 20 Iowa, 310; Long v. Long, 57 Iowa, 497, 10 N. W. 875; Snyder v. Mutual Teleph. Co. 135 Iowa, 215, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 321, 112 N. W. 776; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

R. Co. v. Hilligoss, 171 Ind. 417, 131 Am. St. Rep. 258, 86 N. E. 485; Dulaney v. Bufum, 173 Mo. 15, 73 S. W. 125; Williams v. Le Bar, 141 Pa. 149, 21 Atl. 525.

The covenants not to sue given by the plaintiff to two of the three defendants should be construed as a bar to the present action.

Kenworthy v. Sawyer, 125 Mass. 28; Brewer v. Casey, 196 Mass. 384, 82 N. E. 45; Brown v. Cambridge, 3 Allen, 474; Goss v. Ellison, 136 Mass. 503; Leddy v. Barney, 139 Mass. 394, 2 N. E. 107; Seither v. Philadelphia Traction Co. 125 Pa. 397, 4 L.R.A. 54, 11 Am. St. Rep. 905, 17 Atl. 338; McBride v. Scott, 132 Mich. 176, 61 L.R.A. 445, 102 Am. St. Rep. 416, 93 N. W. 243, 1 Ann. Cas. 61; Chetwood v. California Nat. Bank, 113 Cal. 414, 45 Pac. 704; Smith v. Consolidated Gas Co. 36 Misc. 131, 72 N. Y. Supp. 1084; Ruble v. Turner, 2 Hen. & M. 38; Ellis v. Bitzer, 2 Ohio, 89, 15 Am. Dec. 534; Gilbert v. Timms, 7 Ohio C. C. N. S. 253, 28 Ohio C. C. 107; Long v. Long, 57 Iowa, 497, 10 N. W. 875; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hilligoss, 171 Ind. 417, 131 Am. St. Rep. 258, 86 N. E. 485; Murphy v. Penniman, 105 Md. 452, 121 Am. St. Rep. 583, 66 Atl. 282.

De Courcy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The judge of the superior court ruled that, as the plaintiff's claim was unliquidated, the taking of money and the giving of the papers under seal to the defendants Horgan and Townsend, trustee, was a bar to any recovery against the defendant O'Kane. The correctness of this ruling is now presented for our determination.

The long-established doctrine that a release of one of several joint tortfeasors operates to discharge all is not applicable here, because no release was given by the plaintiff. Bacon, Abbr. title Release (B); Brown v. Cambridge, 3 Allen, 474; Aldrich v. Parnell, 147 Mass. 409, 18 N. E. 170. It is equally true that a satisfaction from one discharges all, as the plaintiff has only a single cause of action and is entitled to but one satisfaction in damages. Cocke v. Jenner, Hobart, 66; Brewer v. Casey, 196 Mass. 384, 82 N. E. 45. The claim argued by the defendant, however, that the plaintiff accepted the money from the other defendants in full satisfaction for her injuries, and thereby discharged her cause of action, does not seem to be raised by the report. The ruling made does not refer to such alleged accord and satisfaction. And when the plaintiff attempted to show that there was no intention to release her claim, the judge excluded the evidence, not on account of the form of the question objected to, but on the broad ground that "the paper speaks for itself." Even if we assume that this contention is fairly open to the defendant, the question whether the plaintiff accepted the money of the other defendants in full satisfaction of all injuries caused by the accident was one of fact for the jury on the evidence.

The main question in this case is whether the covenants not to sue, given by the plaintiff to two of the three joint tortfeasors, operate as a defense in favor of the defendant O'Kane, who was not a party to the covenants and contributed no part of the consideration therefor. The point in dispute never has been decided in this commonwealth.

The rule of law that a release which discharges the liability of one joint tortfeasor releases the others seems to be based upon the nature of their liability, which is one and indivisible, and is necessarily destroyed by the discharge of one. In like manner after satisfaction, although it moved from only one of the wrongdoers, no foundation remains for an action against anyone. 11 Ann. Cas. 397, note; 25 Harvard L. Rev. 203.

This basis for the rule does not exist in the case of a covenant not to sue one of several jointly liable. Here the liability is not discharged, and the plaintiff's right of action is retained against all the wrongdoers. For a breach of his covenant not to sue, he becomes liable for the damages suffered by the one to whom the covenant was given. It is true that a covenant not to sue an individual debtor may be pleaded in bar to the original cause of action. But this exception was early established in order to avoid circuity of action, as otherwise the court would be burdened with cross actions for the same damages, one on the original liability and the other on the covenant not to sue. Hodges v. Smith, Cro. Eliz. pt. 2, p. 623; Lacy v. Kynaston, 12 Mod. 548; Foster v. Purdy, 5 Met. 442.

The great weight of authority supports the doctrine that a covenant not to sue one of several joint tortfeasors does not operate as a release of the others from liability. Texarkana Teleph. Co. v. Pemberton, 86 Ark. 329, 111 S. W. 257; Chicago v. Babcock, 143 Ill. 358, 32 N. E. 271; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Averill, 224 Ill. 516, 79 N. E. 654; Drinkwater v. Jordan, 46 Me. 432; Musolf v. Duluth Edison Electric Co. 108 Minn. 369, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 451, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

122 N. W. 499; Arnett v. Missouri P. R. Co. 64 Mo. App. 368; Snow v. Chandler, 10 N. H. 92, 34 Am. Dec. 140; Line v. Nelson, 38 N. J. L. 358; Irvine v. Millbank, 56 N. Y. 635; Id. 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 378; Robertson v. Trammell, 98 Tex. 364, 83 S. W. 1098; Bloss v. Plymale, 3 W. Va. 393, 100 Am. Dec. 752; Ellis v. Esson, 50 Wis. 138, 36 Am. Rep. 830, 6 N. W. 518. This distinction between a release and a covenant not to sue has long been recognized in this commonwealth in actions of contract. Shed v. Pierce, 17 Mass. 623; Draper v. Weld, 13 Gray, 585; Kenworthy v. Sawyer, 125 Mass. 28. Generally speaking, it would seem that in this respect the same principle should apply alike to actions ex contractu and those ex delicto, and some of the courts have expressly so held. Duck v. Mayeu, [1892] 2 Q. B. 511, 62 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 69, 4 Reports, 38, 67 L. T. N. S. 547, 41 Week. Rep. 56, 57 J. P. 23; Snow v. Chandler, 10 N. H. 92, 34 Am. Dec. 140.

The confusion and apparent conflict of authorities have not arisen in cases like that at bar, where the agreement given to one of the joint wrongdoers is clearly an agreement not to sue, and nothing more. The distinction between the legal effect of a release and of a covenant not to sue is generally recognized. The controversy concerns rather the construction of a particular writing as a release or as a covenant not to sue, and the means whereby the two are to be distinguished. Where it is apparent from the paper that the intention was to discharge the liability of one of the joint wrongdoers, the courts quite generally hold that the original joint and indivisible liability is thereby extinguished, and that any clause by which parties seek to reserve a right of action against the other wrongdoers is repugnant to the release and void. Ducy v. Patterson, 11 Ann. Cas. 393, note; Gunther v. Lee, 45 Md. 60, 24 Am. Rep. 504; McBride v. Scott, 132 Mich. 176, 61 L.R.A. 445, 102 Am. St. Rep. 416, 93 N. W. 243, 1 Ann. Cas. 61; Seither v. Philadelphia Traction Co. 125 Pa. 397, 4 L.R.A. 54, 11 Am. St. Rep. 905, 17 Atl. 338; Abb v. Northern P. R. Co. 28 Wash. 428, 58 L.R.A. 293, 92 Am. St. Rep. 864, 68 Pac. 954. But where it is evident that the consideration paid to the plaintiff was not intended to be full compensation for his injuries, and the agreement signed by him, although in form a release, was clearly intended to preserve the liability of those who were not parties to it, many of the courts have sought to give effect to that intention by construing the agreement as in legal effect a covenant not to sue, and not a technical release. As stated by A. L. Smith, L. J., in Duck v. Meyen [1892] 2 Q. B. 511: "A rule of construction for such a document was laid down by the court of Queen's bench in Price v. Barker, 4 El. & Bl. 760, at page 777, 3 C. L. R. 927, 24 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 130, 1 Jur. N. S. 775, where it was held that, in determining whether the document be a release or a covenant not to sue, the intention of the parties was to be carried out, and, if it were clear that the right against a joint debtor was intended to be preserved, inasmuch as such right would not be preserved if the document were held to be a release, the proper construction, where this was sought to be done, was that it was a covenant not to sue, and not a release." And see Edens v. Fletcher, 79 Kan. 139, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 618, 98 Pac. 784; McAllester v. Sprague, 34 Me. 296; Gilbert v. Finch, 173 N. Y. 455, 61 L.R.A. 807, 93 Am. St. Rep. 623, 66 N. E. 133; Bloss v. Plymale, 3 W. Va. 393, 100 Am. Dec. 753; Ellis v. Esson, 50 Wis. 138, 36 Am. Rep. 830, 6 N. W. 518; Carey v. Bilby, 63 C. C. A. 361, 129 Fed. 203. The lack of harmony in the cases is partly due also to distinctions sometimes drawn between the effect of a release under seal and one not under seal; and between settlements made where the damages are certain or subject to computation, and where they are uncertain and a mere matter of opinion. But we are not concerned with this controversy in the present case, as the writings given by this plaintiff were admittedly nothing more than agreements not to sue.

The discontinuance of the action against the other defendants in itself does not affect the liability of the defendant O'Kane. The plaintiff at her election might have sued one or two or all of the tortfeasors. The discontinuance simply placed Horgan and Townsend in the same position they occupied before the litigation began. Sloan v. Herrick, 49 Vt. 328; Bloss v. Plymale, 3 W. Va. 393, 100 Am. Dec. 753, 58 L.R.A. 303, and cases collected in note.

We are of opinion that the covenants not to sue given in this case do not constitute a bar to the plaintiff's claim against the defendant O'Kane, and that the issue of accord and satisfaction was one of fact for the jury. Accordingly, the judge was not warranted in directing a verdict for the defendant as matter of law. We deem it unnecessary to consider the question of evidence raised, as it is not likely to arise at another trial.

New trial ordered.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

PARK CITY YACHT CLUB

v.

CITY OF BRIDGEPORT.

(85 Conn. 366, 82 Atl. 1035.)

Appeal — second appeal — law of case.

1. A ruling by an appellate court that in assessing benefits for a change in a highway, the court should have considered the history of the change, the fact that the municipality contemplated the change made, and its effect upon abutting property, is the law of the case upon a second appeal.

Highway — cutting off access — right to damages.

2. The owner of abutting property is entitled to damages for a change in a highway which results in raising a portion of its width to carry it over a bridge, leaving only a narrow strip terminating at the water in front of his property, the effect of which is to cut off travel past his property, and leave access to it only by a cul-de-sac which can be used by vehicles only when they back in one direction.

(April 9, 1912.)

RESERVATION by the Superior Court for Fairfield County for the opinion of the Supreme Court of Errors of questions arising upon an appeal from an assessment of special benefits for the improvement of Stratford avenue, in the city of Bridgeport. Judgment for plaintiff advised.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John W. Banks, for plaintiff:

The plaintiff is entitled to recover the entire amount of damages assessed by the trial court, including those arising from the diversion of traffic.

Park v. Chicago & S. W. R. Co. 43 Iowa, 636; Newton v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 72 Conn. 420, 44 Atl. 813; 1 Lewis, Em. Dom. 3d ed. § 198, p. 368; Brazell v. Seattle, 55 Wash. 180, 104 Pac. 155; Randolph, Em. Dom. § 410.

Where the plaintiff's property has been left upon a dead end with access from one direction entirely cut off, the cases uniformly hold that he has suffered special damages which can be recovered.

Chicago v. Burcky, 158 Ill. 103, 29 L.R.A. 569, 48 Am. St. Rep. 142, 42 N. E. 178;

Note.—The right of a property owner whose means of access from one direction is shut off or interfered with by closing of adjoining street or portion of street upon which he is situated, to recover damages therefor, is discussed in notes to Hyde v. Fall River, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 269, and Newark v. Hatt, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 637.

Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 64; Chicago v. Taylor, 125 U. S. 161, 31 L. ed. 638, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 820; Vanderburgh v. Minneapolis, 98 Minn. 329, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 741, 108 N. W. 480; Buchholz v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 148 N. Y. 640, 43 N. E. 76; Park v. Chicago & S. W. R. Co. 43 Iowa, 636; Re Melon Street, 182 Pa. 397, 38 L.R.A. 275, 38 Atl. 482; Johnston v. Old Colony R. Co. 18 R. I. 642, 49 Am. St. Rep. 800, 29 Atl. 594; Highbarger v. Milford, 71 Kan. 331, 80 Pac. 633; Dean v. Ann Arbor R. Co. 137 Mich. 459, 100 N. W. 773; Chicago v. Baker, 30 C. C. A. 364, 58 U. S. App. 569, 86 Fed. 753; Winnetka v. Clifford, 201 Ill. 475, 66 N. E. 384; Chamberlain v. West End & C. P. R. Co. 2 Best & S. 605, 32 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 173; Gillespie v. South Omaha, 79 Neb. 441, 112 N. W. 582; Scrutchfield v. Choctaw, O. & W. R. Co. 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 496, note; Dana v. Boston, 170 Mass. 593, 49 N. E. 1013; Cutter v. Boston, 200 Mass. 400, 86 N. E. 798; Cullen v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 66 Conn. 211, 33 Atl. 910.

Messrs. James A. Marr and John S. Pullman for defendant.

Wheeler, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The record in this case when before this court upon a former occasion (81 Conn. 76, 70 Atl. 631), contains a statement of facts substantially similar to those of the present record, by which it appears that the plaintiff is a yacht club, owning and occupying a clubhouse upon the south side of Stratford avenue, in Bridgeport, and on the easterly bank of an arm of the harbor, which was crossed by Stratford avenue by means of a solid stone causeway. Acting under its charter and the various votes and orders of its common council, committees, and boards, all of which appear in detail in the opinion in that case, the city tore down, in 1901 and 1902, the part of this causeway just west of plaintiff's premises and north of the present roadway in front of said premises, and laid out a highway and constructed a bridge north of the causeway, being parallel with said causeway, but much higher in grade, and having a high and immovable railing along its south side and extending 150 feet east of the entrance to the clubhouse. South of the bridge is a gap of water 23 feet wide left by the tearing out of the causeway. The traveled way remaining over the old causeway is only 24 feet wide. The plaintiff's property is thus left as a result of this improvement on a cul-de-sac. The former finding did not state directly whether or not the improvement ordered by the city contemplated a construction such as that in fact made. The present finding sets forth in detail the history of the building of the bridge and of the changes actually made, as evidence received to show that, at and before the lay-out and appraisal, the city contemplated the construction of the bridge and the physical changes in front of plaintiff's premises, and finally it sets forth the ultimate fact that this "was contemplated by the city before the said lay-out and appraisal." The court reserved the question whether the history and facts showing what use the city contemplated making of Stratford avenue as widened should have been excluded.

Two principal questions have been urged in argument: (1) That the superior court could not in this proceeding consider the effect upon the plaintiff's property of the physical changes proved. (2) That the damages suffered by the plaintiff by reason of these physical changes, and by reason of diversion of travel, are not recoverable.

In the former opinion we held that (p. 80) "the application alleges, in substance, that the improvement in question, namely, the lay-out, alteration, exchange, discontinuance, and enlargement of Stratford avenue, contemplated such a construction and working of the highway established in place of the one previously existing, that the plaintiff would be largely shut off from free and direct access from its adjoining property to the main traveled path of the highway," and that "the application appears to have been tried to the court upon the denial of these allegations." The opinion recites the proof of physical changes made by the city subsequent to the confirmation of the assessment, which accorded with the contemplated changes as alleged in the application, and says (p. 82): "The finding does not state directly whether or not the court found to be true the allegation of the complaint that the improvement ordered by the city contemplated a construction such as that proved upon the trial. It would perhaps appear from the memorandum of decision that the fact alleged was a fair inference from the facts proved." Upon the application and facts found, the trial judge had held that "'the only question open upon this proceeding is the effect of the widening of Stratford avenue,' and that, in consequence of this ruling, he 'did not, in fact, estimate the effect of said changes other than the widening of said highway upon the value of the appellant's property.'" The basis of the ruling was that the scope of the application was limited by the vote of the common council to the widening of Stratford avenue, and hence other physical changes were not elements of damage to be considered in this proceeding. This was the important question involved in the appeal reported in 81 Conn. 76, and was the most strongly argued of the questions presented on this reservation.

After reciting the various provisions of the charter and the proceedings thereunder, we say in our former opinion (pp. 78, 83): "This action of the common council completed a lay-out of the public improvement previously resolved upon by the common council, by which Stratford avenue was altered, changed, discontinued, and enlarged, as set forth in the report. . . . And in this case that improvement as established in front of the plaintiff's premises was a highway involving an alteration, extension, and practical discontinuance for public use of portions of a previously existing highway." We held this public improvement was of a very peculiar nature, and under this application, based, as it must have been, upon the action of the common council in instituting the improvement as contemplated by the city, "the superior court were bound to consider any injurious effect upon the value of the plaintiff's property, which might result from the contemplated peculiar construction of the highway, as well as any beneficial effect which might result from other causes, in determining whether or not the whole effect of the improvement was to specially benefit the plaintiff; . . . [and that] the provisions of the charter do not so limit the jurisdiction of the court."

We thus held that, under this application, all physical changes contemplated by the improvement should have been considered by the trial court, and that the record showed by inference that these physical changes had been contemplated by the improvement. Because of this we held the error of the trial court harmful. That no objection had been made to the proof of these physical changes was unimportant. We held them to be relevant and material to this action, otherwise we should not have deemed the failure of the trial court to consider them erroneous. This action is a retrial of the same application, with a denial of the allegations of physical changes contemplated by the city.

The material facts found are the same as on the former trial, with the addition of facts showing the history of the improvement, and that the city contemplated the construction and physical changes which we said was perhaps "a fair inference from the facts proved." As we have seen, we held that the superior court had jurisdiction in this proceeding to consider the effect of all of said physical changes upon the plaintiff's property. The former decision upon this point must be accepted as the law of this case. It follows that all of this evidence was properly received.

One other question is reserved which was not specifically included in our former decision: Whether in assessing damages the diversion of travel from passing the plaintiff's premises is an element to be considered. As an abutting owner, the plaintiff has a special and peculiar interest in the street fronting his premises. Cullen v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 66 Conn. 221, 226, 33 Atl. 910. We have spoken of these rights collectively as the easement of access to the premises of an owner. Newton v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 72 Conn. 420, 426, 427, 44 Atl. 813. It is a general rule of law that the owner can recover damages for a direct injury to his right of access, one which is special and peculiar to him, differing from a general damage suffered by him in common with the public, not merely in degree, but also in kind. This right to compensation arises either through constitutional prohibition or statutory provisions.

The statutory appeal provided by § 59 of the charter of the city of Bridgeport (12 Special Laws, p. 538), giving the court the power to "confirm, annul, or modify the said assessments, or make such order in the premises as equity may require," is certainly broad enough to include all cases of damage within this general rule. Whether it would include cases not within the rule we need not now consider.

The vacation of a street closes the lots fronting upon it and destroys the owner's access. The vacation of a part of a street does not ordinarily permit a recovery to an owner fronting on another part of this street. And this is true, even though it result in some inconvenience to his access, or compel a more circuitous route of access, or a diversion of travel in front of the premises, and a consequent diminution of value.

To this general rule there are exceptions, and the leading case of Smith v. Boston, 7 Cush, 254, 256, recognizes their existence. Chief Justice Shaw, in discussing this rule, said: "We do not mean to be understood as laying down a universal rule." Newton v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 72 Conn.

420, 426, 427, 44 Atl. 813, is an example of the application of the general rule. There the improvement did not change the highway in front of the plaintiff's premises, nor cut off travel from either direction. It merely required the distant travel from the south to take a somewhat longer course, and affected his property no differently than all other property on the street.

The case before us presents an entirely different set of facts; indeed, the physical changes resulting from this improvement are of a most unusual character, and make the case a clear exception to the general rule. The plaintiff's premises are in cul-de-sac, and the traveled way remaining is so narrow as to prevent ordinary modern travel coming to these premises, unless it backs out the 150 feet to the main highway. Access to this property by travel from the west is destroyed, access to it from the north is prevented and from the east is seriously interfered with. All traffic to and fro in front of plaintiff's premises is absolutely shut off. In many ways this is a practical discontinuance of the highway. The vacation of a part of a street which leaves property abutting on the remaining part of the street, with access to the system of streets in either direction, has generally been held to constitute no actionable injury. But the vacation of a part of a street which destroys all access by property abutting on the remaining part of the street, to the system of streets in one direction, thus putting the property on a cul-de-sac, has generally been held to constitute an actionable injury. Johnston v. Old Colony R. Co. 18 R. I. 642, 49 Am. St. Rep. 800, 29 Atl. 594; Chicago v. Burcky, 158 Ill. 103, 109, 110, 29 L.R.A. 568, 49 Am. St. Rep. 142, 42 N. E. 178; Highbarger v. Milford, 71 Kan. 331, 340, 80 Pac. 633; Lewis Em. Dom. 3d ed. § 198, p. 368. The destruction of and interference with access to this property could not help but injuriously affect its value. The diversion of travel must be, as the court has found it to be, a large element of damage, and it ought to be included in the assessment of damages. The exception to the general rule, applying to property placed in a cul-de-sac, is in our judgment necessary to relieve a somewhat harsh rule of law of a part of its rigor.

The Superior Court is advised to render judgment setting aside the assessment of benefits made by the board of appraisal, and awarding the plaintiff damages above benefits in the sum of $1,200. In this opinion the other Judges concur.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

ROBERT MUGGE, Plff. in Err.

v.

HENRY B. BRACKEN.

(— Fla. —, 58 So. 128.)

Highway — negligent collision — liability.

Where a person who is not careless, but who is properly walking along or across a street, is injured by a vehicle rapidly and negligently driven upon him before he has reasonable opportunity to escape, the party so driving the vehicle is liable in damages for injuries proximately caused by the negligence.

(March 12, 1912.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Hillsborough County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to Headnote by WHITFIELD, Ch. J.

Note. — Duty of pedestrian when crossing or traveling public street to avoid passing teams.

The early cases upon the question of the duty of pedestrians when crossing or traveling public streets to avoid passing teams is covered in the note to Borg v. Spokane Toilet Supply Co. 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 160; and the present note includes only cases which have passed upon the question since the writing of that note.

Duty to look and listen.

The rule requiring a person to look up and down applies only to steam railroads, and is not applicable to a pedestrian crossing a street; as to such person there is no absolute rule, but it is always a question of due care under the circumstances. Kayser v. New York Mail Co. 133 N. Y. Supp. 440.

The failure of a pedestrian to look and listen for approaching teams as he passes over a cross walk at a junction of two streets is not necessarily such negligence as will prevent recovery if he is run over by a passing team. Donovan v. Bernhard, 208 Mass. 181, 94 N. E. 276.

However, one who attempts to cross a street upon which there are car tracks and passing teams on a jog or a run is bound to be watchful for teams every moment of the time. Ennis v. Connery, 156 Ill. App. 554.

See Berler v. Kane, under division entitled "Children."

Duty when traveling in street or crossing where there is no cross walk.

There is no rule of law which makes it negligence for a person to stand in the street for a few minutes when he has taken proper precautions to look for any ap-recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. F. Himes and M. B. Withers, for plaintiff in error:

Plaintiff was guilty of such contributory negligence as prevents any recovery.

Borg v. Spokane Toilet Supply Co. 50 Wash. 204, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 160, 96 Pac. 1037; Harris v. Commercial Ice Co. 153 Pa. 278, 25 Atl. 1133; Dimuria v. Seattle Transfer Co. 50 Wash. 633, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 471, 97 Pac. 657; Belton v. Baxter, 54 N. Y. 245, 13 Am. Rep. 578; Gerity v. Haley, 29 W. Va. 98, 11 S. E. 901; German-American Lumber Co. v. Hannah, 60 Fla. 70, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 882, 53 So. 516.

proaching vehicles. Berler v. Kane, 139 App. Div. 76, 123 N. Y. Supp. 835.

A pedestrian has the legal right to travel on foot upon the traveled way, whether the sidewalk is at that time passable or impassable, but whether he acts with reasonable care in leaving the sidewalk or the traveled way at that time depends upon whether his conduct under the circumstances conform to that of an ordinarily prudent person under the same circumstances. Hope v. Valente, 84 Conn. 248, 79 Atl. 583. The court said: "A sleet or snowstorm may compel this course. He may find the sidewalk obstructed or impassable. He may desire to cross the roadway. He may be left in the roadway on alighting from a car or an omnibus. He may be leading a cart or pushing a wagon. He may walk upon the roadway to escape the crowded sidewalk. These and other reasons may take him upon the traveled way. His legal right to be there is undoubted. The situation may be so dangerous that it would be negligence to walk in the roadway. The circumstances would determine that, and the negligence of the pedestrian cannot be asserted as matter of law, nor can his presence in the roadway be prima facie evidence of want of care."

But one who stands in the roadway of a street places himself in a position necessarily fraught with danger, and must exercise care corresponding to the exigencies of the situation. Boker v. H. Koehler & Co. 116 N. Y. Supp. 540, affirmed in 135 App. Div. 914, 119 N. Y. Supp. 1115.

A pedestrian has the right to cross a street at any point, exercising reasonable care for his own safety. McAvoy v. Paterson Brewing & Malting Co. 78 N. J. L. 633, 75 Atl. 743.

So he has the right to cross the street between its regular crossings, but he is bound when so doing to be reasonably careful. Peterson v. Ballantine, 205 N. Y. 29, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 98 N. E. 202.

A pedestrian and the driver of a wagon have equal rights in the street, and while the sidewalk is the place for pedestrians alone, yet they have the right also to walk across or along the street; and it is the 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Messrs. Dickenson & Dickenson, for defendant in error:

A footman, whether of full age or an infant, who does not anticipate and take special precaution against injury from the reckless conduct of horsemen in riding or driving at an unusual and dangerous rate of speed, cannot be said as matter of law, under ordinary circumstances, to be guilty of contributory negligence.

Coombs v. Purrington, 42 Me. 332; Williams v. Richards, 3 Car. & K. 81; Stringer v. Frost, 116 Ind. 477, 2 L.R.A. 614, 9 Am. St. Rep. 875, 19 N. E. 331; Moebus v. Herrmann, 108 N. Y. 349, 2 Am. St. Rep. 440, 15 N. E. 415, 29 Cyc. 530, 531, note; Hennessey v. Taylor, 189 Mass. 583, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 345, 76 N. E. 224, 4 Ann.

duty of both pedestrians and travelers by vehicles to recognize the right of each to be upon the street; and it is the duty of travelers by vehicle to keep the same under control so as not to injure pedestrians in the proper exercise of their rights. American Bolt Co. v. Fennell, 158 Ala. 484, 48 So. 97.

Children.

Where a boy who has been roller skating put his foot upon the curb for the purpose of taking off his skates, looked for approaching vehicles not only when he left the sidewalk, but after he had been standing in the street for some minutes, the question of contributory negligence is for the jury; it appearing that at the time it was daylight and that the wagon which struck him came from behind without warning. Berler v. Kane, 139 App. Div. 76, 123 N. Y. Supp. 835.

In Pastore v. Livingston, 72 Misc. 555, 131 N. Y. Supp. 971, there was held to be a total absence of prudence and care on the part of those in charge of an infant a little over five years of age which was imputable to the infant, where his grandmother sent him downstairs to his father's store, telling him that his mother would go across the street with him to a candy store, and the infant disregarded her advice and went across the street—which at the hour of night when the accident happened was a busy one—alone, and was struck by a wagon when attempting to recross the street.

See also Beller v. Levy under division entitled, "Failure to discover approaching vehicle."

Failure to discover approaching vehicle.

The question of the plaintiff's contributory negligence is for the jury where it appears that an infant plaintiff looked in both directions before stepping off of the curb, and saw no wagon approaching, although her view was in no way obstructed, but was struck by a wagon being driven at 6 or 8 miles an hour, the driver of which Case 396; Farnsworth v. Tampa Electric Co. — Fla. — 57 So. 233; Hainlin v. Budge, 56 Fla. 342, 47 So. 825; William Bensel Constr. Co. v. Homer, 2 Ga. App. 369, 58 S. E. 489; Stringer v. Frost, 116 Ind. 477, 2 L.R.A. 614, 9 Am. St. Rep. 875, 19 N. E. 331; Coombs v. Purrington, 42 Me. 332; Boss v. Litton, 5 Car. & P. 407; Williams v. Richards, 3 Car. & K. 81; German-American Lumber Co. v. Hannah, 60 Fla. 70, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 882, 53 So. 516.

Whitfield, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Bracken recovered a judgment against Mugge for personal injuries received by being run against by a horse and buggy driven by Mugge in a street in the city of Tampa, Florida, and Mugge took writ of error. The briefs state that "it is contended that contributory negligence is apparent from the facts testified to by the plaintiff himself and by his witnesses."

It appears that as Bracken was crossing Twigg's street towards the northeast, to enter Jefferson street going north, he saw Mugge's team coming rapidly from the west about a block away on Twigg's street. After crossing Twigg's street, Bracken entered Jefferson street, and the team, continuing at the high rate of speed and with much noise, turned into Jefferson street, striking Bracken from the rear, when he had not looked back or noticed its approach in time to avoid it. It also appears gave no warning, when she was at a distance of about 3 feet from the curb. Beller v. Levy, 68 Misc. 182, 124 N. Y. Supp. 411. The court said: "A person who looks and sees no wagon approaching for a sufficient distance to warrant an ordinarily cautious person in believing that it is safe to attempt a crossing has the right to proceed, relying on the assumption that a warning would be given of an approaching vehicle at an excessive rate of speed and which was not in sight when he left the sidewalk; and the absence of additional facts calling for the exercise of greater vigilance cannot be said to be negligence as a matter of law if she does not thereafter look in the direction from which danger happens to come."

And where a pedestrian about to cross a street looked and saw a car approaching in the street at his right hand, but there is nothing to show that there was anything on his left which indicated danger, he is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, although he was struck by a team which was driven rapidly from the left, before he reached the car tracks. Donovan v. Bernhard, 208 Mass. 181, 94 N. E. 276.

So the fact that a pedestrian did not see an approaching cab which struck him does not necessarily show contributory negligence on his part, where the proximate cause of the accident was the rapid pace of the vehicle and the failure to check its speed at a point where pedestrians were to be expected. Mordente v. New York Cab Co. 109 N. Y. Supp. 12.

And where one alighted from a street car, looked for approaching vehicles, and started across the street, and while so proceeding was run over and injured, she is not precluded from recovery because she did not constantly look for vehicles while walking across the street, since if she looked when she started across and saw no approaching danger, it should not be declared as a matter of law that she was guilty of such negligence as would preclude a recovery, simply because she did not constantly keep up a vigilant watch. Patton 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

v. Morrin-Powers Mercantile Co. 231 Mo. 298, 132 S. W. 684.

In Gallagher v. Kahn, 223 Pa. 451, 72 Atl. 854, it was held that the question of negligence and contributory negligence was properly submitted to the jury, where the plaintiff when about to cross the street saw a car coming easterly thereon, and walked one third over the street, stopped to let the car pass, and then, before starting, looked and saw another car approaching at some distance and continued on his way, and when about half way between the east-bound track and the south curb line, was knocked down and run over by a cab coming from the west at a high rate of speed, he having testified that he did not see the cab until it was right upon him, the court said: "In order to safeguard himself while crossing the street, the plaintiff was under the need of looking in more than one direction. Cars and vehicles of all kinds were liable to pass either way. He was bound to avoid collision with other pedestrians if any were there, and to keep a reasonable lookout for obstructions of any kind in the street. Nor was he bound to foresee that a cab would come down upon him at the regular street crossing at an unusual rate of speed. It was only the ordinary conditions of the street traffic that he was bound to anticipate. Plaintiff said that he was looking straight ahead of him as he walked across the street, but that his line of vision took in as much as 20 feet on each side of him. It was for the jury to say whether, if this statement of plaintiff was true, he was justified in proceeding to cross as he did. It may be that a pedestrian could ordinarily cross in safety the line of travel of a horse and cab, if it was not within 20 feet of him when he started to cross that line. At any rate it was not for the court to say that he was, under the circumstances, negligent in making the attempt. In such cases as this, where the line of separation between questions of law and questions of fact is very shadowy, and minds equally intelligent and impartial might draw different conclusions, the safer that Mugge made no effort to avoid the collision, and that the team approaching from the rear was upon Bracken in Jefferson street before he knew of its approach on that street, though his sight and hearing were good.

While Bracken cannot in law excuse himself from all care for his safety upon the theory that he supposed Mugge would continue on Twiggs street, and not turn into Jefferson street, yet if Bracken was exercising ordinary care in proceeding along Jefferson street, and Mugge suddenly turned his team into Jefferson street, going at a high rate of speed, and struck Bracken before he reasonably could have escaped, there is no contributory negligence, and Mugge is liable. Mugge and Bracken had equal rights in the use of the streets; but each is required to exercise due care for the rights of others, as well as for his own safety.

Where a person who is not being careless, but who is properly walking along or across a street, and is injured by a vehicle rapidly and negligently driven upon him before he has reasonable opportunity to escape, the party so driving the vehicle is liable in damages for injuries proximately caused by the negligence. Even if Bracken reasonably should have expected that Mugge, who was rapidly driving down Twiggs street, would or might turn up Jefferson street, into which street Bracken had passed, the law did not require Bracken to anticipate that Mugge would continue and wiser plan is to take the judgment of twelve impartial men of the average experience of the community. We are satisfied that disputed questions of negligence and contributory negligence were very properly submitted to the determination of the jury, and the judgment is affirmed."

And the question of contributory negligence is for the jury where the plaintiff's evidence tended to show that he looked down the street before alighting from the driver's seat on a wagon, and saw no car or vehicle approaching, and then stepped upon the ground, and was suddenly struck by the wheel of a wagon which was not traveling on the right side of the street, but came diagonally across it from the opposite side. McKernan v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co. 16 Cal. App. 280, 116 Pac. 677.

In Kayser v. New York Mail Co. 133 N. Y. Supp. 440, where the plaintiff was run over by a wagon going at a fast trot, in the evening, when the weather was muggy and dark, and the lights were lighted just before he reached the sidewalk, and he testified that before starting across the street and again when half way across he looked up and down the street, and did not see the wagon, it was held that the question of contributory negligence was for the jury.

In Nack v. Michaeliski, 134 N. Y. Supp. 1113, there was held to be a clear case of contributory negligence established, where the evidence tended to show that the plaintiff stepped off of a moving street car, and was immediately struck by a horse which had been driven alongside of the car for some distance, and there was evidence that the plaintiff did not look back before alighting from the car, although he testified that he looked enough to see that it was clear.

And where the evidence shows that one who was struck by a team which was negligently driven wore a heavy overcoat turned up and a heavy ear cap, which was down, and there was nothing to prevent him from seeing the approaching team, but he walked diagonally across the street in the direction from which the team was coming, looking ahead, he is guilty of contributory negligence where it appears that there was a clear space between him and the team. Peterson v. Ballantine, 205 N. Y. 29, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 98 N. E. 202.

Where approaching vehicle is seen.

Where a pedestrian first saw the team which injured her when she had just crossed the second track on her way diagonally across a street, and continued to cross the street, but was struck in the confusion resulting from the driver of the wagon and herself turning backward and forward in attempting to avoid each other, she was not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence in not keeping out of the way after first seeing the team. McAweeny v. Journal Printing Co. 114 Minn. 262, 130 N. W. 1103.

Articles projecting or sagging from vehicle.

The case of Young v. Herrmann, 119 App. Div. 445, 104 N. Y. Supp. 72, which is set out in the earlier note, sustaining the proposition that it is for the jury to determine whether a pedestrian who at night attempted to cross a busy street, between vehicles, and was tripped by a rope attaching them together, exercised due care, was affirmed in 192 N. Y. 554, 85 N. E. 1118, without opinion.

Where a pedestrian who was part way across the street and stopped to allow a wagon to pass, testified that the wagon appeared to be an ordinary wagon with an ordinary load, and that she did not see protruding iron at the back of the wagon although she looked; and it appeared that she stood on the side of the cross street in a position that would place her out of danger from a wagon normally loaded, in case a turn was made either way in the cross street,—she is not guilty of contributory negligence, since the only thing she did not anticipate was that the wagon carried iron protruding 8 or 10 feet from the back of the bed, and this she was not bound to do. Gielens v. Fidelity Transfer & Storage Co. 63 Wash. 383, 115 Pac. 850.

And in an action by one who was injured his rapid speed, when he turned into Jefferson street and saw Bracken walking in that street ahead of him. The vehicle Mugge was driving approached Bracken from the rear at a rapid speed, while Bracken was walking where and as he had a right to do, with apparently nothing in his surroundings to warn him of the careless rapid driving of the vehicle into the street just behind him. If Bracken had looked behind, he would have seen the approaching team; but he was not required to look behind, when the surrounding circumstances did not make that precaution reasonably necessary for his safety. He had a right to pass along Jefferson street, and he also had a right to assume that the drivers of teams in the street would have due and proper regard for his safety. There is nothing to indicate that Bracken was not exercising ordinary care under the circumstances for his own safety. When Mugge turned into Jefferson street, it was his duty to drive his team with due regard for the rights and safety of others in the street; and as he saw Bracken walking ahead of him he should have slackened his speed or stopped, if necessary, to prevent injury to the pedestrian. He evidently could have avoided the collision, which was caused by his fault in driving rapidly and in disregard of Bracken's rights before and at the time of the injury. The evidence indicates that the rapid passage of the team over the paved while standing on the curb, by being struck by timbers projecting from a wagon negligently driven around a corner, an instruction that, if the plaintiff was standing in such a position on the sidewalk as to render it dangerous, and that as the wagon approached the corner he was warned of the danger and was heedless of the warning; and the jury believed that an ordinarily prudent man under like circumstances, in the exercise of ordinary care, would have moved from the position, and if plaintiff had moved he would not have been injured, he could not recover,—is as favorable to the defendants as they are entitled to. Firor v. Taylor, 116 Md. 69, 81 Atl. 389.

Acts in emergency.

It is not contributory negligence as a matter of law for one who was struck by a wagon driven at a high rate of speed to step backwards, in front of the wagon, upon a warning shout being given by a bystander, where it appeared that she was walking across the street to take a car and was about to stop for a car when the warning was given. Wyer v. Ratican, 150 Mo. App. 474, 131 S. W. 155. The court said: "Both plaintiff's mother and defendant's wagon had an equal right to the use of the street; and, while the law enjoins upon defendant the duty of exercising ordinary care for pedestrians or others rightfully in the thoroughfare, it is true enough that the same obligation rested upon plaintiff's mother as to her own safety. However, in going into the street for the purpose of boarding a car, she had the right to assume that defendant would exercise ordinary care for the safety of herself and others there being, and not drive its team upon her in a race with others at a rate of 10 miles per hour. The evidence tends to prove that the driver was oblivious to the deceased's position of peril, while her attention was directed toward the approaching car, which she intended to board. As before stated, the fact that plaintiff's mother, in the excitement incident to the occasion, without an opportunity for reflection, stepped backward, in front of the team, upon a warning halloosed by a bystander, is not sufficient to charge her with contributory negligence as a matter of law; for beyond doubt she conducted herself in the premises as other ordinarily prudent persons might do under the same circumstances. The law, in its exactions with respect to the exercise of ordinary care for one's safety, is neither unreasonable nor unjust, but makes allowances for rash conduct under stress of circumstances, induced by another's negligence, which tend to excite one's judgment or distract attention."

Vehicles approaching from behind.

In Di Iorio v. Jordan Marsh Co. 211 Mass. 280, 97 N. E. 905, where the plaintiff, with one foot in the street and the other on the sidewalk, was pulling backward and attempting with another to move a good sized box which was partially on the sidewalk and partially projecting over the curb, and was struck by a wagon which came from behind, it appearing that she had looked around once, it was held that it could not be said as a matter of law that she was guilty of contributory negligence. The court said: "The plaintiff was a traveler upon a public way. It was lawful for her to move the box from one store to another on the same side of the street. There was a narrow sidewalk on a narrow street, and both were crowded. It cannot be said that there was any lack of care in selecting the curb of the sidewalk as the portion of the way in which to move the box. The circumstances in which the plaintiff was placed were somewhat unusual. She was pulling at a box which by its size and shape afforded a considerable protection. It projected into the street probably farther than her body. It was so large that it would not escape the observation of any careful driver on the street. It was being moved slowly, and by protruding into the street might cause her to think that others would avoid collision with it, and that by reason of her nearness to it and partial street made much noise, and it is urged that this noise should have warned Bracken of the danger. This is not tenable, since the jury were warranted by the evidence in finding, as they in effect did, that it was not Bracken's duty to look back under the circumstances, or to expect Mugge to violently drive against him. There is positive evidence that Bracken apparently, and in fact, did not know of the approach of the team upon him until it was too late to avoid it; and the evidence is clear that Mugge knew or should reasonably have known that Bracken, who was in front of him, going in the same direction, with his back to the team, apparently did not know the team was upon him until it was impossible to escape injury. See 2 Elliott, Roads & Streets, § 1088; Shea v. Reema, 36 La. Ann. 966; Bowser v. Wellington, 126 Mass. 391; Stringer v. Frost, 116 Ind. 477, 19 N. E. 331, 2 L.R.A. 614, 9 Am. St. Rep. 875, and notes; Hennessey v. Taylor, 189 Mass. 583, 76 N. E. 224, 3 shelter by it she might relax her outlook for danger. Although one must use proper care while upon a public way, he may rely in part upon the presumption that other travelers will use a reasonable degree of care. Moreover, the plaintiff was being aided by a man at the other end of the box, who was facing in the direction from which any team would come, and on whom, without express stipulation to that effect, on account of his opportunity for constant knowledge of her position, she might in some slight degree rely to warn her of approaching harm. Her purpose was to move the box only a very short distance. Ordinarily, one walking backward on such a street would be lacking in due care. But the present facts are in a measure exceptional, and, though close to the line, the plaintiff's conduct cannot in our opinion be pronounced negligent, as matter of law."

In Vaughn v. William J. Lemp Brewing Co. 152 Mo. App. 48, 132 S. W. 293, the case was held to be properly left to the jury where the plaintiff's evidence was, in substance, that at the time of the injury there was a fire in the business part of a large city, which caused a throng of people to collect in the street; and that she was struck in such street from behind by the defendant's wagon when crossing the street, after having looked and seen no vehicles approaching; while the defendant's evidence tended to show that there was no crowd in the street the time of the accident, and that the driver of the wagon shouted a warning to the plaintiff, but she paid no attention to it, and did not attempt to stop, and that he put the brakes on the wagon and attempted to stop it.

See also Berler v. Kane under division entitled "Children."

Reliance upon presumption of exercise of due care by driver.

A pedestrian has a right to presume that those using the street will exercise a proper degree of care, and while he must use proper care himself he may trust something to this presumption. Donovan v. Bernhard, 208 Mass. 181, 94 N. E. 276.

And a pedestrian who stopped to allow a wagon to pass after she had proceeded half way across the street has a right to presume that, if the place at which she stood while waiting for the wagon was a place of danger because of some abnormal condition on the road, the driver of the wagon would warn her of that fact, either requesting her to stand further away, or bringing the team to such a rate of speed that the danger would be avoided. Gielens v. Fidelity Transfer & Storage Co. 63 Wash. 383, 115 Pac. 850.

And where a pedestrian was crossing a proper cross walk, walking in the usual way, after having looked in each direction and stopped to keep out of the way of an approaching automobile, which he observed, he was not bound to anticipate that a horse and wagon would come rapidly down a cross street, turn suddenly, and run against him. Keaveny v. Moran, 208 Mass. 277, 94 N. E. 274.

A finding that a pedestrian is not guilty of contributory negligence is supported by evidence that she was crossing at the proper place, twice looked to see if danger threatened, and believed that she could safely cross, and apparently could have done so except for the increase of speed by the driver of a team just preceding the collision, which occurred just as she was in the act of stepping to the curb. Talbot v. Ginocchio, — Cal. App. —, 123 Pac. 223.

And it might properly be found that one who was injured when going around the end of a standing car was not negligent where she knew that teams going along the road on the other side of the car went on the further side of the street, and there was no evidence that she knew or had reason to believe that teams would carelessly be driven on the side of the road next the car, in such a manner as to render it highly dangerous to those alighting therefrom. Chatel v. Schonland, 75 N. H. 543, 139 Am. St. Rep. 739, 78 Atl. 128.

And where the evidence in an action brought by one who was injured by being run into by a buggy is such that the jury may properly infer that the horse and buggy were so near, and the conduct of the driver such, that the plaintiff had the right to suppose that the horse was held up to allow him to cross in safety, a nonsuit is improper. McAvoy v. Paterson Brewing & Malting Co. 78 N. J. L. 633, 75 Atl. 743.

As to reciprocal duty of operator of automobile and pedestrian, see note to Baker v. Close, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487, and notes there referred to covering the early cases upon this question. J. T. W.

L.R.A.(N.S.) 345, 4 Ann. Cas. 396, and notes.

Among the charges given to the jury at the request of the plaintiff was the following:

"The questions of negligence of the defendant and of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff are both for the jury to decide from all the facts and circumstances of the case; but I charge you as a matter of law that a traveler on a highway is not, as a matter of law, bound to be continuously looking or listening to ascertain whether vehicles are approaching, under the penalty that his failure to do so will constitute contributory negligence, precluding a recovery for injuries sustained in a collision. The usual rule of ordinary care does not impose upon him the burden of being constantly on the lookout to see if his path is free from danger, or in a state of apprehension of personal injury from other travelers. He has not only the right to presume that the way is reasonably fitted for his use, but also has the right to presume that those who may be lawfully using it with himself will exercise a proper degree of care."

While the precise language of this charge is not approved, yet it is clear that under the facts in evidence this charge could not reasonably have misled the jury to the injury of the defendant. In view of the injuries shown to have been sustained by the plaintiff, it is not clear that the $400 damages allowed are excessive.

This discussion disposes of the specific as well as the general contentions of the plaintiff in error; and the conclusion follows that there was no reversible error in overruling the demurrer to the evidence, in denying the motion for new trial, and in giving the charge assigned and argued as error.

Counsel for the plaintiff in error rely largely upon the following cases: Borg v. Spokane Toilet Supply Co. 50 Wash. 204, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 160, 96 Pac. 1037; Harris v. Commercial Ice Co. 153 Pa. 278, 25 Atl. 1133; Dimuria v. Seattle Transfer Co. 50 Wash. 633, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 471, 97 Pac. 657; Belton v. Baxter, 54 N. Y. 245, 13 Am. Rep. 578; Gerity v. Haley, 29 W. Va. 98, 11 S. E. 901. Those cases do not present facts analogous to the ones here considered. Here the plaintiff below did not by his carelessness subject himself to the danger afforded by another's negligence; but he was proceeding on the street within his rights, and in the exercise of ordinary care, when he was injured by the negligence of another.

The judgment is affirmed.

39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Taylor, Shackelford, Cockrell, and Hocker, JJ., concur.

A petition for rehearing having been filed the following Per Curiam response was handed down on April 16, 1912:

The statements contained in the demurrer to the evidence do not show contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff.

It clearly appears that the plaintiff knew the defendant was rapidly driving down Twiggs street, making a noise, and that the plaintiff turned into Jefferson street, but did not know the defendant had turned into that street behind him until it was too late to avoid the injury; and that "the defendant was driving in a run or gallop and whipping his horse when coming on Twiggs street to said crossing, and continued to do so until after plaintiff was struck."

A rehearing is denied.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

J. P. SUNDGREN

v.

JOHN STEVENS.

(86 Kan. 154, 119 Pac. 322.)

Damages — assault — inadequacy — new trial.

1. In an action for damages for assault and battery, the testimony showed that the defendant, without legal justification, struck plaintiff in the face, causing some injury to the nose and profuse bleeding therefrom, followed for over two months by pain and clogging up of the nose. The defendant admitted the assault, and introduced no evi-

Headnotes by WEST, J.

Note. — When verdict in action for assault set aside for inadequacy of damages.

As to review by appellate court of ruling of the trial court on motion to grant a new trial in an action for bodily injuries, on the ground of inadequacy of damages awarded, see note to Toledo R. & Light Co. v. Mason, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 130.

Earlier cases on the point here annotated are to be found in a subdivision of the note to Benton v. Collins, 47 L.R.A. 33, on the subject of inadequacy of damages as a ground for setting aside a verdict.

By the general common-law rule new trials were not granted upon the ground of inadequate damages in actions of trespass, and perhaps in all cases of tort. But this rule has been relaxed, and it is now held both in England and in the courts of the United States that no reason can be given for setting aside verdicts because of dence. The court instructed the jury that if they found that the plaintiff had been unlawfully assaulted and beaten, they should allow reasonable compensation. The jury found for the plaintiff, and assessed his damages at $1; 50 cents for physical pain, and 50 cents for insult and indignity. Held, that the verdict should be set aside for inadequacy.

Trial — disregarding testimony.

2. While the jury are the exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses, they are not authorized arbitrarily, or from partiality or caprice, to disregard uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony, or facts shown beyond question, both by testimony and by admission.

(Mason and Burch, JJ., dissent.)

(December 9, 1911.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Saline County after verdict in his favor for less than the excessive damages which does not apply to setting them aside for inadequacy of damages. Leavitt v. Dow, 105 Me. 50, 134 Am. St. Rep. 534, 72 Atl. 735, 17 Ann. Cas. 1072, 3 Cyc. 1109.

In Barrette v. Carr, 75 Vt. 425, 56 Atl. 93, it was said: "The true rule is, that where the verdict is either so great or so small as to plainly indicate that in reaching it the jury either disregarded the testimony or acted from passion or prejudice, it is the duty of the court to set it aside. Where the damages rest in the judgment of the jury, they are, of course, not to be held either excessive or inadequate, unless they are grossly so; and in that respect actions of tort for personal injury commonly differ from actions in which there is some standard of damages disclosed by the contract of the parties or by exact evidence of pecuniary loss."

In Henning v. Bartz, 25 Ohio C. C. 15, the court said in argument: "If the verdict [in an action for assault] is so small as to be clearly contrary to the weight of the evidence, considering the injury sustained, we think that a judgment might be reversed on that ground."

A verdict for the plaintiff of $1 damages for an assault will be set aside as inadequate where the evidence clearly shows that he was severely wounded and suffered great pain, paid his doctor $63 for treatment, and $10 for other things needful to one in his condition; and that he had made a contract to teach a three months' school at $40 per month, which he was unable to perform because of his injury. Dunbar v. Cowger, 68 Ark. 444, 59 S. W. 951. "To suffer such a verdict as to the damages to stand," said the court, "would be a travesty upon justice."

And where the jury's award was for less than one half of the actual pecuniary loss sustained by the plaintiff up to the time of 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

amount claimed in an action brought to recover damages for an assault and battery. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Z. C. Millikin for appellant.

Messrs. C. W. Burch and B. I. Litowich for appellee.

West, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff, Sundgren, went to see his neighbor, Stevens, about helping fix a fence between their farms, which adjoined. Stevens and his son were in the feed lot. It was just at dusk. Stevens claimed that plaintiff had told him he would not stand by some arrangement he had made, to which plaintiff replied that he did not do that—that he never backed out—to which Stevens replied that plaintiff was calling him a liar (which plaintiff denied), and jerked a whip from a buggy, but did not strike. Later in the conversation plaintiff again the trial, and was manifestly inadequate as compensation for the damages he had sustained, it was held that the trial court should have granted the motion for a new trial. De Freitas v. Nunes, 130 Ill. App. 195, wherein it appeared that the defendant, with a revolver, deliberately caused the plaintiff to lose his left eye, and the uncontroverted evidence showed that, as a result of his injury, he was unable to work for nine months,—thereby sustaining damages to the amount of $450; that his hospital expenses were $60; that he incurred liability for professional services of a physician and oculist to the amount of $200; and that he owed $100 for the services of nurses who attended him.

Where two separate, unprovoked assaults, accompanied by grossly insulting language, were publicly made by the defendant upon the plaintiff, and he suffered some physical, was forced to spend $30 for expenses incurred in consequence of the assault, and was subjected to much humiliation, it was held in Leavitt v. Dow, supra, that a verdict in his favor for the nominal sum of 1 cent was clearly inadequate, and that a new trial should be granted.

In Lerner v. Cohen, 116 N. Y. Supp. 567, where the defendant, without provocation, struck the plaintiff a violent blow in the mouth, which caused a tooth to be knocked out and another loosened, and his face to swell and bleed, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to substantial damages, and upon the jury's bringing in a verdict for nominal damages of 6 cents, it was set aside as inadequate, and a new trial ordered.

Where the plaintiff, who was assaulted and ejected from a building, paid out at least $10 in the care of the wound he received, and unquestionably suffered damages in pain, inconvenience, and loss of time, it was held that a verdict for $10 was said that he always stood by his arrangements, when Stevens struck him in the face, and he fell against a spring wagon or buggy. Plaintiff sued for damages for assault and battery, and the defendant answered, denying the allegations of the petition, but admitting that he struck the plaintiff at the time alleged, and claimed that plaintiff had come upon his premises with intention to provoke a quarrel, and was an intruder and trespasser, and came for the purpose of disturbing his peace, and had made repeated statements that defendant was falsifying facts. The defendant was present at the trial, but did not testify or offer any evidence.

The testimony of plaintiff was that the defendant struck him on the nose and eye, bruising and breaking his nose and cracking his lip; that his lip was split, and he fell against a spring wagon or buggy; that he was not angry, but spoke kindly, and did not intend to fight, or go for that purpose; that as he rode away the defendant told him if he said anything more about the matter he would knock him off his horse, and "beat the stuffin' out of him;" that after the blow the defendant asked him to go into the house and wash, which he refused to do, the defendant stating that he was sorry he had hit him, but that plaintiff had aggravated him until he did it; that it was a straight blow, as hard as the defendant could strike; that plaintiff went home, and then to the justice of the peace, and made complaint; that his nose bled profusely; that he had suffered a great deal of pain and clogging up of the nose, and had pain in his nose for over two months, and at the time of the trial, some ten months afterwards, it still pained him occasionally; that after seeing the justice plaintiff came by a store, where there were three or four men, and where there was some conversation about the affair; that he did not wash the blood inadequate, and that the court very properly set it aside. Barrette v. Carr, supra.

Where the plaintiff, while traveling as a passenger, was intentionally thrown from a car by the conductor of the defendant, and, as a consequence, was confined to his bed for six weeks, and to the house for two more, two of his ribs were broken, both of his legs injured, as were also his back and spine, as a result of which, from the time of the accident to the time of the trial (nearly two years), he had fainting spells, and some of his injuries were permanent, a verdict for $200 was held to be inadequate, and a new trial was granted. Tourtelotte v. Westchester Electric R. Co. 120 App. Div. 417, 105 N. Y. Supp. 50.

Jackson v. Humboldt, 84 Kan. 445, 113 Pac. 1047, is directly in point, but is sufficiently set out in SUNDGREN v. STEVENS.

In Kentucky, under a statute (Civil Code, § 370) providing that "a new trial shall not be granted on account of the smallness of damages in an action for an injury to the person or reputation, nor in any other action where the damages shall equal the actual pecuniary injury sustained," it was held in Taylor v. Howser, 12 Bush, 465, that the rule does not apply to the assessment of the actual pecuniary damages resulting directly from the wrong; so that where the value of the plaintiff's services during the time he was disabled by his wound and the amount he reasonably expended for medicines and medical attention in effecting his cure, as matters of special damages, were clear, and the jury disregarded this proof and the peremptory instructions of the court by finding 1 cent in damages, a new trial was granted.

But in Shoff v. Wells, 1 Neb. 168, under an identical statute, where the testimony showed that the plaintiff paid his physician $15 for medical attendance rendered necessary by reason of the assault upon him, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) and tended to show that for ten days he was unable to work, and that $4 per day was what he could have earned, the court, upon a verdict being rendered for $17.50, granted a new trial on the ground that the damages awarded were inadequate. Upon the new trial a verdict of $37.10 was returned. When the case came before the supreme court of Nebraska for review, it was remanded with instructions to reinstate the first verdict and set aside all subsequent proceedings. It was said of the statute in question: "The reading and interpretation contended for by the counsel for the defendant in error is that, in an action for damages for an injury to the person or reputation, as well as in all other actions, the damages must equal the actual pecuniary injury sustained. This claim is opposed not only to the letter, but to the obvious spirit, of the section. In cases of assault and battery, libel and slander, so many matters in aggravation or justification are disclosed upon the trial that it is left for the jury to determine, in view of all the circumstances, what should be given as damages. With their findings, courts rarely interfere. Scarcely a case can be found where a new trial has been granted because of the smallness of the damages assessed. This section, we think, is but declaratory of the practice which has so long obtained."

In Ward v. White, 86 Va. 212, 19 Am. St. Rep. 883, 9 S. E. 1021, it was held that a verdict for $1,375 would not be set aside for insufficiency and inadequacy where the plaintiff sustained no permanent bodily injury and there was no definite proof of any actual outlay, costs, and expenses, except generally, and the evidence disclosed that the plaintiff knew that he was to be attacked, and did nothing to avoid the injury, but, on the other hand, armed himself with pistols, and marched forth to give battle.

E. M. S.

from his nose until he finally returned, after his visit to the justice and stop at the store. The doctor who was consulted two days later testified that the nasal bone was broken; that there was no displacement; that he did not remember any injury to the lip, but his impression was that the eyes were still discolored; that he noticed no bruises on the forehead. What he "saw was with his hands;" that he examined the nose, and found crepitation of the bone, thus detecting the fracture; that no charge was made, and no treatment given; that he told plaintiff to be careful about blowing his nose, and not to get any displacement, and it would be all right; that the nasal bones were separated, but not displaced. The wife testified that when plaintiff came home from his call on the justice he was covered with blood, his nose still running with blood; that there was a bruise over the eye; that his eye was turned blue on both sides of his nose, and his nose was swollen up for a day or so "about three times as big," and was bleeding every time he would wipe it for three days. He seemed kind of weak. Another witness testified that he saw the plaintiff in the evening at the store; that his face was bloody; that his clothes were covered with blood, and one of his eyes looked as though it were swollen some; that his lip was bleeding, and appeared to be cut.

The defendant was fined $5 by the justice and 95 cents costs, and he directed the justice to notify the plaintiff that if he ever came upon the place he would beat the life out of him.

The court instructed the jury that provocative words or acts, if any, constituted no justification for an assault, and could only be considered, if at all, in mitigation of punitive damages, and that if they found that the defendant had unlawfully assaulted and beaten the plaintiff they should allow reasonable compensation, not exceeding $500. The jury returned a verdict for $1; 50 cents for physical pain, and 50 cents for insult and indignity. The plaintiff appeals, and claims that a new trial should be granted, for the reason that the jury violated the instructions and awarded damages palpably inadequate.

It is suggested by the defendant that the plaintiff not only took pains to exhibit his alleged wounds and his bloody condition, but that he and his wife so exaggerated their testimony that they were disbelieved by the jury; that the question of damages was one for the jury, and could not be measured by any fixed standard; and that before a new trial could be granted it should appear that the jury were misled by mistake, or influenced by prejudice or passion. The case of Pritchard v. Hewitt, 91 Mo. 547, 60 Am. Rep. 265, 4 S. W. 437, is cited as an example of numerous cases holding that in actions of this kind inadequacy of damages is not a ground for a new trial, unless the verdict appears to have been the result of passion, prejudice, or partiality. In this decision by the supreme court of Missouri is found a quotation (p. 550) from page 451 of volume 1 of the second edition of Graham & Waterman on New Trials, to the effect that the reason for refusing to disturb verdicts in cases of this kind is that there is no scale by which the damages are to be graduated with certainty; that the law presumes the jury to have done their duty; and until the result of their deliberation appears in a form calculated to shock the understanding and impress no dubious conviction of their prejudice and passion, their verdict will not be disturbed.

The plaintiff insists that, the assault being admitted, and the court having instructed to award compensation, a verdict for nominal damages was a disobedience of the instruction, and contrary to the evidence, and cites numerous authorities in support of his contention. Whatever may have been the manner or appearance of the plaintiff and his wife upon the stand, it was shown beyond dispute, in addition to the admission of defendant, that, without legal justification, he struck plaintiff in the face, the effect of which at least was to separate the nasal bones, and to cause profuse bleeding of the nose; to a charge of assault, he pleaded guilty. Whether the plaintiff was mistaken in his statement that the blow was straight from the shoulder, or whether he was mistaken in stating that the one blow injured his nose, split his lip, and bruised his forehead, it does appear that his lip was injured, and that his eye was discolored. It was held in Loneragan v. Small, 81 Kan. 48, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 976, 105 Pac. 27: "An assault upon another is an intentional infringement upon the absolute right of personal security, for which the law gives a right of action against the wrongdoer, in which damages for mental suffering which is the proximate and natural result of such wrong may be awarded, although there was no battery or bodily injury inflicted."

Whenever it is manifest that the jury have found against the clear weight of the evidence, and that the party asking for a new trial has not, in all probability, had a fair trial, nor received substantial justice, it is an imperative duty to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial. Cherokee & P. Coal & Min. Co. v. Stoop, 56 Kan.

426, 43 Pac. 766. In Nofztger v. Moffett, 63 Kan. 354, 65 Pac. 670, the evidence showed that the attorney suing for compensation was entitled to a substantial recovery, and it was held that the court erred in holding that he was not entitled to recover anything. In Thompson v. Burtis, 65 Kan. 674-676, 70 Pac. 604, evidence was offered as to the extent and value of the legal services for which compensation was sought, which was not contradicted or impeached, and which showed a right to recover a substantial amount, if anything. The jury awarded the nominal sum of $1, and this was held to involve an inconsistency, and not to be sustained by the testimony. In the opinion, Chief Justice Johnston said: "The jury, it is true, was not obliged to accept as conclusive the opinions of experts as to the value of legal services, but they could not overlook competent testimony that was unimpeached." "In some way the jury were warped from the direct line of duty, and, instead of awarding a substantial sum, gave the mere nominal amount of $1. This was error." (pp. 675, 676.)

In Harrod v. Latham Mercantile & Commercial Co. 77 Kan. 466, 95 Pac. 11, a verdict was directed for the plaintiff. Evidence of certain facts was uncontradicted, but it was there said that the facts sought to be proven by such evidence were in issue. "When, therefore, there is no dispute as to the ultimate facts upon which the right of recovery depends, the court may direct a verdict." (p. 474.) It was, however, further said: "Whenever the testimony must be weighed and conclusions deduced therefrom, the jury alone must make the deductions in the first instance." (p. 475.) And the directing of the verdict was held to be erroneous.

In Saindon v. Morrell, 78 Kan. 53, 95 Pac. 1056, it was held that a judgment would not be reversed for the reason only that the evidence "may seem to justify" the recovery of a larger sum. That was an action for damages for assault and battery, in which only $15 was awarded. It was held that if, as a question of law, all the undisputed testimony of the witnesses was to be taken as true, the plaintiff was entitled to a larger verdict; but that it was the province of the jury to determine, in the first instance, the credibility of the witnesses, and what their testimony proved, though they were not contradicted; and that the judgment would not be reversed because the evidence would seem to justify a larger verdict. But no such admission and no such instruction as those now under consideration were discussed in the opinion. In Heineken v.

Benton Twp. 84 Kan. 881, 115 Pac. 592, it was held that the verdict could not be set aside for inadequacy, not being for nominal damages, not inconsistent with the facts, and not showing passion or prejudice.

In Miller v. Miller, 81 Kan. 397, 398, 105 Pac. 544, 545, an action to recover the value of personal services, it was not disputed that services of substantial value were rendered; but it was claimed that they were to be gratuitous, which was disputed. The jury found for plaintiff, assessing his damages as $1. The verdict was set aside, on the ground that the recovery was too small. In the opinion it was said: "By finding for the plaintiff, the jury determined the issue in his favor, and it only remained to award reasonable compensation. This is not a case for nominal damages, such as are allowed for the breach of a legal duty which has caused no material loss. Such an award is permissible, in a proper case, to vindicate a right where damages are possible, but have not been suffered." (p. 398.)

In Bressler v. McVey, 82 Kan. 341, 343, 108 Pac. 97, 98, there was no dispute that the plaintiff was entitled to the amount claimed, if entitled to recovery at all. The jury found in his favor, awarding one half the amount claimed. It was held that such verdict should be set aside at the instance of either party. In the opinion Mr. Justice Mason said: "The jury were called upon to determine which condition existed; but instead of doing so they assumed to settle the controversy by allowing one half of the claim and disallowing the other half, no doubt with the idea that 'splitting the difference' was a fair method of compromising the dispute. But in this they mistook their function." (p. 343.)

In Jackson v. Humboldt, 84 Kan. 445, 113 Pac. 1047, an action to recover for assault and battery, the evidence tended to show that the plaintiff had been grievously wounded, his face disfigured, his sight permanently impaired, and that he had suffered great pain, lost considerable time, and incurred material expense. The jury found in his favor, assessing his damages at $1. This was held to be erroneous, and that a new trial should have been ordered.

The fact that the provision of the former Code, forbidding a new trial for smallness of damages, was omitted from the present Civil Code, is an indication that the legislature deemed inadequacy a proper ground for a new trial; it having been said in Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. O'Neill, 68 Kan. 253, 74 Pac. 1107, that "the rule may be hard, and in some cases may be productive of injustice, but that is a consideration to be addressed to the lawmakers, and not to the law interpreters." (p. 256.)

In Miller v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 58 N. J. L. 428, 33 Atl. 950, a woman sued for damages, caused by the company's neglect to provide a bench for her to alight on. There was considerable evidence showing the serious character of the hurt, and that it was painful and chronic, and there was no evidence to the contrary. The jury rendered a verdict for 6 cents, and the supreme court of New Jersey said: "This result of the trial in this case cannot be explained on any ground that will harmonize it with justice or with common sense." (p. 429.)

In speaking of a verdict resulting from passion, prejudice, or partiality, or a mistake or failure to take into consideration the proper elements of damage, it was said, in McDonald v. Walter, 40 N. Y. 551: "But, when the case does plainly show such a result, justice as plainly forbids that the plaintiff should be denied what is his due, as that the defendant should pay what he ought not to be charged." (p. 554.) In Tathwell v. Cedar Rapids, 122 Iowa, 50, 97 N. W. 96, the supreme court of Iowa held that, the unimpeached testimony of the plaintiff having shown him entitled to a much greater sum than that awarded by the jury, the trial court rightfully set the verdict aside because inadequate under the evidence. In Leavitt v. Dow, 105 Me. 50, 53, 134 Am. St. Rep. 534, 72 Atl. 735, 736, 17 Ann. Cas. 1072, it was said: "And it is now held, both in England and in courts of the United States, that no reason can be given for setting aside verdicts because of excessive damages which does not apply to setting them aside for inadequacy of damages." (p. 53.)

It was held by the supreme court of New York, in Lewis v. New York City R. Co. 50 Misc. 535, 99 N. Y. Supp. 462: "The positive testimony of an unimpeached, uncontradicted witness cannot be disregarded by a court or a jury arbitrarily or capriciously." . . . The rights of the people would have no safeguard, and the courts of justice would afford no forum for the redress of wrongs, if the unimpeached and uncontradicted testimony of a witness can be overthrown without reason."

In Newton v. Pope, 1 Cow. 109, 110, it was said: "But there is no difficulty in saying that where (as in this case) the witness is unimpeached, the facts sworn to by him uncontradicted, either directly or indirectly, by other witnesses, and there is no intrinsic improbability in the relation given by him, neither a court nor jury can, in the exercise of a sound discretion, disregard his testimony. It is no less the duty of a court than of a jury to decide according to evidence. But it is mockery to talk of evidence, if it is discretionary with the tribunal to which it is addressed to disregard it, upon the vague suggestion, unsupported by proof, of the bias of the witness." (p. 110.)

In Lionberger v. Pohlman, 16 Mo. App. 392, 398, it was said by Judge Thompson: "But, after mature deliberation, we are of opinion that the correct rule is that, where the testimony offered in support of the allegations of the party who sustains the burden of proof is, if believed, sufficient to make out his case, and is clear, consistent with itself, delivered by an unimpeached witness, and no circumstance is developed tending to cast suspicion upon it, and no substantial countervailing evidence is offered by the other party, if the jury nevertheless disregard it, and return a verdict against it, it will be the duty of the trial court on a motion for a new trial, and of an appellate court on appeal or error, to set it aside as being the result of a manifest mistake." (p. 398.)

The supreme court of Wisconsin, in Engmann v. Immel, 59 Wis. 252, 18 N. W. 183, said: "The jury might as well in their arbitrary and sovereign pleasure render a verdict without evidence as against evidence." (p. 252.) Lord Stowell, in Elwes v. Elwes, 1 Hagg. Consist. Rep. 269, thus states the matter: "If witnesses come unimpeached in point of general integrity, if they depose with characters of fairness in their particular narrations, the facts must be received, or there is an end of all judicial inquiry." (p. 409.) See also Hughey v. Sullivan (C. C.) 80 Fed. 72; Barrette v. Carr, 75 Vt. 425, 56 Atl. 93; Ford v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 98 Minn. 96, 107 N. W. 817, 8 Ann. Cas. 903, and note; Brown v. Petersen, 25 App. D. C. 359, 4 Ann. Cas. 980.

The rule, founded upon justice and reason, and supported by the weight of authority, is that in cases of this kind, if the verdict is so inadequate as clearly to indicate partiality, passion, or prejudice on the part of the jury, or failure to heed the evidence and facts actually shown, it should be set aside; that, while the jury are the exclusive judges in the first instance of the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses, this means that they are in fact judges thereof, acting with reason and fairness, and not from partiality or caprice, or arbitrarily.

With the facts before them that beyond any question of doubt the assault was made without legal justification, that it was of sufficient violence to cause profuse bleeding at the nose and a separation of the nasal bones, and with the direction by the court to return such a verdict as would amount to compensation, the conclusion seems inevitable that the jury, either from partiality or caprice, or from failure to obey the instruction of the court, returned a verdict, not for compensatory but for nominal damages. Men are to be commended for seeking legal redress in court, instead of taking vengeance into their own hands. Common sense and the common instincts of humanity revolt at the notion that for the physical pain and humiliation caused by the assault, $1—50 cents for each—could be otherwise than farcical.

The judgment of the trial court is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to grant a new trial.

Johnston, Ch. J., and Smith, Porter, and Benson, JJ., concur.

Mason, J., dissenting:

The petition alleged that the defendant struck the plaintiff, and thereby inflicted certain specified injuries. The answer contained a general denial, admitting the striking, thereby, as it seems to me, denying that the plaintiff had received any substantial injury, and placing upon him the burden of proof in that regard. If he had offered no evidence, he would have been entitled to a verdict for nominal damages for the invasion of his legal right, but to nothing more. The jury obviously disbelieved his entire evidence as to the extent of his injury, and rendered the only verdict conformable with that belief. The trial court approved the verdict. The rule is that this court will not set aside a verdict, merely because it is in conflict with oral testimony which no witness contradicted. The decision seems to proceed upon the theory that the facts were as testified to by the plaintiff's witnesses, and that the defendant had admitted as much. I think the defendant admitted nothing beyond a technical assault, and that it was the province of the jury to say whether anything more was committed.

Burch, J., dissenting:

There is nothing about which the plaintiff was more positive than that all his claimed injuries proceeded from one straight blow. He described it in words several times, always the same, and he described it, as the record shows, by an indicating gesture. If, however, that were true, the claimed results were incredible. The opinion of the court recognizes this difficulty, and recognizes the necessity of eliminating some portions of the plaintiff's story. So the opinion picks out what is certainly true, and make the palliative suggestion as to a mistake on the part of the plaintiff as to one or the other of two incompatible sets of statements. The jury did precisely the same kind of work in the exercise of what has heretofore been believed to be its proper function, and the law in such cases is clearly as stated by Mr. Justice Mason.

What about damages for humiliation? The evidence is open to the interpretation that the plaintiff repeated and repeated statements which the defendant regarded as an impeachment of his veracity, and so aggravated the defendant into striking him. The defendant was immediately sorry for his act, and wanted to do what he could to repair it. The plaintiff had a nosebleed, and seemed to regard it as a very valuable asset. He would not wash at the defendant's house, or permit the defendant to send some water out to him for the purpose, and went home. He would not wash himself there, but carried his ensanguined front to the home of a neighbor living north of him, where he inquired for the justice of the peace. After making this exhibition of his humiliation, he went to the justice of the peace. The plaintiff lives a mile and a half north of Kipp, and the justice lives west and north of Kipp. After initiating his criminal proceeding, the plaintiff went to Kipp. He said he had no business there, but he went to the store and paraded his humiliation there, meantime having wiped the blood over his face. Then he went home. In view of this and other peculiar testimony, the jury doubtless concluded that the plaintiff was simply trying to lay the foundation for a big lawsuit, and that substantial damages for genuine humiliation of feelings were not established.

Then what about personal injuries? The defendant was present in court, and the jury could estimate his physical strength. The plaintiff said the defendant struck him a straight blow as hard as he could. Yet the plaintiff was not knocked down. Despite his story of cut lip, contused forehead, black eyes, and broken nose, when he went to the doctor two days afterward, visible traces of injury had substantially, if not entirely, disappeared. The doctor's only positive testimony was this: "Do you recall what you saw? A. Yes, sir. Q. What did you see? A. What I saw, I saw with my hands." By taking hold of the nose a crepitation was perceptible, indicating a separation of the nasal cartilage from the cheek bone. The cartilage was not cracked, and there was no displacement; no treatment was necessary; none was given; and no charge was made. The doctor has nothing whatever to say of exhibited pain or discomfort of any kind, and the plaintiff lost no time, except it be in getting his lawsuits under way. The result is the plaintiff was discredited by his doctor, as well as in other ways, and upon all the evidence the jury concluded that the result of the blow was really inconsequential, and not worthy of more than nominal damages. Because the jury, after seeing and hearing all the witnesses, inferred falsification where the court infers mistake, threw out what it believed to be the product of falsification, and exercised its judgment in a matter respecting which even the opinion of the court vouchsafes no standard of measurement, I am not willing to brand the jury as arbitrary, capricious, partial, etc., nor willing to convict the trial judge, who, with advantages which this court does not possess, approved the verdict, of sanctioning a farce against which common sense revolts.

In the case of Heineken v. Benton Twp. 84 Kan. 881, 115 Pac. 592, almost the entire amount of the plaintiff's claim of $4,500 was for physical injuries, impaired health, doctor's bills, and the cost of medicine. He told how he, together with his team and buggy, went over an embankment, and how his head was driven into the sand in the bottom of the creek. He claimed that his health failed, that he was under the doctor's care for a long time, and that he spent much money in an effort to restore his health. Nobody saw the remarkable occurrence upon which he based his claim for these damages, and the jury, disbelieving his story respecting it, allowed him nothing. The jury did allow him $45 for injury to his buggy and $5 for injury to his harness. Had these items not been included, the case would be exactly parallel in principle to this one.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

GUSTAVE JAEGER et al., Respts.,
v.

GRAND LODGE OF ORDER OF HERMANN'S SONS, Appt.

(— Wis. —, 135 N. W. 869.)

Insurance — mutual benefit — retro-active — rate — deduction from policy.

Consent by a member of a mutual benefit society, to be bound by all present and future rules of the order, does not empower the society to make an increase in the rate of his assessment date from the inception 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of his policy, and deduct the amount owing by him under such arrangement from the face of his policy.

(April 23, 1912.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due upon a mutual benefit certificate. Affirmed.

Statement by Kerwin, J.:

This action was brought against the defendant to recover upon a benefit certificate or policy for $1,000 issued September 1, 1888. The plaintiffs recovered judgment for $363.93 damages and costs; said damages being the amount which the court below held balance due plaintiffs upon the certificate or policy. Upon the trial the defendant admitted there was due and paid over $536.07, and the judgment recovered was the difference between this amount and the face of the certificate less $100. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and the court found that the defendant made the certificate or policy September 1, 1888, to the deceased, Claus Jaeger. That said Jaeger paid all assessments levied and imposed upon him by the Grand Lodge for the maintenance of his certificate or policy, and did also pay all lodge dues imposed upon him and required to be paid, and at the time of his death was in all respects a member of said order in good standing. That at a regular meeting of said Grand Lodge in 1897, a by-law was enacted requiring every member then belonging to said order, or who should subsequently join, to submit to a deduction of 10 per cent, or $100, of the $1,000 stipulated in his policy to be paid his beneficiary or beneficiaries upon his death, said $100 to be paid into a guaranty fund, and the remaining $900 only should be paid to the beneficiary or beneficiaries designated in said policy. That the wife of said Claus Jaeger, who was designated as beneficiary in his said policy, died at the city of Milwaukee on or about the 1st day of January, 1906. That, in pursuance of a stipulation contained in said policy, said Claus Jaeger did, on the 27th day of February, 1906, change the beneficiary originally named, and designated his six children as beneficiaries, namely, Adolph, Carl, Henry,

Note.—The question of the right of a mutual benefit society to increase rates is covered by annotation appended to Reynolds v. Supreme Council, R. A. 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1154, and Dowdall v. Supreme Council, C. M. B. A. 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 417.

Helen, Paul, and Fred, and requested that the amount of insurance due on such policy less 10 per cent be paid to said newly designated beneficiaries, and that such 10 per cent thereof, pursuant to the above mentioned by-law, be paid into the guaranty fund, and that a memorandum of such declaration changing such beneficiaries, and providing that a deduction of 10 per cent of the amount designated in the policy be paid into the guaranty fund, was indorsed on said policy and subscribed by the grand secretary of said Grand Lodge. That from and after said incorporation of said Grand Lodge of Wisconsin of the Order of Hermann's Sons, said defendant corporation duly assumed all the obligations of said Grand Lodge, which it had entered into prior to its said incorporation, and thenceforth, and up to the time of the death of said Claus Jaeger, received and collected all the assessments payable by said Jaeger upon said policy and all other assessments levied upon all members of said order. That about the year 1897 said Grand Lodge enacted a certain by-law to meet the losses due the increasing death rate of members, also to the effect that all members who should be such on and prior to the 1st day of March, 1898, should, from and after that day, be required to pay for the maintenance of their respective policies of $1,000 each certain monthly assessments varying according to ages attained by such members at the time of becoming members, increasing from ages between eighteen and twenty-five years up to ages between forty and forty-five years; and that members who, at the time they became members, had attained an age between forty and forty-five years, should pay a monthly assessment of $2.75; and that by said by-law it was further provided that all members who should become members after said 1st day of March, 1898, should be required to pay on policies of $1,000 lower monthly assessments, which also varied and increased between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five years up to between forty and forty-five years; and that all persons who, at the time of becoming members, had attained an age between forty and forty-five years, should pay a monthly assessment of $2.04. Said Claus Jaeger became a member of Robert Blum Lodge No. 4 in 1879, and was then forty-four years of age, and from and after March 1, 1898, paid for the maintenance of his policy a monthly assessment of $2.75 up to the time of his death, all of which assessments were duly paid to said Grand Lodge. Said Jaeger died on the 3d day of January, 1910, and at the time of his death was a member in good standing of said Robert Blum Lodge 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

No. 4. That on the 11th day of January, 1910, due notice of the death of said Claus Jaeger was given in writing to said Grand Lodge, and more than ninety days expired before the commencement of this action. That on the 26th day of March, 1910, Adolph Jaeger, Carl Jaeger, Henry Jaeger, and Fred Jaeger, four of the beneficiaries designated in the policy, did for value received duly assign and transfer to plaintiff Gustave Jaeger all their right, title, and interest in said policy, and in and to said sum of $1,000 mentioned therein, and ever since said Gustave Jaeger has been, and still is, the owner of an undivided four sixths of said policy and the money thereby secured. That the plaintiffs Paul Jaeger and Helen Jaeger, two of the beneficiaries designated, are minors, and are still the owners of an undivided one sixth each of said policy. That upon proceedings duly had in the county court of Milwaukee county, said Gustave Jaeger was, on the 9th day of April, 1910, duly appointed general guardian of the above-named minors, and letters of guardianship were duly issued, and said Gustave Jaeger ever since has been and still is the general guardian of said minors. That the defendant Grand Lodge has in its possession a reserve fund exceeding $20,000. That before the commencement of the trial of this action, said defendant paid to the plaintiffs $536.07, the amount admitted to be due upon said policy, without prejudice to the rights of plaintiffs to continue said action for the sum of $463.93 and interest thereon, denied by defendant to be due. That at its annual session in August, 1909, said defendant adopted an amendment to its by-laws to the effect that all members of said order who were such prior to the 1st day of March, 1898, should be advanced to their attained age as of that date, or, in lieu thereof, be given the following options: First, the privilege of paying in cash the amount they ought to have paid into the benefit fund, had they been charged the present table of rates from the time they were initiated into the order to the 1st day of March, 1898, to wit, that they should be charged one payment a month at the age at which they were initiated at the rate provided by the present table of rates, against which they should be credited with the amount they actually paid during that period of time, and the balance should be the deficiency; second, that said members may have said deficiency charged against their benefit certificate with 2½ per cent simple interest so long as the same remains unpaid, with accrued interest thereon, which deficiency, with interest at the time of the death of said member, should be deducted from the face of his benefit certificate; and that said by-laws should apply only to members who were initiated into the order before March 1, 1898. That, pursuant to the above by-laws, the grand secretary of said defendant did, about September, 1910, compute the amounts of said alleged deficiencies to be charged against the respective policies of members who joined before March 1, 1898, and that the amount so computed as a deficiency against the policy of Claus Jaeger was $363.93, and that said secretary issued a printed circular in which each member was requested to signify his choice, whether he would pay the deficiency in cash, or would suffer the same to be deducted with 2½ per cent interest from the amount of his policy at his death. That said Claus Jaeger never acquiesced in said amendment, and did not manifest any choice as to whether he would pay cash or suffer the same to be deducted from the amount of his policy. That, before the commencement of this action, the plaintiffs duly demanded of defendant payment of the amount of $1,000 named in the policy, which payment was refused.

The court concluded that said by-law of 1897, which required every member then belonging to said order and every future member to submit to a deduction of 10 per cent, or $100, at his death from his $1,000 policy, to be paid into a reserve fund, and that only the remaining $900 should be paid to the beneficiary or beneficiaries of such policy, was and is unreasonable and void as to said Claus Jaeger and all members who joined said order prior to the passage of said law; but that since in and by the written declaration made by said Claus Jaeger for the substitution of said six children as beneficiaries in lieu of his wife, who had died, he requested that 10 per cent, or $100, of the amount of the policy be deducted from such policy, and paid into the reserve fund of said Grand Lodge, he, said Claus Jaeger, consented to such deduction, and thereafter was, and these plaintiffs now are, estopped from questioning or disputing the right of the Grand Lodge to deduct said $100 from the amount of said policy; that said amendment of its laws enacted by said defendant at its session in 1909, to the effect that each member of said order who had joined prior to the 1st day of March, 1898, should be required to pay the difference between the total amount of assessments he had paid from time of initiation to said 1st day of March, 1898, and the amount which he would have paid had he paid the highest rate of assessment then payable by him according to the then present rates of assessments, or to suffer such deficiency to be deducted from the amount of his policy with 2½ per cent interest added at time of his death, was and is unreasonable and void; that there is now due and owing from the said defendant to the plaintiffs the sum of $363.93, with interest thereon from the 12th day of April, 1910.

Judgment was entered in accordance with the findings of fact and conclusions of law, from which this appeal was taken.

Messrs. O'Connor, Schmitz, Wild, & Gross, for appellant:

The enactment of the laws of 1897 and 1909, relating to the mortuary guaranty and reserve funds, was proper.

Borgards v. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co. 79 Mich. 440, 44 N. W. 856; Sargent v. Supreme Lodge, K. H. 158 Mass. 557, 33 N. E. 650; Stohr v. San Francisco Musical Fund Soc. 82 Cal. 557, 22 Pac. 1125; Bowie v. Grand Lodge, L. W. L. 99 Cal. 392, 34 Pac. 103; Parish v. New York Produce Exch. 169 N. Y. 34, 56 L.R.A. 149, 61 N. E. 977; Supreme Commandery, K. G. R. v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 436, 46 Am. Rep. 332; Caldwell v. Grand Lodge, U. W. 148 Cal. 195, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 653, 113 Am. St. Rep. 219, 82 Pac. 781, 7 Ann. Cas. 356; Supreme Lodge, K. P. v. Kutscher, 179 Ill. 340, 70 Am. St. Rep. 115, 53 N. E. 620; Fullenwider v. Supreme Council, R. L. 180 Ill. 621, 72 Am. St. Rep. 239, 54 N. E. 485; Olson v. Court of Honor, 100 Minn. 117, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 621, 117 Am. St. Rep. 676, 110 N. W. 374, 10 Ann. Cas. 622; Schmidt v. Supreme Tent, K. M. 97 Wis. 528, 73 N. W. 22; Hughes v. Wisconsin Odd Fellows Mut. L. Ins. Co. 98 Wis. 292, 73 N. W. 1015; Loeffler v. Modern Woodmen, 100 Wis. 79, 75 N. W. 1012; Thomas v. Covert (Thomas v. Supreme Lodge, K. H.) 126 Wis. 593, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 904, 105 N. W. 922, 5 Ann. Cas. 456.

The members of benefit associations are bound by laws adopted after their contracts of insurance were issued, if such contracts provide that members shall be so bound; and subsequent amendments are held valid as to them.

Hobbs v. Iowa Mut. Ben. Asso. 82 Iowa, 107, 11 L.R.A. 299, 31 Am. St. Rep. 466, 47 N. W. 983; Supreme Lodge, K. P. v. Knight, 117 Ind. 489, 3 L.R.A. 409, 20 N. E. 479.

Messrs. Schelber & Orth, for respondents:

The benefit certificate is a solemn contract for a specific amount, and cannot be changed by either party without the consent of the other.

Wuerfler v. Grand Grove, W. O. D. 116

Wis. 19, 96 Am. St. Rep. 940, 92 N. W. 433.

Where there is a conflict between the policy and the laws of the Order the policy controls.

Ledebuhr v. Wisconsin Trust Co. 112 Wis. 657, 88 N. W. 607; Bruger v. Princeton & St. M. Mut. F. Ins. Co. 129 Wis. 281, 109 N. W. 95; Wuerfler v. Grand Grove, W. O. D. supra; Baumann v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 144 Wis. 206, 128 N. W. 864; Langan v. Supreme Council, A. L. H. 174 N. Y. 266, 66 N. E. 932; Beach v. Supreme Tent, K. M. 177 N. Y. 100, 69 N. E. 281; Weber v. Supreme Tent, K. M. 172 N. Y. 490, 92 Am. St. Rep. 753, 65 N. E. 258; Hale v. Equitable Aid Union, 168 Pa. 377, 31 Atl. 1066; Newhall v. Supreme Council A. L. H. 181 Mass. 111, 63 N. E. 1; Gaut v. American Legion of Honor, 107 Tenn. 603, 55 L.R.A. 470, 64 S. W. 1070.

Members cannot be charged up with back assessments.

Wuerfler v. Grand Grove, W. O. D. 116 Wis. 19, 96 Am. St. Rep. 940, 92 N. W. 433; Strauss v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 126 N. C. 971, 54 L.R.A. 605, 83 Am. St. Rep. 699, 36 S. E. 352, 128 N. C. 485, 54 L.R.A. 609, 83 Am. St. Rep. 703, 39 S. E. 55.

Discrimination in rates is unlawful.

Benjamin v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 146 Cal. 34, 79 Pac. 517; Ebert v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 81 Minn. 116, 83 N. W. 506, 834, 84 N. W. 457; Strauss v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 126 N. C. 971, 54 L.R.A. 605, 83 Am. St. Rep. 699, 36 S. E. 352.

Kerwin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts in this case as found by the court are undisputed. They appear in the foregoing statement of the case.

Error is assigned upon the conclusions of law. We are reminded by the learned counsel for appellant of the great importance of the principles involved in this case to fraternal societies generally, and we approach the consideration of the case fully conscious of the fact that the legal principles involved are far-reaching in their importance to all fraternal associations. The deceased, Claus Jaeger, became a member of the lodge in 1879, and continued to 1888, when, under a new arrangement, the certificate under consideration was issued, by the terms of which the defendant promised to pay $1,000 to the beneficiaries provided for upon the death of said Claus Jaeger, and the said Claus Jaeger, by the terms of said certificate, promised to "comply with the laws, rules, and regulations now governing this order and its beneficiary fund, and with all such as may hereafter be enacted to govern said order and fund." The deceased paid all dues and complied with all rules, regulations, and by-laws, except that he refused to pay $100 deduction from the face of his policy by the by-law of 1897, and also refused to comply with another by-law passed in 1909 giving two options,—one to pay a sum in gross to be ascertained by advancing his payments from the time he entered from $1.60 per month to $2.75 per month, and charging the difference upon the policy or certificate, or by deducting such amount from the face of the policy when paid, as more fully appears from the statement of facts. The effect of this by-law, as will be seen by examination of the facts found, was to scale down the certificate or policy by charging up from the time the deceased obtained his certificate, in 1888, a sum aggregating $363.93, together with $100 ordered deducted by the first by-law above referred to, making a total cut from the face of the certificate of $463.93. But, as found by the court below on sufficient evidence, the deceased consented at the time of change of beneficiaries, to the $100 cut. Therefore the plaintiffs cannot complain on that account, since the right to make that deduction from the policy was assented to by deceased as found by the court below.

The main question, therefore, for determination, is whether the defendant could charge the $363.93 against the certificate in suit. The court below held that it could not, and that such amount was due to plaintiffs in addition to the $536.07 tendered by defendant. The case turns upon the power of the defendant to pass the by-law under which it claims the right to impose the burden upon its members. It will be remembered that the burden imposed upon deceased and his certificate or policy is a charge of $2.75 per month from the time of the issuance of the certificate up to 1909, less the amount which he had paid during that time, after deceased had paid the regular dues imposed by the defendant up to that time, namely, $1.60 per month. The effect of the by-law is to take, as we have seen, $363.93 out of the $900 due on the policy by a retroactive cut, after deceased had paid the dues imposed and complied with all the rules and regulations of the defendant from the time of issuance of the certificate until 1909, a period of over twenty years. The appellant's claim is that the provision in the certificate to the effect that the deceased will comply with all by-laws then existing, or which may be subsequently passed, gives such right, and several authorities are cited which it is claimed support the contention.

We shall briefly refer to those chiefly relied upon by appellant.

Borgards v. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co. 79 Mich. 440, 44 N. W. 856, was a case limiting liability in the future in case of loss by sparks escaping from a steam engine used in threshing grain. Sargent v. Supreme Lodge, K. H. 158 Mass. 557, 33 N. E. 650, has reference to change of beneficiaries. Stohr v. San Francisco Musical Fund Soc. 82 Cal. 557, 22 Pac. 1125, held that a by-law passed limiting benefits after continuous payments for six months was valid. The by-law clearly related to future benefits, and referred to a matter over which the company had control and power to limit payments by by-law, and in no way violated any contract relations between the parties, because permission to do what was done and change the by-law in that regard was a part of the contract, and it was said in the case that the change could not be retroactive. The contract was held to mean that, in case of sickness, the member is to receive payments subject to the power of defendant to change the provision authorizing such payments so far as future payments are concerned. Parish v. New York Produce Exch. 169 N. Y. 34, 56 L.R.A. 149, 61 N. E. 977, held that a by-law diverting a fund from the purpose specified in the charter is unreasonable and void, because an attempt to divert the fund to a different purpose after the fund had been accumulated by payments for a series of years. The case is not in favor of appellant's position, but rather against it. Supreme Commandery, K. G. R. v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 436, 46 Am. Rep. 332, holds certificate to be a contract, not subject to impairment, but accepted subject to the laws of the order then in force or thereafter enacted, but was silent on the question of suicide; and it was further held that a by-law enacted after the issuance of certificate declaring it void if the member should take his own life was valid. Caldwell v. Grand Lodge, U. W. 148 Cal. 195, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 653, 113 Am. St. Rep. 219, 82 Pac. 781, 7 Ann. Cas. 356, relates to change of beneficiaries, and it was held that, where the original by-law allowed any person to be named by a member as beneficiary, a change in the by-laws requiring one to be designated as a member of the family, or related by blood, or "who shall be dependent upon him," is reasonable. Supreme Lodge, K. P. v. Kutscher, 179 Ill. 340, 70 Am. St. Rep. 115, 53 N. E. 620, is a case holding that a by-law forfeiting claim for the death of a member by suicide or intoxication is reasonable and binding upon a member joining before its passage, who contracts to be bound by subsequent by-laws. Fullenwider v. Supreme Council, R. L. 180 Ill. 621, 72 Am. St. Rep. 239, 54 N. E. 485, involves right to change rate of assessment by subsequent by-law. It does not appear, as we understand the opinion, that the subsequent by-law had any retroactive effect. Moreover, the case is ruled by a bare majority, three judges dissenting. Olson v. Court of Honor, 100 Minn. 117, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 521, 117 Am. St. Rep. 676, 110 N. W. 374, 10 Ann. Cas. 622, is where a by-law passed subsequently to the issuance of certificate, limiting the benefit in case of suicide to 5 per cent of the face of the certificate for each year during continuance of membership in the society, was held unreasonable and void as to existing members. This authority is against appellant's contention.

Counsel for appellant also cites the following Wisconsin cases: Schmidt v. Supreme Tent, K. M. 97 Wis. 528, 73 N. W. 22, which is a case where the subsequent by-law was against prohibited occupation. Hughes v. Wisconsin Odd Fellows Mut. L. Ins. Co. 98 Wis. 292, 73 N. W. 1015, is where there was a subsequent by-law against suicide, rendering the policy void. Loeffler v. Modern Woodmen, 100 Wis. 79, 75 N. W. 1012, is where there was a by-law against entering into a prohibited business. Thomas v. Covert (Thomas v. Supreme Lodge K. H.) 126 Wis. 593, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 904, 105 N. W. 922, 5 Ann. Cas. 456, seems to be against appellant's contention, because it recognizes the rule that an agreement or certificate similar to the one in question must in terms or by implication authorize the change in the contract, otherwise the subsequent by-law effecting such change is void. A careful examination of the foregoing cases will show that they are not controlling in favor of the appellant, and some of them are against appellant's contention. The case of Wuerfler v. Grand Grove W. O. D. 116 Wis. 19, 96 Am. St. Rep. 940, 92 N. W. 433, rules the instant case. That case is so strongly in point both on facts and upon principles enunciated that we quote at length from the opinion. At page 26 of 116 Wis. the court said: "Respondent did not possess unlimited authority to change its plan of insurance, giving the change retroactive effect, under the reserve power made a part of the insurance contract, to make changes in the rules, by-laws, and regulations of the order. Such a reserve power is held to warrant only reasonable variances of insurance contracts, —variances required, in the judgment of the order, in those matters of detail necessary or advisable in carrying out efficiently the fundamental principle or scheme of insurance, not changes destroying it. Obviously, changes in the by-laws, rules, and regulations regarding the execution of a plan of insurance are quite different from changing the plan itself and nullifying all contracts entered into under it, as was done in this case. The essential features of the plan of insurance here were that each certificate holder's beneficiary should receive $1,000 upon and at the maturity of his contract, and that a fund should be accumulated by assessments upon the memberships in the order sufficient for that purpose. The way was undoubtedly open for the order to make reasonable changes respecting the hazards members might subject themselves to, and in regard to the number and amount of the assessments, the time of payment thereof, the effect of default in such payment, the notice required of assessments to put members in default, and many other matters of detail that might be mentioned. But after a member had paid assessments for a long period of time, contributing to accumulate money to meet the matured obligations of $1,000 each to beneficiaries, a change in the constitution of the order (the word 'constitution, is here used as synonymous with 'by-laws') rendering the certificate at maturity, instead of worth $1,000, worth an indefinite amount and probably not half that sum, cannot seriously be considered a reasonable change in rules, regulations, and by-laws as regards existing contracts." This court has held that, where there is a conflict between the policy and the laws of the order, the policy controls. Ledebuhr v. Wisconsin Trust Co. 112 Wis. 657, 88 N. W. 607; Bruger v. Princeton & St. M. Mut. F. Ins. Co. 129 Wis. 281, 109 N. W. 95. The change attempted to be made here by deducting $363.93 from the policy amounted to an abrogation of the contract. In Langan v. Supreme Council, A. L. H. 174 N. Y. 266, 66 N. E. 932, the benefit certificate had been issued for $5,000 on the death of plaintiff. After plaintiff had become a member, the by-laws were amended so that on the death of plaintiff only $2,000 should be paid. In an action involving the validity of such amendment the court said: "The action of the defendant, in the attempted amendment of the by-law which was in force when the plaintiff joined the association and received his certificate, was wholly ineffectual to deprive him of any rights which had become vested. It was beyond the power of 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

the defendant to affect the obligation expressed in the certificate without the consent of its holder." To the same effect are Beach v. Supreme Tent, K. M. 177 N. Y. 100, 69 N. E. 281; Weber v. Supreme Tent, K. M. 172 N. Y. 490, 92 Am. St. Rep. 753, 65 N. E. 258; Hale v. Equitable Aid Union, 168 Pa. 377, 31 Atl. 1066. In Newhall v. Supreme Council A. L. H. 181 Mass. 111, 63 N. E. 1, an attempt was made by the adoption of a subsequent by-law to cut the amount of the certificate from $5,000 to $2,000, and, although the usual promise was contained in the certificate to comply with subsequent by-laws, it was held that the full sum mentioned in the certificate, $5,000, could be recovered. See also Gaut v. American Legion of Honor, 107 Tenn. 603, 55 L.R.A. 465, 64 S. W. 1070, where it was held that an agreement by the holder of a benefit certificate to be governed by laws subsequently enacted does not authorize the reduction of the benefit called for in the certificate after payment has been made for years on original value.

We are of opinion that the by-law making the rebate from the policy of $363.93 was unauthorized and void. The by-law making the 10 per cent cut, or $100, on the $1,000 certificate, was assented to by deceased when he made the change of beneficiaries, and cannot be questioned here. Some other questions are raised by respondents which they claim are sufficient to defeat the appellant, on the ground that the by-laws referred to are unreasonable, because all members, new and old, were not put upon the same basis as to rates. On this point attention is called to the following authorities in addition to those already cited: Strauss v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 126 N. C. 971, 54 L.R.A. 605, 83 Am. St. Rep. 699, 36 S. E. 352; Id., 128 N. C. 465, 54 L.R.A. 609, 83 Am. St. Rep. 703, 39 S. E. 55; Benjamin v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 146 Cal. 34, 79 Pac. 517; Ebert v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 81 Minn. 116, 83 N. W. 506, 834, 84 N. W. 457. Whether this last contention as to discrimination between old and new members as to rates in the future is sufficient to defeat the by-law making new rates, independent of the retroactive cut on old members, we need not and do not decide, because the by-law scaling down the certificate by a rebate of $363.93 cannot be upheld, and the by-law attempting to accomplish such purpose is unauthorized under the contract, and void. The judgment of the court below, therefore, is right, and must be affirmed.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

HENRY WESTERMAN

v.

KIZER CORDER and Wife, Appts.

(86 Kan. 239, 119 Pac. 868.)

Estoppel — false representations — knowledge.

1. Where false representations are made by a vendor in the sale of property, the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel does not necessarily depend upon the knowledge of the vendor of the falsity of the representations, but may rest upon the principle that one who, by representing that a certain state of facts exists, has misled another, is precluded from denying the truth of such representations and from setting up a claim inconsistent with the facts as represented, where such claim would result in loss to the other and operate as a fraud upon him.

Headnotes by BENSON, J.

Note. — Knowledge by vendor of falsity of his misstatements as to title as a condition of equitable estoppel against him.

As to the effect of the purchaser's concealment or misrepresentation of fact affecting the value of real estate, see note in 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 748.

As to the question whether fraud may be predicated of a misstatement as to title, see note in 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 202.

As to whether a false statement as to the cost, selling or market price of property or offers therefor constitute a fraud, see note in 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 175.

Few if any cases have considered this specific question. Although as shown in a note in 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1182, the question has come up with reference to quitclaim deeds, both where they contain covenants and where they do not. That note, however, does not discuss the question as to the effect of knowledge of the falsity of either statements or covenants in a deed as affecting the question of estoppel. The question of the effect of knowledge is discussed to a limited extent in Crosby v. Meeks, 108 Ga. 126, 33 S. E. 913, holding an agent to be estopped from acquiring and setting up a title adverse to that conveyed by his principal, by his representations to the grantee, that his principal had the true title to the land. In this case the trial court instructed the jury that if these representations were made with the knowledge of their falsity the agent was estopped. Upon appeal the court, after remarking that they were inclined to think that the judge, in his charge to the jury, really gave the agent the benefit of a principle to which he was not entitled, since he based his charge as to the agent's right to assert an adverse title subsequently acquired, not only upon the idea that he made the untrue statements

Fraud — right to act on representations.

2. When a false representation is of a matter presumably within the knowledge of the person making it, not made in the way of commendation or as an opinion merely, but as a positive assertion of an existing fact to induce the other party to enter into the contract, such party, having no knowledge to the contrary, may, if he act in good faith, accept the representation as true, and is not bound to make inquiries or examination for himself.

(January 6, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Thomas County quieting title to a tract of land in the plaintiff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. H. Benson for appellants.

Messrs. Mahin & Mahin for appellee.

alleged upon which the defendants acted to their injury, but also that he knew they were untrue when he made them, added: "We do not think that even if he had made the statements in good faith, this fact would have been of any avail to him in this action; for it would have been no less a wrong to the defendant so far as the injury to them is concerned, whether the statements were made in good or bad faith."

It has been held that a vendor who represents that his deed of conveyance covers a certain parcel of land, whereas, as a matter of fact, it conveys a different parcel of land, is estopped from thereafter asserting title to the land he represents as conveyed by the deed; and that this is true whether he acted fraudulently or in good faith. Black v. Baskins, 75 Ark. 382, 87 S. W. 647.

So, where a defendant in an execution, after having parted with the title to land as collateral to a loan, pointed the land out to the sheriff as his land, and in reliance upon his statement a levy thereon was made and the land sold, and he accepted the balance of the proceeds after paying the execution, he is thereafter estopped from asserting title under a deed subsequently procured from the first vendee. Whelchel v. Green, 102 Ga. 113, 29 S. E. 169.

A minor owning land scrip, who assigns the scrip, representing that he has reached his majority, who after reaching his majority appoints the assignee of the scrip as his attorney to relocate land thereunder, the location formerly made having been canceled because of his minority, is estopped from asserting the invalidity of intermediate deeds based upon the original location, although such deeds were executed prior to a valid entry of the land with the scrip. Coursolle v. Weyerhauser, 69 Minn. 328, 72 N. W. 699.

A. G. S.

Benson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants, Kizer Corder and wife, appeal from a judgment quieting the title to a tract of land in the plaintiff, Henry Westerman. The appellants claim title to an undivided one half of the tract under a quitclaim deed from the Kansas Town & Land Company. The appellee is in possession under a deed from the appellants, purporting to convey the land, made and delivered before the conveyance from the land company was executed, and contend that the appellants are estopped from asserting their after-acquired title, because of their previous conveyance to the appellee, and because of the representations of the appellant Kizer Corder that he was the owner of the land.

The district court found that the conveyance by the appellants to the appellee was by quitclaim deed, and that it did not estop the grantors therein. The appellee contends that, while the word "quitclaim" is used in the deed, it nevertheless purports to convey an indefeasible estate in fee simple in the land, and not the grantor's interest merely, and that it therefore works an estoppel as provided in § 1656 of the General Statutes of 1909. The language of the deed is quite similar to that of the deed referred to in Bruce v. Luke, 9 Kan. 201, 12 Am. Rep. 491, which was held to create no estoppel. The district court found for the appellee on the other question presented, viz., that the appellants were estopped by their representations. The evidence of both parties shows, and the court found, that while negotiations were pending for the sale and purchase of the land the appellant Kizer Corder stated that he owned the land by warranty deed from C. F. Jilson, except an interest therein held by one Tilden, and that a conveyance from the appellants would vest the absolute title, except that outstanding interest which he advised the appellee to purchase. The appellee believed these representations to be true, and, relying upon them, entered into an agreement with the appellants for a conveyance of the land for $650, which sum he paid, and received the conveyance as agreed, and also bought the Tilden interest, paying $500 therefor; all in reliance upon the truth of the representations so made. When he made the representations, and when he delivered the deed Corder believed that he owned the land (except the Tilden interest), and that his statements concerning the title were true, and intended that the deed by him and wife should convey a perfect title; but about ten months afterwards he was informed by an abstracter that the Kansas Town & Land Company owned an interest in the land, and thereupon he obtained a quitclaim deed from that company of its title and interest for the sum of $2, and this is the interest adjudicated against him in the district court.

The only question that need be decided is whether the representations concerning the title so made and relied upon estop the appellants from asserting and holding adversely the interest so acquired after their conveyance to the appellee. While admitting that the representations were made and that they were untrue, it is contended that because they were made in good faith, believing them to be true, and no fraud was intended, therefore an estoppel was not created. It must be conceded that the effect is the same as it would have been if guilty knowledge had been shown. It does not repair the loss of the grantee to be told that the grantor supposed he was telling the truth.

It has often been held that false representations made and acted upon to the injury of another, although not known to be false by the party making them, may, nevertheless, in a proper case, afford ground for the recovery of damages. Thus it was said in Holcomb v. Noble, 69 Mich. 396, 399, 37 N. W. 497, 498: "Careful examination of the cases adjudicated in this state satisfies me that the doctrine is settled here, by a long line of cases, that if there was in fact a misrepresentation, though made innocently, and its deceptive influence was effective, the consequences to the plaintiff being as serious as though it had proceeded from a vicious purpose, he would have a right of action for the damages caused thereby, either at law or in equity." The decision last cited was applied and followed in an action for damages on the sale of real estate, in Aldrich v. Scribner, 154 Mich. 23, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 379, 117 N. W. 581.

The Nebraska supreme court in considering this subject, in Johnson v. Gulick, 46 Neb. 817, 50 Am. St. Rep. 629, 65 N. W. 883, said: "Whether, in an action for damages for false representations, it is necessary either to aver or prove the scienter, the authorities do not agree. The better rule, and the one adopted by this court, is that the intent or good faith of the person making false statements is not in issue in such a case." "It is immaterial whether such statements are made innocently or knowingly. It is as fraudulent to affirm the existence of a fact about which one is in entire ignorance as it is to affirm what is false, knowing it to be so." Bullitt v. Farrar, 42 Minn. 8, 6 L.R.A. 149, 18 Am. St. Rep. 485, 43 N. W. 566. This subject is reviewed in a case note in 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 646.

Whatever may be the rule respecting guilty knowledge in actions for damages for deceit, the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel does not necessarily depend upon such knowledge, but may rest upon the principle that one who, by false representations that a certain state of facts exists, has misled another, is precluded from denying the truth of such representations where such denial would result in loss to the other party and operate as a fraud upon him. Cornell University v. Parkinson, 59 Kan. 365, 373, 53 Pac. 138; 2 Tiffany, Modern Law of Real Prop. § 457; 16 Cyc. 728. Equitable estoppel in general terms has been defined as "such conduct . . . that it would be . . . a fraud upon the rights of another . . . to repudiate, and to set up claims inconsistent with it." Note in 1 L.R.A. 522. "It is in strict agreement with equitable notions to say of such party that his repudiation of his own prior conduct which had amounted to an estoppel, and his assertion of claims notwithstanding his former acts or words, would be fraudulent,—would be a fraud upon the rights of the person benefited by the estoppel." 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. § 803. This principle has been applied to representations concerning title to real estate. Kirk v. Hamilton, 102 U. S. 68, 77, 26 L. ed. 79, 82; Bigelow v. Foss, 59 Me. 102.

In Babcock v. Case, 61 Pa. 427, 100 Am. Dec. 654, 6 Mor. Min. Rep. 618, the grantee in a tax deed represented that he had examined the title and that it was good. The suit was to recover the consideration paid for the land. The court said that although the action was at common law it was still equitable. "The seller was bound to exhibit the truth of the case as it existed, whether he knew them [the facts] or not. That is to say, his ignorance of them, having undertaken truly to state them, would not redeem a falsehood in regard to them in any material matter, from being a fraud, and a fraud that would avoid the contract." "When the vendee relies on the representations of the vendor, and acts upon the faith thereof, without relying on his own judgment or opinion, and this is known to the vendor, the latter cannot shelter himself under the pretense that his representation was a mere expression of opinion, when it is discovered to be false." Rimer v. Dugan, 39 Miss. 477, 77 Am. Dec. 687. "It is not necessary to an equitable estoppel that the party should design to mislead. It is enough that the act was calculated to mislead and actually did mislead the defendants while acting in good faith, and 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) with reasonable care and diligence." Blair v. Wait, 69 N. Y. 113, 116.

It is contended that the appellee should be denied relief because he did not examine the records. It would be highly inequitable to say to one who in good faith has relied upon the express declaration of another that he owned the land and could convey a perfect title, that he might have ascertained its falsity by proceeding to the county seat, which in this case was 17 miles distant, and making an examination of the record. The obligation of ordinary good faith precludes the vendor from seeking shelter under such a claim. Ewart, Estoppel, 137; Bigelow, Estoppel, 1st ed. p. 608; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. § 810.

When a false representation is of a matter presumably within the knowledge of the party making it, not made in the way of commendation or as an opinion merely, but as a positive assertion of an existing fact to induce the other party to enter into the contract, such party, having no knowledge to the contrary, may, if he act in good faith, accept the representation as true, and is not bound to make inquiries or examination for himself. This rule accords with fair dealing and is sanctioned by authority. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. §§ 891, 893; Culver v. Avery, 7 Wend. 380, 22 Am. Dec. 586; Hunt v. Barker, 22 R. I. 18, 84 Am. St. Rep. 812, 46 Atl. 46; Dodge v. Pope, 93 Ind. 480; Kiefer v. Rogers, 19 Minn. 32, Gil. 14; Beaupland v. McKeen, 28 Pa. 124, 131, 70 Am. Dec. 115. See also, as bearing upon the question generally, Lanyon Zinc Co. v. Freeman, 68 Kan. 691, 697, 75 Pac. 995, 1 Ann. Cas. 403.

General expressions in a commissioner's decision in Chellis v. Coble, 37 Kan. 558, 15 Pac. 505, are cited as opposed to some of the principles followed in this opinion, but, as applied to the facts of this case, these principles are well founded in equity and sustained by the authorities.

The judgment is affirmed.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, & NORFOLK RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
WILLIAM WALDRON.

(116 Md. 441, 82 Atl. 709.)

False imprisonment — detaining witness — liability of railroad company.
1. A railroad company is liable for false imprisonment, if its conductor, when directing officers to arrest a disorderly passenger, causes him to lock up another passenger who merely witnessed the disorder, as a witness against the guilty party.

Master and servant — arrest by conductor — scope of authority — liability of railroad.

2. Express authority to a conductor to cause the arrest and detention of a witness to disorderly conduct on the train is not necessary to render a railroad company liable for such arrest and detention of a passenger, as a witness against a passenger whom the conductor, while acting within the line of his duty, caused to be arrested.

Evidence — authority of conductor — admissibility.

3. Evidence that the conductor had no authority to cause the detention of a passenger as a witness to a misdemeanor on the train is not admissible in an action to hold the railroad company liable for false imprisonment because of such detention.

Trial — instructions — variance from evidence — materiality.

4. The assumption in an instruction in an action to hold a railroad company liable for false imprisonment of a passenger, that the conductor telegraphed for "officers," is not error, although the evidence tends to show that he telegraphed for an officer, if more than one met the train in response to the message.

Same — abstract — protection from injury and insult.

5. An instruction that it is the carrier's duty to use reasonable care to protect its passenger from personal injury and insult, in an action to hold it liable for causing his false imprisonment, is not abstract, because not based on any state of facts in the case.

Evidence — damages — false imprisonment.

6. Upon the question of damages for causing the arrest and detention of a passenger as a witness, evidence is admissible

Note. — Detention of one as witness as false imprisonment.

There seems to be little of authority on this point in addition to NEW YORK, P. & N. R. Co. v. WALDRON.

Bates v. Kitchel, 160 Mich. 402, 125 N. W. 684, holds that since the statute in reference to the commitment of a person for refusing to give a recognizance for his appearance as a witness in a criminal case did not extend jurisdiction in respect thereof to justices of the peace, an accused who secured, by a justice's order, the arrest of a prospective witness, was liable to the latter for false imprisonment. On subsequent appeal in 166 Mich. 695, 132 N. W. 459, it was further held that the right of action was not affected by the fact that the plaintiff could have avoided imprisonment by giving the recognizance.

The case of Fire Asso. of Philadelphia v. Fleming, 78 Ga. 733, 3 S. E. 420, involved 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that he was taken to the jail and compelled to leave a cash deposit as bail.

(November 25, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Worcester County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for false arrest and imprisonment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Joshua W. Miles and Henry L. D. Stanford, for appellant:

The general rule in actions for torts is that the wrongdoer is liable for all such consequences flowing from his wrongful acts as, according to human experience and the usual course of events, might have been anticipated.

Sloan v. Edwards, 61 Md. 99; Wiley v. West Jersey R. Co. 44 N. J. L. 247; Sheffer v. Washington City, V. M. & G. S. R. Co. 105 U. S. 252, 26 L. ed. 1071; McDonald v. Snelling, 14 Allen, 290, 92 Am. Dec. 768.

It was wrong to charge that "it was the duty of the defendant to use all reasonable care to protect the plaintiff from personal injury and insult." This was simply stating an abstract proposition of law, based on a state of facts not shown to exist.

Washington F. Ins. Co. v. Davison, 30 Md. 92; Moore v. McDonald, 68 Md. 336, 12 Atl. 117; Marshall v. Haney, 4 Md. 498, 59 Am. Dec. 92; Harness v. Steele, 159 Ind. 299, 64 N. E. 875; Palmer v. Maine C. R. Co. 92 Me. 412, 44 L.R.A. 673, 69 Am. St. Rep. 513, 42 Atl. 800.

There was not, in a legal sense, any arrest of the plaintiff by any officer, at the instance of the conductor.

Ahern v. Collins, 39 Mo. 151; Smith an action for malicious arrest and false imprisonment, against a fire insurance company whose attorney, without express authority, directed a detective to stop the departure from town of the plaintiff, whom the attorney desired as a witness in respect of the alleged arson of a building insured by the company. The case, however, was disposed of with the remark that if the defendant was liable at all, a verdict for $1,000 was excessive, where there was no arrest or confinement, and the plaintiff was permitted to leave in less than a day. The court said that if the detective did actually arrest the plaintiff, he might be personally liable, but intimated that the company could not be held, since an arrest was beyond the scope of the detective's instructions.

Generally, as to whether false imprisonment may be predicated of a partial or conditional restraint, see the note in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 968.

L. A. W.

v. State, 7 Humph. 43; Johnson v. Tompkins, Baldw. 571, Fed. Cas. No. 7,416; Pockock v. Moore, Ryan & M. 321; Lansing v. Case, 4 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 223.

Messrs. Ellegood, Freeny, & Walles and Hope H. Barroll, for appellee:

The imprisonment and detention was the gravamen of the offense, and to forbid the plaintiff to prove that would be to deny him the right to prove his case.

Baltimore v. Lobe, 90 Md. 313, 45 Atl. 192.

It is not to be supposed that a railroad company ever authorizes or orders its conductors to commit any wrong upon a passenger. The duty of a conductor is not a mere negative one to do no harm to a passenger, but it is a positive duty to protect his passengers against all persons and all wrongs.

Haver v. Central R. Co. 62 N. J. L. 282, 43 L.R.A. 84, 72 Am. St. Rep. 647, 41 Atl. 916; 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1638; Gillingham v. Ohio River R. Co. 35 W. Va. 588, 14 L.R.A. 798, 29 Am. St. Rep. 827, 14 S. E. 243; Daniel v. Petersburg R. Co. 117 N. C. 592, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 435, 23 S. E. 327; Dwinelle v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 120 N. Y. 117, 8 L.R.A. 225, 17 Am. St. Rep. 611, 24 N. E. 319; New Jersey S. B. Co. v. Brockett, 121 U. S. 637, 30 L. ed. 1049, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1039; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Harris, 122 U. S. 597, 30 L. ed. 1146, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1286; Stewart v. Brooklyn & C. T. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 591, 43 Am. Rep. 185; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Cain, 81 Md. 105, 28 L.R.A. 688, 31 Atl. 801; Tolchester Beach Improv. Co. v. Scharnagl, 105 Md. 207, 65 Atl. 916; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Barger, 80 Md. 30, 26 L.R.A. 220, 45 Am. St. Rep. 319, 30 Atl. 560.

Pattison, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for false arrest and imprisonment brought by the appellee, William Waldron, against the appellant, the New York, Philadelphia, & Norfolk Railroad Company. The case was tried before a jury upon issues joined on plea of not guilty, and the result was a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff, from which the defendant has appealed.

There are twelve bills of exceptions in the record; one relates to the ruling of the lower court on the prayers for instructions to the jury, and the other eleven to the rulings of the court upon questions of evidence.

The plaintiff offered three prayers, the defendant four. To the granting of the plaintiff's prayers, the defendant objected, "both generally and because there was no legally sufficient evidence to sustain them." All of the plaintiff's prayers were granted, while two of the defendant's prayers were granted and two rejected. To the ruling of the court in granting the plaintiff's prayers, and in the rejection of the defendant's third and fourth prayers, the defendant excepted. The defendant's fourth prayer asks the court to instruct the jury that, under the pleading and evidence in the case, there was no evidence legally sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover; and by the other rejected prayer of the defendant (the third prayer), the court was asked to instruct the jury "that there is no evidence legally sufficient to prove that any of the agents or officers of the defendant corporation, the New York, Philadelphia, & Norfolk Railroad Company, was ever authorized by said company to do or commit any of the acts complained of by the plaintiff, or that the said defendant company ever adopted or ratified said acts of said officers or agents; and the verdict of the jury must therefore be for the defendant."

The plaintiff testified: That on Saturday, the 30th day of November, 1907, while holding a ticket entitling him to passage upon the defendant's steamer and over its road and its connecting roads, from Norfolk to Philadelphia, he boarded its steamer at Norfolk, from whence he went to Cape Charles, at which point he entered the car of the defendant. That after taking a seat therein two young men, strangers to him, but whose names, as he afterwards learned, were McDorman and Freeze, entered the car, and after being seated a short while one of them took from his pocket a bottle of whisky. They drank from the bottle and then passed it to a number of others in the car, including the witness, who drank from it. The witness stated, however, that it was the first drink he had taken that day, and would not have taken that only they insisted on it. McDorman and Freeze then separated; McDorman taking a seat to himself, with his head leaning up against the window. While in this position. Freeze approached and struck McDorman, breaking the window glass. At this time, Truitt, the conductor, was not in the car; but when he learned of the glass being broken, he told Freeze that he would have to pay for it, which he did. In his conversation with the conductor, Freeze charged McDorman and others in the car, including the plaintiff, with stealing his money, and became boisterous and profane in his language. While the plaintiff was sitting by himself, and after the train had left one of the stations on the road, Kellar's, as the witness thought, the conductor approached him and told him that he had intended to have Freeze arrested at the station just passed, but that he could not find any officer, and that he had to take him to Princess Anne; that he had phoned up or wired to Princess Anne for the sheriff to arrest him there. When the train was near Princess Anne, the conductor told the plaintiff that he would have to have him as a witness, and wrote down his name and address in Philadelphia, which were given to him by the plaintiff, and was told by the plaintiff that he would come down at any time he would notify him. Later, and just as the train was slowing up for Princess Anne, the conductor said to the plaintiff, "You have got to go with them," meaning the officers who were to arrest Freeze, to which the plaintiff replied, "Are you going to lock me up?" The conductor said: "Yes; we shall have to hold you as a witness." To which the plaintiff replied: "All right; I will have to go; that is all." When the train stopped at the station, the sheriff and, as he supposed, his deputy, came into the car, and as the deputy with Freeze approached the plaintiff, the conductor said: "You take this man along as witness. There is no charge against him; but we have got to have him as a witness." The officers said to him, "Come with me," and he went. They went from the station to the jail. When they reached the jail, they entered and went so far as the corridor. Freeze was placed in a cell. The sheriff then asked the plaintiff if he could give any bail, as there was no charge against him. The plaintiff replied that he knew no one in Princess Anne; that it was the first time he was ever in the town, but said he had some money, $75, "if that would do any good." He was told by the sheriff to put up $50 for his appearance when needed. He thus gave to the sheriff $50, for which the sheriff gave to him a receipt, and he went to the hotel. This was about 1 o'clock Sunday morning; the hour for the arrival of the train at Princess Anne being about 12 o'clock at night. On Sunday morning, he again saw the sheriff, at which time the sheriff returned to him his money and released him from the necessity of returning as a witness. He then went to the hotel and paid his bill, and from there he went to the station, where he bought a ticket to Delmar, paying therefore 65 cents. The conductor had taken the coupon off that part of the ticket that carried him to Delmar; the ticket was good from Delmar to Philadelphia.

S. Uphur Long, the sheriff of Somerset county referred to in plaintiff's testimony, on behalf of the plaintiff, testified: "That 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

he received a message to go to what is called the midnight train that night [the occasion referred to in plaintiff's testimony], and that he went there, as sheriff, somewhere between 12 and 1 o'clock. That on his way to the depot he met John H. Packard, at that time bailiff of Princess Anne, who was also going out to the depot; he having been asked, as he stated, to go to the station for the same purpose for which the sheriff was going. When they reached the depot, the conductor inquired if the sheriff or police were there, and upon being told that they were, they were invited by the conductor aboard the train, and were shown "this fellow, Freeze, that he had a charge against;" also Waldron, the plaintiff, whom the conductor said he wanted to hold as a witness. Thereupon Waldron, the plaintiff, was taken to and in jail by Mr. Packard. That the plaintiff put up $50 as bail for his appearance as a witness when needed.

Packard, who at the time of the occasion referred to in the testimony above stated, was bailiff of Princess Anne, and at the time of the trial of the case below, was in the employment of the defendant as fireman, testified, on behalf of the defendant, that after entering the car he and the conductor went to the north end of it, and there the conductor said: "That is the man there; this other was witness to the whole thing." He did not remember that the conductor said more, and from that he told the plaintiff to come on, and the plaintiff went with him. He did not recall that the conductor said there was no charge against the plaintiff, but remembered that he told the plaintiff there was no charge against him; that he was only held as a witness.

Oscar M. Jones, telegraph operator at the station, testified "that he received a message in reference to said occurrence from Conductor Truitt, and after phoning it uptown the message was destroyed; but to the best of his knowledge the message was, 'Have officer arrival of No. 50 at Princess Anne.'"

William G. Truitt, offered by the defendant, testified: That on the 30th day of November, 1907, he was, and had been for twenty-six years, conductor on defendant's road. That he remembered the occasion when, on the said 30th day of November, 1907, there was a disorderly passenger, Freeze, on his train. That he first learned of the misbehavior or misconduct of this passenger when at or near Nassawadox, a station about 19 miles above Cape Charles. That at the time of the assault made by Freeze on McDorman he was in the Jim Crow car. That when he returned to the car in which Freeze was seated, he was pointed out to him by the brakeman. He spoke to Freeze of his misconduct, and told him that he would have to put him off the train, and that he would also have to pay for the window-glass which he did. He accused many of those in the car of robbing him, but finally quieted down. Later, however, he charged the plaintiff with robbing him, about which time he (the conductor) sent a message from Hallwood to the operator at Princess Anne, in which he said, "Please have officer at train on arrival of No. 50." Freeze continued his disorderly conduct until he got near to Kings Creek, Maryland, among other things threatening the life of the plaintiff and accusing the plaintiff of robbing him. Finally he said to the plaintiff: "My friend, I am going to have that fellow taken off at Princess Anne, and I would suggest that you get off there as a witness." Plaintiff did not say whether he would or would not get off. When the train arrived at Princess Anne, the conductor stepped to the door and asked if the officer was there, and Mr. Long and Mr. Packard stepped forward. With them, he entered the car and said, "Gentlemen, here is the man," and walked back to where Freeze was, and further said: "Here is the man who raised all this disturbance, and here is another man who I have suggested to get off and appear as a witness." That he did not say to the sheriff (referring to Waldron), "Take this man off," or, "Take this man along as a witness. I have no charge against him." He denied saying, "Yes, we shall have to hold you as a witness," to Waldron's asking him, "Are you going to lock me up?" He also denied having any conversation with the plaintiff in which he asked plaintiff about his address. That he did not know the man's name, where he lived, or anything about it. The conductor did not hear the officer tell the plaintiff to come along. That he made the suggestion to Waldron to get off as a witness to protect him, as Freeze had threatened his life and accused him of robbing him. That he sympathized with Waldron and felt sorry for him and wanted to protect him. That Freeze was full of whisky. That Freeze was disorderly both in Virginia and in Maryland; kept up his disorderly conduct after leaving Peninsula Junction until he got to Princess Anne. Truitt was then asked by the defendant company: "Now, then, Mr. Truitt, you have stated that you were the conductor of the New York, Philadelphia, & Norfolk Railroad Company, and you were the conductor at the time of the occurrence to 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

which you have referred. Please state what, if any, authority you have ever had from the railroad company, or from any of its officers, to arrest or take into custody, or cause to be arrested or taken into custody, any passenger as a witness to any criminal occurrence or disorder occurring on your train?" To which question the plaintiff objected, and, the court sustaining the objection, the witness was not permitted to answer. To this ruling of the court, the defendant excepted, and this forms the ninth bill of exceptions. We refer to this exception at this time, because it will be considered and discussed in connection with the ruling upon the defendant's rejected prayers.

In our opinion, the court below committed no error in repeating the third and fourth prayers of the defendant.

There is in this case evidence sufficient to go to the jury, tending to show a false arrest and imprisonment of the plaintiff, procured by the servant of the defendant, under circumstances that render the defendant liable therefor to the plaintiff. "False imprisonment is a wrong akin to the wrongs of assault and battery, and consists in imposing, by force or threats, an unlawful restraint upon a man's freedom of locomotion." Cooley, Torts, 196; Gillingham v. Ohio River R. Co. 35 W. Va. 595, 14 L.R.A. 798, 29 Am. St. Rep. 827, 14 S. E. 243. And, as was said in Kirk v. Garrett, 84 Md. 409, 35 Atl. 1092: "False imprisonment consists in the unlawful detention of one against his will." "It is the unlawful restraint of a man's liberty by imprisonment, or by words and array of force." Tomlin v. Hildreth, 65 N. J. L. 438, 47 Atl. 649.

The plaintiff, with others, while a passenger upon the train of the defendant, witnessed the disorder produced by the misconduct of another passenger, a stranger to him, in the car in which the plaintiff was seated. The plaintiff was in no way a party to the disorder; nor was he in any wise responsible therefor. The conductor, after deciding to prosecute the party creating the disorder, obtained from the plaintiff his name and address, so that he could communicate with him, should he be needed as a witness in the prosecution of the offender. The plaintiff expressed his willingness to appear as a witness when wanted and notified; but, notwithstanding this readiness and willingness on his part to attend the trial and testify against the accused when needed, he was told by the conductor that he would be held as a witness, and to secure his attendance he would be "locked up;" and when the train arrived at Princess Anne the plaintiff was pointed out by the conductor to the officers who were there to meet the train upon its arrival, pursuant to the order wired by the conductor to the agent at that station, and the officers were told by the conductor to hold him as a witness to testify against the disorderly passenger. The officers took him and carried him to jail, at which place he was asked by them, or one of them, if he would give bail for his appearance as a witness when his presence should be needed at the trial of the disorderly passenger. Upon being told that he could not, as he was a stranger in the town and knew no one, he was then released upon his depositing with one of the officers $50, to secure his appearance as a witness at such trial.

This court, in the case of Hall v. Somerset County, 82 Md. 620, 32 L.R.A. 449, 51 Am. St. Rep. 484, 34 Atl. 771, quoted approvingly from Lord Hale, 2 Hale, P. C. 282, in which that author, in enumerating the compulsory methods by which witnesses can be brought in to testify, states that "the more ordinary and more effectual means [employed for such purposes], the justices or coroner that take the examination of the person accused, and the information of the witnesses, may at that time, or at any time after and before the trial, bind over the witnesses to appear at the sessions, and in case of their refusal either to come or to be bound over, may commit them for their contempt on such refusal."

This court in that case (Hall v. Somerset County) further stated, that § 13 of article 35 of the Code, which provides for the payment of fees for witnesses committed to prison upon their failure to find security for their appearance to testify against the accused, "clearly recognizes the power of a magistrate to commit a witness, in order that his attendance to testify against a person accused of crime may be secured; it is a power which can only be exerted after the witness fails to give such reasonable security for his appearance as may be demanded of him." This statute, however, which provides for the payment of fees of imprisoned witnesses, refers only to such as are committed by magistrates. Therefore the recognition therein found of the right to imprison witnesses upon their failure to find security for their appearance to testify against a person accused of crime can extend no further than the right of the magistrate to commit in such cases.

But, whatever may be the power and authority, if any, of an officer under extreme conditions and circumstances, to hold temporarily in restraint of his liberty a person as a witness to testify against an accused person, such authority or power does not exist in this case. The nature and character of the offense and the conditions and circumstances thereof and the relations existing between the parties do no warrant the arrest and imprisonment of the plaintiff, procured, as it was, by the servant of the defendant, in order to secure his attendance as a witness at the trial of the accused party. "The illegality of the arrest and the unlawfulness of the detention are indispensable elements in this form of action." Kirk v. Garrett, supra. In our opinion, these indispensable elements are found to exist in this case. But, by the defendant's rejected third prayer, the court below was asked to instruct the jury that there was no legally sufficient evidence that the conductor, servant of the defendant company, was ever authorized by the defendant to commit the acts complained of, or that such acts were ever adopted or ratified by the defendant company.

We will now consider the ruling of the court in refusing to grant this instruction. The plaintiff having purchased a ticket from the defendant company entitling him to transportation from Norfolk, Virginia, over the lines of the defendant and its connecting lines, to the city of Philadelphia, he became a passenger upon the car of the defendant, and was such a passenger at the time of the acts complained of in this case. As a passenger, he was entitled to all the rights, privileges, and protection which the law accords to passengers, and subject to the duties and liabilities which the law imposes on a carrier for the safety and proper treatment of its passengers.

In the case of Stewart v. Brooklyn & C. T. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 590, 43 Am. Rep. 185, the court there said: "The trial court dismissed the plaintiff's complaint, on the ground that the defendant's servant, in assaulting the plaintiff [a passenger in the car], was not acting within the scope of his employment, but attacked the plaintiff to gratify some wicked and malicious purpose of his own. Had the person assaulted been one to whom the defendant owed no duty, the dismissal of the plaintiff's complaint would probably have been correct; but the rule which applies in such a case has no application as between a common carrier and his passenger. In such a case, a different rule applies." And this court, in the case of Maryland & P. R. Co. v. Tucker, 115 Md. 43, 80 Atl. 688, filed February 3, 1911, said, in the case of Stewart v. Brooklyn & C. T. R. Co. supra: "It was held that a carrier undertakes to protect his passengers while being conveyed, against the misconduct of its own servants while engaged in executing the contract."

In the case of Haver v. Central R. Co. 62 N. J. L. 282, 43 L.R.A. 84, 72 Am. St. Rep. 647, 41 Atl. 916, which was an action brought against the carrier for the assault made by a brakeman upon a passenger, the court there said: "The case now before the court depends, not upon the law of liability of a master for the acts of his servants, but upon the duty imposed on the railroad company in the carriage of the plaintiff as a passenger. The duty of a carrier of passengers is to safely and securely carry persons who bear to it the relation of passengers. The carrier is under obligation . . . to carry the passenger therein to the end of his route, to protect him against assault and other ill treatment by those employed by and under the carrier's control while on the way."

In the case of New Jersey S. B. Co. v. Brockett, 121 U. S. 637, 30 L. ed. 1049, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1039, Justice Harlan, speaking for the court, said: "The plaintiff was entitled, in virtue of that contract [as passenger], to protection against the misconduct or negligence of the carrier's servants. Their misconduct or negligence while transacting the company's business, and when acting within the general scope of their employment, is of necessity to be imputed to the corporation which constituted them agents for the performance of its contract with the passenger. Whether the act of the servant be one of omission or commission, whether negligent or fraudulent, 'if . . . it be done in the course of his employment, . . . it makes no difference that the master did not authorize or even know of the servant's act or neglect; or even if he disapproved or forbade it, he is equally liable, if . . . [it] be done in the course of his servant's employment. . . . This rule . . . is founded upon public policy and convenience.'"

And this court, in the case of Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Cain, 81 Md. 105, 28 L.R.A. 688, 31 Atl. 805, held that, "if the plaintiff had been guilty of no breach of the peace, his arrest at the instance of the conductor was unlawful, and, having been made in the defendant's depot whilst the plaintiff, a passenger, was still entitled to be protected by the defendant against assaults and injuries by the defendant's own employees, if wrongfully made by or at the request of the defendant's own servants whilst they were in and about the performance of their prescribed duties, the master would be liable."

From these authorities, it will be seen 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that the defendant company is liable for the acts of its conductor in ordering and procuring the arrest and imprisonment of the plaintiff, which were committed in the course of his employment, even though he was not authorized to do so by the defendant company; and thus the third and fourth prayers of the defendant, as well as the testimony offered in the ninth exception, were properly rejected.

The only objection urged against the plaintiff's first prayer is that it assumes there was evidence that the conductor wired the agent at Princess Anne to have officers meet the train at that point, when, as the defendant contends, the evidence was that he wired the agent to have "officer" meet the train, etc. The conductor testified that the word "officer," and not the word "officers," was used by him in the telegram; the agent to whom the telegram was sent was unable to give the exact language. But whether the word "officer" or "officers" was used, the sending of the despatch resulted in two officers meeting the train. This, we think, is an unimportant variance, should any exist at all, and does not render the prayer bad. We think the court committed no error in granting the prayer.

In the second prayer of the plaintiff, the jury is instructed that "it is the duty of the defendant to use all reasonable care to protect the plaintiff from personal injury and insult." This, the defendant contends, is stating an abstract proposition of law, based on a state of facts not shown to exist in this case. It contends that no personal injury was done or insult offered the plaintiff by reason of his being held and detained under conditions and circumstances which we hold herein constitute false arrest and imprisonment. We cannot adopt this contention of the defendant, that no personal injury has been done or personal insult has been offered the plaintiff by his false arrest and imprisonment. Not only was it a personal indignity and insult, but a personal injury as well. "A personal injury includes libel, slander, criminal conversation, seduction, and malicious prosecution; also an assault, battery, false imprisonment, or other actionable injuries to the person." 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5341.

The first eight and the tenth and eleventh exceptions found in the record are to the rulings of the court in permitting the plaintiff to show that he was taken to the jail and security demanded of him by the officers holding him as a witness under the direction of the defendant's servant, and the fact that he deposited with said officers, as security for his appearance as a witness, the sum of $50. The plaintiff in this case was taken into the custody of the officers upon the request of and at the direction of Truitt, the conductor of the defendant company, to hold him as a witness to testify against Freeze, who was at the same time arrested upon the request and direction of Truitt, charged with disorderly conduct. The plaintiff's unlawful detention commenced at the time that he was so taken into the custody of the officers. It was then that his liberty was restrained, and, in a legal sense, he was imprisoned from that time. This was at 12 o'clock Saturday night. With directions from the conductor to hold the plaintiff as a witness, what was he to do but to carry him to jail, or take from him security for his appearance as a witness? These, as it would seem, were unavoidable incidents to his being held as a witness, as directed by defendant's servant; and these unavoidable incidents should have been known and considered by the conductor at the time that he gave the direction to hold the plaintiff as a witness. We think this evidence was properly admitted.

The point is made by the defendant that the judgment in this case is erroneously entered, for the reason that interest is allowed thereon from the date of the verdict, and not from the date of the rendition of the judgment. This question was not presented to or passed upon by the circuit court, but the point is made for the first time in this court; thus the question is not properly before this court to be considered by it. Anders v. Devries, 26 Md. 222.

From what we have said, we find no errors in the rulings of the court below, and will therefore affirm its judgment.

Judgment affirmed, with costs to the appellee.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

JOSEPH KROPIDLOWSKI, Resp't.,

v.

PFISTER & VOGEL LEATHER COMPANY, Appt.

(— Wis. —, 135 N. W. 839.)

Release — joint tort feorsors — covenant not to sue — partial satisfaction — effect.

A release of, and covenant for a valuable consideration not to sue, one of several joint tort feorsors, which expressly states that the sum received is merely a part satisfaction of the claim, will not prevent a suit against the other wrongdoer.

(April 23, 1912.)

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County sustaining a demurrer to an answer setting up a release, in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Barnes, J.:

The complaint in this action alleged that on or about April 23, 1910, plaintiff was employed by the Herman Zohrlaut Leather Company in its factory, and that the defendant herein delivered to said company certain carboys of acid; that plaintiff, in the performance of his duties was required to remove the carboys from the yard to the store-room; that the stopper in the neck of one of the carboys was defective, in that it was improperly placed therein, and that while plaintiff was handling the carboy the stopper blew out, the acid coming in contact with his eyes, as a result of which he lost the sight of one and sustained injuries to the other. The answer denied generally the allegations of the complaint, and as a second defense pleaded the following release as a bar to recovery against defendant:

Received from Herman Zohrlaut Leather Company the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000), and the payment of medical and hospital bills due Dr. George Mason and St. Mary's Hospital, amounting to $58 and $32.59, respectively, both for services rendered me on account of the below-mentioned accident, and in consideration of said sums so paid I hereby release and forever discharge said Herman Zohrlaut Leather Com-

Note.—The decisions upon the effect of a covenant not to sue one joint tort feor as a release of another are collected in notes to Abb v. Northern P. R. Co. 58 L.R.A. 299, and Musolf v. Duluth Edison Electric Co. 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 451.

As to the effect in a release of one joint tort feor of a reservation of the right as against others, see Eden v. Fletcher, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 618, and note.

As to the right to show by extrinsic evidence that the payment of a judgment against, or consideration for the release of, an alleged joint tort feor, was not a satisfaction of the claim, see notes to Ryan v. Becker, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 330, and Fitzgerald v. Union Stock Yards Co. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 983.

As to the effect of the release of one person from liability for a tort to release another, where the former was not in fact or law liable, see note to Snyder v. Mutual Teleph. Co. 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 321.

As to the effect of obtaining judgment against one joint tort feor upon the liability of the other, see note to Blackman v. Simpson, 58 L.R.A. 410.

pany, its successors and assigns, of and from any and all actions, claims, and demands against said Herman Zohrlaut Leather Company, for, upon, or by reason of any damage, loss, injury, or suffering which heretofore has been or which may hereafter be sustained by me in consequence of an accident and injury suffered by me on or about the 23d day of April, 1910, while in the employ of said Herman Zohrlaut Leather Company; and I hereby covenant and agree with said Herman Zohrlaut Leather Company that, in consideration of the payment of said sums, I will not begin or prosecute any action against said Herman Zohrlaut Leather Company on account of said accident or injuries. It is expressly understood, however, that said sums are received, not as an accord and satisfaction for the whole injury suffered, but only as part satisfaction thereof. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, this 19th day of December, 1910.

[Signed] Joseph Kropidowski. [Seal.]

Plaintiff demurred to defendant's second defense, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense, which demurrer was sustained; and from an order sustaining the demurrer this appeal is taken.

Messrs. Lines, Spooner, Ellis, & Quarles, for appellant:

The agreement in question is a technical release, and as such operates to extinguish the right of action, and does not merely affect the remedy.

2 Co. Litt. 232a; Re E. W. A. [1901] 2 K. B. 648, 70 L. J. K. B. N. S. 810, 49 Week. Rep. 642, 85 L. T. N. S. 31, 8 Manson, 250; Millett v. Hayford, 1 Wis. 412.

It is not essential to the validity of a release that it be based upon an accord and satisfaction.

1 Tidd, Pr. 696, 699, 702; 34 Cyc. 1086; 2 Pollock & M. History of English Law, 90.

A release of one, or satisfaction received from one, joint trespasser, may be pleaded in an action to recover damages for trespass.

18 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 94; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 283; Middleditch v. Sharland, 5 Ves. Jr. 87; Abb v. Northern P. R. Co. 28 Wash. 428, 58 L.R.A. 293, 92 Am. St. Rep. 864, 68 Pac. 954; Ellis v. Esson, 50 Wis. 138, 36 Am. Rep. 830, 6 N. W. 518; Bishop v. McGillis, 82 Wis. 126, 51 N. W. 1075.

Recitals in the instrument about the payment of money to the plaintiff as not being in full satisfaction of the injury are mere 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

surplusage, and are void as being repugnant to the grant.

McBride v. Scott, 132 Mich. 176, 61 L.R.A. 445, 102 Am. St. Rep. 416, 93 N. W. 243, 1 Ann. Cas. 61; 34 Cyc. 1087; Gunther v. Lee, 45 Md. 60, 24 Am. Rep. 504; 4 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. p. 1775; Benjamin v. McConnell, 9 Ill. 536, 46 Am. Dec. 474; O'Shea v. New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. 44 C. C. A. 601, 105 Fed. 559; Abb v. Northern P. R. Co. 28 Wash. 428, 58 L.R.A. 293, 92 Am. St. Rep. 864, 68 Pac. 954.

Even though the agreement be considered a covenant not to sue, it is a bar to an action of the sort set forth in the complaint.

Pogel v. Meilke, 60 Wis. 248, 18 N. W. 927; Abb v. Northern P. R. Co. 28 Wash. 428, 58 L.R.A. 303, 92 Am. St. Rep. 864, 68 Pac. 954; Burke v. Noble, 48 Pa. 175.

Messrs. Kronshage, Fritz, & Hannan, for respondent:

The intention of the parties is to govern.

Ellis v. Esson, 50 Wis. 148, 36 Am. Rep. 830, 6 N. W. 518; Pogel v. Meilke, 60 Wis. 250, 18 N. W. 927; Bishop v. McGillis, 82 Wis. 126, 51 N. W. 1075; Fitzgerald v. Union Stockyards Co. 89 Neb. 393, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 983, 131 N. W. 612; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. 161, 162.

The document is not a technical release under seal, but merely a covenant not to sue, and therefore does not discharge defendant's liability.

Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Averill, 224 Ill. 516, 79 N. E. 654; Robertson v. Trammell, 98 Tex. 364, 83 S. W. 1098; Chicago v. Smith, 95 Ill. App. 340; Chicago v. Babcock, 143 Ill. 358, 32 N. E. 271; Irvine v. Milbank, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 378; Bishop v. McGillis, 82 Wis. 126, 51 N. W. 1075.

Barnes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant maintains that the instrument set forth in the statement of facts is a release, under seal, of one of two joint wrongdoers, and that the legal effect of the document is to release and discharge both. The respondent contends that the so-called release should be construed as a covenant not to sue the Herman Zohrlaut Leather Company, and not as a technical release and that, so construed, it does not bar a recovery from the appellant for the difference between the amount of damages sustained and the sum already paid by the Zohrlaut Company. The question is an interesting one; and it may be fairly said at the outset that, while the decided cases preponderate in favor of the contention of the appellant, the reasoning which supports them seems to be technical, artificial, and unsatisfactory.

The general rule that a release of one joint wrongdoer releases all is elementary.

The same is true where the party who is wronged receives a valuable consideration from one of two or more joint wrongdoers as an accord and satisfaction of the whole injury. While the cases may differ to some extent as to the reason for the rule stated, most courts base it on the assumption that the injured party has received full satisfaction, or what is, in law, equivalent to full satisfaction, for the damages sustained, and that recovery should not go beyond this.

The alleged release here involved recites that the sums paid were not received "as an accord and satisfaction for the whole injury suffered, but only as part satisfaction thereof," and clearly indicates an intention on the part of the respondent to reserve the right to collect the balance of his damages from the other wrongdoer.

The appellant contends that this portion of the document is contrary to the terms of the grant, and should be rejected as mere surplusage, and that, inasmuch as one of the wrongdoers was released, there is a conclusive presumption of law that there was full compensation for the injury, and the cause of action is wholly extinguished. Judge Cooley states the rule to be that the release of one joint tortfeasor releases all, "although the release expressly stipulates that the other defendants shall not be released." 1 Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. 235, 236, and cases cited in note 81. The author continues: "And this rule is held to apply, even though the one released was not in fact liable." Page 236, and cases cited in note 82. Additional cases to the proposition covered by the first of the above quotations will be found in note to Abb v. Northern P. R. Co. 58 L.R.A. 297, and further citations will be found in the comprehensive notes to the late case of McBride v. Scott, 1 Ann. Cas. 62, 63.

Some of our own cases bear upon the subject under discussion, but do not cover the precise point involved. Ellis v. Esson, 50 Wis. 138, 147, 36 Am. Rep. 830, 6 N. W. 518, is a leading case on the proposition that, where there is partial satisfaction by one of two or more joint wrongdoers, coupled with a covenant not to sue the party making the payment, and the right is reserved to prosecute the other wrongdoer for the unpaid balance of the demand, there is only a satisfaction pro tanto, and there is neither a release nor an accord and satisfaction of the entire damage, and recovery of the unpaid portion of the damage may be had from the other wrongdoers. The opinion also states that all the authorities hold that a technical release of one of two or more joint wrongdoers, under seal, discharges them all, and is a bar to an action against any or all of them. The general doctrine of this case is approved in Pogel v. Meilke, 60 Wis. 248, 250, 18 N. W. 927, and again in Bishop v. McGillis, 82 Wis. 120, 126, 51 N. W. 1075, where it is said: "The plaintiff might also agree, for a consideration, not to sue one, and could still maintain an action or actions against the others, unless he had executed a technical discharge under seal, or received some consideration as an accord and satisfaction of the whole injury." None of these cases deal with a situation where the alleged instrument of release showed on its face that it was given in partial satisfaction only of the claim; and neither do they help us in determining whether such a document is in fact a release or something else. The doctrine of Ellis v. Esson had some support in the books when the case was decided; and it may now be said that it is the general rule.

A fair construction of the instrument involved in this case is that the respondent intended to absolve the Zohrlaut Company from further liability, in consideration of the partial satisfaction by that company of the damages claimed, and that respondent intended to collect the remainder of the damages from the appellant. This the latter claims cannot be done, because a release of one was a release of all. If a release implies full satisfaction, then it is apparent that no such satisfaction was received, and that to call the instrument a full release is a misnomer.

The rule contended for by the appellant originated with the English courts, and at a time when an instrument under seal was surrounded by a strong odor of sanctity. These courts seem to have abandoned the rule, and to have substituted therefor a more logical and humane one, by which the whole intention of the parties is carried out. To avoid the effect of one firmly established fiction, they adopted another, and construed documents such as the one before us as covenants not to sue, instead of releases. Price v. Barker, 4 El. & Bl. 760, 3 C. L. R. 927, 24 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 130, 1 Jur. N. S. 775; Solly v. Forbes, 2 Brod. & B. 38, 4 J. B. Moore, 448, 22 Revised Rep. 641; Thompson v. Lack, 3 C. B. 540, 16 L. J. C. P. N. S. 75; Payler v. Homersham, 4 Maule & S. 423, 16 Revised Rep. 516; 22 Eng. Rul. Cas. 905; Bateson v. Gosling, L. R. 7 C. P. 9, 41 L. J. C. P. N. S. 53, 25 L. T. N. S. 570, 20 Week. Rep. 98. Some of these cases involved releases from joint and several contract obligations; but the rule is the same in tort actions, as will appear from Duck v. Mayeu [1892], 2 Q. B. 511, 513, 62 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 69, 4 Reports, 38, 67 L. T. N. S. 547, 41 Week. Rep. 56, 57 J. P. 23. The Vermont court has held that the release of one joint tortfeasor in part satisfaction for the tort, when the release states that the sum paid is received in partial satisfaction only, does not release the other tortfeasors as to the unsatisfied portion of the damages. Sloan v. Herrick, 49 Vt. 327. Decisions from the New York courts can be found on both sides of the question; but the final words, as expressed in Gilbert v. Finch, 173 N. Y. 455, 61 L.R.A. 807, 93 Am. St. Rep. 623, 66 N. E. 133, is that an instrument which is in form a release of one joint tortfeasor, and which recites that it is given in partial satisfaction only of the damages, and that the releasor intends to pursue his remedy against the other tortfeasors for the balance of the compensation to which he is entitled, will be held to be merely a covenant not to sue, and will not defeat the right of action against those who are not released. The authorities are reviewed in this case, and the court, in substance, says that the conclusion reached is not only in conflict with the majority of the decisions of other courts, but is also in conflict with a number of decisions of the New York courts. There are other cases to the effect that an instrument such as we are considering, should be treated as a covenant not to sue. Parmelee v. Lawrence, 44 Ill. 405, 412, 413; Edens v. Fletcher, 79 Kan. 139, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 618, 98 Pac. 784; Berry v. Gillis, 17 N. H. 10, 43 Am. Dec. 584; El Paso & S. R. Co. v. Darr, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 93 S. W. 166, 169; McCrillis v. Hawes, 38 Me. 566; 1 Parsons. Contr. 9th ed. 28. Referring to the general rule that a release of one joint tortfeasor releases all, it is said in 34 Cyc. 1087: "The logical and legal soundness of this rule, however harsh its application may be in the particular case, is undoubted, provided the sealed instrument is once construed to be a release; but to escape the application of this principle where it would work injustice and defeat the evident intention of the parties, the modern tendency of the courts is to construe, if possible, such instruments as covenants not to sue, which accordingly do not release the co-obligors."

What has been stated as the general rule seems to be not only illogical, but arbitrary, as applied to such a document as the one before us. It entirely overrides the manifest intention of the party who executes the release. Contrary to the general rule applicable to the construction of writings, it gives an effect to the instrument which is at variance with the meaning of the words used. All joint tortfeasors are severally liable for the entire damage inflicted. The respondent here might pursue the appellant and collect his entire damages from it, if he were able to establish a legal liability. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Since a settlement was made with one joint tortfeasor, it may well result in a benefit to the appellant, instead of an injury, because there has been partial compensation, and the sum paid as such compensation cannot be again recovered. There are some cases which recognize the right of contribution between wrongdoers. 1 Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. 254 et seq. But if this case should be brought within the principle of the decisions there cited, the respondent's cause of action would still remain, and at most the right of contribution could only affect the amount of recovery. We do not think that a construction of the so-called release should be adopted which would operate to defeat the intention of the parties, instead of effectuating that intent. Neither do we think that what is at best manifestly intended to be a partial release should be held to be a complete one, because the word "release," which has a technical meaning in the law, happens to be used. If a release implies full satisfaction, then it is apparent that there has not been full satisfaction, and consequently there has been no release in the technical sense, and that the intention of the parties will be best carried out by treating the agreement as a covenant not to sue. It follows that the order of the circuit court was right.

Order affirmed.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA, & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY et al., Appts.,
v.

MRS. R. A. LUCAS.

(— Tex. —, 144 S. W. 1126.)

Carrier — expulsion of passenger — gaining access to train by a subterfuge.

One holding a return trip railroad ticket which must be validated at the intermediate terminal to be good for return, who applies to the proper officer for validation, and is referred to another official in another city, who refuses to validate the ticket because of alleged want of authority, informing the ticket holder that the ticket will not be honored, is not deprived of the right to hold the railroad company liable for his ejection from the train by presenting a local ticket to pass the gate keeper, who refuses to pass him on his invalidated ticket; and it is immaterial that the gatekeeper's refusal to honor the ticket was a breach of the carriage contract giving a right of action.

Note. — No case other than ATCHISON, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. LUCAS seems to have passed upon the question of the effect of gaining access to a train by subterfuge upon the right of the holder of valid transportation to recover for ejection.

(March 27, 1912.)

CERTIFICATION by the Court of Civil Appeals for the First Supreme Judicial District of questions arising upon appeal by defendants from a judgment of the County Court for Harris County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful ejection of plaintiff from defendants' train. Answers favorable to plaintiff returned.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood, Lane, Wolters, & Storey, and William A. Vinson, for Texas & New Orleans Railroad Company, appellant:

At the time plaintiff presented the ticket to the conductor it had not been validated at Oklahoma City, as required, and plaintiff was not entitled to be transported thereon, so that the employees of said company were justified in ejecting her from the train.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Looney, 85 Tex. 159, 16 L.R.A. 471, 34 Am. St. Rep. 787, 19 S. W. 1039; Landers v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 50 S. W. 528; Boling v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 189 Mo. 219, 88 S. W. 39; Mosher v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 127 U. S. 393, 32 L. ed. 250, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1324.

Plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in boarding its train after being informed that her ticket had not been validated and would not be honored.

Russell v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 12 Tex. Civ. App. 627, 35 S. W. 724; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cole, 66 Tex. 562, 1 S. W. 629; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cleveland, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 33 S. W. 687; Butler v. Holmes, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 48, 68 S. W. 52; Diamond Mill Co. v. Groesbeck Nat. Bank, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 31, 29 S. W. 169; McCarty v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 21 Tex. Civ. App. 568, 54 S. W. 421.

Messrs. Terry, Cavin, & Mills, A. H. Culwell, and Rodman S. Cosby, for Atchison, Topeka, & Santa Fé Railway Company, appellee:

The defendant, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company, was responsible to plaintiff only while she was traveling on its line.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baird, 75 Tex. 263, 12 S. W. 530; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Looney, 85 Tex. 166, 16 L.R.A. 471, 34 Am. St. Rep. 787, 19 S. W. 1039; Boling v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 189 Mo. 219, 88 S. W. 35; Landers v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 50 S. W. 528. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The ticket is the sole evidence of a passenger's right to transportation. The plaintiff not possessing a valid ticket, and refusing to pay her fare, cannot complain of her ejection.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 156, 158; Hall v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 15 Fed. 67; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Bennett, 1 C. C. A. 544, 6 U. S. App. 95, 50 Fed. 496; Russell v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 12 Tex. Civ. App. 627, 35 S. W. 724.

Messrs. L. E. Blankenbecker and Norman Atkinson, for appellee:

Plaintiff gave every agent having anything to do with completing her evidence of a right to transportation an opportunity so to complete it. Therefore her invalidated home seeker's ticket, when it was presented to the gateman and to the trainman, was absolutely good, and entitled her to transportation.

Texas & P. R. Co. v. Payne, 99 Tex. 46, 70 L.R.A. 946, 122 Am. St. Rep. 603, 87 S. W. 330; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Holbrook, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 475, 33 S. W. 1028; Southern R. Co. v. Barlow, 104 Ga. 213, 69 Am. St. Rep. 166, 30 S. E. 732; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. St. John, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 257, 35 S. W. 501; St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Mackie, 71 Tex. 491, 1 L.R.A. 667, 10 Am. St. Rep. 766, 9 S. W. 451.

Plaintiff exercised her lawful right to act upon and keep the contract in full force until the time for performance arrived.

Greenwall Theatrical Circuit Co. v. Markowitz, 97 Tex. 479, 65 L.R.A. 302, 79 S. W. 1069; Kilgore v. Northwest Texas Baptist Educational Asso. 90 Tex. 139, 37 S. W. 599; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Payne, 99 Tex. 46, 70 L.R.A. 946, 122 Am. St. Rep. 603, 87 S. W. 330; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. St. John, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 257, 35 S. W. 501; Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. v. Jones, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 129, 85 S. W. 37; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Lynch, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 121, 94 S. W. 1093, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 73 S. W. 67; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Lee, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 123 S. W. 154; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Harris, 115 Tenn. 501, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 779, 91 S. W. 211.

The agent's failure and refusal to act is the act of each company as to its line.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. St. John, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 257, 35 S. W. 501; Head v. Georgia P. R. Co. 79 Ga. 358, 11 Am. St. Rep. 434, 7 S. E. 217; Bethea v. Northeastern R. Co. 26 S. C. 91, 1 S. E. 372; Milnor v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 306; Young v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 115 Pa. 112, 7 Atl. 741.

The ticket is not the sole evidence of a passenger's right to transportation.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Martino, 2 Tex. Civ.

App. 634, 18 S. W. 1066, 21 S. W. 781; St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Mackie, 71 Tex. 491, 1 L.R.A. 667, 10 Am. St. Rep. 766, 9 S. W. 451; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Copeland, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 55, 42 S. W. 239.

Dibrell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Certified question from the court of civil appeals of the first supreme judicial district. The statement and question are as follows:

"This is a suit instituted in the county court by Mrs. R. A. Lucas against the Atchison, Topeka, & Santa Fé Railway Company and the Texas & New Orleans Railroad Company to recover damages for her ejection from one of the passenger trains of the latter company. A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff for $500. Upon motion for a new trial, the court suggested a remittitur of $100, which was filed, and thereupon the judgment was finally entered for $400. From the judgment, their motion for a new trial having been overruled, the defendants appeal.

"On December 3, 1907, appellee purchased at Atlanta, Georgia, from the Atlanta & West Point Railway Company a ticket to Oklahoma City and return over the issuing road and several connecting lines, including the Texas & New Orleans Railroad and the Atchison, Topeka, & Santa Fé Railroad; the latter road being the terminal line in her route. The ticket was issued with the following conditions printed thereon:

"First. In selling this reduced rate ticket for passage over other lines, and in checking baggage on it, this company acts only as agent, and is not responsible beyond its own line."

"Fourth. This ticket shall not be good for return passage unless the holder identifies him or herself by signature on the back thereof, and otherwise, as original purchaser, to the satisfaction of the agent of the terminal line at destination of ticket; and when officially signed and stamped by said agent, this ticket shall then be good for return passage of the original purchaser only, leaving destination only on date so stamped and canceled on back, provided return passage is made to original starting point within the number of days indicated under head of return transit limit."

"Ninth. That no agent or employee of any line over which the purchaser is entitled to travel by the terms of this ticket has any power to alter, modify, or waive in and manner any of the conditions named in this contract."

"In consideration of the reduced rate at which this ticket is sold, I, the original purchaser, hereby agree to be governed by all 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the conditions, as stated above, and by all other reasonable rules and regulations of any of the companies over whose line it reads, constituting part of this contract, and that I will not seek to hold any of such companies liable for damage resulting to me from any statement of any employee thereof not in accordance with the terms of this contract, as expressed upon this ticket.

"To Purchaser: Read the contract, and take notice that the return part of the ticket must be stamped and your signature witnessed in the manner prescribed before it will be honored for passage."

"Upon this ticket, appellee was carried over the several lines to Oklahoma City. On or about the 17th of December, desiring to return to her home at Atlanta, it is alleged in the petition and testified by appellee that she presented this ticket to the agent of the Atchison road, at Oklahoma City, in order that she might be identified and the ticket validated by such agent for her return trip; that she called upon the agent to stamp the ticket, and insisted that he do so, in accordance with the conditions thereof, but the agent declined to sign and stamp the ticket, and assured appellee that the proper place to have this done was at Houston, where she was going to stop over. Appellee then proceeded over the Atchison, Topeka, & Santa Fé and the Gulf, Colorado, & Santa Fé lines to Houston; no objection being made on either line to the ticket. When she presented her ticket to the agent of the Texas & New Orleans Company at Houston to be validated by signing and stamping, the agent refused to do this, telling her that he had no authority to do so; but it should have been done at Oklahoma City by the agent of the Atchison road. Appellee explained to him that she had tried to have this done, telling him of the circumstances stated above; but the agent at Houston persisted in his refusal, on the ground of his want of authority. Appellee then boarded the train of the Texas & New Orleans Railroad, and when the conductor called for her ticket produced the invalidated return trip ticket referred to. The conductor refused to accept it for passage, although she explained to him her efforts and failure to get it validated, and told her he would have to put her off, unless she paid fare. This she refused to do, as she had not the money, and the conductor accordingly put her off at Dayton, a station a short way out of Houston, using no more force than was necessary, and acting without any harshness, as expressly found by the jury. Appellee remained at Dayton, according to her testimony, about two hours (according to the testimony of trainmen, about twenty minutes), when she caught a train for Houston and returned to that point. She remained there a day or two, and, her ticket having been fixed by the general passenger agent of the Texas & New Orleans Company, she left for her home. Appellee testified that the weather was bad when she was put off; that she was unwell, and when she returned to Houston she had to send for a doctor; that she had to borrow money to pay her expenses there, etc. She also testified that she was very harshly treated by the conductor in ejecting her from the train at Dayton, but by special finding the verdict of the jury negated this. Testimony was introduced by appellants, which, if true, showed that appellee was assured by the ticket agent at Houston that she could not be allowed to ride on this invalidated ticket; that she tried to pass through the gate to the train shed, which was necessary to gain access to the train, where she was required to exhibit her ticket; that she showed to the gateman her return trip ticket, which he refused to accept, and refused to let her pass through the gate; that she then bought a ticket to Liberty, a station on the line of the Texas & New Orleans Company a few miles beyond Dayton, where she was put off, and upon this ticket she was allowed to pass through the gate, and board the train.

"In reversing the judgment and remanding the cause, as one of the grounds therefor, it was held by this court that if the evidence above referred to, that appellee presented her invalidated ticket to the agent of the Texas & New Orleans Railway Company at the gate, for the purpose of gaining admittance to the train, and was refused as stated, and afterwards gained access through the gate to the train by means of a local ticket to Liberty, purchased by her for that purpose, such facts would be a bar to her recovery of damages for her ejection from the train, no more force having been used than necessary by the conductor for that purpose; and that proper charges, requested by appellants, presenting this issue should have been given. Such charges were refused, and the issue was not covered by the court's charge. Upon motion for rehearing, it is insisted by appellee that such ruling is in conflict with the opinion of the supreme court, in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Payne, 99 Tex. 46, 70 L.R.A. 946, 122 Am. St. Rep. 603, 87 S. W. 330. We are in some doubt as to the correctness of our ruling in view of what is said in the opinion referred to; and, inasmuch as our judgment is final, we deem it proper to certify to your honorable court the following question:

"Question. Would the facts referred to 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

bar the right of appellee to recover damages for her ejection from the train in a proper manner by the conductor, upon her failure to pay fare, or to present any other ticket than the invalidated ticket upon which she had been refused admission to the train through the gate?"

It is the settled law of this state that the passenger who complies with his contract does not lose his right to transportation because of the neglect or refusal of the agent of the carrier to do something that is necessary to evidence the passenger's right to use such transportation. Under such circumstances, the passenger is not required to procure other transportation, but may rely solely upon the contract made with the carrier.

Making a practical application of the law to the facts of this case, as made by the certificate of the court of civil appeals, the appellee, having purchased a return ticket in Atlanta, Georgia, to Oklahoma City and return over the issuing road and several connecting lines, including the Texas & New Orleans Railroad and the Atchison, Topeka, & Santa Fé Railroad, presented herself to the proper agent at Oklahoma City for identification, and applied to such agent to have her ticket validated in compliance with the provisions of her contract with the railroad companies. The agent at Oklahoma City refused to make the validation required of him, without any legal excuse, telling appellee that the proper place to have her ticket validated was Houston, Texas. She was carried on her ticket, invalidated, without objection, from Oklahoma City to Houston, over the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé and Gulf Colorado and Santa Fé roads. At Houston she presented her ticket to the proper agent and requested its validation, relating what had taken place at Oklahoma City in an effort to secure such validation; but the agent at Houston refused the validation, denying his authority to do so. Under these circumstances, the law gave appellee the right to be transported over the railroads of appellants without having her ticket validated. She had done all that was required of her under the contract, and was without fault. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Martino, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 634, 18 S. W. 1069, 21 S. W. 781; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. St. John, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 257, 35 S. W. 501; Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. v. Jones, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 129, 85 S. W. 37; St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Mackie, 71 Tex. 491, 1 L.R.A. 667, 10 Am. St. Rep. 766, 9 S. W. 451; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Payne, 99 Tex. 46, 70 L.R.A. 946, 122 Am. St. Rep. 603, 87 S. W. 330.

This brings us nearer the question to be answered. Appellee was assured by the ticket agent at Houston that she would not be permitted to ride on her invalidated ticket, and she exhibited the ticket to the gateman, who refused to accept it, and to let her pass through the gate to gain access to the train. She then purchased a ticket to Liberty, and was permitted to pass through the gate by virtue of this ticket, by which means she gained access to the train from which she was afterwards ejected. Did these facts present a valid defense to appellee's action for damages resulting from her ejection under such state of case? We think they clearly did not present any defense to appellee's cause of action. The certificate does not disclose the authority of the gateman, who, in the first instance, refused appellee passage through the gate to the train; and we are left to infer that his business was to pass such persons as possessed tickets prima facie valid and entitling such person to transportation on the train to which access was sought.

We think it immaterial in what manner appellee gained access to appellant's train. If she had valid transportation she had the right to enter the train and demand a fulfillment of the contract upon the part of the carrier. From the facts found, it is clear appellee had a valid ticket which entitled her to be carried over appellant's roads and their connecting lines from Houston to Atlanta, Georgia. We are unable to discern any valid reason why the device resorted to by appellee to gain entrance to the train could in any manner affect her right to recover damages for her wrongful expulsion therefrom. The question of good faith does not arise where the transportation is valid, and the entrance to the cars is for the bona fide purpose of being carried to destination. This rule is stated by Mr. Hutchinson on Carriers, 3d ed. vol. 2, p. 1102, § 963, as follows: "And when a person has paid, or tendered the proper compensation to the carrier, and the carrier has accommodations, and there is no legal objection to receiving him as a passenger, the right to enter the car is not merely one of private contract, but is also one of public law; and the duty will rest upon the carrier to admit him as a passenger. If, after having secured his right to enter, he is refused admittance, he may make reasonable effort to exercise his right to enter; and if his conduct does not transgress the limit of reasonable effort, and is not mala fide for the purpose of provoking resistance or insult, any tort against his person by the agents of the carrier, resulting from a refusal to admit him to the cars, will be actionable," 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) and the accompanying indignity will be a legitimate element of compensatory damages."

The text above quoted seems to rest upon the case of Runyan v. Central R. Co. 65 N. J. L. 228, 47 Atl. 422, which furnishes a precedent for our ruling in the case at bar. We desire to state an extract from the New Jersey case, from which the facts of the case, as well as the principle announced therein, appear as follows: "The last point to be noticed relates to the measure of damages. The objections urged are that the judge permitted the jury to give the plaintiff damages for the indignity which he suffered by being excluded from the cars in the presence of many onlookers, and refused to charge that damages could not be awarded for the resistance made to plaintiff's efforts to board the train, after notice that he could not enter. The testimony tended to prove that the plaintiff had a ticket entitling him to ride from New York to Elizabeth; that with this he crossed the ferry to the Jersey City station, and then was forbidden by the defendant's agents to enter the cars with his packages; that nevertheless he attempted to walk through the gate to the cars, but found his passage blocked by the men, and then desisted. Shortly afterwards he walked to the Communipaw station, and there bought from the company a ticket to Newark, and when a Newark train came along, he quickly got upon the platform of one of the cars, but was knocked by some of the company's employees at the station. He then hurried to another car, where the conductor of the train endeavored to make room for him to board the train, but the others interfered, and the train left without him. He then bought of the company another ticket to Elizabeth; but when the train arrived, two or three policemen appearing, he refrained from further effort, and departed. Under the circumstances, we think the resistance made to the plaintiff and the indignity suffered by him were proper matters for consideration by the jury on the question of damages. The verdict in favor of the plaintiff implies that he had a legal right to enter the company's trains, with the packages in his hand, by virtue of the ticket which he had purchased. This right rested not merely on private contract, but on public law, which bound the defendant as a common carrier. The plaintiff was not necessarily obliged to forego his right, because the company's agent told him to do so. He was entitled to make reasonable efforts to exercise his right; and if the jury determined that his conduct did not transgress the limit of reasonable effort, and was not mala fide for the purpose of provoking re-assistance or insult, then the wrong done could not be attributed to misbehavior on his part. The resistance interposed by the defendant's agents constituted a tort against the plaintiff's person, and therefore was actionable; and in such cases it is settled in this state that the accompanying indignity is a legitimate element of compensatory damages."

The contention that, when the gateman refused to accept or approve the ticket and permit appellee to pass through the gate to enter appellant's car, such refusal was, on the part of appellant, a final breach and repudiation of the entire contract, is, we think, not tenable. The rule, as we understand it, is essentially different from the one contended for by appellant as above set out. In order to determine whether a contract of carriage has been finally and entirely repudiated, it is necessary that the holder of such contract should enter the conveyance of the carrier and present himself for transportation. The time for the performance of the contract has not arrived until this has been done. The matters and things agreed to be performed by the carrier through its agents, in order to have the ticket validated, as well as such implied obligations growing out of an inspection of the ticket by the gateman, were but incidental and subsidiary obligations, the violation of which, while giving a cause of action, are not such as to bar appellee's cause of action for the ejectment and indignity incident thereto, for the reason that the contract was a continuing one, and could not be finally and entirely repudiated until it was presented for fulfillment and by the proper authority denied. It is conceded that a cause of action arose to appellee when she presented a valid ticket to the gateman and was refused access through the gate to the train on which she had the right to ride; but such cause of action, while incident to the contract, was more the violation of a public law than of a private right. The cause of action would not have been for a repudiation of the contract in its entirety, but for a denial of a subsidiary right expressly given or implied from the contract. This being true, it cannot be said that a cause of action growing out of the failure to perform such subsidiary obligations takes the place of and bars the cause of action arising out of a refusal to perform the contract of carriage, when presented to the final arbiter of the validity of such a contract.

Under the facts of the certificate, there is nothing tending to show that the gateman had any authority to repudiate the contract and deny appellee the right of transportation on the invalidated ticket. If the gateman was clothed with such power, it would seem that the train conductor or auditor would have no power to eject any person for having an invalid ticket, where such ticket had been passed by the gateman. Whatever might be considered the legal effect of such authority in the gateman, the record discloses no such authority, and the question is not properly before us.

The question under consideration is not one of first impression, when considered in its substantive relation to like contracts. The rule, as we have stated it above, is that laid down by the text books. In Hutchinson on Carriers, 3d ed. vol. 2, p. 1219, part of § 1054, this doctrine is thus stated: "Cases have often arisen, under 'round trip' passenger tickets in which agents at terminal points have refused, as required by the tickets, to stamp and sign them for the return passage, after the holders had done all required of them; and there is quite a diversity of opinion among the authorities as to the right of the passenger to attempt to return to his destination upon the ticket without this evidence upon it, and to recover damages for being ejected from the train; some holding that he has the right and can thus recover, others holding that the refusal to authenticate, as required, is a breach of the contract of carriage, giving rise to the only cause of action the passenger can have, which is to recover damages for such breach, and not for an ejectment from the train, which he has entered with knowledge that the ticket will not be respected. The weight of authority and better view seems to be that the agreement of the carrier to have his agent perform the designated act is merely incidental and subsidiary to the contract of carriage; and the breach of it is not necessarily a repudiation by the carrier of its entire obligation. It may be true that the holder of the ticket may treat the refusal to authenticate it as a breach of the contract, and claim his damage therefor; but, as the time has not arrived for performance of the contract to carry upon the return trip until the passenger enter the conveyance, the carrier may still perform, and the passenger therefore may elect to insist upon the performance until it is refused when it is due."

We are not able to distinguish the case at bar from the case of Texas & P. R. Co. v. Payne, 99 Tex. 46, 70 L.R.A. 946, 122 Am. St. Rep. 603, 87 S. W. 330. The legal questions are practically the same, and there are no facts different in the one from the other that would invoke a different rule of law. In the Payne Case, the contract was required to be validated by the indorsement of the freight agent at Ft. Worth, who refused to make such indorsement when presented to him by Payne, denying his authority so to do. The holder of this contract, invalidated, took the train at Ft. Worth for Odessa, and was by the agent of the railroad company ejected at Weatherford. In bar of Payne's right to recover damages for his unlawful expulsion, it was urged he could not recover, because his cause of action accrued and his contract was repudiated when the agent refused to indorse it. But, in reply to this contention, Judge Williams, speaking for the court, said: "It is undoubtedly true that by the stipulation in such a ticket the carrier agrees to have its agent perform the designated act, and his refusal to do so is a breach of that stipulation; and it may be that the passenger has the right to treat that as an anticipatory breach of the contract for the return transportation; but this part of the agreement, as it is ordinarily found in such contracts, seems to us to be merely incidental and subsidiary to the contract of carriage; and the breach of it is not necessarily a repudiation by the carrier of its entire obligation. It may still perform its duty to transport. It is not called upon to perform that until the passenger presents himself for transportation; and it is only by a refusal then, it would seem, that there is a breach which the passenger is bound to treat as converting his right into a cause of action for damages. It may be true that the holder of the ticket may treat the refusal to authenticate it as a breach of the contract, and claim his damages therefor; but, as the time has not arrived for performance of the contract to carry upon the return trip until the passenger enters the conveyance, the carrier may still perform, and the passenger therefore may elect to insist upon the performance until it is refused when it is due."

The fact that appellee was notified by the agent at Houston that she could not ride on the invalidated ticket, and the fact that she was denied admission to the yards by the gateman, for the reason that the ticket presented was not validated, takes nothing from the force of the rule laid down in the Payne Case, and adds no strength to the position assumed by appellants.

Ramsey, J., not sitting.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

EVIE JOHNSON, Appt.,

v.

H. J. JOHNSON.

(— Ala. —, 58 So. 418.)

Marriage — annulment — fraud — intention of abandonment.

A marriage cannot be annulled for fraud because the man entered into it to prevent 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

the woman from appearing against him in a prosecution for seduction, with the intention of abandoning her afterwards.

(February 1, 1912.)

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Chancery Court for Clay County in defendant's favor in a suit to annul a marriage because of the alleged fraud of the defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Riddle, Ellis, Riddle, & Pruitt for appellant.

Messrs. Whatley & Cornelius for appellee.

Simpson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill in this case was filed by the appellant, seeking to have the marriage between herself and the respondent, said H. J. Johnson, annulled, on the ground that he, having seduced her before marriage, married her with the fraudulent purpose of afterwards abandoning her, intending thereby to prevent her from being a witness against him on an indictment or prosecution for seduction, though it is not stated that any such proceedings were in progress. The bill alleges that said H. J. Johnson lived with her for four days after the marriage and then abandoned her.

Appellant contends that the marriage contract, like any other contract, may be declared void and of no effect if procured by fraud; but, even as to any other contract, a court would not declare it null and void because one of the parties did not intend to fulfil his part of the obligations of the contract. Even in the states where fraud is, by statute, made a ground for divorce, it must be "in a matter essential to the validity of the marriage itself." 14 Cyc. 595.

There are cases which hold that fraudulent statements as to a material fact, by which the marriage was obtained, justify the annulment of the marriage, though

Note.—The question decided in JOHNSON v. JOHNSON, as to whether the intention not to live with the spouse, which exists at the very time of the marriage, constitutes such fraud as will warrant a divorce or an annulment of the marriage, seems to have been passed upon in but one other case: Benton v. Benton, 1 Day, 111, and is sufficiently set out in the JOHNSON CASE.

As to right to avoid marriage entered into to escape prosecution for seduction, upon ground of duress, see note to Griffin v. Griffin, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 937.

And as to what constitutes duress for which marriage may be annulled, see notes to Collins v. Ryan, 43 L.R.A. 814, and Qualey v. Waldron, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 803.

there are cases to the contrary. Nelson, Div. & Sep. pp. 581-583.

But even if we were to admit that doctrine, there was no misrepresentation as to the existence of a material fact in this case. The complaint goes merely to the intention to carry out the obligations of the contract, in good faith, and he did live with her for four days after the marriage. The marriage was legal, and thereby her child was legitimated, and he became liable to the obligations of a husband, and subject to the statutory penalties for failing in such obligations.

The supreme court of Connecticut very maturely considered a case analogous to this at an early day, in which it was alleged that the man had married the woman while proceedings for bastardy were in progress, for the purpose of avoiding said process, with the fraudulent and wicked design of immediately leaving her, and that he did do so. Under the statute of that state, "fraudulent contract" was mentioned as one of the causes for divorce; yet the court said: "It cannot be pretended the contract of marriage in this case was void ab initio, though the sole intention of the man in entering into it was to avoid the process under which he lay. He might have become of a better mind, and have faithfully performed the duties of a husband, in which case there could have been no doubt of the validity of the marriage, however apparent his fraud might be at the moment of solemnizing it. A marriage void ab initio is a marriage contracted in fraudem legis, and cannot be made valid by the volition of either or both of the parties." It was accordingly held that the marriage was not a fraudulent contract, within the meaning of the statute, and the divorce was denied. Benton v. Benton, 1 Day, 111, 115, 116.

The decree of the court is affirmed.

All the Justices concur, except Dowdell, Ch. J., not sitting.

Petition for rehearing denied May 1, 1912.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

OSCAR L. LEGAULT

v.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF CITY OF ROSEVILLE et al., Appts.

(161 Cal. 197, 118 Pac. 706.)

Municipal corporation — power to remove officer.

A municipal corporation has no inherent power to remove its elective officers, where the legislature has made provision for the removal of such officers by judicial proceedings, and it has been given authority to remove nonelective ones.
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(October 17, 1911.)

A PPEAL by defendants from an order of the Superior Court for Placer County overruling a demurrer to a petition for a writ of review to declare the action of the defendant trustees void in removing petitioner from office. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. James D. Meredith, J. B. Landis, and P. H. Johnson, for appellants.

Messrs. Harris & Gibson for respondent.

Henshaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The city of Roseville is a city of the sixth class. Oscar L. Legault, petitioner, is or was the duly elected, qualified, and acting marshal of the city. The board of trustees preferred charges against the marshal for dereliction of duty, and cited him to show cause why he should not be removed from office. After a hearing, the board of trustees formally ordered the petitioner to be removed from the office of marshal of the city of Roseville. Legault then petitioned for a writ of review, seeking to have it declared that the action of the board of trustees in the premises was in excess of its powers and jurisdiction, and Note. — Power of town or municipality to remove officer in absence of statutory authority.

The decisions upon the question whether there is an inherent power of amotion in municipal corporations are collected in a note to Atty. Gen. ex rel. Cole v. Stratton, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 572; to which may be added the case of People ex rel. Lathers v. Raymond, 129 App. Div. 477, 114 N. Y. Supp. 365, in which it was held (citing Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 240, 242) that a municipal corporation has an inherent power to remove its officers, though they have a definite term of office; and that this power is vested in the common council.

And see also Reg. ex rel. Laurence v. Patterson, 33 N. S. 425, in which, after a review of the English decisions, it is stated to be a well-established principle that every corporation has incidental power to remove any of its officers for good cause, but that such power cannot be exercised by any part of the corporation unless vested in that part by prescription or charter.

As to whether power conferred upon a municipality to remove its officers is exclusive, see note to State ex rel. Young v. Robinson, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1128.

E. S. O.

therefore void. The trustees interposed a general demurrer to this petition. This being overruled, the petition admittedly setting forth the facts and the trustees consequently being unable to join issue by denial, they fled no answer, and judgment passed for petitioner as prayed for.

The trustees appeal, and the appeal presents for consideration a single question: Where the charter of a municipality is silent upon the matter, does the corporation, acting through its trustees, possess the power to remove an elective officer of the municipality?

It is not questioned but that the charter in terms confers no such power. But the argument for appellants is that at common law this power was regarded as a necessary incident to the functions of all municipal corporations; that, not having been prohibited to this corporation, it exists, and is to be exercised with other powers by the board of trustees; and that the provisions of the Penal Code (§§ 758-772) must be considered as fixing an alternative, and not an exclusive, method for amotion of municipal officers.

Since the decision of Lord Mansfield in Rex v. Richardson, 1 Burr. 539, 2 Ld. Kenyon, 85, it has become an accepted doctrine that this power, based upon necessity, is a common-law incident to the powers of English municipal corporations. Considering the nature of the origin of such corporations, resting in some instances in a royal charter, in others on parliamentary grant, and in others on immemorial custom, with rights wrung through stubborn resistance to oppression, it must at once be recognized that the municipal powers of such corporations stand upon an entirely different plane from those of the state of California where, in every instance they are measured by the express terms of grants issued directly or indirectly by the state. This is pointed out in Herzo v. San Francisco, 33 Cal. 143, where it is said: "It should not fail to be noted that there is a clear distinction between most municipal corporations as they exist in Great Britain and those of more recent date in the United States. The former depend upon prescription for their existence and capacity; while the latter find every element of their jurisdiction within their respective charters." Full assent is given to the rule of necessity, upon which the English decisions rest, that rule being that it is necessary that a corporation shall have the power to purge itself of offending officers. But this language was addressed to conditions here nonexistent, to conditions where Parliament had never attempted to pass a law to meet the needs of such corporations, and where, therefore, if the power of amotion did not exist in the corporation itself, it did not exist at all excepting when a municipal officer might be guilty of an indictable crime and could be proceeded against accordingly. It was to this condition that the language of Lord Mansfield was addressed. But if Parliament had passed a law applicable to all municipal corporations, providing in terms a method for the removal of derelict or recalcitrant officials, only then would there have been any sort of parallel between the English condition and the condition of this state, and even in such a case the parallel by no means would have been perfect. Judge Dillon ventures the opinion that the common-law power of English municipal corporations is possessed by American corporations "in the absence of any express or implied restriction in the charter." Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 242. While Judge Dillon declares that the question is not judicially settled, support is found for his view in certain jurisdictions, and notably in such cases as Savannah v. Grayson, 104 Ga. 114, 30 S. E. 693, and Richards v. Clarksburg, 30 W. Va. 491, 4 S. E. 774. These and the cases of their class go to the extent of declaring that such power exists in the corporation as a necessary incident to the objects and purposes for which it is created, in the absence of any prohibition in the law upon the exercise of such powers. But, so far as our investigations have disclosed, in no one of these cases has the state made provision, applicable to all municipal corporations, for the removal of officers by judicial proceeding. We are not in this to be understood as declaring that the removal of a municipal officer by the municipality is such a judicial proceeding as to require the action of formally organized courts of judicature, but indisputably such amotion is the exercise of a judicial function; and the legislature may have thought that it could, therefore, with greater propriety be intrusted exclusively to the judicial branch of the government. Thus says Mechem (Pub. Offices and Officers, § 455): "proceedings for the removal of an officer for cause are judicial in their nature, and must be had before tribunals clothed with judicial powers. The fit and appropriate tribunal, therefore, in ordinary cases is the court of law, but this judicial power may be, and often is expressly conferred upon the governor, mayor, or other officer or board having power of removal." Undoubtedly the legislature of this state has done this precise thing in the sections of the Penal Code above cited. The case presented then is not the case of necessity. It is not the case where a municipality must be declared to have the power to remove its officers, or it can never clean its house. It is the case where the law has provided general machinery, full and complete, to meet the case of any and all municipal officers, where the necessity for the exercise by the municipality of such power within itself is removed, and where the final question for determination is whether the legislature, in the enactment of laws vesting the general power of amotion in the courts, nevertheless designed (by its mere silence) still to leave the full power of amotion with all municipalities, and by these positive enactments to declare only that the municipality could resort to the courts if it desired.

While the question here stated has never been formally presented for determination, this circumstance itself must be construed as in the nature of an admission that throughout the history of the state the power asserted was not supposed to exist. And indeed, the existence of such power is contrary to the whole trend of judicial decision and legislative enactment. Thus, in Von Schmidt v. Widber, 105 Cal. 151, 38 Pac. 682, it is declared by this court in bank, quoting from Dillon on Municipal Corporations that "it is a general and undisputed proposition of law that a municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers and no others: (1) Those granted in express words. (2) Those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted. (3) Those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation,—not simply convenient, but indispensable. Any fair, reasonable doubt concerning the existence of the power is resolved by the courts against the corporation, and the power is denied." And to the same effect is Hyatt v. Williams, 148 Cal. 585, 84 Pac. 41. The necessary deduction to be drawn from this language is that where the legislature, as in this state, has provided a specific form of proceeding for the amotion of officers, the power of amotion within the corporation ceases to be indispensable to the corporation, and its exercise by the corporation becomes at the most but a convenience.

Moreover, the decisions of this court will be found to rest upon the decided assumption at least that the power of removing municipal officers does not rest within the municipality, unless there be an express grant to this end, either in the charter or by general law. Thus in Lorbeer v. Hutchinson, 111 Cal. 273, 43 Pac. 896, where the trustees of the city of Pomona declared the office of city marshal vacant and appointed to fill the vacancy, this court said: "If Lorbeer [the petitioner] was lawfully in office, the trustees could not by declaring the office vacant deprive him of his office. They have no power to remove from office, or by any judicial inquiry to declare a vacancy." In Re Carter, 141 Cal. 316, 74 Pac. 997, the whole discussion is based upon the power of removal granted by the charter. The same is true in the case of Coffey v. Superior Ct. 147 Cal. 525, 82 Pac. 75; where is found such language as this: "Provisions of the charter seem to apply only to some officers, and the scheme for the removal of delinquent officers is to that extent incomplete. . . . There is nowhere in the charter any provision which in terms confers exclusive jurisdiction upon the board of trustees to proceed against and remove municipal officers, nor is there apparent in any of the charter provisions an intention that its provisions should supersede the provisions of the general law as found in the sections of the penal code relative to the removal of delinquent officials from office. . . . The power conferred under the charter is, strictly speaking, the power of expulsion or amotion of its municipal officers. . . . This power of expulsion, amotion, or quasi impeachment of delinquent municipal officers has generally been considered, both at common law and in this country, as an incident to corporate existence, and is exercised by the municipality as an administrative duty,—springing from its political existence and as vital thereto. . . . It is, strictly speaking, this administrative power which is conferred upon the trustees of the city of Sacramento under the charter." In Craig v. Superior Ct. 157 Cal. 482, 108 Pac. 310, the provisions of an express grant of power in the charter to the city of Stockton are considered. The provisions of § 16 of article 20 of the Constitution are quoted, to the effect that "in the case of any officer or employee of any municipality governed under a legally adopted charter the provisions of such charter with reference to the tenure of office or the dismissal from office of any such officer or employee shall control;" and it is held touching the employment, retention, and dismissal of members of the police and fire departments of the city of Stockton, that the charter provisions are controlling and exclusive. In Dinan v. Superior Ct. 6 Cal. App. 217, 91 Pac. 806, the same question arose, touching the provisions of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco; and it was there held in conformity with the provision of the Constitution above quoted that the procedure prescribed by the charter was exclusive. In Croly v. Sacramento, 119 Cal. 229, 51 Pac. 323, this court considered the provisions of the charter of the city of Sacramento authorizing the board of trustees to try and remove appointees against whom charges had been preferred. Here the court refused to pass upon the question as to whether or not the city possessed the common-law power of amotion, but placed its decision solely upon the charter provision.

It is inconceivable, if the power of amotion of its officers is inherent in a municipal corporation, even when its charter is silent on the subject, that this court would not long ago have so declared, and thus have done away with a vast amount of the argumentative reasoning in which it has indulged, and which is and was entirely superfluous, if the contention of appellant herein is sound. Moreover, if the power here contended for was inherent in the municipality, there would be little or no import to the language of § 16, art. 20, of the Constitution, which undertakes in express terms to make the provisions of a municipal charter controlling with reference to the tenure of office or the dismissal from office of officers and employees of a municipality; for, if the power exists as is here contended for, this solemn declaration of the Constitution accomplished nothing, and at the most was but the recognition of a power already existent.

And, finally, upon this proposition, the legislative enactments have their significance. Section 4386 of the Political Code empowers the mayor "to suspend and, with the consent of the common council, to remove any nonelected officer, stating in the suspension or removal the cause thereof." Section 852 of the municipal corporation act (Gen. Laws 1910, act 2348), which is the governing charter of the city of Roseville, empowers the board of trustees to appoint an "attorney, poundmaster, superintendent of streets, civil engineer, and such police and such other and subordinate officers as in their judgment may be deemed necessary, and fix their compensation, and each of said officers shall hold office during the pleasure of the board." The significance of these legislative declarations is found in this: First, that they are made applicable to nonelective officers, and not to elective officers; and, second, if the power contended for inherently exists, it would be stultification for the legislature to provide with careful detail for the removal of nonelective officers, when the city itself possesses the inherent power to remove nonelective as well as elective officers.

It is concluded, therefore, that as to municipal corporations within this state the general law touching the removal of its officers creates an implied restriction upon the exercise of what may be thought to be the inherent power of amotion. The necessity for the existence and exercise of that power being removed, it becomes at the best but a convenience. The power may be, notwithstanding the existence of the general laws, conferred by charter, and, when so conferred, will be construed, depending upon the nature of the language, as being either concurrent as in Coffey v. Superior Ct. supra, or exclusive as in Craig v. Superior Ct. supra. Const. art. 20, § 16.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

Melvin, J., and Lorigan, J. concurred.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

BENJAMIN TRIPPEER et al., App'ts.,

JOHN CLIFTON et al.

(— Ind. —, 97 N. E. 791.)

Appeal — parties — mortgagee of property subject to improvement lien.

Although one holding a mortgage on property sought to be subjected to an improvement lien defaulted at the trial, which resulted in defeating the lien, he is a necessary party to an appeal from the judgment, since a reversal of the judgment would re-establish the lien, to his detriment.

(March 5, 1912.)

Note.—While no other case has been found involving the question as to the necessity of making an encumbrancer who defaulted at trial a party to an appeal from a judgment denying a lien asserted by the plaintiff, the decision in TRIPPEER v. CLIFTON seems clearly to be correct, under the general rule with regard to parties, "that every person to be directly affected in his interests on rights by a judgment on appeal or writ of error is entitled to be named or described in the application or writ, to have notice thereof, and an opportunity of being heard and of defending his rights." 2 Cyc. 756.

And it seems that, in other cases, the rule that all parties who are interested in having a judgment or decree sustained, or whose interests will necessarily be affected by a reversal or modification of such judgment or decree, should be made appellees, respondents, or defendants in error, has been applied to parties in default, or who have confessed judgment in the court below. 2 Cyc. 764.

But a defendant alleged to claim some inferior interest, unknown to the plaintiff, in land sought to be subjected to a mechanics' lien, who has defaulted, and has been found by the court to have no interest in the land, is not a necessary party to an appeal by the lien claimant from a judgment denying his right to a lien. Phelps & B. Windmill Co. v. Baker, 49 Kan. 434, 30 Pac. 472.

A. C. W.

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Miami County in defendants' favor in an action brought to foreclose an alleged sidewalk improvement lien upon real estate upon which the defendant bank claimed a mortgage lien. Dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cox & Andrews and W. E. Mowbray for appellants.

Messrs. Reasoner & Ward for appellees.

Myers, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action by appellants against John Clifton and his wife, owners of the property, and the First National Bank of Peru, Indiana, to foreclose an alleged sidewalk improvement lien upon real estate in South Peru, Miami county, Indiana. The allegation in the complaint as to the bank is that on May 9, 1903, the owners of the property executed a mortgage upon it to secure the payment of $2,000, which on February 27, 1905, was assigned to the bank, was duly recorded, and is unsatisfied of record, "and the said First National Bank of Peru, Indiana, is therefore made a party defendant hereto, to limit its time for redemption, and to answer as to its interest thereunder."

We are confronted at the threshold of the cause by the proposition that this court has no jurisdiction to determine the appeal. Immediately preceding the submission of the cause for trial, the bank was defaulted, and nowhere again appears, or is referred to in the proceeding. Judgment was rendered June 15, 1909, against appellants, that they take nothing, and that the defendants recover their costs. One hundred and twenty days were allowed for filing bill of exceptions, and an appeal was prayed and granted and bond fixed at $200, to be filed within thirty days, to the approval of the court, and on June 19, 1909, at the same term, the court approved the bond and surety, and on June 23, 1909, the bond was filed, and the transcript was filed October 14, 1909: This was therefore not a term, but a vacation, appeal. Michigan Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Frankel (1898) 151 Ind. 534, 50 N. E. 304.

The bank was not made either appellant or appellee, was not given any notice of the appeal, nor was notice given the clerk or attorneys, nor has it joined in error or assigned error. The rule is that it is only parties to judgments, and not merely parties to the record, who must be made parties to an appeal. Lowe v. Turpie (1896) 147 Ind. 652, 37 L.R.A. 233, 44 N. E. 25, 47 N. E. 150; Hogan v. Robinson, 94 Ind. 138. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

But, when parties to the record will necessarily be affected in their interests by the action or judgment by the appeal, they must be joined as parties, and notice given them as provided by the statute. Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, § 674. This is for the obvious reason that the judgment cannot be appealed from piecemeal, and the parties whose interests may be affected by affirmation or reversal of the judgment must be before the court, to enable it to dispose of the case as an entirety.

In this case no formal judgment was entered against the bank, and, as the judgment in favor of appellees swept away the basis for the lien, and necessarily the lien itself, there was nothing to base a separate judgment on as against the bank, and the judgment in favor of appellees necessarily resulted to its benefit. If the judgment were reversed, the case would stand precisely as it stood before submission for trial, so far as the bank is concerned, for a judgment in foreclosure against it alone would be of no force or value. Or, putting it in another form, suppose a judgment had been entered against the bank, foreclosing the alleged lien; what virtue could it have had over against a judgment for the property owner, sweeping away the alleged lien? The rights of both appellants and the bank as against the property must be derived and devolved through the property.

The defense interposed by the property owners necessarily inured to the benefit of the bank, for that judgment necessarily precluded the foreclosure of the alleged lien, or the fixing of any amount, and nothing was left upon which to predicate a lien. The property could not be sold as against the owner, and hence it could be of no force as against the bank, so that the bank is as necessarily and certainly affected by the judgment as if there were a formal judgment in its favor, for it sweeps away an alleged claim and lien against the property upon which it is a prior lien by statute (Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, § 8714), to the lien of the bank. It might be different if it were alleged that the mortgage debt of the bank had been in fact paid, but that is not the allegation, but it is that it has a mortgage of record, and is made party to limit the time for redemption by it, and most certainly the bank is directly, beneficially, and substantially affected by the judgment, which is sought to be overthrown by the appeal. As was said in Michigan Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Frankel, supra: "The fact that he was defaulted in the lower court does not affect the question, for he was still entitled to his right of appeal, regardless of his default, and on such appeal he could at least challenge the sufficiency of the complaint and the jurisdiction of the court. Lee v. Mozingo, 143 Ind. 667, 36 N. E. 901, 41 N. E. 454, and cases there cited. In order, therefore, to give this tribunal complete jurisdiction over the cause, it is clear that appellant ought to have made him a coappellant herein, and notified him as provided by § 647, supra." Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, § 674. The case is not directly in point, for the reason that Frankel, in that case, was a defendant, and his codefendant appealed without joining him, but the principle is the same. If it be said in this case that the bank may have been entirely satisfied not to resist the assessment, and its default admitted the allegation against it, the same thing may be said to be true as to Frankel in the prior case, and that the fact that he did not defend is indicative of such condition, but he would have been affected by a reversal of the judgment just as the bank would here. It was a party in interest, and appellants were seeking the same character of judgment against it as against appellee,—a foreclosure, which was the only judgment which could be rendered. Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, § 8714. The bank was adverse in interest to appellants below, and it is necessarily adverse here, for it is directly and necessarily interested in maintaining the judgment rendered. Ewbank's Manuel, § 149; Polk v. Johnson (1906) 167 Ind. 548, 78 N. E. 652, 79 N. E. 491; Moore v. Ferguson (1904) 163 Ind. 395, 72 N. E. 126; Whisler v. Whisler (1903) 162 Ind. 143, 144, 67 N. E. 984, 70 N. E. 152; Haymaker v. Schneck (1902) 160 Ind. 443, 67 N. E. 181; Mellott v. Messmore (1901) 158 Ind. 297, 63 N. E. 451; Abshire v. Williamson (1897) 149 Ind. 248, 48 N. E. 1027; Hays v. Pugh (1901) 158 Ind. 500, 64 N. E. 13; Ex parte Sullivan (1899) 154 Ind. 440, 56 N. E. 911; Crist v. Wayne, International Bldg. & L. Asso. (1898) 151 Ind. 245, 51 N. E. 368; Elliott, App. Proc. 160.

The appeal must be dismissed, and it is so ordered.

Cox, J., did not participate in this decision.

Petition for rehearing overruled June 26, 1912.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

— DAHLSTROM, Appt.,

v.

UNKNOWN CLAIMANTS et al.

(— Iowa —, 135 N. W. 567.)

Mortgage — simultaneous — assignment of one — foreclosure — effect.

The foreclosure of one of two simultaneous L.R.A. (N.S.)

ous mortgages by the same person, to the same mortgagee, to secure different debts, which were recorded at the same instant, and one of which has been assigned to a stranger, without making the latter a party, has no effect upon the lien of the assigned mortgage.

(April 10, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Mitchell County, dismissing a petition filed to quiet title to certain real estate. Affirmed.

Statement by Ladd, J.:

Action was begun to quiet title against unknown owners. M. Ablieter answered by pleading that he held a mortgage by assignment on the land, and prayed that it be established as a lien thereon. The petition was dismissed, and plaintiff appeals.

Messrs. F. T. Van Liew and Stoughton & Brown for appellant.

Messrs. Springer, Clary, & Condon, R. Feyerabend, and George E. Marsh for appellees.

Ladd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

One Woodward, who owned the 234 acres of land in controversy, executed two mortgages thereon to Shaffer Brothers on the same day, one to secure the payment of two notes of $1,000 each, dated January 15, 1907, payable five years after date, and the other to secure the payment of a note of $6,000, dated January 15, 1907, and payable five years after date. These mortgages were filed for record at the same time. On the same day, Woodward executed a deed of conveyance, subject to these mortgages, to the International Land Company. The plaintiff recovered judgment against this company for $2,400 and costs June 1, 1908, having previously caused the land to be attached, a special execution issued, and the land in controversy was sold thereunder,

Note.—Effect of foreclosure of one of several simultaneous mortgages upon the others.

This note does not include cases where one mortgage is given to several persons to secure separate obligations to each, nor the effect of a foreclosure in such a case by the holder of one of those obligations upon the rights of the others.

DAHLSTROM v. UNKNOWN CLAIMANTS holds that when two mortgages are executed upon the same property on the same day, by and to the same parties, and filed for record the same instant, with no agreement, express or implied, as to which shall be superior, and when, after an unrecorded assignment of one to a third party for and sheriff's deed executed to plaintiff December 14, 1909. Shaffer Brothers instituted foreclosure proceedings on the $2,000 mortgage, and decree of foreclosure was entered October 14, 1908. Special execution issued, and the land covered thereby was sold by the sheriff December 2d following. The certificate of sale was issued to Shaffer Brothers and by them assigned to plaintiff, to whom the sheriff's deed was executed December 13, 1909. The $6,000 mortgage was not referred to in the proceedings. It, with the note for that amount, had been assigned in writing to M. Ablieter of Boscobel, Wisconsin, October 11, 1907. The assignment, though acknowledged by Shaffer Brothers was never recorded. This action to quiet title against unknown claimants was begun September 9, 1910. M. Ablieter filed an answer in October following, in which he set up the execution of the $6,000 note and mortgage, the assignment to him for value, and prayed that the said mortgage be established as a lien against the land, and that as to him the petition be dismissed. The contention of the plaintiff is that the transaction as recited had the effect of divesting the $6,000 mortgage, and that he is entitled to the land with the lien thereof discharged. On the other hand, the defendant says that, inasmuch as this mortgage had been assigned to him long before plaintiff acquired any interest in the land, and prior to the foreclosure of the $2,000 mortgage, it was not released or discharged by the foreclosure thereof and the redemption by plaintiff, effected by taking an assignment of the sheriff's certificate of sale, and that, in any event, such foreclosure proceedings were void because of a defect in the proceedings.

As both mortgages were executed by the same mortgagor to the same mortgagee, on the same day, this may have been done as part of the same transaction; but from this circumstance alone it is not to be inferred that the notes were given as evidencing portions of the same indebtedness, nor that the mortgages are to be treated as parts of a single instrument. Each mortgage is complete in itself, and is to be regarded as a value, the other is foreclosed without making the assignee a party to the suit, and he does nothing to mislead the purchaser, such foreclosure does not release or discharge the assigned mortgage.

The rule there announced seems to prevail, that a foreclosure of one of several simultaneous mortgages, without making the other mortgagees parties to the suit, does not affect the liens of the other mortgages nor the rights of the holders thereunder.

Thus, if two mortgages are executed on the same day, by the same mortgagor, upon the same real estate, to different mortgagees, and both mortgages are recorded on time, though on different days, both stand on the same ground, and a foreclosure and sale under one, without notice to the holder of the other, does not affect the other; unless the purchaser at the sale will pay off the other mortgage, the holder of the latter may either foreclose without redeeming, or redeem and foreclose. Cain v. Hanna, 63 Ind. 408.

Where property is seized and sold under a first mortgage and under one of several concurrent mortgages, the sale does not extinguish the other mortgages created in the same act and at the same date; if the property does not sell for enough to satisfy all the mortgages of the same rank, the balance over the amount of the older mortgage should be divided pro rata among the concurrent mortgagees, the sheriff collecting only the pro rata share of the seizing creditor, and the portion coming to the other mortgage creditors remaining in the hands of the purchaser, subject to their call, and secured by their mortgages. Scott v. Featherston, 5 La. Ann. 306.

Where two mortgages were executed on 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the same day, to different mortgagees, by the same mortgagor, one being acknowledged first and the other recorded first, and there being no agreement concerning a preference, it was held that the foreclosure of one by advertisement would not be effectual to settle the relative rights of the foreclosure purchaser and the holder of the other mortgage, but that a bill in equity was necessary to determine such rights and to marshal the assets, and the court decreed a sale, the money to be applied ratably on both mortgages in case it should not be sufficient to pay both. Van Aken v. Gleason, 34 Mich. 477.

Where plaintiff executed two mortgages on the same day, and on the same premises, due at different times, to different parties, but by assignment they both came into the same hands, and the one due first, which by agreement was the prior lien, was foreclosed by statutory foreclosure, and the property sold for more than sufficient to satisfy it, the court held that the mortgagee was entitled to satisfy the other mortgage out of the surplus, although that other mortgage was not yet due. Barber v. Carey, 11 Barb. 549.

When two mortgages are executed at the same time, between the same parties, upon the same property, to secure separate debts, if, after judgment of foreclosure upon one, but before sale, action is brought to foreclose the other, and the two suits are consolidated without objection, the lien of the mortgage foreclosed in the second suit is not lost by reason of the first suit, although both should have been foreclosed in one suit. Thompson v. Skeen, 14 Utah, 209, 48 Pac. 1103.

The rule, however, seems to be otherwise in Pennsylvania. There it has been held distinct contract. McDonald v. Second Nat. Bank, 106 Iowa, 517, 76 N. W. 1011.

The mortgages having been executed on the same day, by and to the same parties, and filed for record the same instant, were simultaneous and their liens concurrent; and, as there was no agreement, express or to be implied, as to which should be superior, the assignment of the $6,000 mortgage to Ablieter did not give it priority over the other. Perry's Appeal, 22 Pa. 43, 60 Am. Dec. 630; Vredenburg v. Burnet, 31 N. J. Eq. 229; Greene v. Warnick, 64 N. Y. 220; Stafford v. Van Rensselaer, 9 Cow. 316. Even when part of the notes secured by the same mortgage are assigned, priority of the security is not affected thereby; this being determined by the order of maturity of such notes. Massie v. Sharpe, 13 Iowa, 542; Hinds v. Mooers, 11 Iowa, 211; Rankin v. Major, 9 Iowa, 297. Such has always been the rule in this state, though there are authorities to the contrary elsewhere, and there is no sound reason for giving any greater effect to the transfer of one of two simultaneous mortgages. Both mortgages that if two mortgages are executed by the same mortgagor, to different mortgagees, to secure two sums borrowed, and both are left for record at the same moment, neither has priority, although, as must be, one is recorded in advance of the other in the mortgage book, and a sheriff's sale under one which divests its lien, also divests the lien of the other. Bonstein v. Schweyer, 212 Pa. 19, 61 Atl. 447.

In Dungan v. American L. Ins. & T. Co. 52 Pa. 253, it is said that the doctrine is unquestionably true that if purchase money be secured by two mortgages, and both are recorded on the same day, and within sixty days of their date, their liens are contemporaneous, and no priority of one over the other can be predicated; and that a sheriff's sale on either divests both. In that case, however, they were not both given for the same purchase money; both were executed simultaneously between the same parties, but one was immediately assigned to a third party and was really for a different transaction, and one was recorded a few hours before the other, with the understanding between the parties that it was to have priority, and the court held that this mortgage was not divested by a sheriff's sale under the other.

And where a grantee of land gave two mortgages amounting to twice the sum of the consideration recited in the grant, although both were executed on the same day, since they were recorded one day apart, it was held that there was nothing on the face of the instruments from which to infer with certainty that both were given for the purchase price, and therefore the mortgage first recorded was not discharged by a subsequent sale under the second. Norris v. Brady, 4 Phila. 287.

59 L.R.A. (N.S.)

rank as equal liens without priority of preference to either, whether in the hands of the mortgagees or of another under an assignment, unless superior equities in favor of the one or the other are otherwise shown. 1 Jones, Mortg. §§ 534, 535, 607a; Riddle v. George, 58 N. H. 25.

Had Shaffer Brothers retained the $6,000 mortgage, it might have been necessary to have protected it as well as the owner of the premises in the foreclosure of the $2,000 mortgage by either bidding enough for the land to satisfy both, or by redeeming from the sheriff's sale on that foreclosure. Wells v. Ordway, 108 Iowa, 86, 75 Am. St. Rep. 209, 78 N. W. 806. But they had assigned the larger mortgage to the defendant Ablieter long before foreclosure suit was begun. The latter might well have been made a party defendant. Wiltsie, Mortg. Foreclosure, § 184; Potter v. Crandall, Clarke, Ch. 119. Had this been done, the relative rights of the respective lien holders in the security, whether or not sufficient to satisfy both, might have been determined. As he was not a party, the extent of his lien has

Where four mortgages were executed and recorded at the same time, upon the same property, and to secure parts of the same debt, payable consecutively, one year apart, and upon failure of payment of the first when due it was foreclosed and the property sold, it was held that the mortgagees or their assignees stood in equal equity in respect to the fund in contest, and that the proceeds of the sale, not being sufficient to satisfy the claims of all, should be distributed to them pro rata. Perry's Appeal, 22 Pa. 43, 60 Am. Dec. 63.

Where one person executed four mortgages at the same time, to different mortgagees, each having notice of the other mortgages, and mutually agreeing that neither mortgagee should have priority over any other, the fact that two mortgages were recorded before the other two gave no priority either to those mortgagees or to their assignees without notice of the equal equity of the four; but where the assignments were recorded before the other two mortgages were recorded, under statute the assignees thereby gained priority over those unrecorded mortgages, and a foreclosure of the assigned mortgages would extinguish the other mortgages, so that a purchaser at such foreclosure sale acquired valid title. Decker v. Boice, 83 N. Y. 215.

When two mortgages are executed at the same time, but one recites that it is junior to the other, and at the time of bringing the foreclosure suit under one they are held by different persons, they are not to be regarded as simultaneous, but as separate instruments, and the sale under the one does not extinguish the lien of the other. Raymond v. Whitehouse, 119 Iowa, 132, 93 N. W. 292.

H. C. Sh.

never been adjudicated. The mortgagor in executing the simultaneous mortgages must have done so with the knowledge that either might be assigned, and, after this has happened, there is no just ground for denying the assignee the security his separate mortgage was intended to afford, on the ground that the holder of the other mortgage has foreclosed without making him a party. Had the mortgagor or his grantee or assignee thought it essential to the protection of his interest that he be made a party, he should have insisted thereon by motion or otherwise. In Van Aken v. Gleason, 34 Mich. 477, the simultaneous mortgages were to different persons, and, though one had been foreclosed by advertisement, the court held that a bill in equity was necessary to marshal assets. In Barber v. Cary, 11 Barb. 549, one of two contemporaneous mortgages was foreclosed, and, as against the mortgagor, the court held the bid above the amount necessary to satisfy the judgment should be applied in satisfaction of the other mortgage. In Scott v. Featherston, 5 La. Ann. 306, it was said that the sale there considered "under the concurrent mortgage did not extinguish the other mortgage created in the same act and at the same time."

Had these mortgages been made to different mortgagees at the same time, and filed for record at the same instant, there could be no doubt but that the foreclosure of one without making the owner of the other, whether original mortgagee or assignee, a party, would not have discharged the other. The situation is practically the same where the mortgagee to whom two contemporaneous mortgages have been executed assigns one of them, and there is no good reason for saying that the foreclosure of one of the simultaneous mortgages to different persons shall not satisfy the other mortgage, and that the foreclosure of one of two such mortgages executed to the same person shall work the discharge of the other when assigned to another. 27 Cyc. 303. The courts of but one state so hold, and, as no reason is given therefor in any of the decisions, we are content in saying that we do not care to follow them. See Magaw v. Garrett, 25 Pa. 319; Dungan v. American L. Ins. & T. Co. 52 Pa. 253; Bonstein v. Schweyer, 212 Pa. 19, 61 Atl. 447. In Moffitt v. Roche, 76 Ind. 75, one mortgage was executed to secure the payment of promissory notes to several persons, and the court held that the foreclosure by the payee of one did not discharge the security as to others. And that court in Murdock v. Ford, 17 Ind. 52, applied the same rule where several instalment notes maturing at different dates were secured by a single mortgage, declaring that such notes have priority in the order of maturity, and that the rights of one not made a party, to whom a deferred note has been assigned, are not affected by the foreclosure of an earlier note, and may redeem against the purchaser under such a decree. See also Goodall v. Mopley, 45 Ind. 355, and Harris v. Harlan, 14 Ind. 439. But the rule is otherwise in this state. In Clayton v. Ellis, 50 Iowa, 590, it was held that the assignee of a part of the mortgage debt cannot redeem from a sale upon foreclosure, and in Harms v. Palmer, 61 Iowa, 483, 16 N. W. 574, where several instalments matured by provision of the mortgage, and some of them had been transferred, the assignee instituted foreclosure proceedings, and, upon decree being entered, caused all the land save the homestead to be sold thereunder, and, a supplemental decree subsequently being entered, the homestead also was sold. At this time, a decree of foreclosure was entered on the instalment notes retained by Palmer, the original payee. The latter undertook to redeem the homestead on the theory that he was a junior lien holder. The owner of the homestead having parted therewith, his wife also applied to redeem the homestead. The court held she was entitled to do so, and that Palmer had no right to redeem, saying that the burdens of the mortgagor might not thus be increased by the transfer of a part of the notes secured, saying that "were the rule such as is insisted upon by defendants, a mortgagee, by splitting up his debt by assignment, could bid upon the land a sum less than its value, and the mortgagor could not redeem under the statute, without paying the whole of the mortgage debt. This would result in gross oppression and injustice to the mortgagor, and would operate so that his land would be sacrificed by a sale for less than its value. It cannot be claimed, if a mortgage be given to more than one mortgagee, that they separately would have the right to redeem from the sale, or that the mortgagor, in order to redeem, must pay the whole debt. This case in no respect is different from that. Here there are in contemplation of law two mortgages, the transfer of a part of the debt conferring upon one party the right of mortgagee. In enforcing their rights, so far as the mortgagor is concerned, they must be regarded as one." See same case, 73 Iowa, 446, 5 Am. St. Rep. 691, 35 N. W. 515. Plainly enough the decision is based on the theory that, as to the mortgagor, there was but one mortgage, and in fairness to him only one suit in foreclosure can be maintained thereon. In this action, however, there were two separate mortgages securing the payment of distinct debts, and on no tenable theory can the party executing these contend that foreclosing the one without the other involved the splitting up of causes of action or the oppression of the debtor. True, it may be necessary that the equities of the respective mortgages, because of being concurrent, finally must be adjusted, and this may embarrass him in the matter of redemption, but, having executed securities of this character, each distinct and assignable, and which when mature constitute separate causes of action, he is not in a situation to complain, and surely the plaintiff, who acquired title as purchaser by virtue of sheriff's deed, is in no better position. Either, if he so elects, may insist that the holder of the other mortgage be made a party, and that such a decree be entered as shall protect the right of redemption. Not having done so, the assignee of the mortgage not foreclosed may insist upon his lien, though as was held in Van Aken v. Gleason, supra, a marshaling of assets may be necessary upon the enforcement of such lien by foreclosure. The defendant's note was not mature, and he was not bound to declare it due because of not having received interest thereon, and, if so, then he was not required to join in the foreclosure proceedings had he known these had been commenced. Nothing was done by the assignee to mislead the plaintiff, nor was there any reference to the defendant's mortgage contained in the foreclosure proceedings. The owner of the land at that time doubtless might have compelled the Shaffer Brothers to have made the defendant a party to that action, but he did not do so, and this was known to plaintiff, as was the existence of the mortgage. He has title under two sheriff's deeds, one under execution sale on a judgment against the International Land Company and the other under foreclosure of the $2,000 mortgage, and we are of opinion that his equities, though probably equal, are not superior to those of the defendant. The decree so declaring has our approval.

Affirmed.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER COMPANY OF AMERICA, Appt.,

v.

BENJAMIN F. MYERS et al.

(86 Kan. 497, 121 Pac. 500.)

Vendor and purchaser — possession — notice of rights.

1. Among the many facts shown and found by the court were the following: Two minor sons rented a farm of their father, adjoining the home place. Later they, with an elder brother, bought it and continued to work it and improve it; they and their mother still living on the home place, the parents having been divorced. The deed was taken in the name of the elder brother, who did not work the land, but went into business in another county. The deed was recorded. He used the land as a basis of credit, and later mortgaged it to secure a mercantile debt. The mortgagee's agent inquired of him as to possession, and was told that no one lived on the place, but that the two brothers rented it. An examination of the records by the agent disclosed the record title in the mortgagor. In the meantime the two brothers had come of age, and had worked and improved the land, asserting that each owned a one-third interest therein, and this was generally understood in the neighborhood. They were ignorant of their brother's use of the land to obtain credit and of his execution of the mortgage. Ordinary diligence by way of inquiry in the neighborhood, or of either of the brothers in possession, would have revealed their claim, but no such inquiry was made. The court adjudged that the brothers, William and Henry, held their interests in the land unaffected by the mortgage of plaintiff. Held, not error.

Headnotes by WEST, J.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Evidence — notoriety — possession of realty.

2. When the possession and use of the land by the two brothers had been shown, it was competent to prove the neighborhood notoriety of their claim of ownership.

(February 10, 1912.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Mitchell County in defendants' favor in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage on certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Park B. Pulsifer and Charles L. Hunt for appellant.

Messrs. Frank A. Lutz, A. E. Jordan, and J. E. Tice, for appellees:

Evidence that it was generally known in the vicinity of the land that the claimant or his grantor claimed title thereto is admissible to show notoriety of claim of title, but not to show title itself.

McAuliff v. Parker, 10 Wash. 141, 38 Pac. 744; Knight v. Knight, 178 Ill. 553, 53 N. E. 306; Carter v. Clark, 92 Me. 225, 42 Atl. 398; Kennedy v. Wible, 8 Sadler (Pa.) 209, 11 Atl. 98; Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Linn, 123 Ala. 112, 82 Am. St. Rep. 108, 26 So. 245; Maxwell Land Grant Co.

Note. — For extensive annotation of the question, "Possession of land as notice of title," see note to Niles v. Cooper, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 49.

v. Dawson, 151 U. S. 586, 38 L. ed. 279, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 458; Sparrow v. Hovey, 44 Mich. 63, 6 N. W. 93.

Actual possession by living in a house on land is not necessary to constitute that sort of possession which the courts deem sufficient to give constructive notice to a purchaser of land occupied by a third person, but it may be shown in many other ways.

Deetjen v. Richter, 33 Kan. 413, 6 Pac. 595; Boyce v. McColloch, 3 Watts & S. 429, 39 Am. Dec. 35; Hodge v. Amerman, 40 N. J. Eq. 99, 2 Atl. 257; Krider v. Lafferty, 1 Whart. 303; Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417, 35 L. ed. 1063, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 239; Bright v. Buckman, 39 Fed. 243; Truesdale v. Ford, 37 Ill. 210; Roussain v. Norton, 53 Minn. 560, 55 N. W. 747; Meehan v. Williams, 48 Pa. 238; Horbach v. Porter, 154 U. S. 549, and 18 L. ed. 30, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1164; Rogers v. Turpin, 105 Iowa, 183, 74 N. W. 925; Allison v. Pitkins, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 655, 33 S. W. 293; Tate v. Pensacola Gulf, Land & Development Co. 37 Fla. 439, 53 Am. St. Rep. 251, 20 So. 542; Hottenstein v. Lerch, 104 Pa. 454; Strong v. Shea, 83 Ill. 575; Lyman v. Russell, 45 Ill. 281; Kendall v. Lawrence, 22 Pick. 540; Nolan v. Grant, 51 Iowa, 519, 1 N. W. 709.

Possession constitutes a constructive notice to a subsequent purchaser or encumbrancer, of whatever estate or interest in the land the occupants own therein.

2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. § 618; Phelan v. Brady, 119 N. Y. 587, 8 L.R.A. 211, 23 N. E. 1109; Morrison v. Herrick, 130 Ill. 631, 22 N. E. 537; Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417, 35 L. ed. 1063, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 239; School Dist. No. 82 v. Taylor, 19 Kan. 287; Kansas City Invest. Co. v. Fulton, 4 Kan. App. 115, 46 Pac. 188; Hommel v. Devinney, 39 Mich. 522; Tarrant v. Swain, 15 Kan. 146; Moore v. Reaves, 15 Kan. 150; Johnson v. Clark, 18 Kan. 164; Beckman v. Richardson, 28 Kan. 648; Tucker v. Vandermark, 21 Kan. 263; Edwards v. Montgomery, 26 Okla. 862, 110 Pac. 779.

The words, "my brothers are on the farm," furnished a "natural clue to the ultimate fact," of appellees' ownership.

Faris v. Finnup, 84 Kan. 124, 113 Pac. 407; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. § 616; Niles v. Cooper, 98 Minn. 39, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49, 107 N. W. 744; Brinkman v. Jones, 44 Wis. 519; Meier v. Blume, 80 Mo. 179; Johnson v. Clark, 18 Kan. 164; Deetjen v. Richter, 33 Kan. 414, 6 Pac. 595; Manaudas v. Mann, 14 Or. 450, 13 Pac. 449; Williamson v. Brown, 15 N. Y. 359.

The actual possession of a tract of land by a tenant in common is deemed in law to 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

be just as exclusive as to his own interest, as the possession of one who owns the whole interest in a tract of land.

Kirkham v. Moore, 30 Ind. App. 549, 65 N. E. 1042; Wilcox v. Leominster Nat. Bank, 43 Minn. 541, 19 Am. St. Rep. 259, 45 N. W. 1136; Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Sperling, 113 Ill. 273; Collum v. Sanger Bros. 98 Tex. 162, 82 S. W. 459, 83 S. W. 184; Weisberger v. Wisner, 55 Mich. 246, 21 N. W. 331; Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 580, 40 Am. Rep. 100; Ramirez v. Smith, 94 Tex. 184, 59 S. W. 258; Baldwin v. Johnson, 1 N. J. Eq. 441.

Appellees' equities are much the stronger.

McKinzie v. Perrill, 15 Ohio St. 162; Lestrade v. Barth, 19 Cal. 661; Talbert v. Singleton, 42 Cal. 390; Dickey v. Lyon, 19 Iowa, 544; Simmons v. Church, 31 Iowa, 284; Wickes v. Lake, 25 Wis. 71; Morrison v. Kelly, 22 Ill. 610, 74 Am. Dec. 169; Helms v. May, 29 Ga. 121; Garrett v. Lyle, 27 Ala. 586; Woodward v. Clark, 15 Mich. 104; Boggs v. Anderson, 50 Me. 161.

West, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case involves the sole question whether a mortgagee is entitled to a lien upon the land, or whether two brothers of the mortgagor without any record title should prevail. Joseph Myers owned a farm on which was located the family residence, and across the road from which was the land in question. Prior to 1901 Joseph Myers and his wife were divorced, and in the division of the property she became the owner of the home place, and he retained the land across the road. In 1901 a son, Benjamin, then of age, was engaged in business at Beloit. William and Henry, two minor brothers, during that and the following year, farmed the land as tenants of their father, and also farmed the land of their mother, where they lived. In September, 1903, Joseph Myers sold to the three sons, Benjamin, William, and Henry, this land, on which there was a mortgage of $800, the deed being taken by Benjamin, this being done at the father's instance, thinking that the mortgage could be more easily taken care of than if the deed should run to the three. William and Benjamin learned of this arrangement soon afterwards, and made no objections. When the mortgage fell due, a new one was executed by Benjamin; one of the other brothers then being of age and the other a minor. This mortgage was duly recorded, and the proceeds used to pay off the prior mortgage and for improvements on the land. The three sons were to pay their father for the land in such sums and at such times as he should demand. The deed to Benjamin was recorded September 18, 1903. William and Henry continued to work the land. In the spring of 1907, Benjamin went into partnership with a man named James, one place of business being at Delphos and another at Minneapolis, buying goods of the International Harvester Company and of Parlin & Orrendoff Company. Benjamin represented that he was the owner of the land, and used it as a basis for obtaining credit, and afterwards, on being pressed for payment, he and his wife executed the mortgage now in question; the plaintiff's credit man having relied on his statements as to owning the land and believing the same to be true. Before executing the mortgage, Benjamin told plaintiff's agent that no one was living on the land, but that his brothers, William and Henry, were renting it. When the mortgage was taken, the records were examined, and nothing found affecting the land except the $1,000 mortgage already mentioned. Plaintiff's mortgage was executed January 20, 1908, and recorded the following day. William and Henry did not learn of the mortgage until December, 1908, and had not been aware that their brother had been using the land as a basis of credit or claiming to own it or that he had mortgaged it, and had but little knowledge concerning the business and partnership in which he was interested. It was generally understood in the neighborhood that each of the brothers owned one third of the land, but no inquiry was made there by the mortgagee. The mother lived on the home place, as did William and Henry, but improvements were made on the mortgaged land from time to time by way of sheds, corrals, pens and fences, including a hog-tight wire fence around the entire tract. Considerable stock was raised, and there were about 50 acres of alfalfa and 65 or 70 acres of pasture; the remainder being plowed land. By January, 1908, the purchase price of the father had been fully paid. As between the three brothers, there appeared to be no friction or misunderstanding as to the ownership or management of the land or the proceeds therefrom. When the land was purchased from the father, William was nineteen years old and Henry past twenty. Among the fifty-one findings of fact the latter portion of the fifteenth is that "at all times William and Henry have claimed to own each an undivided one-third interest in the land, and their possession of it has been open, notorious, actual, and exclusive, and as such has been well known throughout the neighborhood in which the land is situated ever since the deed was executed by their father, Joseph M. Myers." The forty-eighth is to the effect that there was no visible change in the general character of the business carried on upon the land, or the occupancy thereof, after the deed to Benjamin by the father, except that, after the deed was made, William and Henry openly exercised full and complete dominion, made lasting and valuable improvements, claimed to be owners with Benjamin, bought and sold stock, increased and transacted the business of the farm as though they were actually owners, until it became a matter of general notoriety all over the neighborhood that they claimed to own the place in common with their brother. The fifty-first finding was: "The occupancy of the land by William and Henry Myers was by farming it as above described, and they never lived on the place." It was also found that the agents of plaintiff made no effort, other than to ask Benjamin, to ascertain the extent of William and Henry's interest; and that the land was continuously listed for taxation in the name of Benjamin, and from 1903 to 1906 the taxes were paid by Benjamin, the mother, or the father, as were the taxes for 1908, and the first half of 1909, those for 1907 and the last half of 1909 being paid by Henry; that, had the agents of plaintiff made inquiry in the neighborhood, they would have learned of William and Henry's claim of ownership, and, if they had exercised ordinary diligence, and made reasonable inquiry, they would have learned of such claim. The plaintiff insists that, having been informed by Benjamin that no one was living on the land, but that his two brothers were renting it, and having examined their records, and finding nothing to indicate that Benjamin was not the full owner, the defendants cannot defeat its mortgage lien, unless their possession was not only open, notorious, and exclusive, but also unambiguous and unequivocal; while the defendants claim that, being told that these brothers were farming the land, it was the mortgagee's duty to ascertain by inquiry whether they were tenants in fact, or had some other or greater rights thereon.

The case has been thoroughly briefed and argued, and many authorities are presented by each side, and almost any possible view which might be taken would find support in numerous decisions found in the books. Narrowed down, the real question is this: Did the law require plaintiff, when advised that William and Henry were working the land as tenants of Benjamin, to inquire into the truth of this statement, and use reasonable diligence to ascertain the real facts? Both parties refer to numerous decisions of this court in support of their contentions, and reference to those most nearly in point will be made. In Johnson v. Clark, 18 Kan. 157, an undivided interest in land which had been held as partnership property was purchased at an administrator's sale, and the equitable interest of the surviving partner was purchased at private sale and the land conveyed by the purchaser by warranty deed, the grantee taking possession and making valuable improvements, the deeds being placed of record. It was held that the purchaser, buying of the sole heir at law of the deceased partner, was charged with notice of whatever claim the possessor asserted up to the date of the purchase, whether legal or equitable. In the opinion (18 Kan. 164) it was said: "It is well established that open, notorious, unequivocal, and exclusive possession of real estate, under an apparent claim of ownership, is notice to the world of whatever claim the possessor asserts, whether such claim is legal or equitable in its nature. Under these circumstances, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to inquire. Inquiry would inevitable have lead him to knowledge of Clark's possession. This was notorious. Having ascertained the fact of Clark's possession, he was bound to pursue his inquiry until he ascertained the nature of the possessor's claim. Having these means of knowledge at his command, and failing to use them, the law treats the plaintiff precisely as though he had used them and learned all that might have been ascertained therefrom. And therefore the plaintiff, upon the facts in the case, is held by the law to have had at the date of his purchase full knowledge of Boyd's equitable interest in the land at the death of Likins, and to all of which interest Clark succeeded by his purchase from the grantee of Boyd."

In School Dist. No. 82 v. Taylor, 19 Kan. 287, it was held that a purchaser of land must take notice of the rights of a school district which had bought 1 acre thereof and built a schoolhouse thereon, which it had occupied without having the deed recorded. In the opinion, it was said: "The defendant was in the possession of said land when the plaintiff's equities were created. And this possession was actual, open, visible, notorious, and exclusive. The plaintiff had to shut his eyes not to see it. If he had looked at the land, he must have known it. If he had inquired of any person in the neighborhood, any man, woman, or even child of school age, he must have been informed concerning it. But it seems he made no such inquiries. He did not inquire of any person concerning adverse claims or interest except of his own mortgagor. We therefore think he cannot claim to be an innocent and bona fide purchaser of his said mortgage interest." p. 292. In McNeil v. Jordan, 28 Kan. 7, 16, the rule making open, notorious, unequivocal, and exclusive possession under an apparent claim of ownership notice to the world was held not to apply to a vendor remaining in possession. It was said: "The object of the law in holding possession constructive notice is to protect the possessor from the acts of others who do not derive their title from him, not to protect him against his own acts, not to protect him against his own deed." To the same effect is Hockman v. Thuma, 68 Kan. 519, 75 Pac. 486, and Dotson v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 81 Kan. 816, 106 Pac. 1045. In Deetjen v. Richter, 33 Kan. 410, 6 Pac. 595, the owner of real estate holding under an unrecorded deed, in possession by tenant when a subsequent deed was executed under legal proceedings divesting the vendor of his supposed title, such subsequent purchaser having actual notice from the tenant that he is leasing the land, giving the name of the landlord,—is held entitled to prevail over such subsequent purchaser, who is held not to be a bona fide purchaser without notice. Richter and his daughter had lived together upon the premises until the daughter was declared insane; there being no other members of the family. The plow land was leased to one Stober, who told the subsequent purchaser that he was renting from Richter. It was said: "We do not understand the rule to be that a person must actually reside upon the land to make his possession notice. He may actually improve and cultivate it, and perform open, notorious, and decided acts of ownership over it, without residing upon it. . . . There is some conflict in the authorities whether the possession of a tenant under a lease is notice simply of his tenancy, or of his tenancy and also of his landlord's title. But 'there seems no good reason why, if it be admitted that possession is notice, or evidence of notice, there should be any modification of the rule that the possession by the tenant is the possession of his landlord. If the purchaser has followed up the suggestion which the possession of the premises by a third party implies, he will inquire of the actual occupant, with the probability of learning that he holds as lessee of another. Inquiry cannot safely stop here, for the next step suggested by the circumstances would be to inquire of the landlord.' . . . Information which makes it the duty of a party to inquire, and shows where such an inquiry may be effectual, is notice of all the facts which might be thereby ascertained. No purchaser of real estate is at liberty to remain intentionally ignorant of facts relating to his purchase within his reach, where the property is in the actual, open, visible, notorious, and exclusive possession of another, and then claim protection as an innocent purchaser. The presumption of law is that upon inquiry he will ascertain the true state of the title.' pp. 414, 415. In Sanford v. Weeks, 38 Kan. 319, 5 Am. St. Rep. 748, 16 Pac. 465, a person having an equitable title made improvements on the land, consisting of the breaking of 13 or 14 acres, the fencing of the same, the quarrying and cording up of considerable rock, and the partial construction of a lime-kiln, no dwelling house being on the land and no one living thereon, and it was held that such improvements were not of themselves conclusive that the party making the same had open, notorious, unequivocal, and exclusive possession as against a subsequent purchaser for value. There the purchasers inquired of the agents of the grantor, and were informed that she was the owner of the premises. They also inquired of a responsible banker if they could rely upon the representations of these agents, and were informed that they could. The court said (38 Kan. page 325): "The only question really for our determination is whether there is sufficient evidence in the record to sustain the finding of the trial court that the Weekses had neither actual nor constructive notice before their purchase of the land that Sanford had, or claimed, any interest therein." And it was held that, as the finding had been made upon conflicting evidence, it could not be disturbed. Here the finding well supported is the other way. In Gray v. Zellmer, 66 Kan. 514, 72 Pac. 228, the general rule was announced that open and notorious possession of real estate is constructive notice to all the world of the rights of one in possession; that the doctrine of equitable estoppel does not operate in favor of one who has knowledge of another's rights, or who has convenient and available means of obtaining such knowledge. Koch purchased a quarter section of land for $560, paying $60 cash and giving a mortgage for $500. With his consent the land was conveyed to Zellmer, who was to hold the legal title until Koch should pay off the mortgage. Koch took and held open and notorious possession under claim of ownership, and paid to his agent, Zellmer, the interest as it accrued and the principal in full, but Zellmer failed to transmit it all to the mortgagee. When the mortgage fell due, Zellmer remortgaged to Ambler for $300 to use in paying off the first mortgage. Ambler trusted to the title as shown by the records, and made no inquiry of Koch, who was in possession. Ambler assigned to the plaintiff, Gray, who had personal judgment against Zellmer, but was refused foreclosure against Koch. This was affirmed. In the opinion it was said (66 Kan. page 516): "One seeking to be informed as to the title of real estate cannot safely limit his investigations to what is shown in the records of the county in which the land is situated. He must also inquire about, and take notice of, the rights of those who are in open and notorious possession of such real estate. It is a general rule that such possession is constructive notice to all the world of the rights of the one in possession. . . . It must be born in mind that, while Koch was consenting that Zellmer should hold the title, he was at the same time asserting to all the world, by means of his possession, that he was the real owner of the property. . . . Nor does the principle apply that, where one of two equally innocent parties must suffer, he who has put it within the power of the wrongdoer to defraud must be the one to suffer, for here Koch by his possession was proclaiming to all the world his rights, and this notice was as puissant, at least, as was the record." In 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49, 98 Minn. 39, 107 N. W. 744, it was held by the supreme court of Minnesota in Niles v. Cooper, that actual possession is notice to all the world of the title and rights of the person in possession, and of all facts connected therewith which reasonable inquiry would disclose, and that a purchaser, knowing the possession to be in a third person, is chargeable with notice of such facts, and, if he fails to make proper inquiry to ascertain the state of the title, he is not a purchaser in good faith. To this decision there is an extended footnote covering the doctrine of notice by possession. Among the general rules found therein are the following: "Possession of land is notice, not only of the rights of the possessor, . . . but also of all facts that would be developed if inquiry were made of the one in possession, and a truthful response made." 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) page 73. "The rule would seem to be universal that the occupation by a tenant of lands is notice to subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers of his rights as such. . . . A purchaser of an estate in the possession of a tenant is bound to inquire by what right and under what agreement the tenant holds it. . . . He is not justified in assuming the possession of that person to be the possession of the vendor, but is bound to make inquiry of the occupant." 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) pages 96 and 97. "The rule of the English authorities, and apparently of the majority of the American courts, is that the possession of a tenant is notice to a purchaser of land occupied by the tenant, not only of his interest as tenant, but also of the whole actual interest he may have therein." 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) page 98. At page 138 of 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) is found the following portion of the "conclusion:" "To buy land knowing that it does not belong to the vendor is fraudulent as against the real owner; and, since possession is a badge of ownership and title, willingness, or an offer, to sell by one not in possession, is a suspicious circumstance, which should lead the proposed purchaser to inquire as to the ownership of the title. This gives rise to the general rule that a purchaser or encumbrancer of land not in the possession of the vendor or the owner of the record title, with whom he is dealing, is charged with notice of all the interests, rights, and equities which the person in possession may have in it, and that he takes it subject to such rights and equities. This rule is based upon the idea that, had the purchaser gone to the occupant and made inquiry as to his rights, he would have obtained the desired information, and therefore he has constructive notice with reference to it; and it is generally deemed to be applicable whether the purchaser had knowledge of the possession of the third person or not; the possession, and not the knowledge of it, furnishing the foundation for the constructive notice." In Kirby v. Talmadge, 160 U. S. 379, 40 L. ed. 463, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 349, Mrs. Talmadge had purchased the lots in question, paying part cash, through one Miller, who took the title and executed notes secured by deed of trust for the deferred payments. She took possession and occupied them as her own, paying taxes, making improvements, and payments on the debt. Miller afterwards conveyed to Mrs. Talmadge, but, before the deed was recorded, Kirby's grantors contracted with the collateral heirs of Miller to get for them, on a contingent fee, what they could out of Miller's estate. A bill was filed praying for partition. The conveyance to Kirby was held void by the trial court, and this was affirmed by the supreme court. In the opinion it was held (quoting Landes v. Brant, 10 How. 348, 13 L. ed. 449) that "open and notorious occupation and adverse holding by the first purchaser when the second deed is taken is in itself sufficient to warrant a jury or court in finding that the purchaser had evidence before him of a character to put him on inquiry as to what title the possession was held under; and that he, the subsequent purchaser, was bound by that title, aside from all other evidence of such possession and holding." p. 384. It was further stated that there are cases of occupation by some other person than the one holding the unrecorded deed which is no notice, and that the apparent possession by the head of a family is no notice of title in a mere boarder, lodger, or subordinate member of a family. But attention was also called to Phelan v. Brady, 119 N. Y. 587, 8 L.R.A. 211, 23 N. E. 1109, holding that as Murphy, before executing the mortgage, had conveyed to Mrs. Brady, who was in possession, and with her husband occupied two rooms in the building on the premises, and leased the others to tenants, claiming to be the owner and collecting the rent, her deed not being recorded, her actual possession was sufficient notice to defeat any claim of the mortgagee. As to Mrs. Talmadge the court said (160 U. S. page 388): "If there be any force at all in the general rule that the possession of another than the grantor puts the purchaser upon inquiry as to the nature of such possession, it applies with peculiar cogency to a case like the present, where the slightest inquiry either of the husband or wife would have revealed the actual facts. . . . It is clear that a purchase made under such circumstances does not clothe the vendee with the rights of a bona fide purchaser without notice." See also Ramirez v. Smith, 94 Tex. 184, 59 S. W. 258. The actual ownership had been freely expressed and was fully understood in the neighborhood, and very slight investigation and inquiry there would have disclosed the facts. The defendants' title was secret only so far as the records were concerned, otherwise it was open and known both by act and by assertion. As between the plaintiff and the mortgagor, the former had a perfect right to rely upon the representations of the latter, knowing that the records indicated him as the title holder; but, as between the plaintiff and these defendants, it seems in full accord with reason and fairness to hold that, instead of relying upon the statements of their absent brother, inquiry should have been made of them or their neighbors, which inquiry, according to the findings, involved only the exercise of ordinary diligence, and would have cleared the situation.

Complaint is made that testimony as to reputed ownership of the land by the two brothers was admitted. Their possession having been otherwise established, the neighborhood notoriety of their claim was a proper matter to show. 1 Cyc. 1161; Maxwell Land Grant Co. v. Dawson, 151 U. S. 586, 38 L. ed. 279, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 458.

In view of the facts and findings, and in accordance with the weight of judicial decision, we hold that the trial court's conclusion of law was correct, that the interest of William and Henry Myers is by them to be held unaffected by any claims of the plaintiff by virtue of its mortgage.

The judgment is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

McCOMB CITY, Appt.,
v.
GEORGE HILL.

(— Miss. —, 56 So. 346.)

Intoxicating liquor — inference of intent to sell from possession.
That one is found on the street early in Note. — Inference of intent to sell intoxicating liquor from possession.

For a note as to power to prohibit the keeping of intoxicating liquor, irrespective of any intention to sell it in violation of law, see note in 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 394.

The great weight of opinion is that possession of intoxicating liquors by one unauthorized to sell the same warrants the inference that such possession is for the purpose of making illegal sales, and especially where the liquor is kept in large quantities and is found concealed in unusual places; and the humorous vein which pervades the decision in McCOMB CITY v. HILL almost warrants the belief that the judge who wrote the opinion did not think that it took a very violent stretch of imagination for the jury to believe that the possession of 57 bottles of whisky, each supplied with a corkscrew, were intended for purposes of illegal sale, especially when the actions of the defendant and the unexplained possession are taken into consideration. So difficult is it to obtain direct proof of the violation of the liquor statutes where there is almost certainty that it is being violated, that many states have incorporated into the statute provisions to the effect that unexplained possession of large quantities of liquor shall be presumptive evidence of the intention to make illegal sales. (As to the constitutionality of such statutes, see State v. Barrett, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 626, and note.)

Possession of intoxicating liquor by one unauthorized to sell same is presumptive evidence of the keeping of same with intent to make illegal sales. Peterson v. State, 64 Neb. 875, 90 N. W. 964; Peterson v. State, 63 Neb. 251, 88 N. W. 549; Parsons v. State, 61 Neb. 244, 85 N. W. 65; Durfee v. State, 53 Neb. 214, 73 N. W. 676; Beaty v. State, 7 Ga. App. 327, 66 S. E. 808; Rex v. McNutt, 38 N. S. 339; State v. Illsley, 81 Iowa, 49, 46 N. W. 977; State v. Cunningham, 25 Conn. 195; State v. Norton, 41 Iowa, 430.

The jury may infer that liquor is kept for purposes of unlawful sale, from its pres-the morning with a suit case in which is found 57 half-pint bottles of whisky, with a corkscrew attached to each one, and appears frightened and attempts to get away when approached by an officer, does not warrant a conviction of having in possession intoxicating liquor with intent to sell or give it away in violation of law.

(November 6, 1911.)

A PPEAL by the city from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pike County acquitting defendant of the charge of having in possession intoxicating liquors with intent to sell in violation of law after he had been convicted in the city court of McComb. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

ence and attempt to conceal it. Com. v. Locke, 145 Mass. 401, 14 N. E. 621.

In State v. Fleming, 86 Iowa, 294, 53 N. W. 234, it was held that where one makes a public resort of his private dwelling house, the finding of intoxicating liquors there is presumptive evidence that they were kept for illegal sale.

Even if the finding of liquor by an officer is not prima facie evidence of an unlawful intent to sell, it furnishes evidence of probable cause to believe that such is a fact. Lincoln v. Smith, 27 Vt. 328.

The finding of 4 quart bottles of whisky in a room, the only entrance to which was through a barber shop, though not conclusive, is sufficient to raise the inference that the proprietor of the barber shop is keeping such liquor with intent to sell. Lewis v. State, 6 Ga. App. 205, 64 S. E. 701.

In State v. Wilson, — Iowa, —, 132 N. W. 820, under a statute making the finding of intoxicating liquor under certain circumstances presumptive evidence of keeping of same for illegal sale, it was held that proof of possession of intoxicating liquor by one conducting a public eating house, and not legally authorized to sell or use same, is presumptive evidence that such liquors are kept for illegal sale. It was contended that to make the presumption apply the liquor must be found by an officer under search warrant, but the court held that such a limited meaning should not be attached to the word "found," as contained in the statute, but that proof of possession is a substantial fact within its contemplation.

The finding of a large number of filled beer bottles and 2 kegs of whisky on premises used for a billiard hall where sale of such liquors was not authorized is presumptive evidence that they were kept for illegal sale. State v. Farley, 87 Iowa, 22, 53 N. W. 1089.

And to the same effect is State v. Hale, 91 Iowa, 367, 59 N. W. 281, where liquors were found in the rear part of a room which was partitioned and front part used as a restaurant.

And also in State v. Arie, 95 Iowa, 375, 64 N. W. 268, where beer was found in the Messrs. Quin & Williams for appellant.

Mr. James R. McDowell, Assistant Attorney General, for appellee.

Mayes, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appeal in this case is prosecuted by the city of McComb. The record discloses that on the 12th day of November, 1910, one D. A. Brumfield made an affidavit before F. D. Hewitt, police justice of McComb city, charging George Hill with wilfully and unlawfully having in his possession one suit case of whisky, in the limits of the city, with the intent and purpose of selling same in violation of the ordinance of the city. Hill was placed on trial in the city court and convicted of the offense charged, and from this conviction prosecuted an appeal to the circuit court; and that court, after hearing the testimony, directed the jury to acquit the defendant, from which instruction on the part of the court the city appeals.

The whole of the testimony offered on the part of the city to establish the guilt of George Hill proved only that one morning about 6:15 he was discovered by the assistant city marshal coming down the street with a suit case. It seems that this unusual conduct on the part of Hill attracted the attention of the marshal, whereupon the marshal started towards Hill to investigate. It appears that up to this time Hill had not seen the marshal, as he was standing under a little shed, and so Hill continbasement of a building used as a pop factory and bottling works.

And in State v. Stevens, 119 Iowa, 675, 94 N. W. 241, where large amount of beer was found in the cellar under a restaurant, a part of it in a tub of ice water, part in gunny sacks on the floor, and part secreted in a large box sunk into the ground and covered with dirt.

And so the finding of 2 jugs of beer, 1 bottle of rum, 2 of gin, a barrel with 15 gallons of rum, and one with 15 gallons of gin, and also other intoxicating liquor, in a private dwelling house, tends strongly to show that they were kept for illegal sale. Com. v. Webster, 6 Allen, 593.

And in Com. v. Tate, 178 Mass. 121, 59 N. E. 646, it was held that there was evidence to warrant the finding that intoxicating liquors were kept by a druggist, with intent unlawfully to sell same, where in a closet off one of the rooms was found a washtub with 27 bottles full of beer, a refrigerator in which were 18 bottles of beer, also 51 gallons of beer in 410 bottles, full or partly empty, 260 empty beer bottles, 1½ gallons of whisky in 3 jugs, 30 gallons of whisky in a barrel, 1 quart of wine, 2 gallons of rum, 1 gallon of gin, and 1 pint of sherry.

In Com. v. McCullow, 140 Mass. 370, 5 N. E. 165, where a large quantity of liquor was found in a tenement of the mother of one who occupied an adjoining tenement with communicating doors, and who had a store below the tenements, it was said that the fact that a large quantity was found, that the mother kept house by herself, and would not be likely to have so large a supply for her own use, that the defendant had access to the room, joined with the fact that no evidence was offered to show that the liquors belonged to any other person, tended to show that the defendant kept those liquors for the purpose of supplying the bar in his saloon.

In State v. Schoenthaler, 63 Kan. 148, 65 Pac. 235, it was held that the finding of 374 quart bottles of liquor labeled "All Hail" and "Malt Meade," which were proved to be light beer, and 9 quarts of 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"fine old blackberry cordial," mingled with other goods of a lunch room and restaurant, was presumptive evidence that they were kept for illegal sale. The court said: "Do not men generally know that one who engages in an unlawful enterprise usually makes some effort to conceal the real character of it? Would not the finding of liquors concealed about the premises of one charged with keeping them for unlawful sale be a strong circumstance tending to show guilt, and, if this be true, would not the fact that the nature of the contents of the bottles were hidden by anonymous labels be evidence of equal weight? Is it not generally known that people engaged in business for profit; that beverages which may be lawfully sold have names which serve to identify and distinguish them, and that they will sell better under their real names than under fictitious appellations? Men engaged in a legitimate business advertise their wares. Those who dissemble and suppress information in regard to their goods must have a powerful motive for practising deception. What other inducement than that of concealment could there be for labeling a beverage manufactured by a brewing company, with the unsuggestive title of 'All Hail' By such designation who could imagine what remedial or other qualities the liquor possessed? Might not a jury properly infer that such name was designed and adopted for the purpose of circumventing the curious, and to prevent detection through the efforts of any but the vigilant?"

In Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 118 Mass. 24, where a barrel of whisky, part full, was found in a bedroom of the dwelling of one who kept a saloon a short distance away, fitted up and furnished as a barroom at which liquors in small quantities, in flasks, had been seized, the court said it was not a violent stretch of credulity for the jury to believe that the liquors were kept at the house, to be sold at the saloon in violation of law.

The jury might reasonably infer that concealed liquors found in a stable and shed adjoining a hotel were being kept for ued towards the marshal, until he had gotten in about 50 feet of him, when, for the first time, Hill became conscious of the proximity of this officer of the law. At this time the marshal started towards Hill; whereupon, the officer says, Hill wheeled as if he was going to get away. The officer then hailed Hill and told him to stop, and Hill did so. The officer then went up to Hill and opened his suit case, and found in it 57 half pints of whisky, each having a convenient little corkscrew attached, so as to make it thoroughly convenient for the thirsty lover of the drink "that maketh glad the heart" to reach the contents without the provoking delay of searching for a corkscrew or encountering the danger incident to breaking the neck of the bottle. When the officer found that whisky was in the suit case in such generous quantities, the suit case was seized, together with its contents, and carried to the city hall. At this exciting time Hill was forgotten by the officer, and it was not until 10 o'clock that he was arrested. This is about all the testimony relied upon for the establishment of Hill's guilt.

The statute under which Hill is prosecuted is § 1797 of the Code of 1906, as amended by Laws of 1908, p. 116, chap. 114. The statute referred to above is made an ordinance of the municipality by the ac-purpose of being sold in a hotel. Com. v. Doe, 108 Mass. 418.

And in Com. v. McCluskey, 123 Mass. 401, where intoxicating liquor was found concealed in a dwelling, the porch of which was only a few feet from the back door of a building used as a saloon, a search of which had failed to discover any liquors, the court said that they would not say that the jury might not have inferred that the liquors were kept to supply the saloon.

Where the evidence showed that officers in searching a house found a jug partly filled with whisky, and 2 bottle of whisky, and a large number of empty bottles which had contained beer, it was held that the jury were warranted in finding that such liquors were kept for illegal sale. State v. Baskins, 82 Iowa, 761, 48 N. W. 809.

And the same was held in Com. v. Martin, 162 Mass. 402, 38 N. E. 708, where there was found in a carpenter's shop 37 bottles of lager beer, 73 empty lager beer bottles, a 4-gallon jug full of whisky, another 4-gallon jug containing about a quart of the same liquor, a tunnel, corkscrew, and 3 bottles known as smugglers.

And also in Com. v. McManus, 161 Mass. 64, 36 N. E. 676, where in the dwelling house, occupied by defendant and his family only, and in the barn, were found 3 barrels containing a large number of bottles filled with beer, and several flasks filled with rum, and a whisky barrel containing about 2 gallons of whisky.

And the same was held in Luttrell v. State, — Okla. —, 120 Pac. 1021, where a search of premises used as a confectionary store disclosed several bottles of whisky concealed, and a lot of empty whisky bottles.

One living in a dry town who has at his home cased whisky and 37 pints of liquor in his trunk, and who received by railroad whisky by the case, billed mineral water, some of whose visitors act a little strange, others depart with wrapped packages, and still others immediately upon leaving retire to secluded places and drink whisky from a flask, has no just cause of complaint when a judge of the police court reaches the conclusion that he is keeping liquor for the purpose of unlawful sale, notwithstanding 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

his statements that the liquors were kept exclusively for his own use. Tucker v. Moultrie, 122 Ga. 160, 50 S. E. 61.

In Com. v. Lynch, 164 Mass. 541, 42 N. E. 95, it was said that the conduct of defendant when the officer making search started to open the scuttle into an unfinished place in the roof, in starting downstairs, carrying a lighted lamp with him, and leaving the officer in darkness except for a candle which he then lighted, warranted the inference that the liquors found secreted were kept by them for unlawful sale.

And in State v. La Rose, 71 N. H. 435, 52 Atl. 943, the court said that the large amount of liquor on hand, the action of the clerk in endeavoring to prevent the officer from discovering the liquors, and the payment of tax as a retail dealer, which was not required if liquors were kept for use only in compounding medicines, tended to establish that such liquors were not kept merely for personal use or solely for compounding medicine, but were kept for sale.

In Com. v. Kernan, 148 Mass. 470, 20 N. E. 101, where the evidence showed that beer in large quantities was found concealed in a cellar which was entered from a barroom, with a contrivance which might be used to prevent surprise, the court said: "We cannot pronounce the inference that the beer was kept for sale so little warranted by the teachings of experience as to be but a mere guess."

And in Com. v. Fisher, 138 Mass. 504, where, in the office of one who ran an express between two towns, there was found a large quantity of whisky in jugs, and of beer in bottles, and a barrel containing bottles of beer and several 3-gallon jugs of whisky, the court said: "The fair inference is that the defendant brought into the town the liquors found in his office, and that he did not intend them for his own use. We cannot say as matter of law that, upon all the facts shown, considered in connection with the fact that the defendant made no explanation of them, when such explanation would seem to be in his power, if the liquors were intended for lawful purpose, the jury were not justified in inferring that he had reasonable cause to be-tion of the municipal authorities, proceeding under § 3410, Code of 1906. The statute is as follows, vis.: "It shall be unlawful for any person . . . of this state . . . to have in his possession any intoxicating liquors with the intention, or for the purpose, of selling the same, or giving it away, in violation of law." The facts of this case make it no stronger than the case of Stransberry v. State, — Miss. —, 53 So. 783, unless it can be said that the corkscrew attachment is sufficient additional evidence to sustain a conviction, making this case a stronger one than the Stansberry Case, in 53 So. 783. But the corkscrew may have been placed there by the lawful seller of the whisky to Hill. The fact that the corkscrew convenience was attached to each bottle is not evidence of possession for unlawful purposes by Hill. It is a matter of common knowledge that nothing is more provoking and distressing than to have to wait for a corkscrew when a burning and consuming thirst is raging within. It is possible that the lawful dealer in this whisky was something of a philanthropist, and sought to save his impatient and thirsty patrons from the danger of breaking the neck of the bottle. It is possible that the lawful seller of the whisky had suffered the tortures of delay while impatiently searching for the corklieve that they were intended to be sold in violation of the law.

In State v. Shank, 74 Iowa, 649, 38 N. W. 523, it was held, in the prosecution of a registered pharmacist for maintaining a liquor nuisance, that an instruction that the finding of intoxicating liquors in any place where merchandise is kept for sale is presumptive evidence that it is kept there for purpose of illegal sale is not error where the instruction also directs that defendant, as a registered pharmacist, had a right to keep intoxicating liquors in his drug store for compounding medicines, and therefore the burden rested upon the state to show that such liquors were kept by defendant for unlawful purposes. But a clause in the same instruction that, if the defense shows that the defendant, during the time covered by this indictment, kept intoxicating liquor in his pharmacy that was in no measure useful in compounding medicine, then the presumption would be that such liquor was kept for an illegal purpose, was subject to an objection, as, during part of the time covered by the indictment, under the statute intoxicating liquors were lawfully kept by pharmacists for medical purposes without restriction imposed by the law in force when the indictment was found. And on a later appeal in 79 Iowa, 47, 44 S. W. 241, a similar instruction with similar modification was upheld.

But in Com. v. Hayes, 114 Mas. 282, an instruction that "in and of itself possession of liquor, independent of such associations or surroundings as indicated that it was kept for sale, would authorize no inference of intent to put it to an unlawful use," was upheld.

And in Com. v. Kane, 150 Mass. 294, 22 N. E. 903, the ruling that the mere possession of intoxicating liquors in a dwelling house would not authorize the jury to find that it was kept with intent to sell, was held proper.

And also in State v. Blackman, 134 N. C. 683, 47 S. E. 16, an instruction on the trial of an indictment for unlawfully keeping liquors for sale, that if defendant had whisky in his possession he would be guilty, was held erroneous.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And in Com. v. Canny, 158 Mass. 210, 33 N. E. 340, where large quantities of liquor were found in a cellar under the grocery store of one who previously had a license, which had expired, to sell intoxicating liquors, an instruction in effect that the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, on the evidence, that the liquor was kept by defendant with intent to sell it in violation of law, and that there is no presumption that the liquor found in the store was kept by him with intent to sell it in violation of law, was held to be a correct statement of the law.

But in Com. v. Foster, 182 Mass. 276, 65 N. E. 391, it was held that an instruction that "there is no inference of guilt to be drawn from the mere finding of intoxicating liquor in an unlicensed drug store" would be error, where evidence showed that defendant was found in his back shop, drawing whisky from a 5-gallon cask, and that there was in the room another cask full of whisky, containing 4 or 5 gallons; that no prescriptions were found calling for intoxicating liquors of any kind; and that during the morning quite a number of men were seen to go into the store, stay a minute or so, and go out again; the hip pocket of one of them protruding as if there was something in it.

And though the possession of intoxicating liquors, even of various kinds and in large quantities, is not of itself sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty of illegal keeping of intoxicating liquors with intent unlawfully to sell the same, yet where the evidence shows that barrels of beer had been upon the premises, and that one was on tap in the offices entered, and that part of the furniture was appropriate to a place of public resort where intoxicating liquors are kept for sale, it furnished an indication of intent to sell, rather than to apply to the mere domestic use of a single family. Com. v. Levy, 126 Mass. 240.

Inference of intent of a druggist to make illegal sales of liquor found in his possession may be overcome by evidence that he had pending an application for a druggist's license. Com. v. Wellington, 146 Mass. 566, 16 N. W. 448 screw, and desired to protect his patrons from like agonies, and hence had attached this simple, but convenient, little appliance as both a convenience and an aid to him in disposing of his "sweet poison." It is true that the facts also show that when Hill saw the officer, and the officer started towards him, Hill "looked as if he was going to run;" but, unfortunately for Hill, he hesitated, and as a result lost his whisky. Hill may have had many reasons for his fright when he saw the officer. Hill does not testify in the case, and so does not state why he was frightened, if such was the fact; but the fright may have been from a cause other than that he had possession of the whisky with guilty purpose. When a man has whisky in his possession in a dry town, and is out on the streets with it so early in the morning, it is natural for him to be a little suspicious; for he does not know whom to trust, nor from what source might come the enemy, bent on the destruction of his goods. The frightened look, under the circumstances, is no proof of guilty possession under the statute. In the case of Stansberry v. State, — Miss. —, 53 So. 783, this court ruled that proof of mere quantity was not sufficient to sustain conviction under this statute. The additional fact that a corkscrew attachment is put on each bottle and the person looks frightened is not enough additional proof to authorize a conviction. There must be testimony evidencing a purpose to sell or give away the liquors in violation of law, no matter how large or small may be the quantity in possession of a person at the time the charge is made.

J. H. B.

Under the facts of this case and the settled rules of criminal law, nothing goes to prove that the possession of this liquor was with any unlawful intent. We may suspect; but the wisdom of the law is such that it refuses to allow any person to be punished for any crime, however strong and well-founded may be the suspicion. There must be proof. We may be anxious to enforce the liquor laws of the state; but they cannot be allowed to subvert the settled rules of criminal law and destroy all safeguards of liberty. Every person charged with any crime must be proven guilty by facts and circumstances which convince beyond a reasonable doubt. This degree of proof is required just as well when the prosecution is under the statute now under review, as any other prosecution. Statutes of this character must be given such an interpretation as keep them in harmony with the general criminal law of the state, and prevent them from being instruments of tyranny. Such statutes are 59 L.R.A. (N.S.) not intended to make it possible to send innocent persons to prison, or to convict guilty ones without proof. If it be asked what proof is sufficient in this character of case, our answer is that this question must be determined on the facts of each case.

The action of the lower court was eminently proper, and is hereby approved.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

J. W. HILL et al., Appts.,
v.

E. E. WOODWARD et al.

(— Miss.—, 57 So. 294.)

Railroad — partition of right of way.

1. A railroad company which has secured a deed for its right of way from one only of two tenants in common cannot resist partition of the property at the suit of the other tenant, on the theory that it would be contrary to public policy to permit it.

Constitutional law — interference with property rights — public policy.

2. No public policy of the state can be allowed to override the positive guaranties of the Constitution, or divest persons of their title and property except in the way the law provides.

(December 18, 1911.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Chancery Court for Calhoun County in plaintiffs' favor in a suit brought to partition certain real estate. Affirmed.

Note. — Partition of railroad right of way.

Actual adjudications upon the point presented appear to be very few.

Under a statute which excludes the parties from making a voluntary partition between themselves by mutual releases, equity will not, at the suit of one railroad corporation which has purchased the undivided interest in another railroad, compel partition between the cotenants, whereby the usefulness of a part of the road would be impaired. The public has an interest in the use to which the property is perpetually devoted, and equity will recognize and protect that public interest. Steubenville & I. R. Co. v. Central Ohio R. Co. 38 Ohio St. 614.

In Weston v. Foster, 7 Met. 297, it was held that a railroad company which had laid its road over certain premises then to be partitioned acquired thereby only an easement in the land, and no title to the estate, and that, therefore, the company was not a necessary or proper party to the partition proceeding, for their easement would not be affected by it. H. C. Sh.

In 1871 Joseph W. Drake conveyed certain lands to T. T. Enochs and A. Woodward. Enochs paid taxes on the land for a time and then called upon his cotenant for contribution. This contribution was not made, but in a settlement between the parties it was claimed that an agreement was reached that Enochs should have the property. Woodward having died, and his administrator having refused to contribute towards the taxes, the property was sold and bought in by Enochs. He devised the land to his daughter, who conveyed it to J. W. Hill. Hill conveyed to his co-defendants including the railroad company, and, the land having increased in value, the heirs of Woodward set up a claim to partition as tenants in common of the property. The land is now occupied by the town of Vardaman. The defenses of the individuals having been disposed of by the court as questions of fact, it is not necessary to set them out, but the railway company set up the defense that partition could not be secured against it on grounds of public policy.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Creekmore & Stone, for appellants:

The sales and the surrounding circumstances characterize the possession of Enochs as adverse, and after the lapse of ten years' possession, such as the land was capable of, vested perfect title in T. T. Enochs.

Gardiner v. Hinton, 86 Miss. 604, 109 Am. St. Rep. 726, 38 So. 779; Breland v. O'Neal, 88 Miss. 449, 40 So. 865.

Messrs. Haman & Bates and A. T. Stovall also for appellants.

Messrs. Luckett & Guyton and Dunn & Patterson for appellees.

Mayes, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The title of appellees to the land in controversy, to the extent claimed by them, is established so clearly as to put it beyond the realm of controversy. The only question in the case which requires discussion is the question raised by the railroad company as to the right of appellees to have partition as against them. It is argued that the railroad company secured deeds granting to it a right of way over the land, and that it has constructed its line of railway on same, and is now using the property in the operation of its road from Okolona, through the town of Vardaman, to Calhoun City, which is the terminus of the road, and is 8 or 10 miles west of the town of Vardaman. The facts show that the railroad company secured by its deeds only a one-half interest in the property; the other half interest belonging to appellees. On account of the small quantity of land, taken in connection with its charter, and because of the numerous complainants and defendants, the chancellor very properly ordered a sale of the land for partition, which order of sale also included that part occupied by the railroad company. On behalf of the railroad company it is argued that no partition should have been ordered as against it, because such judgment is contrary to public policy. In support of this contention counsel cite many cases. We shall discuss those cases later on in this opinion.

Under § 17 of the Constitution of 1890 it is beyond the power of the state or any corporation to take or damage the property of any person, even for a public use, without due compensation being first made. The railroad company has constructed its roadway on land to which it has not the complete title. It has thus taken private property for a public use without having compensated the owners thereof to the extent of their interest, and has not procured their title, in the face of the fact that the records in the clerk's office fully disclose same. No public policy of the state can be allowed to override the positive guaranties of the Constitution, or deplete persons of their title to property, except in the way which the law provides.

Section 3521 of the Code of 1906 authorizes the partition of land held by joint tenants, tenants in common, etc., and the railroad is of that class of tenantry. The statute makes no exception when one of the tenants in common happens to be a railroad. In support of the contention of counsel that public policy forbids the partition of this land as against the railroad company, our attention is first called to the case of Weston v. Foster, 7 Met. 297. But the question involved in the above case was not the same as the one involved in this case. In the Foster Case, supra, the court merely held that as the railroad company had only an easement in certain property of which partition was sought, and no title, it was not a necessary or proper party to the proceedings.

Our attention is directed by counsel to 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1163, and 30 Cyc. p. 178. The text merely states that there are certain kinds of property of which the court will refuse to make a partition on the grounds of public policy; that the courts have refused to decree partition of a railroad, on the ground that any division of the property would impair its usefulness, in which the public has an interest. The notes to the text in both of above volumes cite the case of Steubenville

& I. R. Co. v. Central Ohio R. Co. 38 Ohio St. 614. An examination of that case shows that the facts of that case make of it a different case from the one now before the court. It appears from the above case that one railroad corporation purchased from another an undivided interest in the latter's railroad. Before this could be done in the state of Ohio a statute allowing it was necessary, and the legislature of the state passed an act in relation to insolvent railroad companies which authorized the sale and purchase. The act provided that the sale could be made, provided it be done without impairing the usefulness of the selling road. In this way a tenancy in common was created, followed by a subsequent attempt on the part of the purchasing road to partite the road. The Ohio court held that there could be no partition of this property, either under the statute or in equity. The court said: "The statute authorized the sale of an undivided interest in the road between Newark and Columbus by the Central Ohio Company to the Steubenville & Indiana Company, 'if the same could be done without impairing the usefulness thereof' to the Central Ohio Company. This condition was unquestionably inserted in the statute upon consideration of public policy. In the deed of conveyance it was recited that the sale did not impair the usefulness of the section to the vendor company. It was not meant, either by the statute or the deed, that the exclusive use of the section was preserved to the Central Company, but that in the joint use of the section reasonable facilities were and would be afforded the Central Company for conducting its business over this line of the road. In other words, that one half of the capacity of the road was sufficient to supply the necessities of the vendor company. . . . It was the use of an undivided road, not the half of the road when divided, that was thus secured to the vendor; and this, not for a time limited at the pleasure of the purchaser, but for all time. This is inferable from the fact that no further power to alienate existed in either party, save such only as might result from the power to create debts. . . . The legislature did not contemplate or intend that a partition of this property should be made, but, on the other hand, did intend a perpetual joint use of the highway." In the last case the selling road could not make the sale until authorized so to do by the legislature of the state, and when that body authorized the sale it stipulated that it could only be done when the sale did not impair the usefulness of the road. The court held that the partition would impair its usefulness, and that any attempt so to do was in violation of the act, and refused to order it. The above case does not hold that public policy forbids the partition of land on which a railroad is situated, when the railroad company has become a tenant in common with others whose title has never been parted with by them.

In the case of Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Fish, 158 Ind. 525, 63 N. E. 454, it appears that the town of Winamac, Indiana, undertook to sell a small portion of the roadway of the railroad company for the purpose of satisfying a lien claimed by the town as against the property of the railroad for certain local improvements assessed against same, and which the railway company failed or refused to satisfy, and the court said: "When the public grants a franchise to a railroad corporation, and gives to it the right of eminent domain, it does so upon the theory that benefits will be returned. Hence it is that the public has an interest in the exercise of such a franchise that a court of equity, in the absence of a specific statutory provision, will not suffer disturbed, when private right may find another adequate remedy. Accordingly it has been held that such property of a railroad company as is essential to the operation of the road, and in carrying forward its corporate purpose, will not be ordered sold by piecemeal to satisfy a statutory lien; but in lieu of an order of sale the court will award the plaintiff a personal judgment, to be collected as ordinary judgments at law are collected." The above case was decided as it should have been, but we fail to see that it supports the contention of railroad in this case. No question of the failure of the railway to procure title, in the first instance, to the land on which it had established its line, was involved in the above case. Ample remedy was left the creditor to collect his debt, without destroying the public usefulness of the railroad. The creditor has no vested property rights in the road. He had only the right to pursue such remedies for the collection of his debt as the law allowed, and if ample remedy was afforded him, without disturbing the rights of the public, the creditor had no cause of complaint. But in this case the appellees own an interest in the land itself. They owned it before the road was constructed, and they still own it.

The case of Gooch v. McGee, 83 N. C. 59, 35 Am. Rep. 558, deals with the sale of corporate property under execution. The case merely holds that, when a public corporation acquires real estate for corporate purposes under eminent domain powers, such real estate can only be sold under execution subject to the performance of the duties and obligations imposed by law on the corporation. The case of Connor v. Tennessee C. R. Co. 54 L.R.A. 687, 48 C. C. A. 730, 109 Fed. 931, turns on the same principle of law. Connor attempted to enforce a contractor's lien by selling a specific part of the roadbed of the railway company to which it was claimed the lien attached, and the court held that this could not be done; that the debt must be collected in the ordinary way and by ordinary processes, by the appointment of a receiver, or collected from the toils or income, and, if this should prove insufficient, then the decree should subject the entire property and its franchise to sale as an entirety.

It seems useless to further discuss the authorities relied on by counsel. Not one of them have any application to the facts of this case. All the cases relied on by counsel deal with the collection of a debt after the railroad has acquired title to its roadway in some way known to the law; and when this is once done the railroad acquires the ownership, subject to the burden imposed that it will always be used so as to promote a public use of same.

A railroad corporation does not acquire an absolute title to its roadway. It does not acquire a title that it may sell or dispose of at pleasure, without reference to the right of the public to use same. The ownership of the railroad company of its roadbed is different from that of an individual or a private corporation. The basis on which the grant to it of eminent domain powers rests is the fact that its property is to be used for a public purpose. The right of the public to have it so use its property is imposed on the railroad property the very instant it obtains title, whether the title is obtained by private purchase or through eminent domain proceedings. Because of this fact, and because a judgment creditor can obtain no higher equities in a judgment debtor's property than the debtor himself had, the courts have refused to allow a judgment creditor to destroy the public usefulness of a railroad by levying on a part of its roadway and selling it for the payment of a debt, thus destroying the unity and usefulness of the road. Under the terms of its creation it is bound to run its road for the public use. It cannot rid itself of this burden. It cannot sell its road by piecemeal itself, and no judgment creditor can do so. But no public burden can be imposed on land where the public has never acquired any title, and therefore no right to have it used for the public good. Before the public burden can be imposed on the land, the title must be 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) acquired. If a railroad locates its roadway on property belonging to an individual, as long as the individual owns the property, the railroad may be dealt with as any other trespasser or tenant in common.

The case of Beck v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 65 Miss. 172, 3 So. 252, has already settled the question involved in this case so far as this state is concerned. This court, speaking through Judge Campbell, said: "The proposition that a railroad company may build upon the land of one who does not object, and thereby secure the right of way, subject only to liability to his claim for damages, is not maintainable in this state, whatever may be held elsewhere. A parol license may shield from liability for trespass; but it is revocable, and, when revoked, is no longer a protection. The only way to secure the right of way is by grant from the owner, or by condemnation proceedings, or by the statute of limitations. If the road is built without securing the right of way, the owner, who has not precluded himself, may recover damages for the trespass, and may recover the land occupied by ejectment, or may enjoin in chancery the use of the land. The fact that the charter authorizes either the landowner or the company to institute proceedings for condemnation does not in any manner abridge the rights of the landowner. He is not bound to take the initiative as to such proceedings. If a company desires the right of way, it must take steps to secure it. If it does not, it must answer for every invasion of the rights of the landowner."

In the state of Mississippi a fee-simple title to land means absolute and unqualified ownership as against railroads and all persons whomsoever. It means that such land cannot be taken from the owner, except by due process of law and upon due compensation being paid therefor. It means that with this title go all the incidents of the title, one of which is to have it partitioned as against a tenant in common, either in kind or by sale, controlled only by such method of partition as will protect the best interest of all parties; but partition may be had, it matters not who the tenants in common are.

Affirmed.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

R. E. KENNINGTON, Appt.,

v.

T. W. HEMINGWAY et al.

(— Miss. —, 57 So. 809.)

Husband and wife — gift — necessity of record.

A gift of a ring by a solvent man to his wife does not come within the operation of a statute providing that a transfer or conveyance of goods or chattels between husband and wife shall not be valid as against any third person unless the transfer or conveyance be in writing, properly acknowledged and recorded.

(February 12, 1912.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Chancery Court for Hinds County in defendants' favor in a suit brought to subject a ring belonging to Mrs. Hemingway to the payment of a debt of her former husband. Affirmed.

While T. W. Hemingway and the woman whom he married were living together as husband and wife he gave to her a diamond ring. The parties were subsequently divorced and she pledged the ring for a loan. Kennington obtained a judgment against Hemingway, and sought to subject the ring to the satisfaction of the judgment, on the theory that not having been registered, the gift was void under the statute.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Mayes & Longstreet for appellant.

Messrs. Watkins & Watkins and John B. Ricketts for appellees.

Smith, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

One of the questions presented by this record, and which, if answered in the affirmative, will dispose of the whole case, is this: Is a gift by a husband to the wife of a personal ornament—in this instance, a diamond ring—"valid as against any third person," when such gift is not evidenced by a written instrument, acknowledged and recorded as provided by § 2294 of the Code of 1892, the same being § 2522 of the Code of 1906? In the case at bar the ring was given to the wife eight years prior to the institution of this suit, at a time when the husband was solvent, and without any intention on his part of defrauding anyone. This section is as follows: "A transfer or conveyance of goods and chattels, or lands or any lease of lands, between husband and wife, shall not be valid as against any third person, unless the transfer or conveyance be in writing and acknowledged and filed for record as a mortgage or deed of trust is required to be; and possession of the property shall not be equivalent to filing the writing for record, but, to affect third persons, the writing must be filed for record." The words "goods and chattels" are ordinarily broad enough to cover all personal property; and if the statute is to be interpreted literally, all gifts of personal property, including necessary wearing apparel and ornaments for the person, made by a husband to the wife, must be by a written instrument, acknowledged and recorded; and in that event the fact that the wearing apparel of every person is exempt from execution or attachment would not aid the wife, for, as against any third person, such wearing apparel would be dealt with as if it remained the property of the husband. If this is the meaning of the statement, its absurdity is manifest, and that the legislature intended such result is inconceivable.

Note.—A diligent search has failed to disclose any other case upon the question presented.

As to gifts of personalty between husband and wife, see note to Barnum v. LeMaster, 69 L.R.A. 355; and as to right of man to dispose of wife's ornaments and apparel, see note to Farrow v. Farrow, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 389.
39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

After the enactment of this statute it still remained, as it had always been, the legal and moral duty of the husband to support his wife in a way suitable to her situation and his condition in life. In order to do this he must, among other things, give her necessary wearing apparel, and ought, so far as his means will permit and within the limits of a wise economy, to give her such personal ornaments as good taste and the usage of the society in which she moves demand. If the innumerable gifts which he must make her in discharging this duty, if the transfer of each article of clothing and each personal ornament, must be by a written instrument, acknowledged and recorded, the statute requiring it would not only be an absurd one, but would be unreasonable, and would result in such great inconvenience and expense as to be intolerable. Legislators must be presumed to be reasonable and sane men, "and to intend the natural, direct, and probable consequences of their acts, that these shall not be absurdly or unreasonably construed, and therefore that they intend to avoid absurdities and nonsense." 4 Hughes, Grounds and Rudiments of the Law, 1104. If, therefore, wearing apparel and personal ornaments can be, consistent with the rules of construction, excluded from the operation of this statute, it becomes our duty to do so. New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Hemphill, 35 Miss. 17; Ingraham v. Speed, 30 Miss. 410; State Bd. of Edu. v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 72 Miss. 236, 16 So. 489; 2 Lewis's Sutherland Stat. Constr. 2d ed. §§488-490, and authorities there cited; 36 Cyc. 1108. At the same time, we must bear in mind that the enactment of a wise or a foolish statute is for the determination, not of the courts, but of the lawmakers; and

* when the intention of the lawmakers is clearly understood, the statute must be enforced as written; it matters not to what absurd results such enforcement may lead.

Human language is not a perfect vehicle for conveying thought, and it frequently happens that words used have a broader or narrower meaning than that intended by the person using them. One of the maxims of the common law, therefore, is verba intentioni debent inservire. (Words are to be governed by the intention.) As was said by this court in State Bd. of Edu. v. Mobile & O. Co. supra: "It is familiar learning that, in the construction of statutes, courts chiefly desire to reach and know the real intention of the framers of the law; and, reaching and knowing it, then to adopt that interpretation which will meet the real meaning of the legislature, though such interpretation may be beyond or within, wider or narrower than, the mere letter of the enactment." The courts have repeatedly given the words "goods, wares, and merchandise," as they appear in various statutes, a broad or restricted meaning, according to the context and the evident purpose of the statutes. See authorities cited in 20 Cyc. 1272; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1079. The object of the statute was to prevent the perpetration of frauds by means of pretended transfers of property between husband and wife. Gregory v. Dodds, 60 Miss. 549. The number of frauds that could be perpetrated by means of pretended gifts by husbands to wives of wearing apparel and personal ornaments is so infinitesimal in comparison with the number of such gifts that must be made by husbands in the discharge of the duty to support their wives, and the inconvenience, expense, and absurdity of evidencing such gifts by a written instrument, acknowledged and recorded, is so great, that the conclusion is irresistible that the legislature did not intend to include such gifts within the meaning of the words used in the statute.

In Reg. v. Clarence, L. R. 22 Q. B. Div. 65, it was said by Lord Coleridge that "in such a matter as the construction of a statute, if the apparent logical construction of its language leads to results which it is impossible to believe that those who framed or those who passed the statute contemplated, and from which one's own judgment recoils, there is in my opinion good reason for believing that the construction which leads to such results cannot be the true construction of the statute."

The question propounded in the beginning of this opinion must therefore be answered 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

in the affirmative, and the decree of the court below must be affirmed.

Suggestion of error overruled, March 11, 1912.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

DES MOINES & MISSISSIPPI LEVEE DISTRICT NO. 1, Resp't.,

v.

CHICAGO, BURLINGTON, & QUINCY RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.

(— Mo. —, 145 S. W. 35.)

Action — levee district — suit to include property.

1. Entitling a proceeding to include property in a levee district, in the name of the district, which is a public corporation, is not prevented by a statutory provision that

Note. — Assessment for improvements made before property was included within the improvement district.

While no other case, directly in point has been found, the holding in DES MOINES & M. LEVEE DIST. NO. 1 v. CHICAGO, B. & Q. R. Co. seems to be clearly correct, that property is not liable to assessment for improvements made and paid for before it was included within the improvement district. As said in DES MOINES & M. LEVEE DIST. NO. 1 v. CHICAGO, B. & Q. R. Co., the assessment of property added to an improvement district, for improvements made and paid for before its addition, would be an unauthorized taking of private property.

In Smith v. Willis, 78 Miss. 243, 28 So. 878, and Holder v. Bond, — Miss. —, 29 So. 769, however, it was held that land which has been transferred by statute from one county to another, the latter of which is afterward put in a certain levee district, is liable to levee taxes, although while it was in the former county it was in no levee district, and was free from levee taxes; and although it is in fact damaged, rather than benefited, by the levee.

And where a city, under its charter, cannot make an assessment for a street improvement until the completion of the improvement and the ascertaining of the cost thereof, property which was outside the city limits when a street improvement was begun, being on one side of the street, along the center of which the city line ran, but which was taken into the city while the improvement was being made, and before its completion, and was in the city at the time the improvement was completed and accepted, is subject to assessment for the improvement. Re Hollister, 96 App. Div. 501, 80 N. Y. Supp. 518, affirmed without opinion in 180 N. Y. 518, 72 N. E. 1143; Hollister v. Rochester, 41 Misc. 559, 85 N. Y. Supp. 147, affirmed in 96 App. Div. 501, 80 N. Y. Supp. 518. A. C. W.

it shall be filed by the board of supervisors of the county.

Levee district — inclusion of railroad — validity.

2. Including railroad property in a levee district does not violate its charter rights, on the theory that the railroad company was not organized to reclaim overflowed lands.

Tax — improvement district — inclusion of property — liability for prior work.

3. Property taken into a levee district cannot be assessed for work done and paid for by the assessment of property within the district prior to the taking in of the new property.

(February 29, 1912.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Clark County in plaintiff's favor in a proceeding for the inclusion of defendant's property in the plaintiff levee district. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. O. M. Spencer, F. T. Hughes, and Palmer Trimble for appellant.

Mr. C. T. Llewellyn for respondent.

Graves, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, the Des Moines & Mississippi Levee District No. 1, under its corporate name, filed its petition in the circuit court of Clark county August 24, 1908, asking that the defendant railway company be summoned into court to show cause, if any it had, why its roadbed and right of way should not be included in and made part of the levee district, and be assessed with such benefits as it had received, or might thereafter receive, by reason of the improvements made and to be made by the said levee district. The petition was filed under the act of 1907, and that portion relating to the course of proceedings reads: "Before the proceedings had in this section shall be had, the board of supervisors shall file in the office of the clerk of the circuit court of the county in which such levee district is, or may be located, a petition reciting the organization of such levee district, the location of such railroad or railroads within its limits, the improvements made or to be made, as shown by the report, maps, plans, and profiles by the topographical survey of the topographical engineer, and that the improvements already made or proposed to be made will be of material benefit to such railroad company or corporation, and asking that such railway corporation or company be summoned into court to show cause why such railroad right of way, roadbed, or track belonging to or owned by such railway company or corporation should not be included in and made a part of such levee district, and be assessed with such benefits as will or have accrued to it by reason of the improvements made or proposed to be made. Such railway company or corporation, after having been duly summoned, shall, on or before the third day of the term of court to which it may have been summoned to appear, file its objection or objections in writing, if any it may have, why it should not be included in and made a part of such levee district, and be assessed with benefits; and all such objections shall be heard by the court in a summary manner, without any unnecessary delay." Laws of 1907, p. 336. The petition filed follows the language of the statute. The cause, upon the petition of defendant, was removed to the Federal court, but upon motion of the plaintiff was remanded to the state court.

The many points made appear fully in the answer, which reads:

"Now comes the defendant, Chicago, Burlington, & Quincy Railroad Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Illinois, that, for answer and objections to the matters and things stated in plaintiff's petition herein, stated that it has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations in plaintiff's petition contained, and therefore denies each and every one of said allegations therein contained.

"For further answer defendant states that heretofore the defendant in this cause filed a petition and bond under the provisions of the act of Congress for the removal of causes from the state to the Federal courts. Said petition prayed to have said cause removed to the circuit court of the United States, northern division of the eastern district of Missouri, and that defendant did file papers in said United States court, as provided in the order of removal, and that thereafter said United States court, upon the allegations of plaintiff and by order of court, remanded said cause to this court, to all of which actions this defendant objected, and excepted to the rulings of said court, and herein renews its exceptions, and avers that the cause was properly removed from this court to said United States circuit court, and that the cause upon said removal vested in said United States court.

"For further answer, this defendant says that the alleged act of the legislature of this state, known as § 8365a of the legislature of Missouri of 1907, is null and void as against the rights of this defendant in the premises herein, in this: That said act attempts to divest this defendant of its vested right in the premises, and to charge this defendant with a debt of the plaintiff corporation long since created by said corporation upon the property within its jurisdiction, and has been, in whole or in part, paid by the said corporation. That said act deprives this defendant of its rights under the laws of this state existing at the time said drainage and levee district was formed, in this: That defendant had no right to participate in or become a member of said levee district, nor have its property assessed with such equal proportion of alleged benefits as were necessary for the purpose therein, in proportion and equally with all other owners of land in said levee district.

"Answering further, defendant says that said act attempts to make this defendant a part of said district without its consent, and without any right, under the laws when said district was formed, to participate and become a part of said district when the same was being formed.

"Defendant, further answering, says that the laws relative to plaintiff's district give no authority to levy and collect taxes, other than for the construction and maintenance of such levee district, and that, if defendant shall be assessed as prayed for in plaintiff's petition, the money so collected upon said assessment would not be thus collected for the construction or maintenance of said levee district, but for the sole and only use of the plaintiff herein, as profit or excessive money in its hands.

"Further answering, defendant says that said act is special and class legislation, and is void, within the Constitution of this state, and against the defendant in the premises herein. That said act is null and void, within the meaning of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and seeks to take property of this defendant for the use of plaintiff without due process of law.

"Further answering, defendant says that the acts of plaintiff herein seek to deprive this defendant of the equal protection of the laws, within the meaning of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

"Further answering, defendant says that plaintiff seeks, by judgment and order of this court, to assess defendant for benefits which, it is alleged, defendant receives by said levee district, when, in law and in fact, it is the duty of the board of supervisors to appoint commissioners, disinterested freeholders of the county, and assess benefits accruing to each piece of land, in whole or in part, with the name of the owner thereof.

"Having fully answered and stated defendant's objections herein, this defendant asks to be dismissed, with its costs in this behalf laid out and expended."

Reply was general denial. The cause was tried and decree entered for the plaintiff. The material findings and the decree proper read:

"That the right of way, roadbed, and embankments owned by defendant corporation, occupied and used for railroad purposes, are within the limits of plaintiff levee district. That the board of supervisors of plaintiff levee district have filed in the office of the clerk of this court a petition reciting the organization of plaintiff levee district, the location of defendant's railroad within its limits, the improvement made or to be made, as shown by the report, maps, plans, and profiles by the topographical survey of the topographical engineer, and the improvements already made and proposed to be made will be of material benefit to defendant railroad corporation, and asking that such railway corporation be summoned into court to show cause why such railroad right of way, roadbed, and track owned by defendant corporation should not be included in and made a part of plaintiff levee district, and be assessed with such benefits as have or will accrue to it by reason of the improvements made or proposed to be made. That the improvements already made and to be made are and will be of material benefit to defendant. That all that part of defendant's right of way, roadbed, and track where the same crosses the west line of section thirty-three (33), township sixty-five (65), range six (6) west, in Clark county, Missouri, and running thence southeast, east, and northeast to the east line of section five (5), township sixty-four (64), range five (5) west, and from the crossing of Clay and Pine streets, in the old town of Churchville, now called Alexandria, south and southwest to Gridley street, in Hill's addition to the old town of Churchville, now called Alexandria, all in Clark county, Missouri, is within the limits of plaintiff levee district.

"It is therefore ordered and adjudged by the court that the objections of defendant filed herein be, and they are hereby, overruled, and that the defendant's railroad, right of way, roadbed, track, and embankments owned by defendant railroad company, within the limits of plaintiff levee district, be and the same are included and made a part of plaintiff levee district, and included within said levee district."

From such decree, defendant has appealed, and urges all of the divers matters set out in its answer. The evidence is brief and largely formal, and can best be taken with the discussion of the points urged for reversal.

1. The question of jurisdiction urged in the answer is not specially urged in the brief here. The Federal court has declined jurisdiction, and the state court has proceeded to judgment. Counsel, in oral argument, stated that the question was injected in the answer, to the end that it might be urged in the United States Supreme Court, should the case reach that court. We shall not discuss the authorities on this question. In our judgment, there was no error upon the part of the state court in proceeding under the facts in this case.

2. The defendant next assails the petition, and urges that the district itself has sued, when the action should have been instituted in the name of the board of supervisors. The act of 1907 (Laws of 1907, p. 336) was an act amending article 7 of chapter 122, Rev. Stats. 1899. The amendment consisted in adding a new section, to be known as § 8365a. This section, so far as it relates to the procedure, we have set out in the statement. To more fully understand the proceedings, the first part of the section had better be set out. That portion reads: "If there is or shall be within the limits of any levee district now, or hereafter organized under this article, any right of way, roadbed, or embankment belonging to or owned by any railway company or corporation, occupied and used for railroad purposes, that is or will be benefited by the construction of a levee or levees, dykes, embankments, ditches, drains, or other improvements, the same shall be assessed with such benefits, and such assessment shall be made in the manner and by the means provided in § 8365 of this article; and the board of supervisors shall appoint an additional board of commissioners, three in number, possessing the same qualifications as prescribed in said § 8365, who shall proceed as therein provided; and such assessment shall be estimated by the mile instead of by the acre."

Following this is the language quoted in the statement. This levee district had been organized some years prior to the institution of the present action. It will be observed that the law reads: "Before the proceedings had in this section shall be had, the board of supervisors shall file in the office of the clerk of the circuit court of the county in which such levee district is or may be located, a petition," etc. The word "proceedings" hereinabove used, evidently refers to what precedes it in this section, which language of the section we have hereinabove just quoted. That proceeding is: "And such assessment shall be made in the manner and by the means provided in § 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

8365 of this article, and the board of supervisors shall appoint an additional board of commissioners, three in number, possessing the same qualifications as prescribed in said § 8365, who shall proceed as therein provided; and such assessment shall be estimated by the mile instead of by the acre." In other words, taking the whole section, it appears that there first must be action by the circuit court to determine whether or not the railroad property can be assessed for benefits, and, if this be found in the affirmative, then the other proceeding of actual assessment takes place.

Now, with this view of the situation, can the levee district, in its own name, properly present the petition to the circuit court asking that court to determine the fact whether the property of the railroad company is subject to an assessment of benefits? Or must this petition be in the name of the board of supervisors? The law says that the board of supervisors shall file the petition; but it does not say how such petition shall be entitled. By the law, these districts, when organized, are by the court declared and decreed to be public corporations of the state. Rev. Stats. 1899, §§ 8362 and 8253, now Rev. Stats. 1909, §§ 5704 and 5499. It will be seen that the levee act borrows much from the drainage act by express reference thereto. In the case at bar, this public corporation is the real party interested. The board of supervisors are but the agents of the corporation. They are not made trustees for the corporation. We therefore are of the opinion that the suit was instituted properly. But if it were not, this matter was not challenged below either by demurrer or answer. The case proceeded there as if the proper parties were in court, and it should so proceed here. The question is raised here for the first time.

3. It is also urged that it is violative of charter rights to require a railroad company to participate in the reclamation of lands; that to so require a railroad to help maintain a levee district would be to require it to do things not provided for in its charter. As stated in the oral argument, railroads were not organized to reclaim overflow lands. We are not impressed with this contention. The assessments of benefits are justified under the police power of the state, rather than the taxing power. The theory is that the general welfare is promoted by this reclamation of overflow lands. The term "general welfare" includes the public health, as well as other things which are the special wards of the police power of the state. We see no reason why the police power may not reach the corporation the same as the individual, and this, too, without violating constitutional rights. As to whether the corporation's property will be benefited is a question of fact to be determined; but if such fact is determined, and it is properly held that the corporation's property will be benefited, the assessments of benefits will not deprive it of its property without due process of law, or be violative of any other constitutional provisions. It must be borne in mind that the sole question here involved is whether or not the finding that defendant's property has been or will be benefited is proper. The circuit court does not assess benefits. That is done later. Of course, if the law which authorizes the circuit court to determine that fact is unconstitutional, that would end this controversy; but we are not so impressed. The law, as above indicated, seems to be a just law, and violative of no constitutional provisions. The law simply imposes upon the corporation what it imposes upon the individual. But, as said, this imposed duty has its origin in the police power of the state. Nor do we think this holding in any way contravenes what was said in Squaw Creek Drainage Dist. v. Turney, 235 Mo. 80, 138 S. W. 12. This contention is therefore overruled. This, of course, only applies to the general proposition that a law authorizing the property of a railroad company to be brought into a levee district, if its property is in fact benefited, is constitutional. Other points are urged as to this particular law, which we will discuss later.

4. But it is urged that, although it be conceded that the legislature, in the exercise of the police power of the state, could pass a law which would subject the property of railroads to the assessments of benefits in levee and drainage districts, yet this particular law is bad, because it not only authorizes the bringing of the railroad property into the levee district after the district has been formed, but authorizes the assessments of benefits which had theretofore accrued to its property by reason of the work done, as well as the benefits to accrue from work to be thereafter done. This is the serious question in the case. The law speaks of assessing the property with "such benefits as will or have accrued to it by reason of the improvements made or proposed to be made." The judgment in the case says "that the improvements already made and to be made will be of material benefit to defendant." Both under the law and the judgment, the property might be assessed with benefits for work done before the property was included in the district. These benefits are only assessed to pay for the improvements. The closing part of the decree in this case makes the property of defendant a part of the levee district. In fact, the decree covers but two points: (1) That the property has been benefited by the work already done, and will be benefited by work to be done; and (2) that such property is made a part of the levee district. Now, the question is whether or not that part of the law can stand which authorizes the assessment of benefits for improvements made prior to the time defendant's property became a portion of the levee district. If the law is bad in this regard, the judgment is likewise bad, because it follows the statute, and under it the commissioners appointed would, no doubt, assess for both the benefits by reason of improvements already made, as well as the benefits for improvements to be made.

For the plaintiff, it is urged that the property of the defendant was already in the district, and the new law only changed the method of assessment from the acreage plan to the mileage plan. This contention is not borne out by the record. In the first place, the judgment in this case decrees "that the objections of defendant filed herein be, and they are hereby, overruled, and that the defendant's railroad, right of way, roadbed, track, and embankments owned by defendant railroad company within the limits of plaintiff levee district be and the same are included and made a part of plaintiff's levee district, and included within said levee district." The decree therefore shows that for the first time, by this proceeding, the property of defendant is made a part of the levee district. In oral argument, it was stated that the defendant was originally made a party to the proceeding, and that such fact was shown by the record. The only thing which we find is the judgment above discussed, and a certain admission made of record, which thus reads: "By Mr. Llewellyn: I offer the articles of incorporation of the plaintiff, which is a record of this court. Admitted in evidence in words and figures as follows: 'The respondent herein admits that the articles of incorporation referred to show that the plaintiff, respondent company, was organized as such drainage district in 1904, and that it built its levees and drainage districts in the year 1905, and that appellant makes no issue of law or fact on that question.' The further agreed statement of facts was then made and entered of record in the court below, in words and figures as follows: 'It is agreed that map of the Des Moines & Mississippi River Levees District, showing the location of drainage ditches, is in evidence, which said map is called 'Exhibit 1;' that, the drainage ditch spoken of by the witness Snively starts a mile and a half northwest of the railroad, and runs southeasterly to the railroad right of way on the north side of the railroad right of way, and then parallel with the right of way east about 2 miles, then turns and crosses the right of way and the railroad track and goes south direct to Fox river; that this drain collects water from the northwest of the railroad, where it starts, and carries it down in said direction to Fox river; that the drain has an average width of 20 feet at the top and 8 feet deep."

This falls far short of showing that the defendant was a party to the original proceeding, if that be a material question in the case. So that, under this record, we are driven to answer the question, Is that portion of this law which purports to authorize the assessments of benefits for work already done valid and binding? If so, the judgment nisi may be right, if right on the facts shown; and, if not so, then it is erroneous. The exact question now confronting us was not discussed in either of our recent cases. Squaw Creek Drainage Dist. v. Turney, 235 Mo. 80, 138 S. W. 12, and Re Little River Drainage Dist. 236 Mo. 94, 139 S. W. 330.

As said in the preceding paragraph, these drainage and levee districts are organized by the state in the exercise of its police powers. In Morrison v. Morey, 146 Mo. loc. cit. 561, 48 S. W. 633, this court said: "It is a public political subdivision of the state, which the state has the power to create, under its police powers, and as such subdivision it exercises the prescribed functions of government in the district." And in the same case (146 Mo. loc. cit. 564), it is said: "But, while it is a public subdivision of the state, and not a private corporation, it does not follow that the money to be raised from the landowners to carry out the objects intended is a tax. It is an assessment which is justified by the benefit, public and private, conferred. The cost of the abatement of nuisances, for the construction of sewers, or for the improvement of a street, may be assessed against the property benefited, notwithstanding the public and the owner are both interested. As a tax it would be unconstitutional, because not uniform (Const. § 3, art. 10), and because not in proportion to the value of the property (Const. § 4, art. 10), and because it is prohibited by the limitations of § 12 of article 10 of our Constitution; but being an assessment of benefits and in no sense a tax, it is a constitutional exercise of the power of the state. Lockwood v. St. Louis, 24 Mo. 20; Garrett v. St. Louis, 25 Mo. 505, 69 Am. Dec. 475; Egyptian Levee Co. v. Hardin, 27 Mo. 495, 72 Am. Dec. 276; St. Louis, use of Creamer v. Clemens, 36 Mo. 467; Uhrig v. St. Louis, 44 Mo. 458; 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) Sheehan v. Good Samaritan Hospital, 50 Mo. 155, 11 Am. Rep. 412; Southern Hotel Co. v. St. Louis County Ct. 62 Mo. 134; Farrar v. St. Louis, 80 Mo. 379; St. Joseph use of Gibson v. Owen, 110 Mo. 445, 19 S. W. 713; Clinton use of Thornton v. Henry County, 115 Mo. 557, 37 Am. St. Rep. 415, 22 S. W. 494; Roosevelt Hospital v. New York, 84 N. Y. 108; Duke v. O'Bryan, 100 Ky. 710, 39 S. W. 444, 824; Nugent v. Mississippi Levee Comrs. 58 Miss. 197; State ex rel. Baltzell v. Stewart, 74 Wis. 620, 6 L.R.A. 394, 43 N. W. 947; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 755. Assessments for the construction of levees to protect from overflow may be and usually are levied on lands bordering on the stream of water from which the danger is anticipated, and are properly benefits, as contradistinguished from taxes; and laws authorizing them are constitutional. Crowley v. Copley, 2 La. Ann. 329; Sessions v. Crunkilton, 20 Ohio St. 349; Yeatman v. Crandall, 11 La. Ann. 220; Wallace v. Shelton, 14 La. Ann. 503; Bishop v. Marks, 15 La. Ann. 147; McGehee v. Mathis, 21 Ark. 40; Jones v. Boston, 104 Mass. 461; Egyptian Levee Co. v. Hardin, 27 Mo. 495, 72 Am. Dec. 276; Hagar v. Yolo County, 47 Cal. 231; People v. Hagar, 52 Cal. 183; People ex rel. Griffin v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 430, 55 Am. Dec. 266; Sears v. Cottrell, 5 Mich. 251; Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co. 28 Cal. 345."

This case has been continuously followed by this court, and it is cited even in the late Turney Case, supra. But, grant it to be true that we have constitutional power to incorporate levee districts, and constitutional power to include railroad properties therein, and constitutional power to assess benefits as against such railroad properties to pay the costs of the work, does that authorize the legislature to direct the assessment of benefits for work already done and paid for before the property is taken into the district? We think not. It may be that, to the extent that the improvements had not been fully paid for, the benefits could be assessed, on the theory that, as to that unpaid balance, all property legally in the district prior to payment should pay for the benefits accruing by reason of the work done in anticipation of the fund; but we shall not go further. We should, at least, limit the law to benefits to accrue after the lands are brought into the district, or benefits accruing, by reason of work done, at the time the land is taken in, but not yet paid for by an assessment of benefits on the whole district, including the added lands. In this case, the issuance of bonds should not be construed as being payment for the work. The payment of the bonds would be the payment contemplated.

These assessments of benefits are made to pay for improvements as they progress, and not to repay for improvements already made and paid for by other parties. The record does not disclose the exact status of this levee district; but that portion of the law and the judgment which authorizes the assessment of benefits for improvements already made and paid for is beyond the pale of the constitutional power of the legislature. In our judgment, the legislature cannot authorize the bringing in of new lands in a levee district, and say that it must pay benefits for work already done and paid for by the district as formerly constituted. As we have seen, it can authorize the bringing in of new territory, and it can authorize the assessments of benefits to pay for the improvements to be made. But, when it goes to compelling benefits for improvements already paid for, the law goes a step too far. Such act is the unauthorized taking of private property. It is the taking of private property to recompense or repay the district for improvements made. It is not the assessment of benefits for the doing of an advantageous act toward the property, but for the repayment of an expenditure already made. The covering of an existing debt on the district for improvements made before the property is taken in can only be justified on the theory that the improvements are not, in law, considered as made until paid for by assessments. To hold that the assessments of benefits may be in proportion to the outstanding debt and the proposed new improvements is, in our mind, going to the limit, and we will not go further.

From what is said, it follows that the judgment nisi is too broad. Such judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded for further procedure in accordance with the views herein expressed.

All concur.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.
(Division No. 1.)

AUGUST BUSSMEYER, Resp't.,
v.
CHARLES JABLONSKY, Appt.

(— Mo. —, 145 S. W. 772.)

Easement — grant with visible easement appurtenant — necessity.

A conveyance by metes and bounds of a lot with buildings thereon does not carry with it by implication the right to the use of a hallway on adjoining property of the grantor, to reach the rear and upper stories of the building conveyed, if the building is located upon a street with an alley in the rear, so that the use of the hallway is not reasonably necessary to the full enjoyment of the property conveyed, although it had been used for the purpose claimed by the common owners of the property for more than thirty years.

(February 29, 1912.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for the City of St. Louis in plaintiff's favor in a suit brought to enjoin the obstruction of a hall which was alleged to be appurtenant to the plaintiff's property. Reversed.

Statement by Graves, P. J.:

At one time the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company was the owner of all the property discussed and involved in this suit. April 23, 1903, plaintiff acquired from said insurance company property described in the deed thus: "A lot of ground in block No. 1,744 of said city of St. Louis, having a front of one hundred forty (140) feet and five (5) inches on the south side of Salisbury street by a depth of one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet to an alley fifteen (15) feet wide, and known as lots eight (8), nine (9), ten (10), eleven (11), and twelve (12) of Cope's subdivision of said block 1,744; 'together with the improvements on said lot 8. Subject to a lease to said second party, expiring May 1, 1907.'"

Plaintiff at the time of the purchase was a tenant of the insurance company under a written lease which contained an option to purchase. In this lease the lands are described thus: "A lot of ground fronting one hundred and forty feet and five inches (140' 5") on the south line of Salisbury street in block No. 1,744 of the city of St. Louis, Missouri, being lots Nos. 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 in said block, together with a certain two-story brick building known as Nos. 2,518 and 2,520 Salisbury street, situated on said lot number 8."

In August, 1907, the defendant acquired by deed from the said insurance company lands thus described: "All of lots number five (5), six (6), and seven (7), of Cope's subdivision, in city block No. 1,744 of said city of St. Louis, having an aggregate

Note.—The general question as to whether a grant severing a tract of land with an apparent benefit existing will carry with it an easement by implication is covered by a note to Rollo v. Nelson, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 315.

As to whether there is a way of necessity where other possible modes of access exist, see notes to Corea v. Higuera, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1018, and Doten v. Bartlett, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1075.

frontage of seventy-nine (79') feet, six and one-half (6½") inches on the south line of Salisbury street, by a depth southwardly, between parallel lines, of one hundred and twenty-five (125') feet, more or less, to alley, together with all improvements thereon, known as Nos. 2,510, 2,512, 2,514, and 2,516 Salisbury street. Bounded north by Salisbury street, south by alley, east by lot No. 4 of said subdivision and block, and west by property now or formerly, of A. Buismeyer."

The deeds from the insurance company to each of the parties contained the usual covenants of warranty. All the property fronted north on Salisbury street. The insurance company acquired title by a trustee's deed in November, 1877. On lot No. 8, belonging to plaintiff, was a two-story brick building, and there was likewise a two-story building on lot No. 7, belonging to defendant. Lot No. 8 lies to the west of lot No. 7.

Plaintiff by his petition avers: "That the said land of the defendant and the said lot No. 8 belonging to plaintiff are improved by two-story brick store and dwelling buildings. That the said buildings were erected by the predecessor in title of the said life insurance company, and said buildings are all attached. That the building upon plaintiff's said lot is numbered 2,518 and 2,520 Salisbury street. That between plaintiff's said building No. 2,518 Salisbury street and defendant's building No. 2,518, situated upon part of lot No. 7, is a hallway 4 feet in width; the second story of said building No. 2,516 Salisbury street extending over and covering the said hallway, and the joists of said building resting in the east wall of plaintiff's said building No. 2,518 Salisbury street. That for more than thirty years before the conveyance of the lots hereinbefore described to plaintiff, the said hallway between said buildings had been by the said Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company and its predecessors in title and by their tenants occupying the said building No. 2,518 Salisbury street always used as an entrance to the rear portion of said lot and the second story of said building. That, during all of said time, the rear yards of the said buildings Nos. 2,516 and 2,518 Salisbury street were divided by a fence upon a line which was a prolongation of the western wall of said building No. 2,516 Salisbury street and the eastern line of said hallway; the said hallway and yard immediately back thereof being thus for more than thirty years before plaintiff acquired said property used in connection with the said building No. 2,518 Salisbury street. That the said hallway is the only means of ingress and egress to and from Salisbury street to the rear part of plaintiff's said lot and the second story of the said building No. 2,518 Salisbury street, except that the same might be reached by passing through the lower story of said building. That the said entrance to said property of plaintiff is and always has been a valuable adjunct and appurtenance to the said property. That by the manner of construction of said buildings and the use thereof by plaintiff's and defendant's predecessors in title, as aforesaid, the said former owners did impose upon the said lot No. 7, now owned by defendant, to the extent that the same is occupied by said hallway, a servitude in favor of the said lot No. 8 and the building thereon owned by plaintiff for the use of said hallway as an entrance to said lot No. 8, as aforesaid, which easement and servitude passed to plaintiff by the conveyance from said Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company to him as aforesaid. That said servitude was in effect at the time of the severance of ownership by the conveyance from the said Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company to plaintiff, as aforesaid. That the said use of said property was apparent, and defendant, who had occupied the said property now owned by him, as a tenant for some years before he purchased the same, was familiar therewith and acquiesced therein. That when defendant purchased said lots Nos. 5, 6, and 7 from the said Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company as hereinbefore alleged, he took the same subject to the said easement and in all things fully recognized the same until on or about the 2d day of July, 1908, when defendant, against the protests of plaintiff, did forcibly remove the said fence, and did erect a new fence, extending back from the said building, and coincident with the western line of said hallway, but did leave an opening or gateway in the said fence immediately next to plaintiff's rear wall, whereby entrance to defendant's yard from said hallway could be had. That defendant, on the 5th day of September, 1908, did, against the protest of plaintiff, close the said opening by nailing boards across the same, whereby entrance to plaintiff's land from said hallway has been completely cut off, and refused, although requested so to do by plaintiff, to remove the said obstruction and allow plaintiff and his tenants the use of said hallway. That defendant threatens to keep the said fence closed and to wholly and forever deprive plaintiff and his family and tenants from using the said hallway as an entrance as aforesaid."

Prayer was for a mandatory injunction upon defendant to remove said obstruction, and to thereafter restrain defendant from obstructing said passageway, or denying to plaintiff the use thereof.

The answer makes many admissions, and, as it is not long, had better be made a part of the statement. Such answer reads: "Now comes the defendant in the above-entitled cause and for a return to the order to show cause why an injunction should not be granted as prayed for in plaintiff's petition, issued herein on the 8th day of September, 1908, states: (1) Said petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against this defendant. (2) That petition filed herein does not state facts sufficient to entitle plaintiff to the relief prayed for or for any relief in a court of equity. (3) And for a further return to the order to show cause herein the defendant admits that plaintiff is, and at the times in said petition stated was, the owner of the following described real estate, to wit: Lots Nos. 8, 9, 10, 12, of Cope's subdivision of said city block No. 1,744 in said city and state, but denies that the same has a frontage of 140 feet and 5 inches on the south side of Salisbury street, but, on the contrary, states that it has a frontage of but 139 feet and 10 inches on the south side of said street. Defendant further admits that the property was acquired by purchase from the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, and under deed and duly recorded as set out in plaintiff's petition. Defendant further admits that he is, as set out, the owner of lots Nos. 5, 6, and 7 of said city block No. 1,744 and fronting 79 feet 6½ inches on Salisbury street, having likewise acquired the same from the said common grantor, the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, under deed and duly recorded as set out in plaintiff's petition. Defendant further admits that the said land of plaintiff and defendant is improved with a two-story attached brick building, as set out in plaintiff's petition, but denies that there is a hallway between said buildings of plaintiff and defendant, as set out in plaintiff's petition, but, on the contrary, states that whatever hallway there may be on the said property is a hallway through defendant's building, and wholly lying upon defendant's property, and that plaintiff has no interest either by deed or by prescription or by any other title of any nature whatever in any such hallway or passage. Defendant further states that for a period of more than thirty years preceding the time at which plaintiff or defendant acquired title to the above-described property both tracts were owned by the common grantor, the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, and that any use of said hallway by any tenants other than those of No. 2,516 Salisbury street, the same being defendant's property, was permitted by the said Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company for its own benefit in renting to its tenants, and that during all of said period the same was not used adversely to the said Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company. Defendant states that plaintiff holds title to the above-described property by virtue of a warranty deed of the said Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, and that said deed carries with it no rights of any nature whatever in defendant's property, and that defendant's property is likewise secured from the said Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company by a warranty deed in fee simple, without any easement of any nature whatever in favor of plaintiff's property or any other property. Defendant further states that in any use of the aforesaid hallway by plaintiff that plaintiff has been a trespasser upon defendant's property, and that said trespassing has become so frequent and of such a nature as to annoy defendant and to constitute itself a nuisance; wherefore defendant closed said passageway; and for the further reason that defendant desired to prevent plaintiff from acquiring a prescriptive right over defendant's property. Defendant further denies that said hallway was plaintiff's only entrance to Salisbury street, but on the contrary alleges that plaintiff has another and better entrance to Salisbury street through lot No. 9 of his own property to the same building. Defendant denies each and every allegation in said petition contained. Wherefore defendant, having made full return to the order to show cause herein, asks to be discharged with his costs."

Reply was general denial. Upon a hearing judgment went for plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed. The evidence will be adverted to in the course of the opinion.

Messrs. August Walz, Jr., and W. G. Carpenter, for appellant:

There must be if not a "strict necessity" to support the easement, at least a "reasonable necessity."

Barrett v. Bell, 82 Mo. 110, 52 Am. Rep. 361; Mulrooney v. Obear, 171 Mo. 613, 71 S. W. 1019; Vossen v. Dautel, 116 Mo. 379, 22 S. W. 734; Peters v. Worth, 164 Mo. 431, 64 S. W. 490; Tiedeman, Real Prop. 3d ed. § 432; Whiting v. Gaylord, 66 Conn. 337, 50 Am. St. Rep. 87, 34 Atl. 85; Mosher v. Hibbs, 24 Ohio C. C. 375; Goodall v. Godfrey, 53 Vt. 219, 38 Am. Rep. 671; Seidel v. Bloeser, 77 Mo. App. 180; Brakely v. Sharp, 9 N. J. Eq. 9; Webber v. Miller, 9 Ohio C. C. 674, 4 Ohio C. D. 483; Miller v. Hoeschler, 126 Wis. 263, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 327, 105 N. W. 790; Buss v. Dyer, 125 Mass. 287; Adams v. Marshall, 138 Mass. 228, 52 Am. Rep. 271.

The "necessity" must be a real necessity, not a mere convenience.

Field v. Mark, 125 Mo. 502, 28 S. W. 1004; Vossen v. Dautel, 116 Mo. 385, 22 S. W. 734; Paine v. Chandler, 134 N. Y. 385, 19 L.R.A. 99, 32 N. E. 18; Hyde v. Jamaica, 27 Vt. 460; Valley Falls Co. v. Dolan, 9 R. I. 495; Hall v. Austin, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 63, 48 S. W. 53; Ward v. Robertson, 77 Iowa, 159, 41 N. W. 803; Allen v. Kincaid, 11 Me. 156; Burns v. Gallagher, 62 Md. 462; Murray v. Ealy, — Tenn. —, 57 S. W. 412; Washb. Easements, 107, 4th ed. § 3, pp. 42, 95, 3d ed. 235, 4th ed. 260; Jones, Easements, §§ 315, 317; Schmidt v. Quinn, 136 Mass. 575.

The easement must be long-continued, obvious, and permanent.

Adams's Appeal, 7 W. N. C. 86; Francies's Appeal, 96 Pa. 200; Reiners v. Young, 109 N. Y. 648, 16 N. E. 368, reversing 38 Hun, 335; Kelly v. Dunning, 43 N. J. Eq. 62, 10 Atl. 276; Jobling v. Tuttle, 75 Kan. 351, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 960, 89 Pac. 699; Marshall Ice Co. v. La Plant, 136 Iowa, 621, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1073, 111 N. W. 1016.

Messrs. Walther & Muench for respondent.

Graves, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

As will be observed by the pleadings, many of the facts are admitted. The passageway or hallway in dispute is on Jablonsky's property. No contention is made to the contrary. The contention of the parties can at once be seen by short excerpts from statements of counsel in their briefs. Defendant's counsel thus outlines the case: "We have nothing to do in this case with easements by prescription, or adverse user; nor with easements by grant; nor with easements made absolutely necessary by reason of no other access to the property. On the contrary, plaintiff claims an easement by reason of an alleged open, apparent, permanent way constructed by a common grantor, imposing upon one part of his property a burden in favor of another, which alleged open, apparent, and permanent way plaintiff claims has passed to him by a deed of the dominant property, setting forth the dominant property by metes and bounds, not including the way. The property claimed to be servient in this case was subsequently conveyed to defendant without mentioning the easement, and this action has been commenced against defendant to enjoin defendant from shutting 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

off plaintiff from passing over the way claimed." We have italicized the portion which states the case at bar.

Counsel for plaintiff concedes this to be a correct outline of the contention. He says: "As the appellant properly states, the easement claimed here was not strictly one of necessity, but rather one rising from implication, because of the location and use of the hallway in controversy with reference to the various parts of the continuous row of buildings fronting on Salisbury street, owned, respectively, by the appellant and respondent, and which had been, previous to the acquisition of the property by them, owned altogether by the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company. For this reason the exact situation and use of the various parts of the property before the present controversy arose is of the greatest importance." Further on, the same counsel says: "It is not claimed by us that, where there had been no prior usage, the easement would attach in favor of one part of property, sold by a common owner, as against another part, sold to some other person, unless there was an absolute necessity for such easement. We do claim, however, that where, as in the case at bar, one part of the common property has been subject for a long time to a benefit or privilege enjoyed by the occupants of another part, and the whole property has been so improved as to indicate clearly that one part was to remain permanently subject to such benefit or privilege, this benefit or privilege becomes appurtenant to the part enjoying it and passes to a purchaser thereof, whether actually mentioned in the conveyance or not."

The evidence shows that the floor of the second story of Jablonsky's house extends over this hallway; the joists resting in the east wall of plaintiff's building. It also shows that originally a fence was run from the east side of this passageway to or toward the alleyway in the rear of all this property; that through this fence was a gateway by which entrance could be made to the rear of Jablonsky's property; that there were two or more sheds on the rear of Jablonsky's property which were reached by going through this alleyway and the gate in this fence; that Bussmeyer had these sheds rented for some years, and he and his tenants thus used this alleyway and this gate. The evidence also shows that this alleyway was used by Bussmeyer's tenants in coming from Salisbury street to the rear of the house on his said lot 8. This use, both as to the Bussmeyer property and the Jablonsky property, had continued for about thirty years. Under the evidence there is no dispute that Buss-meyer can reach his property through the alley in the rear. The property we speak of is an "L" to the building fronting on Salisbury street. There is no question that the property can likewise be reached from Salisbury street by passing over lot 9, which is a part of the Bussmeyer property. This lot is to the west of the brick building and is vacant. From the evidence Bussmeyer's tenants using the rear portion of his house sometimes entered in this way. There were three doors on the west side of the Bussmeyer building which opened out toward lot 9, which lot was vacant from Salisbury street on the north to the alleyway in the rear of all this property on the south.

In his testimony Bussmeyer said:

Mr. Carpenter: Along the west side of this property, along the west side of your property there. Now, how many doors are there along the west side of your building?

A. One door going from my dining room into the lot, what I call the lot, and then there is another door between them two houses, and then a door from the saloon out. That is three doors.

Q. Then you have three entrances out of your building onto lot 9 on the west?

A. Yes.

Q. And those three entrances could be used if you wanted to open them?

A. I can use them only on account of it is my own ground.

The last answer contains the milk in the cocoanut. He and his tenants could (and sometimes did) come from Salisbury street to his property by going over lot 9. He says that this could be done "only on account of it is my ground." In other words, he seeks to enforce an implied easement over Jablonsky's ground to keep from using his own. So that the question of necessity or even reasonable necessity is out of the case, and, if that is a necessary element in an implied easement, then plaintiff's case must fail. We think the weight of authority requires at least a reasonable necessity to sustain an implied easement. In other words, the facts of this case do not bring it within the generally accepted rule relating to dominant and servient estates. The evidence is at least lacking in the element of necessity or reasonable necessity.

In 14 Cyc. 1168, the rule as to necessity is thus stated: "All easements of whatever class which pass by implication or construction of law must not only be reasonably necessary and apparent, but also permanent in their character. A mere temporary provision or arrangement, made for the convenience of the entire estate, will not constitute that degree of necessity and permanency required to burden the property with a continuance of the same when divided or separated by conveyance to different parties. Three things are essential to the creation of an easement in this way: (1) A separation of the title; (2) that before the separation takes place the use which gives rise to the easement shall have been so long continued and so obvious as to show that it was meant to be permanent; and (3) that the easement shall be necessary to the beneficial enjoyment of the land granted or retained." At page 1171, the same author says: "In some cases it is held that easements will not pass by implication except in cases of strict necessity. But the weight of authority sustains a rule less exacting than that of strict and indispensable necessity, namely, that the degree of necessity is such merely as renders the easement necessary for the convenient and comfortable enjoyment of the property as it existed when the severance was made, not that it shall be absolutely necessary for the enjoyment of the estate granted." Also bearing upon the question, the same authority, at page 1173, thus speaks: "No implication of a grant of a right of way can arise from proof that the land granted cannot be conveniently occupied without it. Its foundation rests in necessity, not in convenience. It follows that a party cannot have a way of necessity through the land of another when the necessary way to the highway can be obtained through his own land, however convenient and useful another way might be. And the same is true where he has a prescriptive right of way left over the land of another. A way of necessity is derived from the law, and depends solely on the situation and boundaries of the land to which it is claimed to be appurtenant, as they existed at the time of the conveyance."

In 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 423, the rule is thus stated: "In some American jurisdictions, even where the distinction made by the English cases between implied grants and implied reservations is affirmed, the courts maintain that even when the quasi dominant tenement is alienated, the alienee cannot claim an easement against the quasi servient tenement except in a case of strict necessity. Other cases state that an easement by implied grant can arise only in cases of 'real necessity' or 'necessity,' while the great body of authority is, as has been stated, to the effect that a 'reasonable necessity' is the proper standard. In estimating the degree of necessity as well as the presence of the other requisites for an implied grant, much depends upon the nature of the particular easement involved." The English rule, spoken of above, is stated by the same authority at page 420, thus: "According to the established English doctrine, which is supported by some of the later American authorities, if the owner of both the quasi dominant and quasi servient tenements conveys the former, reserving the latter, all such continuous and apparent quasi easements as are reasonably necessary to the enjoyment of the property granted pass to the grantee, giving rise to easements by implied grant. If, on the other hand, the quasi servient tenement is granted, while the quasi dominant tenement is retained; no easement is reserved by implication, unless it is strictly necessary to the enjoyment of the property retained. These rules are founded on the principle that a grantor shall not derogate from his own grant."

Plaintiff contends for the doctrine announced in Tooth v. Bryce, 50 N. J. Eq. 589, 25 Atl. 182, wherein it is argued that the element of necessity is not necessary in an implied grant of an easement; that the easement passes with the dominant tenement as a part of the thing conveyed and without regard to the element of necessity. The chancellor, in the Tooth Case, 50 N. J. Eq., at page 608, states his view in this language: "It seems to me that the proper inquiry in such cases is whether the apparent and continuous easement in question forms a part of the tenement, and is beneficial to and adds to its value for use, and will continue to do so in the future. If it is, then the grantee is, upon plain principles, entitled to have it continued. He is entitled to enjoy the thing as it was when he bought it, with all its apparent appurtenances, if those apparent appurtenances are apparently permanent, and are useful and add to its value." The easement under discussion is stated by the chancellor. He says: "The complainant by his bill seeks to establish and protect his right to the benefit of a flow of water to his premises from the defendant's premises, through two several pipes laid underground and forced up by two hydraulic rams, situate, with the spring that drives them, on the defendant's premises." The cases, as well as the textbooks, seem to emphasize the element of necessity in cases involving road or passage ways, more than in cases involving easements of a different character. The learned chancellor in the Tooth Case, supra, undertakes to show that the element of necessity in implied easements through grants had its origin in the mistaken intermingling of the necessary elements of implied easements in cases where the dominant estate was not sold. The opinion is full of research and has been followed by 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) some other cases, but is clearly not in line with the weight of authority.

In Whiting v. Gaylord, 66 Conn. loc. cit. 348, 50 Am. St. Rep. 87, 34 Atl. 88, Andrews, C. J., says: "The cases in this country which have referred to Pyer v. Carter, 1 Hurlst. & N. 916, 26 L. J. Exch. N. S. 258, 5 Week. Rep. 371, have, none of them, so far as we can learn, ever followed it to its full extent. The American cases have, with almost entire unanimity, limited easements by implied grant to such as were open, visible,—such as would be apparent to an ordinary observer,—continuous, and necessary to the enjoyment of the estate granted or retained. Carbrey v. Willis, 7 Allen, 364, 83 Am. Dec. 688; Randall v. McLaughlin, 10 Allen, 366; Philbrick v. Ewing, 97 Mass. 133; Lampman v. Milks, 21 N. Y. 505; Butterworth v. Crawford, 46 N. Y. 349, 7 Am. Rep. 352; Henry v. Koch, 80 Ky. 394, 44 Am. Rep. 484; Evans v. Dana, 7 R. I. 306; Providence Tool Co. v. Corliss Steam Engine Co. 9 R. I. 564; Dunklee v. Wilton R. Co. 24 N. H. 489; Warren v. Blake, 54 Me. 276, 89 Am. Dec. 748; James v. Jenkins, 34 Md. 1, 6 Am. Rep. 300; Ingals v. Plamondon, 75 Ill. 118; Fetters v. Humphreys, 18 N. J. Eq. 263, s. c. 19 N. J. Eq. 471; Denton v. Leddell, 23 N. J. Eq. 67; Parsons v. Johnson, 68 N. Y. 62, 23 Am. Rep. 49; Griffiths v. Morrison, 106 N. Y. 165, 12 N. E. 580; Root v. Wadhams, 107 N. Y. 384, 14 N. E. 281. These cases differ considerably as to the degree of necessity which must exist in order to raise the implication that the easement or quasi easement passes; but they all concur in the rule just stated, that it must be one which is open, visible, and necessary. In this state the rule of construction, settled by a series of decisions, is that the subject-matter of a deed is to be ascertained from its premises; that by a deed of land described as such, nothing passes except what is fairly included in the premises; that an easement not naturally and necessarily belonging to the premises will not pass."

The Massachusetts court, in Buss v. Dyer, 125 Mass. loc. cit. 290, says: "We are aware that it has been held in some English cases that a deed of premises carries the right to continue to enjoy, as easements, all privileges or conveniences in and upon adjoining lands of the grantor, which were apparent, and had been used by the grantor in connection with the premises before the conveyance; that the conveyance is a conveyance of the premises 'as they are.' A leading case to this effect is Pyer v. Carter, 1 Hurlst. & N. 916, 26 L. J. Exch. N. S. 258, 5 Week Rep. 371. Similar doctrine has been held in New York. Lamp- man v. Milks, 21 N. Y. 505. We do not regard this as a correct view of the law. It is a well-established and familiar rule that deeds are to be construed as meaning what the language employed in them imports, and that extrinsic evidence may not be adduced to contradict or affect them. And it would seem that nothing could be clearer in its meaning than a deed of a lot of land, described by metes and bounds, with covenants of warranty against encumbrances. The great exception to the application of this rule to the construction of deeds is in the case of ways of necessity, where, by a fiction of law, there is an implied reservation or grant to meet a special emergency, on grounds of public policy, as it has been said, in order that no land should be left inaccessible for purposes of cultivation. This fiction has been extended to cases of easements of a different character, where the fact has been established that the easement was necessary to the enjoyment of the estate in favor of which it was claimed."

In Stevens v. Orr, 69 Me. loc. cit. 324, the court thus speaks: "The court is of the opinion that it must be regarded as the settled law of this state that the conveyance of a specified parcel of real estate, described by metes and bounds, will not carry with it a right of way over the grantor's adjoining land (although such way may be highly convenient, apparent upon the face of the earth, and in actual use at the time of the conveyance, and the deed contains the words 'with all the privileges and appurtenances'), unless such way is clearly necessary to the beneficial use and enjoyment of the state conveyed. So held in Warren v. Blake, 54 Me. 276, 89 Am. Dec. 748. And the same rule was applied to a drain in Dolliff v. Boston & M. R. Co. 68 Me. 173. We are aware of the conflicting state of the authorities upon this question. We have had occasion to examine them very fully on several occasions within the last few years. The leading cases are cited and commented upon in the case first above cited (Warren v. Blake), and it cannot be profitable to go over them again." The rule has been consistently followed in that state. In the later case of Stillwell v. Foster, 80 Me. 333, 14 Atl. 731, the syllabus concisely states the case and the rule, and reads: "An owner of a building, containing two stores with partition wall between them, and with stairs on one side leading to second floor, and a door through the partition wall on second floor at head of the stairs, sold the store which had no stairs, and in the conveyance made the center line of the partition wall the dividing line. Held that the conveyance did not carry with it a right of way of necessity over the flight of stairs." In the course of the opinion, the court says: "The plaintiff claims title to a right of way over the stairs by virtue of an implied grant under the deed, Harlow to Wheelwright. He cannot claim it as a way of strict necessity, for his building fronts upon the highway, and he can make a stairway upon his own premises; but rather as a way of convenience. Having been so built in the beginning and so occupied both before and after the conveyance to Wheelwright, it is claimed that it has become appurtenant to and so far a part of the premises as to pass by the deed, if not by express grant, at least by implication. But there is no obscurity in the language of the deed, no question as to the precise premises covered by it. The stairs are not conveyed, even if considered a part of the premises, and the only question is whether, under the facts, a right of way over the stairs is conveyed by implication. In this state, the rule is now so well established that the test to be applied in such cases is whether the way is one of strict necessity, that it is too late to change it. Nor do we think it desirable, for it seems to be founded not only upon a preponderance of authority, but upon sound principle. It has the recommendation of simplicity and certainty, is easily applied, and works no injustice; for the purchaser knows, or should know, what he is buying before his deed is accepted. In Warren v. Blake, 54 Me. 276, 89 Am. Dec. 748, this precise question was exhaustively examined and the rule adopted. In Dolliff v. Boston & M. R. Co. supra, and in Stevens v. Orr, 69 Me. 323, the question was raised and the rule affirmed."

In Bonelli Bros. v. Blakemore, 66 Miss. loc. cit. 143, 14 Am. St. Rep. 550, 5 So. 231, that court said: "The owner of a tract of land, a part of which he afterwards grants of another, has not, of course, any easement in any part of his land while he owns the whole; he deals with it as owner and may subserve any portion to the use of the other, and may change the arrangement at his will; it is only where such arrangement is apparently permanent and intended so to be, and while so remaining the owner grants a part of the premises, that the question of easement or servitude can arise. The condition of the whole when the severance is made, the nature of the easement claimed to be granted or reserved by implication, its obviousness and continuousness, are the tests usually applied to determine the existence or nonexistence of the grant or reservation. The rule seems to be of very general recognition that an easement not of strict necessity does not pass by implied grant, unless it be apparently permanent, obvious, and continuous."

In Spaulding v. Abbot, 55 N. H. loc. cit. 426, the court says: "It is an elementary principle that whoever grants a thing is supposed tacitly to grant that without which the grant itself would be of no effect. Broom's Maxims, 362. But this applies only to such things as are incident to the grant, and directly necessary for the enjoyment of the thing granted. Id. 366. It is implied that the grantor is the owner of such incidents as are directly necessary to the enjoyment of the grant, and has it in his power to convey them. If they are not his to convey, they cannot, of course, pass as incident to the grant. The right to the use of this aqueduct is not either indispensable or necessary to the enjoyment of the premises conveyed, and the grant does not become ineffectual nor useless without it. It may be a great convenience to have it, and a great inconvenience to be deprived of it; but that can have no legal effect upon the construction of this deed.

The Indiana court has the rule of "reasonable necessity." In John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 103 Ind. loc. cit. 587, 53 Am. Rep. 550, 2 N. E. 191, that court says: "The application of the rule must depend upon the nature, arrangement, and use of the estate, the relation of the parts to each other, and the existing degree of necessity for giving such construction to the grant as will give effect to what may be supposed to have been, considering the manner of the use, the reasonable intentment of the parties; the underlying principle in such cases being that, included in the grant of the principle, are all such privileges and appurtenances as are obviously incident and reasonably necessary to the fair enjoyment of the thing granted, substantially in the condition in which it is enjoyed by the grantor, unless the contrary is provided."

To the point is Valley Falls Co. v. Dolan, 9 R. I. 489. The first syllabus states the ruling in the case and reads: "A right of way of necessity is founded on an implied grant, and created by the necessity of its existence to the enjoyment of the estate granted. Convenience alone is not sufficient to raise the implication of a right of way."

In Ogden v. Jennings, 62 N. Y. loc. cit. 531, Allen, J., said: "Easements exist as appurtenant to a grant of lands, and as arising from implication, only by reason of a necessity to the full enjoyment of the property granted. Nothing passes by implication or as incident or appurtenant to the lands granted, except such rights, privileges, and easements as are directly necessary to the proper enjoyment of the granted estate. Upon the grant of a mill, every right necessary to the full and free enjoyment of the mill passes as incident to the grant; and the necessity measures the extent and duration of the right. When the necessity ceases, the rights resulting from it cease. It must be an actual and a direct necessity. A mere convenience is not sufficient to create or convey a right or easement, or impose burthens on lands other than those granted, as incident to the grant. In all cases the question of necessity controls."

In Hall v. Austin, 20 Tex. Civ. App. loc. cit. 63, 48 S. W. 55, it is said: "We do not believe that there was any error in the peremptory instruction of the court upon this question. The doctrine of necessity means just what it says. The right to the road must arise by reason of the absolute necessities of the claimant, and the facts upon which this right may be made to depend must establish that the existence of the road is absolutely necessary as a means of ingress and egress to the plaintiff's premises. The right cannot rest upon any ground of convenience. And we believe that, upon this issue, the most that can be said of the evidence is that it established that it would put the plaintiffs to much expense and inconvenience to establish a road leading from their premises, connecting with other public roads, that would give him an outlet; and, as said in Alley v. Carleton, 29 Tex. 78, 94 Am. Dec. 280: 'A way of necessity, however, must be more than one of convenience, for if the owner of the land can use another way, he cannot claim by implication the right to pass over that of another to get to his own.'"

The West Virginia court, in Standiford v. Goudy, 6 W. Va. loc. cit. 367, thus tersely speaks: "The court in question, however, indirectly alleges or indicates that, while Woods owned the two adjoining tracts of lands, he had, appendant to the one, a way over the other. This is a contradiction. The absolute owner of both tracts cannot have an easement over the one appendant or appurtenant to the other. When the owner of two tracts of land has used a way to and from one, over the other, no matter how long, and he grants the former tract without mention of any way, unless the way is necessary to the enjoyment of the tract granted, the mere grant of the land does not create or confer a way appendant, appurtenant, or in gross."

Washburn on Easements & Servitudes, 4th ed. p. 107, thus states the rule: "It is generally held that an easement, in order to pass by implied grant, must be not only leges, and easements as are directly necessary to the proper enjoyment of the granted estate. Upon the grant of a mill, every right necessary to the full and free enjoyment of the mill passes as incident to the grant; and the necessity measures the extent and duration of the right. When the necessity ceases, the rights resulting from it cease. It must be an actual and a direct necessity. A mere convenience is not sufficient to create or convey a right or easement, or impose burthens on lands other than those granted, as incident to the grant. In all cases the question of necessity controls."

Washburn on Easements & Servitudes, 4th ed. p. 107, thus states the rule: "It is generally held that an easement, in order to pass by implied grant, must be not only apparent and continuous, but also necessary to the reasonable use and enjoyment of the granted premises. The test of such necessity is held to be the question whether the grantee might, at a reasonable expense, procure for himself an enjoyment of a similar easement. In some cases the question of necessity seems to be overlooked, and the main stress put upon the question whether the arrangement of dominant and servient tenements is such as to show that at the time of the sale the parties intended to transfer the easement in question."

To summarize the cases, we at least have the rule of "reasonable necessity." So that from the greater number of the cases outside of Missouri "reasonable necessity" at least is an element in an implied easement by grant. But we are not without some rulings in this state. Our cases we take next. We should remember that we are dealing with a case wherein the easement in question is a right of way over the property of another; that in such cases the question of reasonable necessity should plainly appear.

In the case of Barrett v. Bell, 82 Mo. loc. cit. 114, 52 Am. Rep. 361, this court adopted the rule announced in Ogden v. Jennings, 62 N. Y. 526. We there said: "In a well-considered case in the court of appeals of New York, it was said: 'Easements exist as appurtenant to a grant of lands, and as arising by implication, only by reason of a necessity to the full enjoyment of the property granted. Nothing passes by implication, or as incident or appurtenant to the lands granted, except such rights, privileges, and easements as are directly necessary to the proper enjoyment of the granted estate. Upon the grant of a mill, every right necessary to the full and free enjoyment of the mill passes as incident to the grant; and the necessity measures the extent and duration of the right. . . . When the necessity ceases, the rights resulting from it cease. A mere convenience is not sufficient to create or convey a right or easement, or impose burthens on lands other than those granted, as incident to the grant. In all cases the question of necessity controls.' Ogden v. Jennings, 62 N. Y. 526, 531, 532, and cases cited. In a valuable work on Landlord & Tenant, the following is deduced as the rule: 'The true test as to whether a thing is an incident or appurtenance seems to be the propriety of relation between the principal and adjunct, which is to be ascertained by considering whether they agree in nature and quality, so as to be capable of union without incongruity, and is actually and directly necessary to the full enjoyment of the property.' Wood, Land. & T. § 213, pp. 310, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

311, and note on page 312. As the evidence in this case does not show the use of the kettle was a 'necessity,' this fact deprives such use of the chief attributes of an appurtenance. 'It was a matter of ease and convenience only,' which, having arisen by mere consent of the parties, could be destroyed by withdrawing that consent at any time."

We again indorse the doctrine of the Ogden Case, supra, in the later case of Mulrooney v. Obeare, 171 Mo. loc. cit. 619, 71 S. W. 1021, whereat this court said: "While the doctrine is broadly stated that 'the grant of a thing will include whatever the grantor has power to convey, which is reasonably necessary to the enjoyment of the thing granted,' it is not always easy to determine in a given case whether the thing under consideration is appurtenant or not. This court, in Barrett v. Bell, 82 Mo. loc. cit. 114, 52 Am. Rep. 361, quoted with approval the decision of the court of appeals of New York in Ogden v. Jennings, supra, in which it is said: 'Easements exist as appurtenant to a grant of lands, and as arising by implication, only by reason of a necessity to the full enjoyment of the property granted. Nothing passes by implication or as incident or appurtenant to the lands granted, except such rights, privileges, and easements as are directly necessary to the proper enjoyment of the granted estate. . . . a mere convenience is not sufficient to create or convey a right or easement, or impose burthens on lands other than those granted, as incident to the grant. In all cases the question of necessity controls.'"

In Fields v. Mark, 125 Mo. loc. cit. 515, 28 S. W. 1007, this court thus speaks: "Samuel Wilson conveyed each of these three 20-foot lots facing on Laurel street by metes and bounds, but makes no reference to any alley on the west. It must, then, in the outset be conceded that plaintiff's right to this strip as an alley does not arise out of an express grant, or by necessary implication from the recitals in the deeds under which he claims. Nor do we think plaintiff can seriously claim that he is entitled to this alley as a way of necessity, which is itself an implication from the grant. That it would be a great convenience to these lots of plaintiff to have an alley in the rear is apparent, but it can hardly be said to be a necessity. Certainly it is not a necessity to the blacksmith shop. This 20 feet has a street in front and alley along its whole southern side, and the other two lots abut on the east on Laurel street. It is not enough that this alley would be even a great convenience; in the situation of this property, it is not, in the legal sense, a way of necessity."

It should be noted that the conveyance in this case is by metes and bounds and by platted lots, which is the same in legal effect. Discussing the difference between conveyances by metes and bounds and conveyances of a different character, in the case of Warren v. Blake, 54 Me. loc. cit. 286, 89 Am. Dec. 748, the court said: "It is well settled that an easement or right to use or occupy land, not within the lines given in a deed, may be claimed and held as a right, when the fee of the land does not pass. The question is: When and how far does that right become vested under such a deed? A distinction is made between a deed conveying in terms a particular house, or messuage, or farm, known by a certain name, without defined limits, and a deed conveying a specific piece of land, carved out of a larger piece, held by the grantors, and exactly described by metes and bounds. In the former case, where the grant is by name, and not bounds, many things will pass which have been used with the principal thing, as parcel of the granted premises, which would not pass under a grant of a piece of land by metes and bounds.

In Grant v. Chase, 17 Mass. 443, loc. cit. 446, 9 Am. Dec. 161, it is said: "This is a conveyance of a specific piece of land, carved out of a larger piece held by the grantor and described by metes and bounds. In such a case nothing could pass as parcel of the granted premises, but what is included within the boundaries expressed in the deed."

Both of these cases and the doctrine thereof are cited with approval by this court in the case of Field v. Mark, 125 Mo. loc. cit. 515, 28 S. W. 1004.

In the case at bar we cannot hold that the right of way in question is one even of reasonable necessity. Lot 8 runs through from Salisbury street on the north to an open alley of 15 feet width on the south. Lot 8 therefore touches two public thoroughfares of the city. This alley way of 15 feet runs east and west through the entire block. In addition to this, all this property on the rear of lot 8 can be and is reached over lot 9, a vacant lot, which lot 9 is a part of the property conveyed to plaintiff by the insurance company. Then, further, this passageway in dispute was, in the first instance, constructed for use in connection with lot 7 as much as it was for lot 8. It was so used for these years. It was a matter of convenience, not necessity or reasonable necessity to either. The rear ends of both lots were touched by this 15-foot alley.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Whether the rule be one of absolute necessity makes no difference under the facts of this case. It is apparent that the plaintiff is seeking to hold this passageway in order to keep from establishing one over lot 9 of his own property.

To our mind the evidence fails to make a case of an implied easement, and the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment for the defendant.

All concur.

Petition for rehearing denied March 29, 1912.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

MRS. LOU FULGHUM et al., Appt.,
v.

ATLANTIC COAST LINE RAILROAD COMPANY.

(158 N. C. 555, 74 S. E. 584.)

Carrier — obstruction in exit — flag station.

1. A railroad company is not negligent in placing, in the daytime, a few ties necessary for repairing its tracks along the path between the car exit and the highway at a flag station.

Same — stepping on tie — contributory negligence.

2. A passenger, in attempting to reach the highway from a car exit along a path upon which ties have been placed for repair purposes, is negligent in stepping upon one which is wet and slippery, and is lying in an inclined position, when he might have stepped over it, or gone around it in safety, and cannot therefore hold the railroad company liable for a resulting injury.

(Clark, Ch. J., and Hoke, J., dissent.)

(April 10, 1912.)

Note. — Duty of carrier as to condition of place used as flag station.

As to the duty of interurban roads with respect to accommodations for boarding or leaving cars at country crossings, see McGovern v. Interurban R. Co. 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 476, and note.

The duty of a street railway as to the condition of approaches to cars is discussed in a note appended to Messenger v. Valley City Street & I. R. Co. 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 881.

Generally, as to the degree of care required toward a passenger at a station, see St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Woods, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 856, and note.

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for Johnston County granting a nonsuit in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frederick H. Brooks and Aycock & Winston, for appellants:

Defendant is guilty of negligence per se in failing to provide a suitable place for passengers to board and alight from its trains at said station.

Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Buck, 96 Ind. 346, 49 Am. Rep. 168; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lucas, 119 Ind. 583, 6 L.R.A. 193, 21 N. E. 968; Roberts v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 155 N. C. 84, 70 S. E. 1080; White, Personal Injuries on Railroads, § 619; Moses v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 39 La. Am. 649, 4 Am. St. Rep. 231, 2 So. 567; Rearden v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 215 Mo. 105, 114 S. W. 961; Arkansas Midland R. Co. v. Robinson, 96 Ark. 32, 130 S. W. 536; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Caldwell, 93 Ark. 286, 124 S. W.

1034; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Cantrell, 37 Ark. 519, 40 Am. Rep. 105; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Whitfield, 44 Miss. 466, 7 Am. Rep. 699; Hulbert v. New York C. R. Co. 40 N. Y. 146; Credle v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 151 N. C. 50, 65 S. E. 604; Skow v. Green Bay & W. R. Co. 141 Wis. 21, 123 N. W. 138.

It was incumbent upon the railroad to keep the space which it required its passengers to use as a walk way clear of obstructions; that is, clear of large and dangerous obstructions like cross-ties, especially considering that the passengers are often women, children, and delicate persons.

Roberts v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 155 N. C. 84, 70 S. E. 1080; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Reese, 93 Ill. App. 662; Ayres v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 158 N. Y. 257, 53 N. E. 22; Hutchinson, Carr. § 935; Talbert v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. 72 S. C. 137, 51 S. E. 564; Hinshaw v. Raleigh & A. Air Line R. Co. 118 N. C. 1047, 24 S. E. 426.

Messrs. Abell & Ward for appellee.

There are but few cases which make any distinction as to the duty of a carrier with reference to the condition of stations, on the ground that the place involved was a flag station.

In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Williams, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 469, 51 S. W. 653, it was held that the railroad company could not escape liability for injury to plaintiff due to failure to have its depot platform lighted, on the ground that it had abandoned the station at that place, the court saying: "The only difference between this and any other railway station is the fact that it has no agent there, and does not keep the depot building open nor sell tickets there. However, it treats it as a station itself, and invites the public to so regard it, by selling tickets to it, by stopping its passenger trains, and permitting the traveling public to get on and off thereat."

And in Pineus v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 140 N. C. 450, 111 Am. St. Rep. 856, 53 S. E. 297, where plaintiff was injured at a flag station by stepping into a hole in the platform, the court says: "It matters not whether Sharpsburg was a regular or a flag station, the defendant owed plaintiff the duty to provide a safe platform, especially as plaintiff entered on it at invitation of defendant's agent for a legitimate purpose."

But in Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Stacy, 68 Miss. 463, 9 So. 349, it was held that the railroad company was not liable for injury received by plaintiff in getting her feet wet because no place was provided for her to alight, the place where she alighted being merely a flag station, without depot or accommodations for passengers, where people were allowed to get on and off the train when stopped there.

And in Burke v. British Columbia Elec. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

tric R. Co. 7 B. C. 85, where plaintiff was injured while using a platform constructed by a third party, at a place not a regular stop, at which the car was stopped for her convenience, the court, in denying the right of plaintiff to recover, said: "I am of opinion that the effect of the custom of stopping at the places referred to, in the manner and under the conditions stated, is merely to give to a passenger lawfully traveling the privilege of using the right of way in the ordinary condition in which it may be, and subject to the company's ordinary right to use it, that he may pass along it to the public highway or other place where he may be going, and not that there is any implied agreement on the part of the company to alter the condition or vary its use of the line because of the privilege."

The courts sometimes recognize the size and importance of a station as factors in determining the precautions which must be taken for the safety of persons using it, without reference to whether it is a flag or regular station.

Thus, in Abbot v. Oregon R. Co. 46 Or. 549, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 851, 114 Am. St. Rep. 885, 80 Pac. 1012, 7 Ann. Cas. 961, the court says that what constitutes a reasonable time during which such premises must be kept lighted is determined by the circumstances of each particular case, depending upon the size and importance of the station, and the number of persons who lawfully visit it at night for the purpose of transacting business with the company.

And in St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Marshall, 71 Kan. 866, 81 Pac. 169, the court recognizes that the degree of illumination of station premises required is dependent upon the character and extent of the business transacted there.

R. L. S.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant offered no evidence, and the following is an accurate statement of that offered by plaintiff:

Plaintiff was a passenger on defendant's train on the morning of January 29, 1909, and left the train at Bagley, North Carolina, a flag station at which there was no regular depot, station house, or platform. Passengers alighted generally in the vicinity of the public crossing. The conductor helped the plaintiff off the car, and placed her safely on the ground about 60 feet north of the crossing on the right side of the track going north, from which point she started towards the crossing. There were several cross-ties distributed along the right of way for use in repairing the road between the point where she alighted and the crossing. The plaintiff stepped on one of the cross-ties, her foot slipped on the tie, and threw her ankle out of joint. Plaintiff testifies she knew that the tie she stepped upon was "wet, muddy, and slippery, and one end in the ditch and the other end towards the railroad, and the end towards the railroad was higher." Plaintiff says she stepped on the tie because she thought it safer to step on it than over it. Plaintiff admits she could easily have stepped over it, and further admits that she could have walked around this cross-tie without stepping on or over it. The other testimony is that of two witnesses introduced by the plaintiff, which tends to prove that the nearest end of the cross-tie was 5 or 6 feet from the car, and that there was ample room for the plaintiff to pass around it. The defendant offered no evidence, and moved to nonsuit, which motion was granted.

Upon a review of these undisputed facts, we conclude that his Honor properly sustained the motion to nonsuit, first, because there is no evidence of negligence; second, because the plaintiff's own negligence was the immediate cause of her injury.

1. Bagley is a flag station, having no depot nor station platform of any kind. Passengers are taken on the train in the vicinity of the crossing. The defendant, for purposes of repairing its track, had placed a few cross-ties at intervals along its right of way. The exact number does not appear. Plaintiff says several; while one of her witnesses says there was only one tie between where she alighted and the crossing. All the evidence shows there was a space, or pass way, 5 or 6 feet wide between the end of the ties nearest the railroad track and the cars. There is nothing in the evidence to indicate that plaintiff could not have walked around the ties with perfect safety. This occurrence did not happen in a town or city, where a regular station is kept, but at a flag station, where there was no depot or platform required by law. We recognize fully the duty of a common carrier to provide safe means of access to and from its stations for the use of passengers (1 Hutchinson, Carr. § 51), but what may be considered a reasonably safe exit under conditions existing at Bagley would not be so regarded in populous towns and cities. We are not prepared to hold that it was negligence upon the part of the defendant to lay a few cross-ties under such conditions at intervals along its right of way, for the purpose of repairing its track, where they were in plain view of the passengers in broad daylight, and not in the least dangerous to a person exercising ordinary care.

2. It is well settled in this state that, where the plaintiff's own evidence discloses such contributory negligence as bars recovery, a motion to nonsuit should be sustained. We think that is the case here. The plaintiff was assisted from the car by the conductor and landed in a place of safety only 60 feet from the public crossing. It was broad light. She started towards the crossing. She admits that she saw the cross-tie before her. It was in an inclined position, one end elevated some, and the other in a ditch. She admits that she saw that it was muddy and slippery on top. She further states that she could have easily walked around it, or have stepped over it. In fact, a ten-year-old child could have stepped over it. Instead of taking the obviously safe course that the most ordinary prudence would have dictated, and either stepping over or walking around it, the plaintiff, with full knowledge of its condition, stepped upon the inclined tie, muddy and slippery as she knew it to be, and sprained or dislocated her ankle. As much as we may sympathize with the plaintiff in her misfortune, a bare statement of the facts is in our opinion sufficient to demonstrate that it was caused by her thoughtlessness. Suppose she had been on a station platform, and had discovered a hole in front of her in time to avoid it, and had stepped in it, instead of walking around it; or suppose she had seen a grease splotch ahead of her on the platform, and had deliberately walked through it, instead of stepping across or walking around it, could she have recovered damages for consequent injury? It will scarcely be contended that she could.

This is not a case like Hinshaw v. Raleigh & A. Air Line R. Co. 118 N. C. 1052, 24 S. E. 426 (cited by plaintiff), where a passenger is placed suddenly in a position of danger by the carrier's negligence, and required to decide at once what course to pursue. He is not expected to exercise infallible judgment but only ordinary care, and, if he does so, he is not held to the consequences of his act if he makes a mistake. But the plaintiff was not confronted with a sudden danger. She was in a place of absolute safety. The whole situation was open before her. She saw the tie, that it was slanting, muddy, and slippery. She admits she could have stepped over it, or walked around it. She did neither, but deliberately stepped on it. She must bear the unfortunate consequences of her carelessness. The case is very much like that of Johns v. Georgia R. & Electric Co. 133 Ga. 525, 66 S. E. 269, where a woman, with full knowledge that a strip of pavement along the car track had been torn up, decided to step across the excavation, and in doing so stepped on a paving stone, and slipped and fell. The court says: "The conductor, who was inside the car, had nothing to do with this decision, or the effort to carry it out. When she attempted to step from the car across the opening in the pavement, she placed her foot on a paving stone, or dirt, which gave way, and she was hurt. She took the chance of being able to make the long step successfully, and she failed to do so in safety. Even if the defendant was not altogether faultless, nevertheless she cannot recover for the results of her own conduct, with full knowledge and in full view of the situation. Her injury was unfortunate, but she has no right to recover from the defendant. The case is not like those involving concealed danger, or dangerous places known to the company, and not to the passenger, or where a passenger was ordered or forced to leave a car, or where there was a defect in a street or sidewalk, which may have been previously known to a passer, but of the proximity or danger of which, by reason of the darkness, or other cause, at the time of the injury, he was not aware." We do not deem it necessary or useful to discuss the cases cited in the brief of the learned counsel for plaintiff. None of them bear even a little resemblance to the case at bar, which is peculiar and unusual in the facts presented.

The judgment of the Superior Court is affirmed.

Clark, Ch. J., dissenting:

When the train stopped at Bagley, the feme plaintiff started to the rear door of the coach, which was at or near the crossing, to get out. Had she been permitted to do so, she would not have been injured. The conductor called her to come to the front door, which was the length of the car, some 60 feet, farther from the crossing. When she got upon the ground, there were several cross-ties lying along the road-bed between her and the railroad crossing. It had been raining, and the walk way around the end of the cross-ties was muddy and slippery, and the 60 feet that she was unnecessarily required to walk to reach the crossing was in a shallow cut. It was negligence in the defendant company to require her to get out at this spot, instead of the other end of the coach, where she would have stepped down upon the crossing. The defendant owed to her a decent and safe landing place, all the more so where, this not being a regular station, there was no platform.

The burden was upon the defendant under the statute to prove contributory negligence. It offered no evidence whatever to that effect, and the only evidence on the point was by the plaintiff herself, who said that it seemed to her safer to step on the cross-ties than on the muddy sloping earth, in getting back to the crossing. It is patent to anyone that this must have been so. If the cross-ties were slanting a little, so was necessarily the ground upon which they lay, and the ground, being soft and muddy, was much more slippery than the cross-ties could have been. If she had fallen by slipping in the mud, as she doubtless would have done, she must have fallen upon the cross-ties and been worse hurt. At any rate the plaintiff had a right, both under the Constitution and the statute, to have a jury, and not the judge, to pass on the facts. It was the duty of the defendant to have given the plaintiff a safe place to dismount. It did not do so, and would not permit her to get off at the other end of the coach, where she would have been safe. The burden was upon the defendant to prove contributory negligence. It did not do so, and the only evidence is that of the plaintiff, that she pursued the safest course in stepping upon the cross-ties instead of upon the slippery mud. The plaintiff was still a passenger when she fell. Being a woman, she was entitled to the attention that the law requires to be paid to women and children, who are less able to take care of themselves than men. Morarity v. Durham Traction Co. 154 N. C. 586, 70 S. E. 938. The conduct of the defendant company in preventing the feme plaintiff from getting out in a safe place, and causing her to walk 60 feet through mud and slush, was of itself actionable. Certainly the judge had no right to say as a matter of law and in violation of the statute, that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence because she chose what seemed to her, and what the jury doubtless would have found (if she had been allowed her constitutional right to a jury trial), was the safer method of traversing the 60 feet of the sloping cut.

In Roberts v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 155 N. C. 84, 70 S. E. 1080, this court quotes with approval, as it had previously done in Smith v. North Carolina R. Co. 147 N. C. 450, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 179, 61 S. E. 266, from Hutchinson on Carriers, § 928, as follows: "It is the duty of railway companies as carriers of passengers to provide platforms, waiting rooms, and other reasonable accommodations for such passengers at the stations upon such road [and at such places] at which they are in the habit of taking on and putting off passengers. Their public profession as such carriers is an invitation to the public to enter and to alight from their cars at their stations, and it has been held that they must not only provide safe platforms and approaches thereto, but that they are bound to make safe for all persons who may come to such stations in order to become their passengers, or who may be put off there by them, all portions of their station grounds reasonably near to such platforms, and to which such persons may be likely to go; and for not having provided such station accommodations and safeguards, railway companies have frequently been held liable for injuries to such persons." And in Mangum's Case, 145 N. C. 153, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 589, 122 Am. St. Rep. 437, 58 S. E. 913, Associate Justice Brown, in delivering the opinion, said: "It seems now to be almost elementary that one of the recognized duties of a railway company that undertakes to carry passengers is to keep its station premises in a reasonably safe condition, so that those who patronize it may pass safely to and from the cars. Pineus v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 140 N. C. 450, 111 Am. St. Rep. 856, 53 S. E. 297; Wood, Railways, 310, 1341, 1349. This duty extends not only to the condition of the platform itself, whereon passengers walk to and from the trains, but also to the manner in which that platform is allowed by the common carrier to be used. Weston v. New York Elev. R. Co. 73 N. Y. 595; Wood, supra. The defendant owed a duty to plaintiff, and to all other passengers, to keep its depot platforms used by them as a means of ingress and egress free from obstructions and dangerous instrumentalities, especially at a time when its passengers are hurrying to and from its cars,"—citing Pineus v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. and Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Johns, 36 Kan. 769, 59 Am. Rep. 609, 14 Pac. 237.

The plaintiff, not having left the carrier's premises, was still a passenger. Hansley v. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Jamesville & W. R. Co. 115 N. C. 602, 32 L.R.A. 543, 44 Am. St. Rep. 474, 20 S. E. 528. Being still a passenger, she was entitled to a safe exit. 2 White, Personal Injuries on Railroads, § 557. If the railroad offers an egress that is unsafe, it is negligence. 2 White, Personal Injuries on Railroads, 619. The railroad should so arrange its station grounds that a passenger who gets off a train at the station, or at places provided to alight, may leave the cars without danger, and a reasonably safe passageway or a bridge should be provided leading to and from the station. Hulbert v. New York C. R. Co. 40 N. Y. 152. There a passenger who fell in a cattle guard, going from the car to the station, was injured and recovered damages. "Every spot likely to be visited by passengers . . . departing [from depots] should be made safe and kept so, . . . and passengers . . . injured . . . may have compensation." 1 Bishop, Noncontr. L. § 1086, quoted with approval Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lucas, 119 Ind. 583, 6 L.R.A. 193, 21 N. E. 968, s. c. 129 Ind. 206, 16 Am. St. Rep. 323, 21 N. E. 972; Gaynor v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 100 Mass. 215, 97 Am. Dec. 96. The passageway to and from a depot must be kept safe, and passengers are entitled to a suitable place of egress. 1 Fetter, Carr. 112; 2 Hutchinson, Carr. 1060, 1063. The defendant, having required the female passenger to get out not at the crossing, owed it to her to give her a safe, dry path back to the crossing, and, if hurt by any defect in getting to the crossing, the defendant is liable. Autry v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 156 N. C. 293, 72 S. E. 380. The defendant was more negligent, not less so, in making the plaintiff get out at an unsafe place, when she could have gotten out at a safe place at the other end of the coach, as she wished to do, because this was a flag station. She has been deprived of a right guaranteed her by the statute and the Constitution, in being arbitrarily refused by the judge the opportunity to have twelve men to pass upon the question whether the railroad was guilty of negligence in causing her to get out of the train not at the crossing place. His Honor was further in error in depriving her of the benefit of the statute which placed upon the defendant the burden of proof to show that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and in finding himself, not only without any evidence whatever, but in contradiction of the only evidence before him, that she was guilty of contributory negligence. She testified that she took the safest course. The presumption under the statute is that she did. Revisal, § 483. This presumption should be reversed only by a jury, as the statute requires.

The conduct of the defendant and the action of the court below are without any precedent to sustain them. All passengers, and especially ladies, are entitled to better treatment than this plaintiff has received. Her ankle was broken because the defendant put her off at an unsuitable place, when she could have gotten off at a safe place, and that, too, when it was apparent that for her to get back to the proper point, the road, she would have to traverse a muddy, slippery, sloping bank encumbered with cross-ties. If necessary for her to get out at the front end of the coach, the train should have been run back till she could have landed at a safe spot. The plaintiff testified that the usual place for putting off passengers at Bagley was at the crossing. That the egress they gave her was not a safe exit is conclusively shown by the fact that, in attempting to get back to the crossing, her ankle was dislocated, by reason of which she suffered greatly, and was laid up two months. Her testimony that she chose the safest plan must be taken as true on a nonsuit. Spruill v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 120 N. C. 147, 27 S. E. 39; Powell v. Southern R. Co. 125 N. C. 372, 34 S. E. 530, and cases there cited. In Wright v. Southern R. Co. 127 N. C. 228, 37 S. E. 221, this court said: "The court has heretofore had occasion to condemn the growing tendency to take cases from the jury, or limit their sphere in damage cases. The right of trial by jury is guaranteed by the Constitution, and on all disputed issues of fact the courts cannot be too careful to refrain from invading the province of the constitutional 'triers of fact.'"

Hoke, J., concurs in the dissenting opinion of Clark, Ch. J.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

L. C. WIDMAN, Appt.,

v.

GEORGE A. KELLOGG, Receiver of People's State Bank, et al., Resp'ts.

(— N. D. —, 133 N. W. 1020.)

Appeal — finding — draft to forward collections — purchase.

1. This appeal is before this court on the judgment roll alone. The findings, among other things, are to the effect that appellant was required, as a local agent of the Great Northern Railway Company and another, to transmit his receipts each day to his principals in St. Paul, and that it was his custom to go to the bank and deposit such receipts, and receive therefor, from the bank, drafts payable to the order of his principals, and forthwith to transmit the same. It was also found that on four days named he followed this custom, and that the drafts so procured and forwarded to St. Paul were dishonored because no funds were on deposit with the correspondent of the local bank, with which to pay them; that the officers of the bank knew of his employment and the purpose for which such drafts were obtained. The record contains no findings that he kept any general account or drew any checks on the local bank. Held that, in view of this custom and the findings as a whole, the word "deposit" must be construed as indicating the payment into the bank of each day's receipts in exchange for the drafts; and that he stood in relation to the bank as a purchaser for cash of drafts.

Bank — insolvent — receiving money — trustee.

2. Section 4660, Rev. Codes 1905, prohibits insolvent state banks from receiving any money, bank bills, notes, or currency, bills or drafts; and § 4661 makes any official of an insolvent bank who receives money, etc., guilty of a felony. The defendant bank had been hopelessly insolvent for some time prior to the purchase of the drafts mentioned, and it had no funds with its correspondent bank out of which they could be paid; and such officials had no reason to anticipate their being honored.

Note. — Right to preference for money paid to insolvent bank for draft.

The earlier cases on this question have been collected in the note to Whitcomb v. Carpenter, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 928. Only one case has been found which was decided since the date of that note. In that case, Brown v. Sheldon State Bank, 139 Iowa, 83, 117 N. W. 289, it was held that where a bank received money on a collection sent it by another bank a few hours before it failed, and sent its draft in payment thereof, the fund so received was a trust fund, and being in the hands of the receiver, the sender of the collection was entitled to a preference in respect thereof.

A case of some interest in this connection is that of Livingstain v. Columbian Bkg. & T. Co. 81 S. C. 244, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 445, 62 S. E. 249, where it was held that a depositor of a bank who withdrew his deposit and immediately purchased a New York draft with the proceeds was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the correspondent bank to collateral held by it for a note in satisfaction of which it applied the funds against which the draft was drawn; and also the companion case, 77 S. C. 305, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 442, 122 Am. St. Rep. 568, 57 S. E. 182, where it was held that a depositor who accepted a draft for his check on his deposit was not so entitled to subrogation.

W. A. E.

Headnotes by SPALDING, Ch. J.
30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Held that such money was received by the bank without consideration, and, in effect, under false pretenses or representations; that thereby a fraud was perpetrated upon appellant, the effect of which was to make the bank a trustee ex maleficio of such funds.

Receiver — insolvent bank — rights.

3. On a receiver being appointed for such bank, in a proceeding under the statute to wind up the affairs of insolvent corporations, he had no greater rights in such funds or moneys than those possessed by the insolvent bank, and succeeded the bank as trustee.

Trust — tracing funds — facts.

4. The fact that the bank closed its doors within four business days after the first of the transactions described, and the next day after the last one, and that money in more than double the amount of the claim of appellant was turned over to the receiver by the bank, and other elements of the findings of the trial court, lead to the conclusion that both the money assets of the bank and those received by the receiver were enhanced by the transactions described.

Same — payments from fund — presumption.

5. When a trustee mingles trust funds with his own, and subsequently pays out a portion of the commingled funds, it will be presumed that he made his payments from that portion of the fund belonging to himself, and retained the funds which did not belong to him; and, except in so far as he may distinguish what is his own, the whole fund will be treated as the trust property.

Same — right to recover — failure of proof.

6. The trusteeship of the bank and of the receiver being established, it being conceded that the moneys of appellant were commingled with the funds of the bank, and respondents having failed to show that moneys paid out in the meantime were the original trust funds, and likewise having failed to show that appellant's money was not included in that turned over to the receiver, appellant is entitled to recover.

Same — tracing funds — cash assets.

7. When such trust funds are not commingled with any of the assets of the bank, except the cash assets, the preference of appellant is limited to the cash funds of which the receiver took possession, when distinguishable from the other assets of the estate going into his hands.

Same — extent of preference.

8. Appellant is entitled to preference to the extent of the moneys turned over to the receiver.

Appeal — questions not before court — suggestions.

9. The rights of other claimants, if any, to preference, not being before this court, appellant's rights relative to them are not determined, but it is suggested that the ends of justice would be promoted by proposed L.R.A. (N.S.)

ceeding on the part of claimants to preference, in such cases, by intervention, rather than by independent action against the receiver.

(November 18, 1911.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Nelson County in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover as a preferred claim certain moneys deposited in the insolvent defendant bank. Reversed.

Statement by Spalding, Ch. J.:

The appellant brought this suit against the defendant Kellogg as receiver of the People's State Bank, and the People's State Bank, a corporation organized under the banking laws of this state, seeking to establish and recover as a preferred claim the sum of $1,074.95. We take the facts from the findings of the trial court, omitting formal matters.

The People's State Bank referred to was, between November, 1892, and January 26, 1910, engaged in the general banking business, at Lakota. It became insolvent on or prior to August 1, 1909, and so continued until January 26, 1910, when it suspended business, and the state examiner took charge of its assets until March 8, 1910, when the same were turned over to the respondent Kellogg, as receiver, pursuant to an action brought by and through the attorney general to obtain a judgment of dissolution, pursuant to the provisions of chapter 27, Rev. Codes, 1905. The appellant was, at all times material, the agent of the Great Northern Express Company and the Great Northern Railway Company, corporations under the laws of Minnesota, at Lakota. It was his duty to receive the funds of said corporations, and promptly transmit them to his principals in St. Paul, Minnesota; and it was his custom in transmitting such funds to deposit the same in said People's State Bank and "receive therefor" drafts issued, in the name of his respective principals, which he forwarded them by mail. This custom had been continued for some time and was well known to the bank and its officers, as also was his relation to such corporations. Appellant became personally responsible for the funds so remitted, and the drafts received by his principals were charged by them to him, and he is the owner thereof. He did not know, and had no reason to know or believe, prior to January 26, 1910, that said bank was insolvent, but the officers of said bank knew, or in the regular performance of their duties ought to have known, of its insolvency at all times subsequent to August, 1909. The amounts involved in this action are drafts purchased by appellant as follows, omitting names of his principals, which are immaterial here:

January 21, 1910.....	$ 103 20
January 22, 1910.....	119 82
January 22, 1910.....	470 66
January 24, 1910.....	56 44
January 25, 1910.....	324 83

Total$1,074 95

All such drafts were drawn on the Security National Bank of Minnesota, and transmitted to appellant's employers forthwith, and immediately presented for payment, and protested for want of funds. At the time they were drawn and presented the People's State Bank did not have on deposit with its correspondent the funds to meet said drafts, or any of them, and the officers of the People's State Bank, and those issuing such drafts, knew, or in the performance of their duties ought to have known, that fact. The drafts have never been paid. The People's State Bank continued to carry on its business in the usual manner, paying out money on checks and otherwise, receiving deposits and making collections and issuing drafts, and receiving money therefor, from the time the first above-mentioned draft was drawn until the night of January 26, 1910. It had on hand in cash on the 21st day of January, 1910, $14,436.88. At the close of business, January 26, 1910, there was on hand cash in the sum of $2,774.08. No part of this latter sum can be identified as the identical money paid by appellant to said bank, or as the proceeds thereof, or of any checks or drafts delivered by him to it, for which said drafts on the Security Bank were issued. It received deposits between the morning of the 21st and the closing of its doors, aggregating over $13,000, and paid out money on checks amounting to over $17,000. Its certificates of deposits increased about $800 during such time. At the time this action was brought the receiver had in his possession approximately $25,000 in money and other assets worth $15,000 belonging to said People's Bank. It is conceded by respondent that the funds paid for the drafts by appellant were mingled with the general fund of the bank.

Other findings show that the bank at all such times was hopelessly insolvent by reason of the embezzlement of its funds by certain of its officers, and that its true condition had been concealed by them.

Judgment was given against the appellant, to the effect that his claim was not entitled to be preferred, and dismissing his action. From such judgment he appeals.

39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Messrs. Frich & Kelly for appellant.
Messrs. Bangs & Robbins, for respondent:

The deposit being a general deposit, plaintiff is not entitled to have his claim preferred as to the other creditors. His money went into the common fund, and he must share with the other creditors.

Ober & Sons Co. v. Cochran, 118 Ga. 396, 98 Am. St. Rep. 118, 45 S. E. 382; Philadelphia Nat. Bank v. Dowd, 2 L.R.A. 480, 38 Fed. 172; Merchants' & F. Bank v. Austin, 49 Fed. 31; Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Flanders, 87 Wis. 237, 58 N. W. 383; Kansas State Bank v. First State Bank, 62 Kan. 788, 64 Pac. 634; City Bank v. Blackmore, 21 C. C. A. 514, 43 U. S. App. 617, 75 Fed. 771; White v. Commercial & F. Bank, 60 S. C. 122, 38 S. E. 453; Sayles v. Cox, 95 Tenn. 579, 32 L.R.A. 719, 49 Am. St. Rep. 940, 32 S. W. 626.

That plaintiff is a trust creditor does not, of itself, entitle him to a preference over other creditors.

Officer v. Officer, 120 Iowa, 389, 98 Am. St. Rep. 365, 94 N. W. 947; Bradley v. Chesebrough, 111 Iowa, 126, 82 N. W. 472; Cavin v. Gleason, 105 N. Y. 256, 11 N. E. 504; McAfee v. Bland, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 1, 11 S. W. 439; Lincoln v. Morrison (Lincoln Sav. Bank & S. D. Co. v. Morrison) 64 Neb. 822, 57 L.R.A. 885, 90 N. W. 905; Atkinson v. Rochester Printing Co. 114 N. Y. 175, 21 N. E. 178; Hanson v. Roush, 139 Iowa, 58, 116 N. W. 1061; Paul v. Draper, 158 Mo. 197, 81 Am. St. Rep. 296, 59 S. W. 77.

In order to sustain a preference in trust funds, they must be identified in the hands of the receiver either in their original form or in some property in which they have been invested; or they must have in some manner increased the assets of a bank which came into the hands of the receiver.

2 Perry, Tr. §§ 835-842; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 1258, 1259; Northern Dakota Elevator Co. v. Clark, 3 N. D. 26, 53 N. W. 175; Lowe v. Jones, 192 Mass. 94, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487, 116 Am. St. Rep. 225, 78 N. E. 402, 7 Ann. Cas. 551; Little v. Chadwick, 151 Mass. 109, 7 L.R.A. 570, 23 N. E. 1005; Freiberg v. Stoddard, 161 Pa. 259, 28 Atl. 1111; Carmany's Appeal, 166 Pa. 622, 31 Atl. 334; Cavin v. Gleason, 105 N. Y. 257, 11 N. E. 504; Atkinson v. Rochester Printing Co. 114 N. Y. 168, 21 N. E. 178; Holmes v. Gilman, 138 N. Y. 369, 20 L.R.A. 566, 34 Am. St. Rep. 463, 34 N. E. 206; Willoughby v. Weinberger, 15 Okla. 226, 79 Pac. 777; Cherry v. Territory, 17 Okla. 221, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1254, 89 Pac. 192; Slater v. Oriental Mills, 18 R. I. 352, 27 Atl. 443; Sherwood v. Milford State Bank, 94

Mich. 78, 53 N. W. 923; Fire & Water Comrs. v. Wilkinson, 119 Mich. 655, 44 L.R.A. 493, 78 N. W. 893; State v. Foster, 5 Wyo. 199, 29 L.R.A. 226, 63 Am. St. Rep. 47, 38 Pac. 926; Bank Comrs. v. Security Trust Co. 70 N. H. 536, 49 Atl. 113; Ellicott v. Kuhl, 60 N. J. Eq. 333, 46 Atl. 945; Bishop v. Mahoney, 70 Minn. 238, 73 N. W. 6; Twohy Mercantile Co. v. Melbye, 78 Minn. 357, 81 N. W. 20; Robinson v. Woodward, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1142, 48 S. W. 1082; New Farmers' Bank v. Cockrell, 106 Ky. 578, 51 S. W. 2; Hill v. Miles, 83 Ark. 486, 104 S. W. 198; Union Nat. Bank v. Goetz, 138 Ill. 127, 32 Am. St. Rep. 119, 27 N. E. 907; Wetherell v. O'Brien, 140 Ill. 146, 33 Am. St. Rep. 221, 29 N. E. 904; Hauk v. Van Ingen, 196 Ill. 20, 63 N. E. 705; Woodhouse v. Crandall, 197 Ill. 104, 58 L.R.A. 385, 64 N. E. 292; White v. Commercial & F. Bank, 60 S. C. 122, 38 S. E. 453; Bank of Florence v. United States Sav. & L. Co. 104 Ala. 297, 16 So. 110; Shields v. Thomas, 71 Miss. 260, 42 Am. St. Rep. 458, 14 So. 84; Reeves v. State Bank, 8 Ohio St. 465; Blake v. State Sav. Bank, 12 Wash. 619, 41 Pac. 909; Commercial & F. Nat. Bank v. Davis, 115 N. C. 226, 20 S. E. 370; Shute v. Hinman, 34 Or. 578, 47 L.R.A. 265, 56 Pac. 412, 58 Pac. 882; Ferchen v. Arndt, 26 Or. 129, 29 L.R.A. 664, 46 Am. St. Rep. 603, 37 Pac. 161; Ober & Sons Co. v. Cochran, 118 Ga. 396, 98 Am. St. Rep. 118, 45 S. E. 382; McGregor v. Battle, 128 Ga. 577, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 185, 58 S. E. 28; Portland & H. S. B. Co. v. Locke, 73 Me. 370; Cushman v. Goodwin, 95 Me. 353, 50 Atl. 50; Sayles v. Cox, 95 Tenn. 579, 32 L.R.A. 715, 49 Am. St. Rep. 940, 32 N. E. 626; Bruner v. First Nat. Bank, 97 Tenn. 540, 34 L.R.A. 532, 37 S. W. 286; Italian Fruit & Importing Co. v. Penniman, 100 Md. 698, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 252, 61 Atl. 694; Spokane County v. First Nat. Bank, 16 C. C. A. 81, 29 U. S. App. 707, 68 Fed. 979; City Bank v. Blackmore, 21 C. C. A. 514, 43 U. S. App. 617, 75 Fed. 771; Beard v. Independent Dist. 31 C. C. A. 562, 60 U. S. App. 372, 88 Fed. 375; John Deere Plow Co. v. McDavid, 70 C. C. A. 422, 137 Fed. 802; Crawford County v. Strawn, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1100, 84 C. C. A. 553, 157 Fed. 49; Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 693; Peters v. Bain, 133 U. S. 670, 33 L. ed. 696, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 354; Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Flanders, 87 Wis. 237, 58 N. W. 383; Henry v. Martin, 88 Wis. 367, 60 N. W. 263; Burnham v. Barth, 89 Wis. 362, 62 N. W. 96; Bromley v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 103 Wis. 563, 79 N. W. 741; Hyland v. Roe, 111 Wis. 361, 87 Am. St. Rep. 873, 87 N. W. 252; Burrows v. Johntz, 57 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Kan. 778, 48 Pac. 27; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Caldwell, 59 Kan. 156, 52 Pac. 400; Kansas State Bank v. First State Bank, 62 Kan. 788, 64 Pac. 634; Holden v. Piper, 5 Colo. App. 71, 37 Pac. 34; McClure v. La Plata County, 19 Colo. 122, 34 Pac. 763; Morrison v. Lincoln Sav. Bank & S. D. Co. 57 Neb. 225, 77 N. W. 655; Lincoln v. Morrison (Lincoln Sav. Bank & S. D. Co. v. Morrison), 64 Neb. 822, 57 L.R.A. 885, 90 N. W. 905; Chamberlain v. Chamberlain Bkg. House, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 278, 93 N. W. 1021; Jones v. Chesebrough, 105 Iowa, 303, 75 N. W. 97; Bradley v. Chesebrough, 111 Iowa, 126, 82 N. W. 472.

Spalding, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is claimed by counsel for respondent that the authorities applicable to the facts disclosed in this case are in hopeless conflict; that the ancient rule in equity was that property impressed with a trust, which it is claimed by respondent this is, cannot be reclaimed unless the specific property involved can be fully and specifically identified. It is admitted that several courts have modified this rule in recent years, and permitted recovery for such property in certain instances. A vast number of authorities are cited on the subject, and an attempt is made to trace the course of such determinations; but it is also claimed that the trend of the latest authorities has been toward the ancient rule, and that in several states which at one time departed from it, the courts have overruled such decisions and returned to the old doctrine. Among such is the state of Wisconsin. We shall not follow all the holdings of these courts, nor show wherein they have disagreed, to any considerable extent, but shall pass upon this case with reference to some leading authorities which we think clearly give the better reasons. Many of the authorities cited as sustaining the decision of the trial court relate to collections made by banks which became insolvent before remitting or paying them to the owner. In so far as banks in such cases are in charge of a trust fund, such cases are analogous to the case at bar, but the only authorities we find directly in point—that is to say, upon the purchase of drafts from an insolvent bank—support the contention of the appellant.

We note that the brief of appellant treats the transaction in this case as the purchase of a draft, while that of the respondent is based on the theory that it was a general deposit. The word "deposit," as we have shown, is used in the findings. This, however, must be read in connection with the facts disclosed, and, when so read, we think it is not used to indicate that the appellant kept a deposit account with the insolvent bank. It rather means that he took his day's receipts for each of his principals to the bank and in exchange therefor procured drafts. They were deposited in the sense that they went into the bank, but not for the purpose of checking against them, or for being placed to his credit.

The findings are clearly to the effect that, when he took his day's receipts to the bank, he procured a draft for the exact amount turned over to the bank, and this draft he immediately transmitted to his principal. The transaction is therefore one of taking a sum of money to the bank and exchanging it for a draft, and we consider the findings to be to that effect, notwithstanding the use of the word "deposit." What we have said in explanation of our interpretation of the word "deposit," as used in the findings of the trial court, is said with a view to making our opinion clear, and to prevent its being extended to cover cases in which the facts are different.

Under § 4660, Rev. Codes 1905, every insolvent bank association is prohibited from receiving any deposit or any money or bank bills or notes or currency or other notes, bills, or drafts. And under § 4661 any official of such bank who knowingly receives or accepts, or who is accessory, or permits or connives at the receiving or accepting, any such deposits, is made guilty of a felony. It is clear that, in taking the money of the appellant in exchange for drafts on the Minnesota bank, when the insolvent bank had no funds out of which such drafts were payable, the insolvent bank and its officers represented to the appellant, in effect, that they had money on deposit with the Security Bank to meet the drafts, when in fact they had no such deposit, and, on the contrary, as shown by the findings, their account in that bank was overdrawn in a great sum. They had no reason to anticipate that their correspondent would honor such drafts. They received money without consideration, and under false pretenses or representations.

They thereby perpetrated a fraud upon appellant, and the bank acquired no title to his money, and, of course, could convey no better title than it possessed to the receiver. His rights in the premises are identically the same as those of the insolvent bank. The effect of this is that the bank became a trustee of the funds of appellant ex maleficio, and the receiver succeeded the bank as such trustee. Rev. Codes 1905, § 5711; Anheuser-Busch Brewing Assn. v. Morris, 36 Neb. 31, 53 N. W. 59 L.R.A. (N.S.)

1037; Cady v. South Omaha Nat. Bank, 49 Neb. 125, 68 N. W. 358; Pennell v. Def-fell, 4 De G. M. & G. 372, L. R. 1 Eq. 579, 23 L. J. Ch. N. S. 115, 18 Jur. 273, 1 Week. Rep. 499; Re Hallett, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 719, 49 L. J. Ch. N. S. 415, 42 L. T. N. S. 421, 28 Week. Rep. 732; Cragie v. Hadley, 99 N. Y. 131, 52 Am. Rep. 9, 1 N. E. 537; Furber v. Dane, 204 Mass. 412, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 808, 90 N. E. 859; Richardson v. New Orleans Debenture Redemption Co. 52 L.R.A. 67, 42 C. C. A. 619, 102 Fed. 780; Capital Nat. Bank v. Coldwater Nat. Bank, 49 Neb. 786, 59 Am. St. Rep. 572, 69 N. W. 116; People v. City Bank, 96 N. Y. 32; Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 693; Stoller v. Coates, 88 Mo. 515; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnston, 133 U. S. 566, 33 L. ed. 683, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; Peak v. Ellicott, 30 Kan. 156, 46 Am. Rep. 90, 1 Pac. 499.

This places this case in the same category on principle as the numerous cases which are found in the books where the fund was originally a trust fund, and renders it unnecessary to determine whether the fact that the funds in question were not the property of the appellant, but were held by him as agent, and so known to be held by the bank, also entitled him to a preference.

The apparent conflict of authorities arises from the ability or inability to trace these funds, and as to the extent of the priority to which the cestui que trust is entitled. There can be no doubt of several things; among them, that the cash assets of the insolvent bank were enhanced by the receipt of this money. Neither can there be any doubt that the money turned over to the receiver was more by the amount paid the bank than it would have been had it not been paid the bank. The bank took appellant's money, and the funds in its possession and those turned over to the receiver were to that extent increased. It gave nothing for it; hence there was no increase of liabilities. The time between the issuance of the first draft and the closing of the doors of the bank was only four business days. It is true that the funds in possession of the bank decreased during these four days by the payment of checks drawn on the bank in excess of the deposits, but there was still money on hand to an amount more than double the claim of appellant, and this went into the hands of the receiver. From this it is clear that under both lines of authorities,—those which are to the effect that the assets turned over to the receiver must be enhanced by the appellant's deposit, if it may be called a deposit, as well as those which are to the effect that the assets of the bank must be enhanced,—he is entitled to recover. Stoller v. Coates, 88 Mo. 515; Richardson v. New Orleans Debenture Redemption Co. 52 L.R.A. 67, 42 C. C. A. 619, 102 Fed. 780.

It is claimed that the fact that moneys were paid out of the bank between the date of his purchasing the drafts, or at least between the date of the first draft, and the receivership, precludes him from recovering, as such moneys may have been his moneys rather than the bank's. We are only considering this question as between this appellant and the bank, and it is established by many authorities that where a trustee mingles trust funds with funds of his own, and subsequently pays out a portion of the commingled fund, it will not be presumed that he paid out moneys which he had no right to disburse, and which did not belong to him, but that, on the contrary, it will be presumed that he made his payments from that portion of the fund belonging to him, and retained the funds which did not belong to him, and, except so far as he may distinguish what is his own, the whole fund will be treated as the trust property. While there are some authorities holding that the claimant must prove that the payments were not made from his funds, we think the other rule much more equitable and supported by the great weight of authority. Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 693; Plano Mfg. Co. v. Auld, 14 S. D. 512, 86 Am. St. Rep. 769, 86 N. W. 21; Pennell v. Deffell, 4 De G. M. & G. 372, L. R. 1 Eq. 579, 23 L. J. Ch. N. S. 115, 18 Jur. 273, 1 Week. Rep. 499; Re Hallett, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 719, 49 L. J. Ch. N. S. 415, 42 L. T. N. S. 421, 28 Week. Rep. 732; Burnham v. Barth, 89 Wis. 362, 62 N. W. 96; State v. Bank of Commerce, 61 Neb. 181, 52 L.R.A. 858, 85 N. W. 43; State v. Bank of Commerce, 54 Neb. 725, 75 N. W. 28; Lincoln v. Morrison (Lincoln Sav. Bank & T. Co. v. Morrison) 64 Neb. 822, 57 L.R.A. 885, 90 N. W. 905; Sherwood v. Central Michigan Sav. Bank, 103 Mich. 109, 61 N. W. 352; Whitcomb v. Carpenter, 134 Iowa, 227, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 928, 111 N. W. 825; Peak v. Ellicott, 30 Kan. 156, 46 Am. Rep. 90, 1 Pac. 499; Fire & Water Comrs. v. Wilkinson, 119 Mich. 655, 44 L.R.A. 493, 73 N. W. 893; Hyland v. Roe, 111 Wis. 361, 87 Am. St. Rep. 873, 87 N. W. 252; Anderson v. Pacific Bank, 112 Cal. 598, 32 L.R.A. 479, 53 Am. St. Rep. 228, 44 Pac. 1063; Farmers' & T. Bank v. Kimball Mill. Co. 1 S. D. 388, 396, 36 Am. St. Rep. 739, 47 N. W. 402; Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. Ch. 62; Davis v. Coburn, 128 Mass. 377; Bank v. Fulton 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

County Bank, 2 Wall. 252, 17 L. ed. 785; Shute v. Hinman, 34 Or. 578, 47 L.R.A. 265, 56 Pac. 412, 58 Pac. 882.

And why, we ask, should the bank, or the receiver standing in its stead, be heard to assert, as against the rightful owner of moneys, that in paying creditors of the bank it paid money that belonged to appellant and which it held in a trust capacity, instead of paying its own money? To hold that the bank may take such a position, and maintain it in a court of equity, seeking to do equity, would be to permit the bank to take advantage of its own wrong, to its own benefit, and to the detriment of the innocent party it has injured. One reason of great force for the trustee assuming the burden of proving that he paid out the trust funds instead of his own, and that the trust funds did not pass into the hands of the receiver, is that, in the case of money, the means of knowledge on these subjects would not be possessed by the cestui que trust, but that the means of proof of the facts regarding it would ordinarily be wholly within the possession or control of the trustee. This is peculiarly so in the case of a bank. The business of a banking institution is ordinarily done by confidential agents or employees behind a screen and closed doors. Its customers and the public are excluded from its banking room, and have no means of knowing from what fund money is paid or the disposition made of it under any ordinary circumstances. Such knowledge must of necessity be in the sole possession of the trustee. Several of the authorities cited in support of the respondent's position disclose facts rendering the principle materially distinguishable from those governing the case at bar. For instance, in some of them the last payments were made to the bank many months before its failure, and funds were paid out in the meantime greatly in excess of such payments, and in excess of the receipts of the bank, and under such circumstances as to preclude the possibility of the fund belonging to the depositor having enhanced the assets of the bank or the assets which were turned over to the receiver.

The bank and its successor, the receiver, being trustees, and it being conceded by all parties that the moneys of appellant were commingled with the funds of the bank, and the trustees having failed to show that any moneys paid out were the trust funds, and likewise having failed to show that the funds belonging to the appellant were not included in the money turned over to the receiver, it necessarily follows that the judgment of the district court was erroneous.

The foregoing conclusion, however, does not settle the rights of the appellant fully. Much stress has been laid upon the conflict of authorities applicable to this case, and particularly the different rules adopted by the supreme court of Wisconsin and others following the lead of that court. Following the English authority (Re Hallett, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 719, 49 L. J. Ch. N. S. 415, 42 L. T. N. S. 421, 28 Week. Rep. 732), the supreme court of Wisconsin held in McLeod v. Evans, 66 Wis. 401, 57 Am. Rep. 287, 28 N. W. 173, 214, and certain other cases immediately following that, that the cestui que trust might have his money out of any of the assets of the estate of the insolvent. Subsequently, in Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Flanders, 87 Wis. 237, 58 N. W. 383, and other cases, the Evans Cases were overruled in so far as they permitted recovery from all or any of the assets.

After a careful consideration of authorities on both sides, we are satisfied that the better rule is, in a case like the instant case, where the funds of the appellant were commingled only with the moneys in the bank, and where there is no finding that they went to enhance any part of the assets except the cash on hand, that the recovery should be limited to the cash funds turned over to the receiver. In the case at bar, they are clearly distinguishable from any of the other assets of the estate received by the receiver. This is in accordance with the Nonotuck Silk Company Case and many other authorities and seems to be the later rule adopted by most of the courts. It may not be applicable in all cases, because the line between the fund into which the money of the cestui que trust went and the other assets may not be clearly distinguished, but it is so in this case. In the Nonotuck Silk Company Case the plaintiff was not permitted to recover, principally because no money went into the hands of the assignee, except a few pennies and a $2.50 gold piece. In the case at bar more than twice as much money went into the hands of the receiver as belonged to the appellant, and this occurred only the day after the last payment by appellant to the bank, and within four banking days after the first payment. Northern Dakota Elevator Co. v. Clark & Smart, 3 N. D. 26, 32, 53 N. W. 175, is relied on as holding that appellant should not recover. We do not so consider it. There is a vital distinction between the facts in the two cases. In that case no part of the proceeds of a draft which was involved ever went into the possession of the bank. It was drawn payable to the order of an individual member of the firm comprising the bank, and placed to his credit in another bank. The plaintiff was in fact indebted to the defendants, instead of being a creditor, so there were no funds in any form in the hands of the bankers belonging to the plaintiff, and, of course, no question of trust funds could be involved. The additional fact is also disclosed that only $3.96 of cash was turned over to the assignee of the defendant bankers. What is said therein with reference to the English and Wisconsin authorities is totally irrelevant to the issues before this court at that time, and lastly, in relation to such case, we find that the question now before us was not determined.

Lastly, with reference to this subject, we may say that many authorities cited by respondent are where it is shown that the trust fund has been dissipated altogether, leaving nothing to be the subject of the trust. It was held in Pennell v. Duffell, 4 De G. M. & G. 372, L. R. 1 Eq. 579, 23 L. J. Ch. N. S. 115, 18 Jur. 273, 1 Week. Rep. 499, that, if a man mingles trust funds with his own, the whole will be treated as trust property, except so far as he may be able to distinguish what is his own. This holding was followed in Re Hallett, supra, and approved. In Burnham v. Barth, 89 Wis. 367, 62 N. W. 96, it is said that, where a trustee mingles trust money with his own, any money drawn from the common fund will be deemed to be drawn by the trustee from his own, instead of the trust fund. And in Cragie v. Hadley, 99 N. Y. 131, 52 Am. Rep. 9, 1 N. E. 537, it was held that the rule that one who has been induced to part with his property by the fraud of another, under guise of a contract, may, upon discovery of the fraud, rescind the contract, and reclaim the property, unless it has come to the possession of a bona fide holder, is well settled, and that permitting plaintiff to make a deposit when the bank was known by its officers to be insolvent, in reliance upon the supposed solvency of the bank was a gross fraud upon the plaintiff, and that the latter was entitled to reclaim such deposit or its proceeds, and that such right was not precluded by provisions of the statute forbidding all preferential payments or transfers by an insolvent bank, and providing for a ratable distribution of its assets, for the reason that the plaintiff did not claim under a transfer from the bank, but under his original title; that his relation as creditor ceased when he elected to rescind the contract of deposit, and that neither the creditors nor receiver of the bank had any equity to have the plaintiff's property applied in payment of the obligations of the bank. That was an action brought to recover the proceeds of certain drafts deposited by the plaintiff with a bank in Buffalo.

In Stoller v. Coates, 88 Mo. 515, it is held that where a bank received a draft on deposit to the credit of the depositors, who thereupon drew their check on the bank with the request that it should place the proceeds to the credit of one E., in another bank, its correspondent, and upon doing so the second bank refused to accept it and charge it to the account of the first bank, that the fund remained in the first-named bank, impressed with a trust, and that the relation of general creditor was not created between the depositors and that bank, and that, while it may be impossible to follow a fund into its diverted use, it is always possible to make it a charge on the estates or assets to the increase or benefit of which it had been appropriated away. In Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 693, the Supreme Court of the United States passed upon this question and reviewed a large number of authorities, and held that, if a man mixes trust funds with his own, the whole will be treated as the trust property, except so far as he may be able to distinguish what is his own. And it is held that these are established doctrines of equity, and that they apply in every case of a trust relation, and to moneys deposited in a bank account, and the debt thereby created. And the court reviewed and followed Re Hallett, supra.

In Richardson v. New Orleans Debenture Redemption Co. 52 L.R.A. 67, 42 C. C. A. 619, 102 Fed. 780, the circuit court of appeals of the fifth circuit held that a deposit obtained by fraud when a bank is hopelessly insolvent creates a trust in favor of the depositor, and can be recovered from a receiver of the company, even if the identical money deposited does not pass into his hands, where the funds received by him are in any event increased by the amount of the deposit. In State v. Bank of Commerce, 61 Neb. 181, 52 L.R.A. 858, 85 N. W. 43, it was held that trust funds do not become a part of the assets of the bank, and, if a bank becomes insolvent and a receiver is appointed, the owner of the trust funds is made a preferred creditor; and that the beneficiary is entitled to the funds or the proceeds thereof, so long as he can definitely trace them, until they reach the hands of an innocent holder; and that, when such funds have been wrongfully commingled and payments made by the trustee from the common fund, it will be presumed that such payments were made out of his own money, and not from the trust money; and that the claim of a beneficiary for trust money may be preferred to the extent of the cash found among the assets of the insolvent trustee at the time of his failure. And several other decisions of that court are cited in the opinion to the same effect.

And in State v. Bank of Commerce, 54 Neb. 725, 75 N. W. 28, it was held that, when such funds are wrongfully commingled with those of the bank and payments made from the common fund, it will be presumed that such payments were made out of the trustee's own money, and not the trust money, and that the cash assets on hand when the trustee failed were part of the trust money, but that, if it is shown that the funds were actually dissipated, the beneficiary cannot have his claim allowed as a preferred one. And the claim in that case was allowed to the extent of the cash on hand at the time of the failure. In St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnston, 133 U. S. 566, 33 L. ed. 683, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390, it was held that the accepting of a deposit of trusts by a bank irretrievably insolvent constitutes such a fraud as entitles the depositor to reclaim his trusts or their proceeds. And the court cites with approval Cragie v. Hadley, supra, and numerous other authorities. To the same effect, see Officer v. Officer, 127 Iowa, 347, 101 N. W. 484, and Sherwood v. Central Michigan Sav. Bank, 103 Mich. 109, 61 N. W. 352.

In Iowa many authorities sustain the right of the appellant to recover. The latest to which our attention has been called is Whitcomb v. Carpenter, 134 Iowa, 227, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 928, 111 N. W. 825, in which the facts are identical with those in the case at bar. It was held that the purchaser of a draft, on the insolvency of the banker, was entitled to a preference for the amount of his claim, and that where the maker of a note had paid money to the bank on the note made payable to the banker, who had failed to make a proper indorsement, but still held the note, or failed to turn the payment over to the person holding it, and mingled the money with the funds of his bank, the bank was a trustee, and that the maker was entitled, on the insolvency of the banker, to a preference for the amount paid; and that the fact that the assets which passed into the hands of the assignee were less than those which the banker had on hand when he wrongfully obtained the money and mingled it with his own funds did not overcome the presumption that the money passed into the hands of the assignee. See also Hanson v. Roush, 139 Iowa, 58, 116 N. W. 1061. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Asso. v. Morris, 36 Neb. 31, 53 N. W. 1037, holds that where a bank collects money for another, it holds it as a trustee of the owner, and that, on the making of an assignment, the trust character still adheres to the fund in the hands of the assignee, and the owner is still entitled to a preference. In Fire & Water Comrs. v. Wilkinson, 119 Mich. 655, 44 L.R.A. 493, 78 N. W. 893, it is held that when money on hand at the time the bank closed its doors was greater than the amount received in a certain fund, in the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that the amount of cash on hand, to the amount deposited in cash from such fund, was the trust fund. See also Hyland v. Roe, 111 Wis. 361, 87 Am. St. Rep. 873, 87 N. W. 252, holding that where a deposit was received by an insolvent bank, receipt of which is a penal offense, it does not have to be identified to enable the depositor to recover the fund. In Anderson v. Pacific Bank, 112 Cal. 598, 32 L.R.A. 479, 53 Am. St. Rep. 228, 44 Pac. 1063, it was held that money deposited in a bank to secure it from loss for furnishing bail, and commingled with the general funds of the bank, could be recovered; and that the depositor, on the insolvency of the bank, was not limited to the general rights of a creditor, but could recover the entire amount deposited out of the assets of the bank. In People v. City Bank, 96 N. Y. 32, we find a case where the bank had discounted notes for a firm, a depositor. Such firm wished to anticipate payment, and gave to the bank checks for the amount of the notes. These checks were charged in the firm account and entries made in the bank books that the notes were paid. The firm, when giving these checks, supposed that the bank held the notes, but they had been previously sold by it. Before the notes fell due, the bank failed, and a receiver was duly appointed of its assets. It was held that the transaction between the bank and the firm was not in their relation of debtor and creditor, nor of bank and depositor, but that a trust was created, the violation of which constituted a fraud by which the bank could not profit; and that an order requiring the receiver to pay the notes out of funds in his hands was proper. See also Plano Mfg. Co. v. Auld, 14 S. D. 512, 86 Am. St. Rep. 769, 86 N. W. 21, as directly in point; and First Nat. Bank v. Hummel, 14 Colo. 259, 8 L.R.A. 788, 20 Am. St. Rep. 257, 23 Pac. 986.

The judgment of the trial court was erroneous, and we hold that the appellant 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) in this case is entitled to preference, as indicated, and, if necessary, may participate with general creditors in general assets. See Kimmel v. Dickson, 5 S. D. 221, 25 L.R.A. 309, 49 Am. St. Rep. 869, 58 N. W. 561; Eureka v. Farmers' Bank, 88 Iowa, 194, 55 N. W. 342; also Plano Mfg. Co. v. Auld, supra.

The rights of other claimants to preference are not before us, hence appellant's rights relative to them are not determined. Although the procedure in this case is not questioned, we deem it proper to add that this court is satisfied that the ends of justice would be promoted in matters of this nature by an intervention by the claimant in the main action. In such case the rights of all parties as to each other could be determined and much litigation avoided.

Bruce, J., did not participate.

Petition for rehearing denied December 19, 1911.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

PETER SAMKIWICZ

ATLANTIC CITY RAILROAD COMPANY,
Plff. in Err.

(— N. J. —, 81 Atl. 833.)

Railroads — Injury at crossing — inference of defect.

1. It is the duty of every railroad company controlling a right of way, to provide and keep in repair a safe and sufficient passageway over it, where any public highway shall cross the same, of such width and character as shall be suitable to the locality in which the same is situated, as required by "An Act Concerning Railroads" (Revision 1903), act April 14, 1903 (P. L. p. 645), § 26, and when it appears that the edge of a plank used to provide a crossing is so worn as to permit the foot of a person crossing the same to slip between the worn plank and rail, and hold the foot so that it cannot be released, by any reasonable effort, in time to avoid injury to it by a train passing along the rail, an inference may be drawn that the crossing was not in good order, and the question whether the company negligently omitted to maintain a safe crossing was one which should be submitted to the jury.

Headnotes by BERGEN, J.

Note. — There seem to be no other cases discussing the question as to liability for injury at defective crossing, as affected by fact that gates were closed. Although there are numerous cases where one disregarding closed gates has gone upon tracks, and been injured by a passing engine or train, they do not, like SAMKIWICZ v. ATLANTIC CITY R. Co., involve a defective crossing.

Same — injury at crossing — contributory negligence — presumption.

2. It is not a sound legal proposition that the mere attempt of one on foot to cross over a railroad track at a highway crossing when the gates are down, in doing which he is injured, raises a conclusive presumption that "he took all chances of the injury, and cannot recover." That the gates are closed is a circumstance to be taken into account in determining whether, under all the facts, he was negligent in not observing the warning thereby conveyed, but it does not conclusively convict him of contributory negligence.

(November 20, 1911.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Atlantic County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. Willard Morgan and C. V. D. Jollne for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Howard Miller for defendant in error.

Bergen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff's foot was so crushed by defendant's car that an amputation became necessary, for which he brought suit and recovered damages. The case made by him justified the inference that, in attempting to walk over the defendant's railroad at a highway crossing, his foot caught between the planking and the rail of the track, from which he was unable to extricate himself before a freight train, with the motive power at the end of the train farthest from him, was backed against him and his foot cut off; that the planking next to the rail was old, and the edges so worn as to allow plaintiff's foot to slip between the planking and the rail. It also appeared that although there were gates at the crossing, placed there by the defendant to be lowered when an approaching train intended to cross the highway, they were not lowered at the time the plaintiff undertook to cross the tracks; that no whistle was blown or bell rung to indicate the approach of this train; that, when the plaintiff undertook to cross, the train was about a quarter of a mile away from him; that he made every possible effort to loosen his foot as the train was approaching, and in this he was assisted by at least one other person, but their efforts were unavailing, and while the wheels of the first truck passed over his foot, the car was stopped before the wheels of the second truck reached him. With the record in this condition the defendant moved for a nonsuit which the trial court refused, and an exception was taken, upon which is rested the first assignment of error. While the railroad company has the right, when lawfully authorized, to cross a public highway with its rails, it must so construct its roadbed over the highway as not to unnecessarily interfere with its safe use by the public. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Matthews, 36 N. J. L. 531. Planking, or some other efficient material, must be placed between the rails where they cross a public highway, so as to afford to the public a sufficient method by which it may safely cross its rails.

It is the duty of every railroad company controlling a right of way, to provide and keep in repair a safe and sufficient passageway across it, where any public highway shall cross the same, of such width and character as shall be suitable to the locality in which the same is situated, as required by "An Act Concerning Railroads" (Revision of 1903), P. L. 1903, p. 645, § 26, and this implies that it be maintained in such condition as to be reasonably safe for public use; and when it appears that the edge of a plank, used to provide a crossing, is so worn as to permit the foot of a person crossing the same to slip between the worn plank and the rail, and hold the foot so that it cannot be released, by any reasonable effort, in time to avoid injury to it by a train passing along the rail, an inference may be drawn that the crossing was not in good order, and the question whether the company negligently omitted to maintain a safe crossing was one which should be submitted to the jury, and there was no error in the refusal to nonsuit. At the close of the whole case the defendant moved that a verdict be directed for the defendant, but the plaintiff's case was not so shattered by the testimony offered by the defendant as to justify the allowance of this motion. The utmost that can be said regarding defendant's evidence is that it tended to contradict the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses, and therefore to which side credence should be given was essentially a jury question. The plaintiff in error in its brief, on this branch of the case, urges that there should have been binding instructions for the defendant, because Dickinson, one of its witnesses, a civil engineer, testified that the planking was neither old nor new; that the opening between the planking and the rail was the regulation opening; that there was some wear to it, but that it was nearly square. In this he was corroborated by two other witnesses. Another witness, Clark, testified that there was a little rounding on the edge of the planking; that it was worn slightly,—that is, it was slightly rounded on the edge, and that there was no danger that a person would get his foot caught if he walked straight ahead. The plaintiff's case showed that his foot was caught sidewise between the rail and the plank, and the defendant urges that this could not have happened if he had walked straight across the track.

We do not think that any conclusive inference of contributory negligence can be drawn from this testimony. The testimony is that the plaintiff was walking straight across, and it is not denied that his foot was caught, and a jury might, we think, fairly find from the evidence that the condition of the planking was such as to throw the foot lengthwise between the defective plank and the rail. We find no error in the refusal to direct a verdict.

The only other assignment of error argued, and that is presented in the supplemental brief for the plaintiff in error, is the seventh. The court was asked to charge "if the jury believe that he went under the gates after the gates were down, he took all chances of the injury and cannot recover."

This request assumes that in all cases where it appears that a person is injured while undertaking to cross a railroad on a public highway, when the crossing gates are down, a conclusive presumption arises that he is guilty of contributory negligence, and that he takes all the chances of being injured, without considering any other fact pertinent to the issue to be determined. In deciding the legal propriety of a request to charge, its relation to the facts proven in the particular case must be considered. The gates when down give warning that a train is approaching; but if one, seeing he has ample time to cross, attempts it, and is prevented by some negligent act of the railroad company from proceeding, so that he cannot escape from the track until he is injured, it could not be said that he was guilty of contributory negligence, for the immediate cause of the injury was the negligent act of the defendant. In the present case the uncontradicted proof is that plaintiff could have safely crossed, but for the alleged negligence of the defendant in not maintaining the crossing in a reasonably safe condition. The request refused eliminates every condition other than that relating to the situation of the gates, and would amount to a direction for defendant if in fact the gates were down when plaintiff undertook to cross the track. In passing upon the question of contributory negligence the jury would have the right to determine whether the plaintiff had acted as a reasonably prudent man should when, as he testifies, the freight train was about a quarter of a mile away at the time, with the engine at the end of the train farthest from plaintiff, a circumstance which led him to think that it was likely to move the other way, and that he could cross in safety if the crossing had been in good condition. The jury could well have inferred, under these and other conditions shown, that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence. It is not a sound legal proposition that the mere attempt of one on foot to cross over a railroad track at a highway crossing when the gates are down, in doing which he is injured, raises a conclusive presumption that "he took all chances of the injury, and cannot recover." That the gates are closed is a circumstance to be taken into account in determining whether, under all the facts, he was negligent in not observing the warning thereby conveyed; but it does not conclusively convict him of contributory negligence.

In this case, if we assume that the gates were closed, and the plaintiff attempted to cross by going under them, there was no causal connection between the act of the plaintiff and the cause of his injury, which was a defect in the crossing, if it was defective, for his foot would have caught in the same way even if the gates had been open. "To exonerate defendant from liability for its negligence which also caused plaintiff's injury, it is not sufficient that plaintiff, by his act, contributed thereto, but it must further appear that in doing that act he was at fault, and guilty of what the law calls negligence. . . . In this respect the law exacts such judgment respecting dangers and risks incident to the circumstances as a reasonable man would form, and such vigilance in observing the approach of danger, and such care in avoiding it, as a prudent man, reasonably careful of his safety, would exercise." New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Bell, 53 N. J. L. 283-289, 21 Atl. 1052. But such duty does not extend to dangers from causes ab extra. Watson v. Camden & A. R. Co. 55 N. J. L. 125, 19 L.R.A. 487, 39 Am. St. Rep. 624, 26 Atl. 136.

"In the trial of cases of this kind, where it appears that both parties were in fault, the primary consideration is whether the faulty act of the plaintiff was so remote from the injury as not to be regarded in a legal sense as a cause of the accident, or whether the injury was proximately due to the plaintiff's negligence as well as to the negligence of the defendant. If the faulty act of the plaintiff simply presents the condition under which the injury was received, and was not in a legal sense a contributory cause thereof, then the sole question will be whether, under the circumstances and in the situation in which the injury was received, it was due to the defendant's negligence." Menger v. Laur, 55 N. J. L. 205-216, 20 L.R.A. 61, 26 Atl. 180.

The plaintiff in error cites the following cases in support of the request: Allerton v. Boston & M. R. Co. 146 Mass. 241, 15 N. E. 621. In this case plaintiff's intestate, on leaving defendant's train, started to cross the railroad on a public street while the gates were down, without looking to see whether any train was approaching on the other track, and she was injured by a train which she could have seen if she had looked. Under these conditions she would be guilty of negligence in not looking, and the court said: "There was no express or implied invitation to her to cross, nor any excuse for her to cross without looking for the coming train." The fact that the gates were down was an incident tending to show negligence on her part, as it was warning that a train was coming, which emphasized her duty to look for a danger of which she was warned, but it was not held to be conclusive.

In Cleary v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 140 Pa. 19, 21 Atl. 242, the plaintiff's intestate thought that the gates were down for a particular train to pass on one of the tracks, and while standing on one track, he was struck by a train coming from the opposite direction on another track and killed. The court said: "He stepped in front of a moving train in broad daylight." His negligence was apparent, for the place was a dangerous one of which he was warned by the closed gates.

In Sheehan v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 166 Pa. 354, 31 Atl. 120, it appears that plaintiff went upon the track in front of an approaching train and was injured. The court refused to consider his testimony that he stopped, looked, and listened, and held that he was guilty of contributory negligence in disregarding the warning and going upon the track in front of an approaching train. The opinion is very brief, and the facts meager, but the case was held to be controlled by Cleary v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. supra.

Wyatt v. Great Western R. Co. 6 Best & S. 709, is also relied upon, but this case has no application, for it is based upon the interpretation given to a statute, which required that gates of a certain character should be kept constantly closed at railway crossings, and to be opened when the circumstances justified it, with due regard to safety, and this was held to be a prohibition to the public to pass over the railway except when the gates were open. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The facts in this case showed that the gates were closed, and the plaintiff, desiring to cross, undertook to open them, when one of them of its own weight flew back and struck his horse, which became unmanageable and the plaintiff was thrown out of his carriage and injured. The decision for the defendant was put upon the ground that the law prohibited the plaintiff from crossing when the gates were down, intimating that he might have a remedy against the company if it did not open the gates when it should. None of these cases support the claim that one who attempts to cross a railroad when the crossing gates are down assumes all chances of injury, and cannot recover simply because he attempts to cross when the gates are down. In each case there was another element bearing on the question of negligence. The request was too broad when applied to the evidence in the case, and was properly refused.

The result is that the judgment under review will be affirmed.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

ROBERT DENNERY, by Next Friend,

v.

GREAT ATLANTIC & PACIFIC TEA COMPANY, Plff. in Err.

(— N. J. —, 81 Atl. 861.)

Highway — runaway horse — presumption of negligence.

1. The unexplained presence upon a public highway of a runaway horse harnessed to a wagon, unattended by the owner or other person, raises a prima facie presumption of negligence on the part of the owner.

Evidence — ownership — inference.

2. Evidence that the wagon which ran over the plaintiff was conspicuously marked with defendant's name was sufficient to justify the inference that defendant was the owner.

Appeal and error — nonsuit — proof afterwards supplied.

3. The refusal of a nonsuit for failure of Headnotes by WHITE, J.

Note. — May negligence be inferred from mere fact that a horse runs away.

This note is supplemental to the note to Coller v. Knox, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 171, where the earlier cases are considered.

For the subject of liability, in the absence of negligence, for damage by runaway horse, see the note to Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. v. Clark, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 717.

For the duty of driver of horse that is running away, see the note to Kimble v. Stackpole, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 148.

proofs is not ground for reversal if said proofs were afterwards supplied by either party in the progress of the trial.

Trial — negligent handling of horse — question for jury.

4. Where there was proof that the driver of a young horse, which he was driving that day for the first time, drove it up to a railroad crossing where the gates were down and upon which a freight train was drilling at the time, and left it a little while with its head toward the gates and with the hitching weight attached, and then returned and took the hitching weight off, put it in the wagon, and, in order to see that all was right with the goods therein, went behind the rear end of the wagon, so that he may have been in such a position that he could not reach the reins in time to control the horse should it take fright at the sounds which might be expected to occur from the drilling train, and which in fact did occur, causing the horse to run away, it was a question for the jury whether or not the driver was guilty of negligence.

(November 20, 1911.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Hudson County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff by defendant's runaway horse. Affirmed.

Statement by White, J.:

The writ reviews a judgment on verdict in favor of the plaintiff, who was three years and two months old, for personal injuries received by him from being run over on the public highway or street in Jersey City by defendant's runaway horse, attached to its delivery wagon. The errors assigned are to a refusal to nonsuit and to a refusal of a motion for the direction of a verdict in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff's case showed a driverless horse running away, harnessed to a delivery wagon upon which defendant's name appeared, and coming around a corner, (into the street where it ran over plaintiff) from the direction of a railroad crossing a short distance away, where trains were frequently drilling. Upon this evidence the court refused a motion for nonsuit. Defendant then called the driver (Wood), who testified that the team belonged to defendants, and that he, as their employee, was making deliveries for them with it when the accident happened; that this was the first day he had ever driven the horse in question (which was five years old); that he drove up to the railroad crossing where the gates were down and a freight train, consisting of small dirt cars on springs, was drilling at the time, and attaching the hitching weight to the horse's head, left it with its head toward the gates while he made a delivery; that he then returned, removed the hitching weight, put it in the wagon, and went around back of the wagon to see that all was right, and had come up on the side next to where the reins were when the horse became frightened at the starting of

For cases on negligence in leaving horse unhitched in highway, see the notes to Moulton v. Lewiston, B. & B. Street R. Co. 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 845, and Corona Coal & I. Co. v. White, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 958.

The decision in DENNERY v. GREAT ATLANTIC & P. TEA CO. upon the affirmative side of the question which is the subject of this note follows the doctrine of the New Jersey cases of Kokoll v. Brohm & B. Lumber Co. 77 N. J. L. 169, 71 Atl. 120, and Francois v. Hanff, 77 N. J. L. 364, 71 Atl. 1128, cited in the aforesaid note to Coller v. Knox.

In Kimble v. Stackpole, 60 Wash. 35, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 148, 110 Pac. 677, the court, in approving the direction of a verdict for the defendant, said: "In this case there is no evidence showing negligence, or from which negligence could be reasonably inferred. What caused the team to run away is not made to appear with any degree of certainty."

Similarly it is intimated in Keaveny v. Moran, 208 Mass. 277, 94 N. E. 274, that if the horse was beyond the control of his driver, that might have excused running over the plaintiff.

In some jurisdictions the question is affected by statute. Thus, in Trenchard v. New Orleans R. & Light Co. 123 La. 36, 48 So. 576, the court, in affirming a judgment against the owner of the horse, quoted the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

statute providing that "the owner of an animal is answerable for the damage he has caused," and said: "Conceding, for the argument, that this article is not to be taken literally, but merely as establishing a presumption of fault on the part of the owner of the animal, such as he may rebut by proof of entire absence of negligence on his part, the defendant in this case, who left his horse unhitched and unattended in the street, is not entirely blameless, no matter how much the animal may have been accustomed theretofore to stand when left in that way."

In Birmingham v. Gallery, Rap. Jud. Quebec, 36 C. S. 481, the court referred to the statute declaring the proprietor of an animal responsible for damage caused by it, as founded on a presumption "de faute, de negligence, ou d'imprudence," but reversed a judgment against the defendant, on the ground that he had proved that there was no fault on his part.

It may be noted that in Jones v. Lee, 28 Times L. R. 92 (a case not strictly within the scope of this note, as the horse which had escaped from a field into the highway while apparently fractious was not "running away"), it was held that there was no common-law duty of an owner whose land adjoined the highway to keep his animals off the highway.

B. B. B.

the freight cars or the puffing of the engine, both of which the driver heard start up at that moment, and swerving sharply around started to run; that the driver grabbed at the reins, but missed them and fell down, and the horse ran around the corner, and up the street, where the plaintiff was injured.

Messrs. Griggs & Harding for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Tumulty & Cutley for defendant in error.

White, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By reason of their nature and training, horses can be safely utilized to draw vehicles upon public streets only when controlled by reasonably competent drivers. This fact is in such complete accord with universal experience that the legal duty to supply such a driver exists, and consequently it is prima facie evidence of negligence for a person to permit his horse attached to a wagon to go out upon a public street without any driver or other person in charge. If, therefore, a horse and wagon are found passing along a street with no one in charge, the absence of the driver gives rise to a prima facie presumption of negligence on the part of the owner. The fact that the horse is running does not negative this presumption. That a horse under such circumstances, finding itself without anyone's guidance or control, should soon commence running, is the result both of its nature and of its training. Its nature is to frighten at unusual sights and sounds and to run away from them. It has been trained, however, to confide in and rely upon its driver's guidance and protection, instead of resorting to its natural instincts. When, therefore, it realizes the unaccustomed absence of this guidance and sense of protection, it becomes doubly confused and timid, and sights and sounds which seemed to it harmless in the presence of its driver now seem strange and terrifying, and to be avoided only by flight. We think, therefore, that, as stated by the supreme court in Kokoll v. Brohm & B. Lumber Co. 77 N. J. L. 169, 71 Atl. 120, and in Francois v. Hanff, 77 N. J. L. 364, 71 Atl. 1128, the unexplained presence upon a public highway of a team of runaway horses harnessed to a wagon, unattached by the owner or other person, raises a prima facie presumption of negligence on the part of the owner.

The other point raised by the refusal of nonsuit assignment of error, viz., that ownership in the defendant was not proved in 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the plaintiff's case, is without merit, for two reasons:

First. It was proved that the defendant's name appeared conspicuously on the wagon, and we approve the doctrine as laid down by the supreme court in Edgeworth v. Wood, 58 N. J. L. 463, 33 Atl. 940, following Lord Denman's ruling in Joyce v. Capel, 8 Car. & P. 370, that evidence that the wagon which ran over plaintiff was marked with defendant's name was sufficient to justify the inference that defendant was its owner, and that such inference established prima facie that defendant was in possession and control of the wagon by the driver, its servant.

Second. The proof of defendant's ownership was clearly established in defendant's own case. This court has held that the refusal of a nonsuit for failure of proofs is not ground for reversal if the defect was afterwards supplied by evidence taken in the progress of the trial. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Dailey, 37 N. J. L. 526; Hibernia Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Meyer, 39 N. J. L. 482. The history of this practice is fully stated in the opinion of the supreme court in Bostwick v. Willett, 72 N. J. L. 21, 60 Atl. 398.

Coming now to the explanation, as offered by defendant's driver and its other witnesses, of how the runaway occurred, we do not think it presented such a clear negation of negligence on the part of the driver as to justify the court in directing a verdict for the defendant. The horse was young, and this driver was driving it that day for the first time. He drove it up to the gates at the railroad crossing where a dirt car freight train was drilling at the time immediately in front of the horse. When such a train started or stopped in the process of drilling, the attendant noises from the jerking link couplings and clashing bumpers are well calculated to frighten any ordinary horse standing with its head in close proximity to the track. The shifting or other engine itself, with its puffing and escaping steam, running first one way and then the other in drilling the cars upon the different switches and sidings, may be even more startling than a locomotive pulling an ordinary train. When, then, with all these circumstances before him, the driver removed the hitching weight from this strange young horse's head before going back to the rear end of the wagon to see if everything was all right, instead of afterward, it was clearly a question for a jury to decide whether he was or was not negligent in taking a chance of the horse becoming frightened (as it did) by a sudden starting of the freight train or of its shifting engine or both, with their naturally attendant noises, at a time when he (the driver) neither had hold of the reins nor was in a position to catch them up in time to control the horse, and prevent an accident. It is true the driver said he was at the side of the wagon just ready to get in, and with the reins within reach, when the horse started. But the facts are that the horse took fright at the starting of the train or the puffing of the engine, that it turned and ran away, and that the driver did not get his hands upon the reins, although he tried to do so. The jury might well have concluded from these circumstances that the driver was not as near the reins when the horse started as he thought he was, and that the accident in reality happened by reason of his unhitching the horse and then going so far away from it that it was beyond his power of control in case it became frightened, as it did, at the noises which the driver had every reason to expect would occur, and also good reason to expect might scare the horse which he had thus placed in a position of such close proximity to the alarming sounds. Under all the circumstances, we think there was no error in the refusal to direct a verdict.

The judgment of the Hudson Circuit is affirmed.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

MAYOR AND ALDERMEN OF JERSEY CITY FOR THE USE OF STEWART H.
ELLIOTT, Plff. in Err.,

v.

GEORGE J. SCHOPPE et al.

(— N. J. —, 82 Atl. 913.)

Bonds — constable — forfeiture.

Where a constable was directed by a writ of attachment to attach the goods of the de-

Headnote by MINTURN, J.

Note. — Liability of officer's bond for failure to return money deposited to avoid execution of writ.

The commentator in 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 724, says that to charge the sureties in the officer's bond, the act complained of must either have been one that he might rightfully have done as such officer, or one which was actually done by him as an officer under a claim of right to do so as such; and that when the officer is under no legal duty to perform the act, and goes outside the line of his duties and acts without the scope of his authority, the sureties cannot be held liable. In some cases the courts have drawn a distinction between acts done defendant named therein, and accepted from defendant the amount of the plaintiff's claim and costs, and paid the same to the plaintiff's attorneys, and thereafter the defendant in the writ succeeded upon the trial of the action, and the constable failed to return to him the money deposited, held, in a suit upon the constable's bond for a forfeiture thereof, that the acts of the constable were not performed in furtherance of his duty, as prescribed by law, but were performed by him unofficially or colore officii, and as such could not subject his sureties to liability on the bond.

(March 4, 1912.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Hudson County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in a suit on a constable's bond. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Pierre F. Cook for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Marshall Van Winkle for defendants in error.

Minturn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

While about to sail for Europe from Hoboken, the baggage of Stewart H. Elliott was attached by Constable George J. Schoppe on a writ of attachment issued out of the first district court of Jersey City, at the suit of one Wallace H. Owen. When the object of the constable's writ was announced, Elliott protested the correctness of the claim, but finally paid the amount with costs of suit to the constable, who gave Elliott a receipt and thereupon released the goods. Instead of paying the money into court, the constable turned it over to the attorney for the plaintiff in the writ, who gave him a receipt for it, and, upon the same day, the constable returned the writ into court indorsed fully satisfied. Elliott entered his appearance to the suit in due course, and a trial took place which resulted in a judgment in his favor. He then instituted this suit through the mu-by virtue of office and those done under color of office, holding the sureties liable for the former but not for the latter. But this distinction is now disregarded in most jurisdictions, and the sureties are held liable for both the nonfeasances and the misfeasances of the officer, while assuming to act officially, irrespective of whether the act is done virtute officii or colore officii. These principles govern the few decisions which fall within the foregoing title.

In circumstances somewhat like those involved in JERSEY CITY USE OF ELLIOTT v. SCHOPPE, it was held in an early North Carolina case that the sheriff was but the private agent of the party to pay the debt, and that he alone was responsible in his municipality, as the obligee named in the constable's bond, to have the same declared forfeited against the constable and his sureties. The insistent made is that the payment of the money by the constable to the plaintiff's attorneys, instead of turning it into court, was a breach of the condition of the bond, and legally worked its forfeiture. The Hudson circuit court, sitting without a jury, resolved this contention against the plaintiff, and the legality of that adjudication is before us for review upon writ of error.

The constable's bond to the municipality contained the usual condition that, "if the said George J. Schoppe shall well and truly perform the duties of his said office of constable of Jersey City, then the above obligation to be void," etc.

The seventy-first section of the district court act (2 Comp. Stat. 1910, p. 1978) provides that the defendant in attachment may secure the release of the goods attached by giving bond "in double the value of the property attached conditioned for the due and safe return of the goods . . . in case judgment shall . . . [go against him]."

The 18th section of the act provides that, instead of furnishing a bond, he "may deposit a sum of money equal to the amount of the penalty of such bond or recognizance, private capacity for his breach of trust. State ex rel. Ellis v. Long, 30 N. C. (8 Ired. L.) 513. In this case, it appeared that the defendant, in a writ of capias ad respondendum placed in the hands of the sheriff a sum of money to discharge the debt for which he was sued, but the sheriff neglected to apply it for that purpose, and the defendant in the writ was compelled to pay the debt out of the other funds. The court said that the precept, commanded the sheriff to take the body of the relator, and to keep him safely to answer the action, but it gave him no authority to receive the relator's money; and that therefore there was no right of action upon the sheriff's bond.

And in another action upon the same bond, it was held that the sureties were not liable where the sheriff, instead of taking a bail bond, accepted from the defendant in the capias, a deposit of money, and failed to return it although the defendant in the capias offered to surrender himself and demanded the money. State v. Long, 30 N. C. (8 Ired. L.) 415. In this case the court said: "The latter [the sureties] are liable upon a contract expressed in definite terms, and their liability cannot be carried beyond the fair meaning of those terms. Those required by the statute and contained in this bond are, that the sheriff will execute and due return make of all process to him directed; that he will pay and satisfy all fees and sums of money, by him received, or levied by virtue of any process, into the proper office, into which the same, by the tenor thereof, ought to be paid, or to the person to whom the same shall be due; and in all other things will truly and faithfully execute the office of sheriff. It seems to us quite clear upon the terms per se and upon previous adjudications on them, that the present case does not come within any of them. There has been no failure to execute and return process here. The clause, for the payment of money received or levied, is obviously restricted to money thus received or levied under, and by virtue of process commanding the sheriff to make the money, because it requires that he shall pay it into the office or to the person to whom, by the tenor thereof, that is, of the writ, it ought to be paid or may be due. Here he had no such writ or process, and the money was received wholly without authority of law, except the authority which was derived from the contract of the parties. The remaining provision only binds the officer affirmatively to the faithful execution of the duties of his office. It is thus seen that there is no clause to cover the case of an abuse or usurpation of power. There are no negative words that the sheriff will commit no wrong by color of his office, nor do anything not authorized by law. In many cases, therefore, it has been held that the sheriff's sureties were not liable for the sheriff, when he undoubtedly would be for his deputy."

So, in Kero v. Powell, 25 U. C. C. P. 448, it was held that since the sheriff was without power to accept a deposit and release the defendant in a writ of capias, his sureties could not be held liable for his failure to return the money. In this case, the plaintiff deposited a certain sum in lieu of a bail bond to secure the release of a defendant in a writ of capias, but the plaintiff subsequently rendered the defendant in a writ to the sheriff, and he was again placed in jail, where he remained until he was discharged on an order of insolvency. The principle which seemed to govern the court in this case was that the statute which made the sureties liable for the sheriff's failure to pay "over the moneys received by him" must of necessity be confined to such moneys as, in the words of the covenant, "he shall receive by virtue of his said office as sheriff," thus giving the action upon the covenant only to the party to any legal proceeding in respect of any omission or default of the sheriff not paying to such party any moneys received for him, by the sheriff by virtue of his office.

In Feller v. Gates, 40 Or. 543, 56 L.R.A. 630, 91 Am. St. Rep. 492, 67 Pac. 416, holding that the sureties on a constable's bond are not liable for the return of money taken by him from an execution defendant to save the execution and give time to perfect an appeal, under a promise to return it in case the appeal is perfected, since such act is not within the constable's authority,—the court said that the promise of the constable to retrieve the money upon the performance of the stipulated condition which sum shall be paid to the clerk of the court," etc.

It is the conspicuous fact in this case that, instead of complying with either of these alternatives, the defendant in the writ paid to the constable the exact amount of the plaintiff's demand, with costs. It will be observed, therefore, that, in accepting and receipting for this sum, the constable was not acting virtute officii, but unofficially, and not in the due execution of the writ. The act prescribes the limitations of his duty, and the condition of the bond is limited to the faithful performance of such duty. The act performed by him, therefore, in accepting payment or satisfaction of the claim, was performed colore officii and clearly not virtute officii.

Liability of sureties upon a bond of this character, it may be said in passing, can attach only as a matter strictissimi juris, and so it has been held that "sureties for an officer are liable only in the event of his failure to perform his duty. If in the line of his duty he make a contract as agent for another, his sureties are not liable for the breach of that contract, as the contract is not the officer's. Brown v. Phipps, 6 Smedes & M. 51; Com. v. Swope, 45 Pa. 535, 84 Am. Dec. 518; Parks v. Ross, 11 How. 362, 13 L. ed. 730.

These considerations have presented the necessarily showed that it was not received under color of office, since to render the payment a collection colore officii, the party making it must part with the title to the money, relying upon the right of the officer to receive it in trust for the adverse party; and that therefore the receipt conclusively showed that the plaintiff did not intend to part with the title to the money, or expect the constable would pay any part of it to the judgment creditor, so that the constable received it in his private character in trust for the plaintiff, and not by virtue or even color of his office. This being the case, said the court, the sureties were entitled to invoke the rule of strictissimi juris, which rendered them liable only for the official act of their principal.

An analogous situation is presented in cases like De Sisto v. Stimmel, 58 App. Div. 486, 69 N. Y. Supp. 431, holding that where a city marshal, instead of exacting an indemnity bond from an attachment plaintiff as authorized by statute, receives from such plaintiff a deposit as security against damage from the levy, his act is not an official one, but purely individual; and that therefore his failure to return the money upon the attachment defendant's failure to institute an action against him cannot constitute the foundation of an action against the surety upon his official bond, which was conditioned upon the faithful execution of the duties of the office of marshal, without fraud, deceit, or oppression. In this case the court said: "In the cases in which the surety has been held liable for acts of a principal done under color of office, there was present an element of trespass or wrongdoing as against third parties. There was no such element in the receipt of the money by the marshal in this case: He and the plaintiff entered into an agreement by which the former deposited with him a certain sum of money as indemnity. The marshal had no power to exact it. He had no authority to demand any other indemnity than that provided by the statute, namely, a bond. But it was not a wrongful act on his part to accept other indemnity if it were tendered or furnished him by the plaintiff. The furnishing of that indemnity, however, was a matter resting in contract between himself and the plaintiff. The liability of a surety upon a marshal's bond does not extend to making good defaults of the marshal upon special contracts which may be made by him with persons for whose benefit he is charged with the execution of legal process. Those contracts are not made officially, and, while the officer may be liable personally upon them, they are not within the obligation of an official bond, such as that upon which this action was brought. The condition of that bond related to the marshal well and faithfully executing the duties of his office. It did not apply to any act of his that was not really or ostensibly connected with that duty. The making of a special private contract with a particular plaintiff in an execution is no part of the marshal's duty. There does not appear to have been any fraud, deceit, oppression, or coercion on the part of the marshal in taking the deposit, but the entire arrangement was one of a private contract, a liability for which could not have been within the contemplation of the surety, either actually or by intentment, at the time he became a party to the official bond."

As to the liability of a bond of a public officer for interest received on public money, see the note in 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 855.

As to liability of bondsmen for peace officer for acts of latter in respect of property taken from prisoner, see the note in 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 873.

As to the liability of sureties on the bond of a public officer for default of the principal during a prior term, see the note in 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 131.

As to the right of sureties who have made good a loss occasioned by their principal's default or misconduct to be subrogated to the rights of the obligee or beneficiary of the bond against a third person, see the note in 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 155.

As to the liability of a public officer to the sureties of another public officer for loss sustained by them through the former's neglect to require proper settlement of accounts, see the note in 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 115.

L. A. W.

test of liability in this state since the adjudication by the supreme court in 1860 of State, Allen, Prosecutor, v. Conover, 28 N. J. L. 228, 78 Am. Dec. 54. In that case Chief Justice Green, speaking for the court, referring to liability for acts done colore officii, or of an unofficial character, said: "In such case the officer is guilty of a tort, for which he is liable as an individual to the party injured, but it does not entitle the party to prosecute the officer on his official bond." Mr. Justice Haines, in the same case, defined acts done colore officii as "unofficial acts . . . committed under color of the office, such as cannot be lawfully done and cannot be justified by the official character of the sheriff, or by any process in his hands," citing Seeley v. Birdsall, 15 Johns. 267; Alcock v. Andrews, 2 Esp. 542, note; People ex rel. Kellogg v. Schuyler, 4 N. Y. 187.

Since its deliverance this adjudication has stood unquestioned in this state, and, although not followed by the Federal Supreme Court in Lammon v. Feusier, 111 U. S. 17, 28 L. ed. 337, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 286, it has quite properly been followed by the trial court in this instance, and has furnished ratio decidendi for its determination.

Having served as a precedent for over one half a century of our legal history, unquestioned by our courts, and unassailed by criticism, we are not disposed at this period, upon mere disputable considerations of abstract reasoning and expediency, to question its legal accuracy.

The judgment under review will therefore be affirmed.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

UNION PLANTERS BANK & TRUST COMPANY

v.

MEMPHIS HOTEL COMPANY et al., Apts.

(124 Tenn. 649, 139 S. W. 715.)

Injunction — against smoke nuisance — elevation of chimneys.

1. Injunction will not lie to prevent a property owner in a densely populated portion of the city, from causing smoke to issue from the chimneys of his building at an elevation lower than the roofs of neighboring buildings, although permitting it to issue at a lower level constitutes a nuisance to the occupants of such buildings.

Equity — retaining case to assess damages.

2. Where equity is by statute denied jurisdiction of claims for injury to property involving unliquidated damages, it cannot retain a suit for injunction and damages for the maintenance of a nuisance, in order to assess the damages, if the right to the injunction fails.

(June 10, 1911.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Chancery Court for Shelby County in complainant's favor in a suit brought to enjoin a smoke nuisance. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Caruthers Ewing and Wright & Wright for appellants.

Messrs. Sam Holloway and Robert Goodwin for appellees.

Green, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Union Planters' Bank & Trust Company, hereafter called the complainant, is the owner of a fifteen-story building in the city of Memphis, known as the "Tennessee Trust Building." The ground floor and the half story above are used for the quarters of the bank, and the upper stories are devoted to office purposes. This building is located on the south side of Madison, between Main and Front streets, and runs back toward Monroe street on the south.

On the corner of Main and Monroe streets is located the Peabody Hotel, of which Mrs. Annie B. Snowden and the Memphis Hotel Company are respectively the owner and lessee. The front of the hotel is on the northwest corner of Main street and Monroe street, and is a building five stories high, known as the "old building." Just west of this old building is a new one, ten stories high, known as the "Peabody Annex." The annex is almost due south from the Tennessee Trust Building; the nearest walls of these two buildings being about 97 feet apart.

In the annex is located a battery of boilers to supply heat, light, and power for the Note. — Doctrine of comparative injury in suit to enjoin nuisance.

This is the subject of a note in 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 881, to which this note is supplemental.

As to the doctrine of comparative injury in a suit to enjoin an infringement of patent, or an infringement suit, see note to Kryptok Co. v. Stead Lens Co. ante, 1. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Preliminary injunction.

Where, on an application for a preliminary injunction to restrain a nuisance, the right to the injunction is seriously disputed, and there is no claim that defendant is not and will not be responsible for any damage caused by the nuisance, it cannot be said that the plaintiff will be irreparably damaged by the refusal of the injunc-operation of the Peabody Hotel. The power thus generated is used to run the laundry machinery, dynamos, elevators, and for other ordinary purposes around the hotel. The boilers referred to are steam boilers, soft or bituminous coal being used in firing them, and for the escape of the smoke there is provided a smokestack running up on the western side of the annex building. This smokestack is made of cast-iron tiles, and runs up a few feet above the top of the annex building. As before stated, the annex is a ten-story building, and the Tennessee Trust Building is a fifteen-story building. The top of the smokestack of the annex is therefore about on a level with the twelfth floor of the Tennessee Trust Building, and the smokestack itself is about 140 feet distant from the south wall of the latter building.

The allegations of the bill are that in firing the boilers in the annex a large amount of dense black smoke is generated, which, when the wind is in a southerly direction, is blown directly against the south wall of the Tennessee Trust Building, soiling and blackening its walls, entering the windows, and blackening and ruining the inner walls and decorations; and it is averred by the complainant that this smoke is driven into its building in such quantities as to very seriously discommode its tenants, and that they are threatening to leave and are retained with difficulty. Other injuries are stated as the result of this smoke, and the complainant avers that it has suffered a large financial loss, and is threatened with an even greater one, on this account; and it charges the emission of this smoke, soot, etc., to constitute a continuing nuisance, and seeks an injunction to prevent or restrain it.

The defendants answered, and admitted the location of complainant's property and their property as charged in the bill, and admitted the location of the smokestack as stated, and that it did discharge smoke at intervals; but they insisted that no more smoke was thus made than was absolutely necessary in the proper operation of their plant, and they further stated that their appliances and equipment were up-to-date in every respect, and that skilled and competent engineers and firemen were in charge of their boilers and fires, with instructions to keep down the smoke as much as possible. They also stated that, as the result of a conference with the managers of complainant's building, a smoke consumer or device had been installed in their engine room, and that it had been given a faithful trial, and, in short, that they had earnestly sought to tion, and hence it will be refused where the issuance might be of grave hardship, attended with great loss, to the defendant. Maloney v. Katzenstein, 135 App. Div. 224, 120 N. Y. Supp. 418 (denying injunction to restrain continued operation of business carried on for about nineteen years).

And it has been held that such an injunction will not be granted unless plaintiff's right to relief is clear and practically beyond dispute, especially where there is no doubt suggested as to the ability of the defendant to respond in damages; hence it is error to issue a mandatory injunction pendente lite, requiring the defendant to make important structural changes in its building, or to discontinue business altogether. Newbold v. Childs Co. 132 N. Y. Supp. 366.

Final injunction.

Applications for final or permanent injunctions to restrain the operation of a business in towns, villages, or cities, generally involve a consideration of the benefits and injuries to the parties therefrom, considered with reference to the locality. Generally, the right of inhabitants of towns or cities, to relief, necessarily depends upon the degree of injury arising from the alleged annoyance. The injury and resulting damage flowing therefrom may be great, or they may be slight; hence the determination of the rights of the complaining party and his remedy must necessarily depend upon the varying circumstances of the case. The 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

rule has been thus stated: "It is well settled that the injury must not be fanciful or imaginary, nor such as to result in a trifling annoyance, inconvenience, or discomfort which may affect those who possess too sensitive a nature or too fastidious a taste. The law is applied only to the normal man, the man of ordinary habits and ordinary sensibilities. The law only takes cognizance of sensible and substantial discomforts and inconvenience. The necessities of the life and growth of towns and cities require the establishment and continuance of certain occupations, business enterprises, and works, in the conduct of which some degree of annoyance and discomfort is necessarily incident. The jurisdiction of a court of equity to afford relief by interfering with a private nuisance, by way of injunction, is based upon the ground of preventing irreparable injury or the multiplicity of suits. The mere diminution in the value of property or of the business by the nuisance, without irreparable injury, will not furnish sufficient cause for equitable relief. The nuisance must be of a constantly recurring and permanent nature; and from such nuisance there must flow injuries causing substantial, tangible, and material discomforts and inconvenience, which result in a loss of health, loss of trade, partial but substantial destruction of business, or the ruin of property, and the deprivation of its use and enjoyment to a material and substantial extent, before a court of equity will interfere by in-remedy the evil complained of with all reasonable means in their power. Defendants averred also that complainant did itself operate boilers and had a smokestack upon its building, and that this smokestack gave out at times large quantities of dense smoke, and that, when the wind was in the north, and the atmosphere was damp and humid, and the smoke inclined to settle, said smoke coming from complainant's stack entered into the hotel building and blackened and injured its furnishings and incommoded its guests, and, in general, inflicted the same sort of damage upon defendants' property that complainant alleged it suffered from the hotel smokestack.

A great deal of proof was taken by both parties to this controversy, which we cannot undertake to review in this opinion, but all of which has been carefully considered. Upon the proof heard, the chancellor gave a decree in favor of the complainant, granting the relief sought by it in a somewhat modified form.

The prayer of complainant's bill was as follows:

"The complainant prays the court to cause to be issued its writ of injunction, enjoining the defendants and their servants and employees, and the servants and employees of either of them, from causing dense smoke, soot, cinders, unconsumed gases, or noxious vapors to issue from the chimneys or stacks of the buildings known as the Peabody Hotel and Peabody Annex."

The chancellor decreed that defendants be perpetually enjoined from causing dense smoke, cinders, soot, unconsumed gases, or noxious vapors to issue from the chimneys or stacks of the building known as the Peabody Hotel Annex, described in the pleadings, "at an elevation lower than the level of the roof of the Tennessee Trust Building."

The injunction awarded by the chancellor, while not so in form, is in reality a mandatory injunction. Its effect is to require the defendants to extend their smokestack some 50 feet higher into the air, in order to bring it on a level with the roof of the Tennessee Trust Building.

The question before us is as to the policy and propriety of the chancery court thus undertaking to regulate the smoke nuisance in the business districts of our large cities.

As a matter of course, there are only two ways in which the defendants can comply with the chancellor's decree and operate their plant. They must either cease creating and releasing from their stack dense smoke, soot, cinders, unconsumed gases, or noxious vapors, or, if such smoke and gases junction to restrain the maintenance of or to abate the alleged evil." Gus Blass Dry Goods Co. v. Reinman & Wolfort, — Ark. —, 143 S. W. 1087.

As to enjoining the operation of a lawful business alleged to constitute a nuisance, the rule has been asserted that, even after a full hearing on the merits, the court is not inclined to enjoin petty annoyances, but looks to the whole circumstances and what is fair, just, and equitable between the public at large and the defendant, and will only grant an injunction when the evils complained of are substantial and cannot be otherwise remedied, and when the business may be conveniently carried on elsewhere. Kenesaw v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. — Neb. —, 136 N. W. 990 (railroad company enjoined from maintaining stock yards at a certain place, at the instance of village).

After a hearing on the merits, neither the convenience nor the inconvenience of the public can affect plaintiff's right to have a nuisance abated, where it is found to exist, if he is damaged thereby, since his private property cannot be destroyed because of public convenience without first compensating him therefor. Stark v. Coe, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 134 S. W. 373 (holding the fact of public convenience or necessity of surrounding country no defense to an action to abate a corn sheller which is a nuisance to adjoining landowners).

Compare with Bliss v. Washoe Copper Co. 109 C. C. A. 133, 186 Fed. 789, holding that a person injured in his property by the operation of a large smelter will be denied relief in equity, and remitted to his action at law for damages, where, on a comparison of injuries, the injury to the plaintiff, although substantial, is slight as compared with the injury to the defendant and the public which would result from the issuance of an injunction.

And where defendant's plant represents an investment of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and in comparison the plaintiff's farm is of insignificant value, the court will deny an injunction restraining the defendant from polluting a stream flowing through plaintiff's farm, such pollution arising in part from the operation of defendant's factory, where the pollution is also in part caused by the operation of other factories, the owners or operators of which are not parties to the proceeding. Whalen v. Union Bag & Paper Co. 145 App. Div. 1, 129 N. Y. Supp. 391. In this case, however, the court allowed the plaintiff damages for the pollution of the stream, and further provided that the plaintiff might at any time apply at the foot of a judgment for an injunction, upon showing that otherwise the stream of water was reasonably pure, or that the other parties illegally contaminating it are properly enjoined, or have ceased to pollute it, and further provided that, upon showing such facts and making it appear that the ends of justice so required, an injunction would issue.

A. G. S.

are created and released by them, they must run their chimney or smokestack up to the level of the roof of the Tennessee Trust Building. As to the first alternative, it is not insisted that the defendants should be restrained from operating the hotel, nor is it insisted that they have not a right to use their boilers in connection with the operation of their hotel. It is not even urged that they should be required to use any fuel different from the kind which they now use. Complainant could make no such insistence as this, for the proof shows that in its own plant it uses the same character of fuel that defendants use, namely, bituminous or soft coal. Complainant does insist that defendants install some device to abate their smoke, or else do so by more careful firing.

After a careful examination of this record, we are in grave doubt as to whether there is any device which could be attached to or used in connection with defendants' boilers which would consume and do away with the smoke, cinders, and gases there generated to any beneficial extent. In other words, we are not convinced, from the proof before us, that any such thing as a practical smoke consumer has yet been constructed and put into use. There is some evidence indicating that devices of this character have been installed and used successfully for a time; but there is no satisfactory showing that there is anything on the market or to be had which, for a considerable length of time, when used in connection with boilers burning soft coal, to any extent continues to eradicate and do away with the resulting smoke, soot, cinders, etc. In fact, it is not pretended that there is anything of the kind which attempts or proposes to eliminate the gases or vapors released by the combustion of soft coal, and the prayer of the bill and the decree of the chancellor are directed alike against smoke, soot, cinders, and unconsumed gases or vapors. There is no satisfactory proof that defendants are negligent, or use other than ordinary and careful methods, in firing their boilers, and we are of opinion that the court would not be warranted in making an order upon defendants to adopt any particular plan or system of keeping up their fires.

We are also of opinion that the court would not be justified in ordering the defendants to install or adopt any particular kind of smoke consumer or like device. There is no sufficient showing that with any of them the proper result could be obtained for any length of time. The chancellor evidently reached the same conclusion as we do as to these matters, and therefore, believing that complainant was entitled to relief, he 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) sought to give it by pronouncing the decree heretofore set out.

In view of what we have said, it is plainly apparent that the decree below is just what we have heretofore indicated—a mandatory injunction, requiring the defendants to extend their smokestack 50 feet higher into the air.

This court has said: "The rule is that a mandatory injunction, such as is asked for in this case, will not be granted, except in extreme cases and when courts of law are unable to afford adequate redress, or when the injury complained of cannot be compensated in damages." Post v. Southern R. Co. 103 Tenn. 184, 216, 55 L.R.A. 481, 52 S. W. 301, 309, citing Gibson, Suit in Ch. pp. 784-806; 1 High, Inj. p. 3; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. p. 1359; Hall v. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. (Tenn.) 12 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 41.

There can be no doubt, upon the proof before us, that complainant has sustained injury by reason of the operation of the plant of the defendants. Nevertheless it does not appear that defendants have conducted these operations in an unusual or negligent manner. The proof indicates that they have employed skilled help in their boiler room, and that they have manifested at all times a disposition to reduce the quantity of smoke emitted from their stacks by installing a smoke consumer and by instructions and warning to their fireman. It is also in evidence that smoke, being the result of imperfect combustion, is a dead loss of fuel, and that therefore it is to the interest of all persons operating boilers of this character, to secure as far as possible perfect combustion, and thereby utilize all their fuel. Self-interest, therefore, would prompt these defendants, and all others so situated, to reduce their smoke as much as possible, since their fuel bill is reduced accordingly.

On the question of running up this stack 50 feet higher, we could not rest easy in the conclusion that it was safe and practical to make the attempt, on the evidence before us. Leaving out of consideration all question of the expense to the defendant thereby involved, we doubt the wisdom of such an effort in this case. This stack, as before stated, runs up along the west wall of the Peabody Annex. If we concede that the stack as it exists at present is of sufficient strength to support the downward crush weight of the extension, it is still manifest that there is no feasible way of supplying lateral support to resist the wind pressure for this additional stack. Certain methods are suggested by complainant's counsel, but they do not seem practical.

The extension of this stack would be about 50 feet high. If made of metal corresponding with the other portion of the stack, it would weigh about 5 tons. It would be out of the question for a chancery court to order the erection of such a structure, high up in the air, in the heart of a city like this, with thousands of people passing nearby daily, unless it was entirely manifest that this superstructure could be erected and maintained with entire safety. To say the least of it, the evidence in the record is conflicting on this proposition.

We cannot feel sure but that, if adopted, the chancellor's plan for remedying this particular nuisance might result in the creation of a much greater nuisance, that would be a greater menace to a greater number of people.

We prefer, however, to put our decision on a broader ground than the particular facts of this case which we have stated.

The annoyance and damage which complainant sustains from this smokestack is no doubt serious, but, in undertaking to find a remedy, we must consider the effects and results of that remedy. The situation existing between complainant's property and the defendants' property is by no means uncommon in any city. Such conditions are the rule rather than the exception. The buildings in none of our cities are of uniform height. All buildings in this day, which house any establishments of any considerable importance, are equipped with boilers, use coal, and make smoke. This smoke has to escape, and there must be smokestacks, and wherever one building is higher than another, it will suffer from the smoke issuing from the stacks of the lower, unless some means could be devised whereby all stacks could be made a uniform height; and even this would not obviate the trouble, because of the tendency of smoke to descend in damp weather, and because of downward eddies in the air currents, which exist in the neighborhood of all high buildings.

The complainant in this case seems to suffer more than is ordinary. The difference between its damage, however, and the damage of any of its neighbors who have buildings higher than those adjoining, is only one of degree.

If the chancellor's decree were followed, it would commit the courts of this state to a policy that would prove embarrassing in the extreme. Any owner of a higher building could compel the adjacent owner of a lower building to run a smokestack up to a point on a level with the first owner's roof. The height of the extension demanded in this case is 50 feet, and we doubt if that could be safely accomplished. Suppose that, instead of being a fifteen-story building, the Tennessee Trust Building was thirty stories high. Upon the same principle, it could compel the extension of this Peabody stack up to the level of a thirty-story roof. Furthermore, both of these buildings are located in the heart of the city of Memphis, as has been stated. A fifteen-story building is hardly the limit of the architectural development of this section of the city. There will in time doubtless be buildings erected in this immediate neighborhood much higher than the Tennessee Trust Building or the Peabody Hotel. Upon the principle of the chancellor's decree, if it were adopted, when these new buildings were erected, they could compel the defendants to again extend their smokestack into the air, and could compel the Tennessee Trust Building to extend its smokestack, and so this process might be repeated indefinitely. Under modern conditions, and with the use of steel and modern methods, there seems to be no limit to the height which buildings may reach, and it would be extremely unwise for the courts of chancery of this state to inaugurate a policy of requiring the smokestacks of our cities to be put on a level.

We have stated the case strongly in the illustrations above used, but we have not gone beyond the legitimate result that follows the chancellor's decree. We are unwilling to affirm this decree and make a precedent of this kind.

If such a policy of extending smokestacks should be attempted, the results would be unsightly as well as a menace to the community. There is no end to an undertaking of this sort, if once begun, and the evils resulting would be much greater than those sought to be remedied.

This court recently, in discussing the right to obtain an injunction against a nuisance, has said: "But there is one other principle which is of controlling influence in this department of the law, and in the light of which the foregoing principle must be weighed and applied. This is that the granting of an injunction is not a matter of absolute right, but rests in the sound discretion of the court, to be determined on a consideration of all the special circumstances of each case and the situation and surroundings of the parties, with a view to effect the ends of justice." Madison v. Ducktown Sulphur, Copper & I. Co. 113 Tenn. 331-358, 83 S. W. 658, 664.

To this we think must be added the observation that the rights, not only of the parties to the suit, but of the public generally, must be considered in all cases of this character. With reference to an application made for an order restraining the operation of a mill, which was alleged to be a nuisance by a neighbor resident, Judge Cooley said: "We cannot shut our eyes to the obvious truth that, if the running of this mill can be enjoined, almost any manufactory, in any of our cities, can be enjoined upon similar reasons. Some residents must be incommoded or annoyed by almost any of them. In the heaviest business quarters, and among the most offensive trades of every city, will be found persons who, from motives of convenience, economy, or necessity, have taken up their abode; but, in the administration of equitable policy, the greater and more general interest must be regarded, rather than the inferior and special. The welfare of community cannot be otherwise subverted and its necessities provided for. Minor inconveniences must be remedied by actions for the recovery of damages, rather than the severe process of injunction." Gilbert v. Showerman, 23 Mich. 448.

"The interests of the public are to be taken into consideration by the court, and when the issuance of an injunction will cause serious public inconvenience or loss, without a correspondingly great advantage to the complainant, no injunction will be granted. If the injunction would have the effect of greatly injuring or inconveniencing the public, it may be refused, even though as against defendant, the complainant would be entitled to its issuance." 22 Cyc. 784.

As we have heretofore pointed out, the difference in complainant's injury from the injuries suffered by many other property owners in the business sections of our cities is only one of degree, and, if the extension or elevation of this smokestack could be ordered, numbers of other smokestacks could be likewise dealt with at the suit of adjacent property owners.

While every application for an injunction is acted upon with reference to the facts of the particular case, still the facts of this case are identical with the facts of numerous other cases existing in all our cities, and, were the chancellor's decree affirmed, there would be no consistent way to deny like relief in these other cases. The result would prove dangerous to the community in many cases, if, indeed, it did not in this case. The precedent would be intolerable.

The smoke nuisance is one of the most serious problems with which our cities have to contend. What its solution is we do not know, but we are clearly of opinion that in congested quarters of our cities, where everybody is more or less an offender, courts of equity should not endeavor to solve this problem by the writ of injunction. None of the parties are innocent, and their rights are too doubtful, the solution of the problem is too obscure, and the interests too extensive, to justify the chancery court in making experiments with injunctions.

It is insisted by the complainant that, if not allowed an injunction in this case, it should at least be allowed a recovery for damages already suffered by its property. In addition to the injunction sought, the complainant, in its bill, prayed for a reference to ascertain damages previously sustained, and for a decree for the amount thereof.

Chapter 97 of the Acts of 1877 excepts from the jurisdiction of the chancery court cases of injury to property involving unliquidated damages. The chancery court obviously would have had no jurisdiction to determine this claim for damages, had it been presented alone. Such jurisdiction could have been acquired only as an incident to the main relief sought, to wit, the injunction. Taking jurisdiction for the purpose of injunction, the chancery court could have determined the entire controversy. Richi v. Chattanooga Brewing Co. 105 Tenn. 651, 58 S. W. 646, and cases cited.

The weight of authority, however, is that even though "the bill states matter within the equity jurisdiction, but plaintiff fails to establish such equity, the rule is that the bill must be dismissed, and cannot be retained for the purpose of allowing legal relief to which plaintiff has shown himself entitled." 16 Cyc. 111. See cases in note 80.

The Supreme Court of the United States has observed: "The rule is that where a cause of action cognizable at law is entertained in equity, on the ground of some equitable relief sought by the bill, which it turns out cannot, for defect of proof or other reason, be granted, the court is without jurisdiction to proceed further, and should dismiss the bill and remit the cause to a court of law." Mitchell v. Dowell, 105 U. S. 430, 26 L. ed. 1142, citing authorities.

This statement of the rule is approved in Kramer v. Cohn, 119 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 440, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277. See also Gamage v. Harris, 79 Me. 536, 11 Atl. 422, and Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co. (D. C.) 33 Fed. 915. In the case last cited the court dismissed the suit upon the failure of the prayer for injunction.

This court has observed: "When the jurisdiction fails, all the power of the court also fails, except to give judgment for costs." Marsh v. Haywood, 6 Humph. 210-213.

The inability of equity to afford such incidental relief, where the sole ground of equitable jurisdiction fails, is recognized by Code, § 4292 (Shannon's Compilation, § 6101), providing that in a creditors' suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, the chancery court may render judgment on a claim, even though complainant fails to establish the fraud.

In the absence of this statute, the chancery court, prior to the act of 1877, would have had no jurisdiction in such a case to render judgment for the debt, in a suit where fraud, the ground of equitable cognizance, was not established.

We think for a stronger reason, since the act of 1877, a chancery court cannot proceed in matters, jurisdiction of which is expressly denied it, except where such matters arise in a suit that, for other matters therein contained and established, may be entertained in chancery.

There is nothing contrary to the view here expressed in the case of Madison v. Ducktown Sulphur, Copper & I. Co. 113 Tenn. 331, 83 S. W. 658. In that case an injunction and damages were sought against the Copper Company, the operation of whose plant had been adjudged by a previous decision of this court to be a nuisance.

The court declined to grant the injunction sued for; but there was another distinct ground of equitable cognizance, upon which the jurisdiction of the court rested. It appeared that the properties of the Copper Company were covered by a mortgage, and consequently could not be reached except through the aid of a court of equity, and it further appeared that the court did not altogether deny the injunctive relief prayed for. The court retained the case, allowing the defendant the alternative of executing bond to cover any damage for which it might be adjudged to be liable, in default of which bond the injunction was ordered to be issued as prayed. Having sustained its jurisdiction upon the equitable grounds named, it was, of course, proper in that case for the chancery court to administer the incidental relief of determining and assessing damages.

As seen before, however, the only ground for equitable interference in this case has completely failed, and the chancery court has no jurisdiction under such circumstances, to determine mere matters of unliquidated damage to property.

Although in this opinion we have recognized the fact that the complainant's property has been damaged, we did not mean to express the opinion that the injury, under the circumstances of the case, was one for which a recovery could be had. That question is left open.

The complainant's remedy at law is unembarrassed, and it may there obtain all the compensation to which it is entitled.

We therefore must remit this complainant to its suit at law for the recovery of any damages to which it may be adjudged to be entitled, and we must disapprove the experiment which the chancellor attempted in its behalf by injunction in this case.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The decree of the chancellor will be reversed, and the bill dismissed, at complainant's cost.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, the following response was handed down by Green, J.:

In response to a very forceful and courteous petition to rehear, we may observe that the former opinion filed herein was perhaps not so full on the questions raised in the petition as it should have been. We have therefore made some additions to the original draft of the opinion herein, which cover the questions of law raised in the petition to rehear. Upon the facts, with all due deference to learned counsel, we must adhere to our original conclusions.

We did not undertake to say in the opinion filed that there was no evidence indicating that smoke consumers existed and had been used with success; but we expressed the belief that such devices had not passed the experimental stage, according to the lights before us. In other words, while a smoke consumer might be installed which would prove successful for a time, we doubted if any had yet been devised which would continue after considerable use to accomplish its purpose.

We reviewed the facts of this case fully in our former opinion, and a reconsideration does not shake our confidence in the justice of our conclusions.

The petition to rehear must therefore be dismissed.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

PAUL E. DIVINE, Admr., etc., of Thomas Brown, Deceased,

v.

UNAKA NATIONAL BANK.

(—Tenn. —, 140 S. W. 747.)

Courts — probate jurisdiction — soldiers' home.

1. The proper court of the county in which is located land ceded by a state to the Federal government for a soldiers' home has jurisdiction to grant an administration

Note. — Jurisdiction of estate of inmate of Federal home or institution.

The decision in DIVINE v. UNAKA NAT. BANK, holding that the proper court of the county in which land is located which was ceded to the Federal government for a soldiers' home has jurisdiction to grant an administration on the estate of a soldier dying in the home, seems to be one of first impression and is therefore of particular value.

tion on the estate of a soldier dying in the home.

Executor — right to recover possession of soldier's effects.

2. One appointed by a state court to administer the estate of one who died in a soldier's home, land for which had been ceded by the state to the Federal government, may maintain an action against the officers of the home to recover possession of securities left by decedent.

Same — duty of bank to pay over money.

3. A bank is not bound to pay over to an administrator money deposited by a person since deceased, until the certificate of deposit executed by it is surrendered or impossibility of surrender is shown.

(November 22, 1911.)

CERTIORARI to the Court of Civil Appeals to review a decree reversing a decree of the Chancery Court of Johnson City sustaining a demurrer to and dismissing a bill filed to recover possession of money deposited in the defendant bank by plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Samuel C. Williams, for defendant:

Only the holder of a negotiable instrument can sue, and a holder is one in possession of the instrument.

Wells v. Schoonover, 9 Heisk. 805; Sawyer v. Moran, 3 Tenn. Ch. 35.

The bank had a right to insist that the instrument be produced and delivered for cancellation on payment.

Benjamin's Chalmers Dig. Neg. Instr. §§ 1228, 1230, 1707; City Nat. Bank v. Mahan, 21 La. Ann. 752; Smilie v. Stevens, 39 Vt. 315; Cottle v. Marine Bank, 166 N. Y. 53, 59 N. E. 736; Read v. Marine Bank, 59 Hun, 578, 13 N. Y. Supp. 855, s. c. on appeal 136 N. Y. 454, 32 Am. St. Rep. 758, 32 N. E. 1083; Pardee v. Fish, 60 N. Y. 265, 19 Am. Rep. 176; 5 Cyc. 521.

The administrator was not without remedy to replevin the withheld instrument from officials of the National Home within the ceded territory.

Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. McGlinn, 114 U. S. 542, 29 L. ed. 270, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1005; Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 298, 45 L. ed. 1110, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 770; Barrett v. Palmer, 135 N. Y. 336, 17 L.R.A. 720, 31 Am. St. Rep. 835, 31 N. E. 1017.

Mr. Paul E. Divine for complainant.

Neill, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill contains the following allegations:

"That Thomas Brown died intestate in Washington county, Tennessee, on the 12th day of November, 1908, within the limits of the reservation of the Mountain Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and as a member thereof; that the complainant was duly appointed as his administrator by the county court of Washing-in the administration of their trust. That court certainly has jurisdiction of the controversy in any suit that may arise between the executors in regard to the will. If this court, by reason of citizenship, has jurisdiction also of such controversy, the jurisdiction of the two courts is concurrent; and the jurisdiction of one or the other court, in order to become exclusive, must be exercised before that of the other becomes established. It is to me equally clear that, within the territory belonging to the United States at Fortress Monroe, jurisdiction is exclusively in the United States, whether exercised by its Executive, its Congress, or its Judiciary. Therefore, as to any jurisdiction operating in rem directly upon property within the lands of the United States at that place, and requiring an actual, corporeal, personal exercise in situ by an officer present in person in his official character, on the premises, in the performance of official duty and functions, the jurisdiction of the United States, and of each of its departments, is exclusive of that of the state of Virginia, except in respect of such service of process as was reserved in her act of cession, passed March, 1821. The proper court of Virginia, by virtue of its jurisdiction of controversies respecting property at Fortress Monroe, may, by decrees and process in per-

A case has been disclosed passing upon the jurisdiction of the Federal courts over property of a testator located at Fortress Monroe, within territory ceded to the United States, and is included for the purpose of showing the attitude of the Federal courts under such circumstances.

In the case referred to, Woodfin v. Phœbus, 30 Fed. 289, an argument had arisen between executors as to the disposition of certain of the testator's property located at Fortress Monroe, on land sold and ceded to the United States by Virginia, with full jurisdiction, and a bill was brought by one of the executors for a sale of the property and for the appointment of a receiver. It was held that the Federal court had exclusive jurisdiction of suits operating in rem directly upon such property, although the state court might dispose of rights therein by decrees in personam. The court said: "No question of probate is before this court. The competency of the county court of Elizabeth City county, which admitted this will to probate, to do so, is conceded by the bill; is certainly not denied by it. I do not think it a debatable question whether the circuit court of Elizabeth City county, as a court of equity, has jurisdiction of controversies which may arise between the executors of the will mentioned in the bill 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) ton county, on November 30, 1909, and qualified and gave bond as such. Letters of administration issued in pursuance thereof, and the original or duly certified copies thereof will be filed on or before the hearing, if required.

"The complainant would further show that his intestate was a soldier of fortune, a wanderer over the face of the earth, without family or home. He was born in India, came to America in time to participate as a soldier of the United States in the war between the states from 1861 to 1865, and later drifted southward to some of the Spanish-speaking countries, where he remained for some time. Later said intestate returned to the United States, and after wandering from place to place, without any fixed place of residence, habitation, home or domicile, and without any purpose or intention on his part so to do, or to permanently establish himself theretofore, he came to the said Mountain Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, in Washington county, Tennessee, and became a member thereof, by reason of his military service as aforesaid, where he died.

"Complainant would further show that his intestate at the time of his death left two small open accounts or deposits in some of the local banks here in Johnson City, Tennessee, which have been paid over to and received by him in virtue of his said appointment as administrator, and that in addition his said intestate had the following estate, rights, and credits at the time of his death, to wit:

"(1) A deposit in the defendant, the Unaka National Bank, here in Johnson City, Tennessee, in the sum of $312, made by said intestate voluntarily and of his own volition and motion after he became a member of said Mountain Branch, and which said deposit is represented by a certificate issued to said intestate by the defendant therefor, No. 9,630.

"(2) Another deposit made in like manner and under like conditions and circumstances with the defendant for $25; the certificate representing same being No. 9,640.

"Complainant would show that these said certificates of deposit were in the possession of said intestate at the time of his death, the property of said intestate, undorsed, untransferred, and undisposed of in any way, and in no wise hypothecated. Complainant would show that said intestate died within said Mountain Branch reservation limits, and the authorities thereof in the discharge of their duties gathered up the same as bailees, trustees, and agents of and for those rightfully entitled thereto, and your complainant has been unable to secure the same, or obtain the possession thereof, as he verily believes he is entitled to do. Complainant charges that said authorities have no title or ownership, claim, or beneficial interest in said certificates, no property rights in the same, and no right, power, or authority to sell, transfer, consonam directed against parties to any suit pending in it, control and dispose of their rights in such property; but I think it is pretty certain, in a case like the present one, if pending in a state court in which the appointment of a receiver to exercise corporeal custody of the Hygeia Hotel on the premises should become necessary, that the state court could not install such an agent there for that purpose. While this is so, I repeat that I am willing to concede that a state court, having power to determine controversies between parties concerning property in litigation before it, would have power, in a proper case, to order a sale of the Hygeia Hotel, which would have power, in a proper case, to order such a controversy." And, in further considering a plea to the jurisdiction, the court said: "Can there be any doubt that in this case the court is called upon to say whether the Constitution and laws of the United States have not segregated Fortress Monroe from the state of Virginia; have not devastated that territory of all state jurisdiction; whether the jurisdiction there, whether executive, legislative, or judicial, is not foreign to the state of Virginia; whether letters testamentary, issuing from a Virginia court, are competent to vest property fixed to the soil of Fortress Monroe, in a jurisdiction foreign to the state; 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

whether, if property can be thus vested, it be by comity or how, and to what extent, and for what purpose; whether any court but this is competent to make an officer of the United States at Fortress Monroe a party to a suit concerning the Hygeia Hotel, so as to aid or advise or control him in the exercise of that discretion in passing title to a purchaser of the hotel at its judicial sale to which the deed to Mr. Phœbus empowers him to assent or not, at his discretion? It is apparent to me that the bill, and the exhibits accompanying it, do show that such questions as these and similar ones must arise in the conduct of this case, requiring a construction by the court of jurisdictional clauses of the Constitution, and the effect of laws of Congress relating to Fortress Monroe to any property fixed to its soil, and to the Hygeia Hotel especially. In point of fact, questions of this character have constituted the burden of the extended arguments that we have already had in this case, lasting through several days. Nor do I perceive how a state court could entertain and conduct a suit relating to the same matters which we are dealing with in this case, without passing upon questions of the character I have indicated,—questions which it has not been the policy of the United States to relegate from the Federal to the state courts." J. T. W.

vey, indorse, collect, or make any assignment thereof in law, equity, or in fact. And complainant further charges on information and belief that no such attempt has been made.

"Complainant would further show that said authorities also hold another item or asset, gathered up in the same way, the property of said intestate; that is, an original and duplicate check, issued to said intestate by the defendant Unaka Bank, on Lloyd's Bank, Limited, of London, England, for about £1 and 7d, which was unassigned, and which was the property of the decedent at the time of his death, and which now constitutes an asset of his said estate, due, owing, and collectable from said defendant bank.

"Complainant would further show that as administrator of the estate of the said Thomas Brown, under and by virtue of the appointment and letters of administration aforesaid, he has requested of said authorities of the said Mountain Branch the possession and delivery of said certificates and assets as above mentioned and shown, but that said authorities, for one captious reason or another, among them the asserted contention that said authorities were not in the reach or subject to process of the courts of Tennessee, or were exempt therefrom in this behalf, though without any claim of interest, right, or title or benefit therein, have failed, neglected, and refused to make the delivery demanded, or to turn over the same to your complainant as such administrator on demand. Complainant would further show that as such administrator he has made the said Unaka National Bank acquainted with the said failure on the part of the said home authorities, and said bank has failed and refused to pay over the amount of said certificates on demand without a surrender of said certificates concurrently, which condition your complainant has been unable to comply with for the reasons above shown.

"Your complainant would further show that said amounts hereinbefore set forth and shown are bona fide assets of the estate of his intestate, and that he is advised that he has a right to come into your honor's court and compel the defendant by proper order and decree to pay over the same, with full interest and the costs of the cause. Said amounts are due, owing, and unpaid, and said defendant bank is responsible and liable therefor to your complainant. Said home authorities in law have no claim of right, title, or beneficial interest in the said certificates and checks, could not lawfully make such claim, and do not so attempt to do. Said home or its authorities are without power to collect, sell, transfer, or assign the same, and there is no law or authority whereby they can be constituted or nominated as administrator as against your complainant, or exercise in the least or in any wise any probate jurisdiction whatever. Complainant further charges that no other jurisdiction or forum than the county court of Washington county, Tennessee, can appoint an administrator, and your complainant can lawfully receive said amounts from the said defendant, or compel it to pay over or turn over the same."

The bank demurred on several grounds, the substance of which is that it was entitled to have the certificates surrendered before payment, and that the bill did not allege that any demand had been made, accompanied by such offer of surrender of the certificates of deposit, and contained no sufficient excuse for such failure.

The chancellor sustained the demurrer and dismissed the bill, and the complainant appealed to the court of civil appeals, and in that court the decree of the chancellor was reversed. Thereupon the cause was brought to this court by the writ of certiorari, and is here for consideration.

The ground embracing the home was ceded by this state to the United States by an act passed in the year 1901 (Acts 1901, chap. 98), which contained the following provisions:

"That the consent of the general assembly be, and is hereby, given to the acquisition by the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers by purchase, condemnation, or donation of lands not exceeding 2,000 acres, in Washington county, for the establishment and maintenance of a branch of said home within 5 miles of Johnson City; that jurisdiction of the lands aforesaid, and their appurtenances, which may be acquired by the managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for the uses and purposes of said home, be, and is hereby, ceded to the United States of America: Provided, however, that all civil or criminal process issued under the authority of the state of Tennessee, or any officer thereof, may be executed on said lands and in the buildings which may be located thereon, in the same manner as if jurisdiction had not been ceded, as aforesaid," etc. State ex rel. Lyle v. Willett, 117 Tenn. 341, 342, 97 S. W. 301.

The law is that when the United States merely buy land within a state for their use, or when it is condemned for such purpose, the jurisdiction of the state wherein the land lies remains the same as before, just as if any other owner had acquired the land, with the qualification, of course, that the state cannot interfere with the full, free, and perfect use for which it was acquired, or in any way embarrass that use. Ft. Leavenworth R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S. 525, 29 L. ed. 264, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 995; Ohio v. Thomas, 173 U. S. 276, 43 L. ed. 699, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 453. But where land within a state is acquired by the United States, with the consent of a state, then under article 1, § 8, subs. 17, of the Federal Constitution, the jurisdiction of the United States is complete and exclusive; and the reservation contained in such grants, to the effect that the state shall have the right to serve civil and criminal process with in the territory ceded, is limited to causes of action arising outside of the ceded territory; the purpose of such reservation being to prevent the territory's becoming an asylum for fugitives from justice. This must be understood and applied, however, in the light of the principle of public law that, when the new sovereign has not provided legislation for the territory so acquired, the laws of the former sovereign continue in force so far as needed for the protection and enforcement of the municipal or private rights of individuals residing within the territory. Ft. Leavenworth R. Co. v. Lowe, supra; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. McGlinn, 114 U. S. 542, 29 L. ed. 270, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1005; Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 244, 298, 45 L. ed. 1088, 1110, 1111, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 770. It is said that court jurisdiction is necessarily dependent upon the legislative power of the sovereign under whose authority the court was constituted, and that when the latter ceases the former must fail with it. This is in general true, but an exception must be recognized when the new sovereign, out of deference to the principle of public law above referred to, recognizes the continued existence within the particular territory of the laws of the former sovereign. Those laws cannot be made effective, except through the aid of a court. The Federal courts have no jurisdiction, except that conferred by the Constitution or by an act of the Congress. United States v. Hudson, 7 Cranch, 32, 3 L. ed. 259; Turner v. Bank of North America, 4 Dall. 8, 1 L. ed. 718; United States v. Bevans, 3 Wheat. 337, 4 L. ed. 404. And where they have jurisdiction over controversies arising out of the nature of the questions involved, there is a limitation upon that jurisdiction, measured by an amount of value in excess of that involved in the present controversy, except those in which the Federal government is itself a party. If jurisdiction is not given by Federal law to Federal courts to assert and protect the private rights conceded to exist within the newly acquired territory, they must remain outside the pale of law 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

unless they can be asserted in the courts of the states. The Federal government and the governments of the several states are not foreign to each other, but together constitute one complete system, the Federal government performing its functions within its apportioned limits, and the states performing theirs. The courts of the states have concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of the United States in all cases wherein the jurisdiction of the former is not made exclusive, either by direct legislation, or by necessary implication, or by such incompatibility with the existence of state authority as that it could not be supposed the state courts should undertake the matter. Clafin v. Houseman, 93 U. S. 130, 23 L. ed. 833; Defiance water Co. v. Defiance, 191 U. S. 194, 48 L. ed. 144, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 63. If the state courts can exercise such jurisdiction in the enforcement of causes of action growing out of Federal laws, we can see no reason why they cannot enforce causes of action recognized by Federal law as continuing to exist in territory ceded by the states, but which the Federal government has provided no means of enforcing through its own courts. If there be any person, holding Federal office within such territory, who assumes to exercise powers not appertaining to his office, or not conferred upon him by law, such person is so far forth not a Federal officer, and not protected by his office, and may be sued in a state court of the state embracing such territory, just as if he were a private citizen, by persons injured through such unlawful acts. Teal v. Felton, 12 How. 284, 13 L. ed. 990; Buck v. Colbath, 3 Wall. 334, 18 L. ed. 257; Slocum v. Mayberry, 2 Wheat. 1, 4 L. ed. 169; Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 141, 151, 45 L. ed. 126, 133, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48.

To apply these principles to the facts of the present case: The Federal courts have been given no probate powers, by the Congress, or authority to appoint an administrator of a decedent. Yonley v. Lavender, 21 Wall. 276, 22 L. ed. 536; Byers v. McAuley, 149 U. S. 608, 37 L. ed. 867, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906; O'Callaghan v. O'Brien, 199 U. S. 89, 109, 50 L. ed. 101, 111, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 727. And see cases collected in note to Bedford Quarries Co. v. Thomlinson, 36 C. C. A. 276, 277. Therefore this power remains with the state courts; and the county court of Washington county acted in accordance with law when it appointed an administrator of Brown's estate,—he having died in Washington county, leaving there the certificates of deposit on the defendant bank, also located within the county. Shannon's Code, § 3935. As incident to the administratorship, Major Divine became at once entitled to the possession of the evidences of indebtedness above referred to. Under the facts stated in the bill, the officers of the home are without legal justification in detaining these papers from him, and he is entitled to bring his suit against them therefor. No Federal court can entertain jurisdiction of the controversy, because, even laying out of view all other reasons, the amount involved is not sufficiently large. The complainant could have replevined the papers referred to, in the circuit or chancery court of Washington county, prior and preparatory to the present action, or he could have brought before the chancery court in this action both the bank and the persons residing within the home assuming to withhold these papers from him, and there had the question of the right of possession as between the two settled, and at the same time could have caused the money to be paid into court by the defendant bank, or on its refusal to pay could in due course have had judgment against it, on final hearing, with execution to enforce it. In either event the bank would have been protected. The bank is entitled to have the certificates surrendered when it makes payment, or in case they cannot be surrendered because of loss, or other impossibility of production, then to have a bond of indemnity given to protect it. In the present case we think no such impossibility exists. We have concluded, therefore, to direct the entry of the following decree:

Let the demurrer be overruled, and the cause remanded to the chancery court of Washington county, with leave to the complainant to file an amended bill, bringing in the persons who have possession of the certificates and check referred to and contesting their right to hold the same. In default of the filing of such amended bill within a time to be fixed by the chancellor, the defendant bank will have leave to renew its demurrer.

The costs of the appeal will be paid by the complainant.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

J. A. GRAVES, Plff. in Err.,

v.

ALLERT & FUESS.

(— Tex. —, 142 S. W. 869.)

Damages — defect in building construction — measure.

The measure of damages for defects in the construction work of buildings substantially completed according to the plans and specifications is the cost of repairing the defects, and not the difference in value of the building as constructed and what it would have been if constructed strictly according to the plans and specifications
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(January 24, 1912.)

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court for Dewitt County in defendants' favor in an action brought Note. — Measure of damages for defects or omissions in the performance of a building contract.

As the sole object of inquiry in this note is the rule of damages to be applied, cases as to when consequential damages are recoverable are not included therein. Nor does it include decisions as to the proper measure of damages where performance of the contract has been abandoned before initiation or completion of the work.

The fundamental principle which underlies the decisions comprised in this note is that a party is entitled to have what he contracts for, or its equivalent. What that equivalent is depends upon the circumstances of the case. Where the defects are such that they may be remedied without the destruction of any substantial part of the benefit which the owner's property has received by reason of the contractor's work, the equivalent to which the owner is entitled is the cost of making the work conform to the contract. But where, in order to conform the work to contract requirements, a substantial part of what has been done must be undone, and the contractor has acted in good faith, or the owner has taken possession, he is not permitted to recover the cost of making the change, but may recover the difference in value. An attempt has therefore been made, wherever the report of the decision has made it possible to do so, to state the character of the defects or omissions constituting the defective performance, in order to show the circumstances under which one or the other of the rules above stated is properly applicable.

It should be noted that, as the statement as to the measure of the owner's damages is often incorporated with a statement as to what the contractor may recover, its form depends upon whether the amount of the contractor's compensation, from which the deduction is to be made, is the contract price, or the sum which his work may be actually worth. That is, where the contract price is taken as the basis, the contractor is properly compensated for his work, and the owner for his damage, by deducting from the contract price the difference in value between the work as done and as contracted to be done: where the value of the work done is taken as a basis, such a deduction would give the owner more than the amount of his damage, which, in such a case, is properly stated to be the to recover damages for breach of a certain building contract. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Sam C. Lackey and Proctor, Vandenberg, Crain, & Lewright, for plaintiff in error:

The measure of damages is the difference between the value of plaintiff's buildings as actually repaired and constructed, and what their value would be if repaired and constructed in strict accordance with the contract, plans, and specifications.

Sherman v. Connor, 88 Tex. 35, 29 S. W. 1053; Jennings v. Willer, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 32 S. W. 24; Larrimore v. Comanche County, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 32 S. W. 367; Watson v. DeWitt County, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 150, 46 S. W. 1068; Fagan v.

Whitcomb, 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 47, 14 S. W. 1018; Short v. Moore, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1225, 43 S. W. 211; Hartford Mill Co. v. Hartford Tobacco Warehouse Co. — Ky. —, 121 S. W. 477; Elwood Planing Mills Co. v. Harting, 21 Ind. App. 408, 52 N. E. 621; Ashland Lime, Salt & Cement Co. v. Shores, 105 Wis. 122, 81 N. W. 136; Foeller v. Heintz, 137 Wis. 169, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 327, 118 N. W. 543.

Messrs. Davidson & Bailey and Price & Green for defendants in error.

Ramsey, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 9th day of April, 1907, plaintiff in error entered into a contract with Allert & Fuess, whereby the latter undertook to difference between the contract price and the value of the work if completed in accordance with contract requirements. The practical result in either case is, of course, the same. It may also be stated in this connection that the form in which the rule as to the damages recoverable by the owner is stated is not necessarily determined by whether the action is for the contract price or quantum meruit, as even in the latter case the contract price is often taken as the basis of computation.

But where the deviation from the terms of the contract is so gross as to indicate an intentional substitution (as in Morgan v. Gamble, 230 Pa. 165, 79 Atl. 410, where the contractor substituted an iron pipe for the lead water pipe required by the contract), it seems that the owner may recover the cost of conforming the work to the contract.

Cost of conforming work to specifications.

As to when not proper mode of ascertaining damages, see cases under heading "Difference in value," infra.

In determining the damages sustained by the owner from the defective performance of a building contract, different elements are proper for consideration in different cases, according to the nature of the defect. Sometimes the measure of damages is the necessary cost of making the work according to the specifications. White v. McLaren, 151 Mass. 553, 24 N. E. 911.

Where the omission, as a failure to complete the work, is capable of being remedied by additional labor or materials, there must be deducted from the contract price such sum as will be necessary to complete the work according to the contract. Veazie v. Hosmer, 11 Gray, 396.

The owner is entitled to the cost of correcting any bad work done by the contractor so far as it can reasonably be corrected, and to the fair value of the damage done to him where it cannot be reasonably replaced. Danforth v. Freeman, 69 N. H. 466, 43 Atl. 621.

In Kelly v. Bradford, 33 Vt. 35, it was 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

held that the amount of the contractor's recovery where the contract has been substantially performed is to be determined by deducting from the contract price such a sum as will enable the other party to get the contract completed according to its terms; or where that is impossible or unreasonable, such a sum as will fully compensate him for the imperfection in the work, and the insufficiency of the materials, so that he shall in this respect be made as good pecuniarily as if the contract had been strictly performed.

The proper rule for measuring the recoverable difference between substantial and complete performance of a building contract is not necessarily the cost of tearing down the defective work and rebuilding it so as to conform to the contract. It is the reasonable cost of remedying defects so far as that can be done practicably, and the diminished value of the building so completed, because of defects not so remediable. Ashland Lime, Salt & Cement Co. v. Shores, 105 Wis. 122, 81 N. W. 136. A sentence used by the court in connection with the foregoing statement of the rule of damages: "As to any defect that may be suggested, if the cost of remedying it will exceed the diminished value of the structure in a material degree, the latter is the true measure of liability of the builders,"—which, read literally and without reference to the context, would violate the general principle running through all the cases, that the proprietor is entitled to the very thing contracted for, or its equivalent,—is explained in Foeller v. Heintz, 137 Wis. 169, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 327, 118 N. W. 543, as referring only to imperfections requiring substantial destruction of the material parts of a building created according to contract, and a beginning over again, in order to remedy the defects.

And in Sherry v. Madler, 123 Wis. 621, 101 N. W. 1095, it was held that if there was a substantial compliance in good faith with the plans and specifications for a building, then the rule by which proper deductions were to be ascertained was as follows: In case of entire neglect to furnish furnish the material and construct for him a building, and to make certain changes in other buildings then located on certain ground situated in the city of Cuero, for the sum of $7,700, to be paid under the directions of one Jul Leffland, and in accordance with certain specifications in said contract contained. The work proceeded for some time, and seems to have been somewhat delayed, so that, on the 29th of July thereafter, the parties entered into another agreement, in which it was stipulated that Graves should waive none of his rights under his contract for said building, by entering and placing shelving and goods in same, except as to the time limit under which Allert & Fuess would complete same, which was waived with the stipulation that such waiver should not cause the contractors to be any the less diligent in completing same. Thereafter the contractors proceeded with the building, and, as the court below found, substantially complied with the terms of the contract in respect thereto. This finding by the district court as well as by the court of civil appeals is assailed by the plaintiff in error, but we think it is fairly supported by the testimony. The architect, Mr. Leffland, was introduced on the trial of the case by plaintiff in error, and at the conclusion of his testimony, by agreement of all parties, it was arranged that he should inspect the buildings at once and make a careful investigation of the alleged defects in them, and afterwards testify upon the trial as to an item of labor or material, or in case of a defect which might be easily remedied without taking down and reconstructing a substantial portion of the building, this allowance should equal the reasonable expense of supplying or correcting the defect. In case of a defect which could be remedied only by taking down and reconstructing some substantial portion of the building, the allowance should be the amount which the building is worth less, by reason of the defect, than the contract price.

So, also, in Manning v. School Dist. No. 6, 124 Wis. 84, 102 N. W. 356, it is said that so far as imperfections can be remedied without any great sacrifice of work and material wrought into the subject of the contract and the proprietor's property, the contract price is to be reduced by so much as will measure the reasonable cost of applying such remedy; and otherwise the contract price is to be rebated to the extent of the diminished value of the subject of the contract by reason of the defects. And see also to the same effect, Foeller v. Heintz, supra.

In Thornton v. Place, 1 Moody & R. 218, a demand for slating some buildings of the defendants, Parke, J., in charging the jury, said that when a party engaged to do certain work on certain specified terms and in a certain specified manner, but in fact did not perform the work so as to correspond with the specifications, he was not, of course, entitled to recover the price agreed upon in the specifications, nor could he recover according to the actual value of the work, as if there had been no special contract. What the plaintiff was entitled to recover was the price agreed upon in the specifications, subject to a deduction; and the measure of that deduction was the sum which it would take to alter the work so as to make it correspond with the specifications.

In American Surety Co. v. Lyons, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 151, 97 S. W. 1080, it was held that where the owner was damaged by the contractor's putting into a building work and material inferior to that called for in the contract, the measure of damages was not the difference between the value of the building as contracted and its value if it had been constructed according to the contract, but the amount which it will cost over the above the contract price to have the defects remedied and the building completed in accordance with the contract.

In several other cases involving the right of the contractor to recover where the contract has been substantially performed, the court has stated that the owner is entitled to a deduction from the contract price of a sum requisite to indemnify him for the expense of conforming the work to that for which he contracted. See Keeler v. Herr, 157 Ill. 57, 41 N. E. 750; Palmer v. Meriden Britannia Co. 188 Ill. 508, 59 N. E. 247; School Directors v. Roberson, 65 Ill. App. 298; Shepard v. Mills, 70 Ill. App. 72, affirmed in 173 Ill. 223, 50 N. E. 709; Cook v. American Luxfer Prism Co. 93 Ill. App. 299; Crouch v. Gutmann, 134 N. Y. 45, 30 Am. St. Rep. 608, 31 N. E. 271; Holl v. Long, 34 Misc. 1, 68 N. Y. Supp. 522; Gove v. Island City Mercantile & Mill Co. 16 Or. 93, 17 Pac. 740; Edmunds v. Welling, 57 Or. 103, 110 Pac. 533; Moore v. Carter, 146 Pa. 492, 23 Atl. 243.

But where a counterclaim set up in an action upon a building contract is based not upon the lack of certain particular items in order to complete the building, but upon the unskillful manner in which the work was performed, it is not error to refuse to instruct the jury that the measure of the owner's damages will be what it will cost to procure to be done the work necessary to make the building conform to the terms of the contract. Smith v. Bristol, 33 Iowa, 24.

Although recovery cannot be had upon a contract to do mason work which has not been properly performed, yet, the owner having availed himself of the contractor's work and labor, the contractor should be permitted to recover the contract price less the sum it would cost to complete the work as agreed to be done. Blakeslee v. Holt, 42 Conn. 226.

same, and make an estimate of what, in his judgment as a supervisory architect, would be a proper sum to charge to repair same, so as to put the buildings in shape in accordance with the plans and specifications as agreed upon. After such investigation, he did testify and pointed out some defects in the building. He said, in substance, that there were certain cracks in the wall between buildings 1 and 2, upstairs as well as in the 8 foot section downstairs, but that these did not materially affect the strength or durability of the walls, and that they should be repaired by cleaning out the cracks and filling them with mortar, which could be done at a cost of not over $90. He also testified to certain cracks in the front of the building No. 3, which he said amounted to nothing. There were some other matters somewhat more serious, particularly with reference to the ceiling and floors upstairs as well as the roof. However, after testifying to all the matters, he says: "In my judgment as supervising architect, according to whose plans and specifications these buildings were to be erected and altered, they are, as I have said, substantially in accordance with the plans and specifications now, and the defects complained of can be remedied, in so far as they have not been remedied, so as to completely comply with the original plans and specifications at a cost of not exceeding $425. This in my judgment is a very liberal estimate, and it might be done even at a less expense." However, the trial

The measure of damages for failure to construct a foundation wall in accordance with the terms of the contract is the sum which it would reasonably take to make the wall conform to contract requirements. Wright v. Sanderson, 20 Mo. App. 534.

Other decisions relating to defective mason work are Taulbee v. Moore, 106 Ky. 749, 51 S. W. 564, and Bush v. Jones, 2 Shannon Cas. 224, under heading "Difference in value," infra.

The measure of damages for putting in a defective granolithic floor is the amount that it would reasonably take to make the floor conform to the contract. Lambert v. Jenkins, — Va. —, 71 S. E. 718. Compare Norcross Bros. Co. v. Vose, 199 Mass. 81, 85 N. E. 468, under heading "Difference in value," infra.

Where an entire contract for the laying of a concrete sidewalk has been substantially performed, even though not completed in a workmanlike manner, the contract price may be recovered, less a fair allowance to make good the defects, although the work has not been accepted. Dyer v. Lintz, 76 N. J. L. 204, 68 Atl. 908. Compare Culbertson v. Ashland Cement & Constr. Co. 144 Ky. 614, 139 S. W. 792, under heading "Difference in value," infra.

Where a contract to install heating apparatus is substantially performed, the owner may deduct from the contract price the sum necessary to make it complete. Cutler v. Close, 5 Car. & P. 337.

Where one contracts with the owner of a house to install therein a heating plant of a certain character and quality, and the plant actually installed is inferior to that contracted for, the measure of the owner's damage is the sum required to make the plant conform to the specifications fixed by the contract. This rule is not in a particular case varied by reason of the fact that the contractor offers to make the necessary changes for a specified sum and to give bond for the faithful performance of the work. Dornblatt v. Carlton, 10 Ga. App. 741, 73 S. E. 1085.

Where a comparative small expenditure is necessary to remedy defects in the performance of a contract for plumbing and 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

heating work, the reasonable expense of doing so in a workmanlike manner, and of complying with the contract in this respect, is the correct measure of damages. McLullough v. S. J. Hayde Contracting Co. 82 Kan. 734, 109 Pac. 176.

Another case in which heating apparatus was involved is Mack v. Sloteman, 21 Fed. 109, under heading, "Difference in value," infra.

Where the contract for plumbing has been substantially performed, the measure of damages is what it would cost to put it in the condition contracted for. Sticker v. Overpeck, 127 Pa. 446, 17 Atl. 1100.

Where a building contract has been substantially performed, the measure of damages to be allowed to the owner by reason of the contractor's failure to conform to specifications as to quality of lumber and manner of nailing in constructing a staircase is merely the amount of detriment suffered by the owner by reason of breaches of the contract, and not the cost of building a new staircase,—especially where the payment was to be made before the commencement of the work, and is therefore to be regarded as an independent promise. Carpenter v. Ibbetson, 1 Cal. App. 272, 81 Pac. 1114.

The measure of the damages for failure to put up a cornice, which the owner of a building may set up as a counterclaim in an action for the contract price of putting on a metal ceiling, is the difference in the amount which the owner would have been obliged to pay the contractor for the cornice, and the fair cost to the owner of putting up the cornice under existing conditions. New York Metal Ceiling Co. v. City Homes Improv. Co. 88 N. Y. Supp. 233.

The rule of damages for the improper construction of machinery erected in a mill is to deduct from the contract price the cost of altering the construction of the machinery so as to make it conform to the contract. Stillwell & B. Mfg. Co. v. Phelps, 120 U. S. 520, 32 L. ed. 1035, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 601; Williams v. Island City Mill Co. 25 Or. 573, 37 Pac. 49; Wade v. Haycock, 25 Pa. 382; Clifford v. Richardson, 18 Vt. 620.

The measure of damages recoverable by court, evidently considering in this connection other testimony, found that the sum of $900 was a sufficient amount to remedy such incomplete conditions, so as to make said construction of said buildings conform substantially to the terms and stipulations of the contract in appearance and durability.

The trial court filed the following conclusions of law as to the measure of damages: "I am of the opinion from the facts in this case that the true measure of plaintiff's damage in this case is the difference in the value of the contract price of construction of the building in substantial conformity to the contract, plans, and specifications, and the value of such construction as it now stands in its present condition, the owner of a steamboat against the builder, for imperfect caulking and improper setting of the wheels, is the amount of the reasonable cost incurred to remedy the defects, and to place the boat in a proper condition as contemplated by the contract. Leathers v. Sweeney, 41 La. Ann. 287, 5 So. 662.

The measure of damages for the defective performance of a contract to build an automobile body and place it upon a chassis furnished by the owner is not the difference in value of the automobile as completed and what it would have been had the work been properly done, but the cost and expense reasonably necessary to make the work and materials conform to the requirements of the contract. Anthony v. Moore & M. Co. 135 App. Div. 203, 120 N. Y. Supp. 402.

The measure of damages recoverable from an architect for negligent and unskillful construction of a building may be the cost of remedying the defects (Lord v. Comstock, 20 Jones & S. 548; Schwartz v. Kuhn, 71 Misc. 149, 126 N. Y. Supp. 568), or the difference in value between the product of the architect's negligent and unskillful work and of the house as it should have been (Lord v. Comstock, supra).

The measure of damages sustained by reason of the failure of a contractor to build a roof according to the contract is not the cost of making a good, tight, and durable roof, but a roof according to the specifications. White v. Sisters of Charity, 79 Ill. App. 646.

Difference in value.

Where an action brought by a contractor to recover for extras not included in a building contract was litigated upon the theory that the sum otherwise demanded could be tolled, if not absorbed, by the deduction of counterclaim, being the difference in value of the failure, unexcused, of the contractor to perform in certain particulars, proof of the market value of the building was properly admitted, the measure of damages claimable by the owner, in the nature of counterclaim, being the difference in value of the building constructed and that stipulated for in the contract. Fleming v. Lunsford, 163 Ala. 540, 50 So. 921.

which I have found as a matter of fact is the sum of $900, for which plaintiff is entitled to recover as such damages." This was construed, and properly construed, by the court of civil appeals, to mean that the court held "that the measure of damages was the difference between the balance unpaid on the contract price and what it would take to complete the building." It is contended by plaintiff in error, however, that the true measure of damages is the difference between the value of the plaintiff in error's buildings as actually repaired and constructed, and their value if they had been repaired and constructed according to plans and specifications.

We think it clear that under the authorities in this state, and based on sound

In Morford v. Ambrose, 3 J. J. Marsh. 690, it was held that the measure of the contractor's recovery was the contract price less the difference in value between the work as it was done and as it should have been done.

In Gleason v. Smith, 9 Cush. 484, 57 Am. Dec. 62, it was held that an instruction that a builder of a dam has substantially performed, so as to recover so much as his work and labor were worth to the owners, would be erroneous if standing alone, but was correct where the jury was directed to arrive at the result by deducting from the contract price so much as the dam built was worth less than the dam contracted for. The court said that the rule for making the deduction from the contract price for the deficiency in the work had been sometimes sought in another form; that the jury should take as the basis of the calculation the contract price, and deduct from that sum such amount as would be required to be paid to complete the work according to the contract; that probably the result would be much the same under either of these rules. In many cases the latter rule would not be adapted to the case, as where the building was wholly finished, but there was some small departure from the contract in some of the details; there the rule must be to deduct so much from the contract price as the work was worth less to the owner.

An instruction to the jury that, if a house was not built pursuant to contract, they should consider what the house was worth to the owner, and to give that sum in damages, is incorrect, since they should be instructed to deduct so much from the contract price as the house is worth less on account of the departures. Hayward v. Leonard, 7 Pick. 181, 19 Am. Dec. 269.

In Cullen v. Sears, 112 Mass. 299, it was held that the measure of the contractor's recovery where the contract has been substantially performed is the contract price, deducting what the building is worth less to the owner by reason of the deviations from the contract.

legal reason, that the judgment of the court of civil appeals is manifestly correct. This is in accordance with the ruling of this court in Linch v. Paris Lumber & Grain Elevator Co. 80 Tex. 23, 15 S. W. 208, where Judge Henry in a well-considered opinion adopts the following language of the supreme court of New York in the case of Smith v. Gugerty, 4 Barb. 620: "If there is an honest effort to perform the contract according to the letter, and it is substantially fulfilled, the builder should be entitled to receive the reward of his labor, although he may not (as the architect employed in this case has certified) have in every instance complied with its terms literally in every punctilio. A substantial compliance without any intentional variation should in all cases be considered as a full performance of a condition, whether pre-

The defect may be of such a character as to diminish the value of the house but little, while to make the work conform literally to the contract would involve reconstruction at unreasonable and disproportionate expense. The question ordinarily is how much less is the building fairly worth than it would have been if the contract had been performed. White v. McLaren, 151 Mass. 553, 24 N. E. 911; Danforth v. Freeman, 69 N. H. 466, 43 Atl. 621.

In Wagner v. Allen, 174 Mass. 563, 55 N. E. 320, an instruction that a contractor substantially performing can recover the contract price less such sum as will compensate the owner for the difference in value between the work as it is and the work as it would have been if the contract had been properly performed was approved.

In Norwood v. Lathrop, 178 Mass. 208, 59 N. E. 650, it is said that the amount of the contractor's recovery in case of substantial performance may, in many cases, be ascertained by deducting from the contract price what the building is worth less to the owner by reason of the deviations from the contract.

Where the contract price is a fair valuation for the work, and it has been completed in general conformity to the requirements of the contract, though defectively executed in some particulars, and the suit is for the contract price, the measure of the owner's damages is the difference between the value of the building agreed to be done and the building actually done; but when the building has been completed and differs in plan of construction or in materials employed from that which the builder contracted to erect, the true rule of estimating the damages sustained by the owner, whether the action is for the contract price or for the value of labor and materials, is to ascertain what it would cost to make the building conform to what the builder contracted it should be. Haysler v. Owen, 61 Mo. 270.

The measure of damages where a building is substantially and yet defectively completed is the difference between the value of the building and the reasonable cost or value of the building completed in accordance with the requirement of the contract. Simons v. Wittmann, 113 Mo. App. 357, 88 S. W. 791.

The measure of damages recoverable in an action brought by the owner for defects in performance of a building contract, where the buildings have been finished and delivered as completed, and accepted by the owner as such, is not what it would cost to replace the defective buildings by new buildings, but is the difference between what would have been the value of the buildings if finished according to the contract, and the value of those actually finished. Walter v. Hangen, 71 App. Div. 40, 75 N. Y. Supp. 683.

Where the changing of the building to conform to specifications would involve the destruction of so much work already done, and the doing of so much work not originally contemplated by the parties, that such an inquiry could not be any reliable aid to the jury in ascertaining the difference in value between the building in its defective condition and what would have been its value if no defect had existed, there is no error in a refusal to charge the jury that if they found the contract to have been substantially performed, they must allow the owner such an amount as would be necessary to make the building conform to the specifications; but the true rule of damages is the difference in value between the building as in fact finished and as it would have been had the provisions of the contract been accurately carried out. Morton v. Harrison, 20 Jones & S. 305.

In Jennings v. Willer, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 32 S. W. 24, it is said to be the rule that where the owner accepts the building, the contractor is entitled to recover its value as constructed, though not in all respects as contracted for,—the amount of recovery in no event to exceed the contract price; and that the owner is entitled to recover as damages the difference between the value of the house as built and as contracted for.

In Ekstrand v. Barth, 41 Wash. 321, 81 Pac. 305, the court quotes as stating the correct rule for the measurement of damages the following statement from 13 Cyc. 158: "Where a contract has been defectively performed and damages are claimed for such reason, the damages should be measured by the difference between the value of the property in its defective condition, and its value if it had been completed in compliance with the contract; and this rule obtains even where the property as delivered has no market value. The measure of damages in such cases has been held to be the costs and expenses reasonably necessary to make the work conform to the requirements to the contract, on the principle that plaintiff is entitled to work such as he contracted for."

In an action to recover for work and materials furnished in the erection of a church edifice, where it appears that the cedent or subsequent." The same rule is thus stated in Woodruff v. Hough, 91 U. S. 602, 23 L. ed. 335, where the court says: "The court repeated the details of the contract on the points where the failure was alleged, and then told the jury that, unless the contractors had complied substantially with these specifications, or a strict compliance therewith had been waived, they could not recover." The same rule was also laid down by Judge Denman in the case of Sherman v. Connor, 88 Tex. 35, 29 S. W. 1053, where he, speaking for the court, uses this language: "For the reason that the record does not disclose the facts more fully, we do not feel warranted in attempting to determine the measure of damages on another trial; but will suggest that, if the works actually constructed [waterworks] were, to the extent of their construction, in ceiling is 2 feet lower than the contract calls for; that the windows are shorter and narrower, that the seats are narrower, than the specifications call for; and that there are other variations and omissions; that the mistake in the height of the ceiling is due to the combined error of the plaintiff and the defendant's architect, and that the other changes are due to the omissions of the plaintiff and his workmen; that the plaintiff, in doing the work and furnishing the materials, acted in good faith, and that the building as completed is reasonably adapted to the wants and requirements of the defendants, and its use beneficial to them, and that it would be practically impossible to make the building conform to the contract without taking it partially down and rebuilding it, the defendants are not entitled to deduct from the contract price as damages the sum it would cost to make the building conform to the contract, but it is proper to deduct only the amount of the diminution in the value of the building by reason of the plaintiff's deviation from the contract. Pinches v. Swedish Evangelical Luthern Church, 55 Conn. 183, 10 Atl. 264.

In Mercantile Trust Co. v. Hensley, 27 App. D. C. 210, affirmed on other grounds in 205 U. S. 298, 51 L. ed. 811, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 535, 10 Ann. Cas. 572, it was held that, where the contractor deviated from the contract plans, the court correctly stated the measure of the owner's damages to be the difference between what the houses were worth when completed and what they would have been worth had they been completed as required by the contract.

In Small v. Lee, 4 Ga. App. 395, 61 S. W. 831, the court said that where the defects in a house as constructed might be remedied at a reasonable expense, it would be proper to deduct from the contract price the sum which it would cost to complete it according to the requirements of the plans and specifications. If the contractor had built a structure substantially adapted to the purpose for which it was built, and of which the owner was in the use and enjoyment, but the defects of the structure could not be made to conform strictly to the requirements of the contract, except by an expenditure which would deprive the contractor of adequate compensation for his labor and materials, justice and equity would require the adoption of another measure of damages. In the case at bar, the builder, owing to the misconstruction of the plans, built the rooms and veranda smaller than he should have done. The court declared that, in such a case, the true measure of damages would be the difference between the value of the house as finished, and the house as it ought to have been finished. To require that the house should be rebuilt, and that the contractor should pay the cost of rebuilding, or that the estimated cost of making the house conform to the contract should be allowed as damages, would be to give an unconscionable advantage to the owner, and would deprive the contractor of adequate compensation for his work and materials.

Where a bridge collapsed in consequence of defects in construction, the measure of damages which may be set off against the indebtedness to the contractor is the difference between the value of the bridge constructed as it was and its value if it had been constructed in accordance with the contract. Converse Bridge Co. v. Geneva County, 168 Ala. 432, 53 So. 196.

The measure of damages recoverable by an owner who has paid the contract price, for alleged defects in materials and workmanship in a building, is the difference between its value as constructed and what its value would have been had it been constructed in accordance with the contract, with reasonably sound materials and reasonably skillful workmanship. Hartford Mill Co. v. Hartford Tobacco Warehouse Co. — Ky. —, 121 S. W. 477.

So, also, in Elwood Planing Mills Co. v. Harting, 21 Ind. App. 408, 52 N. E. 621, it was held that the measure of damages for breach of contract in furnishing improperly seasoned lumber to be used in the construction of a house was the difference between the actual value of the house, and the value of such a house as must be regarded as in contemplation of the parties when they made the contract.

The measure of damages for the failure to furnish for the finishing of a house, wood of the quality contracted for, is the difference between the value of the house with the inferior wood in it, and its value with wood of the quality contracted for, which, of course, cannot exceed the cost of replacing the inferior wood with material of the quality called for by the contract. Wheaton v. Lund, 61 Minn. 94, 63 N. W. 251.

In Wood v. Stringer, 20 Ont. Rep. 148, it was held that the difference in value of the material used for pews by a contractor for the erection of a church, and that of the better material which should have been put in, was not an adequate measure of the set-off or deduction to which the proprietors substantial compliance with the contract, then, if the amount it would take to complete the works according to contract, added to the amount paid, would not exceed the contract price, the city could not recover on its claim for damages; but, if the amount paid and the sum necessary to completion exceed the contract price, then the city would be entitled to recover the excess, unless the amount paid and the sum necessary to completion exceed the value of the works completed according to contract, in which event the difference in the value, if they had been completed according to contract, and were entitled; the court, however, failing to state what the proper measure of damages was.

Where a house built is of the size and form contracted for, though not up to contract requirements in materials and workmanship, the owner's measure of damages is the difference between the value of the house built and of that contracted to be built. Twitty v. McGuire, 7 N. C. (3 Murph.) 501.

The measure of damages for failure to use the required grade of mortar for plastering is the difference in value between the class of work contracted for and that which was furnished. Chamberlain v. Hibbard, 26 Or. 428, 38 Pac. 437.

In Norway Plains Sav. Bank v. Moors, 134 Mass. 129, it was held that the measure of damages recoverable upon a guaranty that houses on which security is given to a bank shall be built in a good workmanlike manner is the difference between the value of the houses as they were in fact built, and the value they would have had if built in conformity to the agreement, or so much of this difference as would have been necessary, with the value of the houses as built, to have paid the mortgage debt and interest then due.

The owner of property for whom a cellar has been constructed not in accordance with the specifications is entitled to offset against the contract price an amount equal to the difference in the value between the work actually done and the work which, by the terms of the contract, should have been done. Moulton v. McOwen, 103 Mass. 587.

In Taulbee v. Moore, 106 Ky. 749, 51 S. W. 564, it was held that where the defect complained of was the contractor's failure to execute brickwork so that the inside of a wall should be as smooth as the outside, the proper measure of damages which might be set off against the contract price was the difference, if any, between the value of the building as constructed, and what it would have been if it had been constructed according to the contract, and not the cost of taking away the wall and replacing it by a wall conforming to the contract requirements, the court saying: "We do not think the measure of damages contended for by appellant is a sound or just one. . . . If appellant is right in his theory, appellee might be mulcted in damages in a sum equal to the entire contract price agreed to be paid to him for the job of work, on account of a comparatively inconsequential failure to literally comply therewith, and which did not affect the real value of the work done by him. Whilst it may be true that if a contractor should disregard the plans and specifications under which a 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

building was to be erected, and erect one substantially dissimilar, the owner might refuse to receive or pay for the property, but where there has been, as in this case, a substantial compliance, it seems to us that the true criterion of damages is that laid down by the court."

The owner may deduct from the contract price of doing the brickwork on a house the difference in value between the work as done and as contracted to be done. Bush v. Jones, 2 Shannon Cas. 224. Other decisions relating to defective mason work are Blakeslee v. Holt, 42 Conn. 226; Wright v. Sanderson, 20 Mo. App. 534, under heading "Cost of conforming work to specifications," supra.

If the roof of a building is not up to contract requirements, the owner may recoup from the contract price as damages the difference between the value of the building as constructed, and what it would have been if the house had been built according to contract. White v. McLaren, 151 Mass. 553, 24 N. E. 911.

On a contractor's failure to comply with specifications as to concrete floors, the owner may recoup as damages the difference between the value of the floors if they had been built as designed, and their value as built and left by the contractor. Norcross Bros. Co. v. Vose, 199 Mass. 81, 85 N. E. 468. Compare Lambert v. Jenkins, — Va. —, 71 S. E. 718, under heading "Cost of conforming work to specifications," supra.

The measure of damages for failure to construct a cement walk in accordance with the specifications, which the owner may counterclaim in an action for the contract price, is the difference between its value as built and its value if built as required by the contract. Culbertson v. Ashland Cement & Constr. Co. 144 Ky. 614, 139 S. W. 792. Compare Dyer v. Lintz, 76 N. J. L. 204, 68 Atl. 908, under heading "Cost of conforming work to specifications," supra.

The measure of the owner's damages for defective performance of a contract for installing heating apparatus is the difference between the value of the apparatus in its defective condition, and what its value would have been had it met the requirements of the contract. Mack v. Sloteman, 21 Fed. 109.

For other instances where contract relating to heating apparatus was defectively performed, see Cutler v. Close, 5 Car. & P. 337; Dornblatt v. Carlton, 10 Ga. App. 741, 73 S. E. 1085; McCullough v. S. J. Hayde Contracting Co. 82 Kan. 734, 109 Pac. 176, under heading "Cost of conforming work to specifications," supra.

The measure of damages recoverable for the contract price, would be the measure of the city's recovery on its claim for damages." The rule applied by the trial court and here laid down is in accordance with, as we believe, and supported by, the following authorities: American Surety Co. v. Lyons, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 151, 97 S. W. 1080; Wat- son v. De Witt County, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 162, 46 S. W. 1061; Gonzales College v. McHugh, 21 Tex. 259; Hillyard v. Crabtree, 11 Tex. 267, 62 Am. Dec. 475; Carroll v. Welch, 26 Tex. 149; Mills v. Paul, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 30 S. W. 561; Stark v. Alford, 49 Tex. 275; Wright v. Daven- defects in a steam boiler constructed and installed in a vessel under a special contract is not the difference between the actual value of the boiler and the contract price, but the difference in value between the boiler as it is with the defects, and the boiler as it would have been if completed in compliance with the contract, since a boiler so completed was exactly what the owner was entitled to. White v. Brockway, 40 Mich. 209.

Where a mill is not constructed in accordance with a contract, the owner's measure of damages is the difference between the actual value of the mill as constructed and what its value would have been had it been constructed as provided by the contract. Gove v. Island City Mercantile & Mill Co. 16 Or. 93, 17 Pac. 740.

Where the action was on a contract for the building of a water tower and tank, it was held that the proper finding was not the amount of money it would take to make such tower and tank conform to the specifications, but the diminished value of said tower and tank by reason of the failure to conform to the specifications. Madisonville v. Rosser, 8 Ohio C. C. N. S. 387, 28 Ohio C. C. 834.

The difference in the market value of the entire premises with the house as constructed, and their value with the house as it should have been constructed, applies only where the house has been located on a different part of the lot than it should have been according to the contract. Small v. Lee, 4 Ga. App. 395, 61 S. E. 831.

Where a house is not located as required by the plan, being about 1 foot out of place, the owner's measure of damages is not the expense of moving the house to the line shown in the plan, but the difference in value of the property as it is and as it would have been if the house had been set according to the plan. Olsen v. Henderson, 113 App. Div. 676, 99 N. Y. Supp. 917.

Cost of doing work over.

As to when not properly recoverable, see cases under headings, "Cost of conforming work to specifications" and "Difference in value," supra.

Where the contractor has substituted other materials or altered the plan of construction, in arriving at the difference in value of the house as built and as it should have been built under the contract, the cost of taking out all the work and material which was not done according to the contract, and having it done over, should be ascertained. Kiel v. Kline, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 158.

In Spink v. Mueller, 77 Mo. App. 85, a majority of the court held that the measure of damages recoverable for the substitution of inferior varnish in finishing a house was the sum necessarily expended by the owner in removing the varnish and re-varnishing; the dissenting member of the court taking the position that the house having been used by the owner, the true measure of his damages was the difference between the work as done and as it ought to have been done.

In Walter v. Huggins, — Mo. App. —, 148 S. W. 148, it is held that the measure of damages for defective workmanship in the performance of a contract to plaster a building, (the surface having been left uneven and wavy) was not the difference in the value of the plastering as done and the value of the work had it been done in accordance with the contract, but the cost of making the work conform to the contract by removing the finishing coat and replacing it, even though the owner, without waiving the contract or acquiescing in its defective performance, had taken possession of the building and by continued use evinced an intention to use the plastering so long as it may be used. The court said: "The defendant owner has suffered no diminution of rental value of the building, and for aught disclosed the plastering will last as long as plastering put on with an even surface would last. If the owner chooses to use the work as long as it will last, it will not suffer any pecuniary loss, and, as it does not intend to occupy the building except by tenants, the work will be just as valuable to it as work properly done. Must we say then that, having a work just as valuable as that specified in the contract would have been, the owner has no remedy, no right to a performance of the contract, or the just equivalent of such performance? We think we are not constrained to pronounce a rule so emasculatory of one of the most fundamental principles of contract law. The substitution by the contractor of poor workmanship for good was a breach of his contract, and as the poor workmanship was of a character to affect the whole job—to leave its entire surface uneven, wavy, and lumpy, a standing offense to the eye and taste—the defect was as much a variance from the general plan and specifications as was the substitution of stock brick for pressed brick in the case of Marsh v. Richards, 29 Mo. 99, where Judge Scott said that, if one pays for the gratification of his taste, he has a right to have it gratified, and the delinquent contractor will not be heard to say that the house built of cheap material is as valuable as one built of more costly material. So an owner is entitled to good workmanship when he pays for it and stipulates for it."

port, 44 Tex. 167; Weis v. Devlin, 67 Tex. 512, 60 Am. Rep. 38, 3 S. W. 726.

The plaintiff in error cites and relies upon the case of Foeller v. Heintz, 137 Wis. 169, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 327, 118 N. W. 543. There is some language in that case which we think would institute too strict a rule in a case of this sort, but, in substance, the decision is not out of harmony with the rule laid down here. It will be noted that in the decision of that case the contractor is credited with the sums unpaid upon the contracts, and charged with the reasonable cost of completing the structure

Where the contractor substituted an iron pipe for a strong lead water pipe required by the contract, he must pay the owner not the difference between the iron and lead pipes, but the cost of laying a lead pipe as provided for in the agreement. Morgan v. Gamble, 230 Pa. 165, 79 Atl. 410.

Difference between contract price and value of building contracted for.

As stated in the introductory portion of this note, where the measure of the contractor's recovery on quantum meruit for what he has done is not arrived at by making a deduction from the contract price, it is not necessary to frame a rule of damages which will include the amount so to be deducted, but the measure of the owners' damages is the benefit of his bargain, i. e., the difference between the contract price and the value of the work contracted to be done. Such is the rule laid down in the following cases:

Where a building cannot be made to conform to the contract requirements without its entire demolition, the measure of the contractor's recovery is not the value of the building as it is, not exceeding the contract price, less the difference in its value as constructed and as it would be were it such a building as contracted for, since in that case the owner would receive double damages; but the true measure of recovery is the value of the building as so completed, not exceeding the contract price, less the damages sustained by the owner by reason of the contractor's failure to perform the contract, which is the difference between the house contracted for, if worth more than the price agreed to be paid, and such price. Eaton v. Gladwell, 121 Mich. 444, 80 N. W. 292.

Where the contractor undertaking the construction of a system of waterworks of a capacity of 250,000 gallons per day completed a system capable of furnishing only 50,000 gallons, of which the city has taken possession, the city is entitled to recoup against the reasonable value of the system actually constructed the difference between the contract price and what the works would have been worth if completed according to contract. Sherman v. Connor, 88 Tex. 35, 29 S. W. 1053.

Miscellaneous.

It will be perceived that the damages the recovery of which is permitted in the cases under the respective headings, "Cost of conforming work to specifications" and "Difference in value," are in the first instance not damages at all, but only the portion of the contract price which the owner is not compelled to pay, and in the second instance are made up of two elements, the portion of the contract price which he is not compelled to pay and the benefit of his contract, of which he is deprived by the defective performance, and which is measurable by the difference between the value of the work if it had been completed in accordance with the specifications, and what he would have had to pay for it. The necessity of distinguishing between these two components of the owner's right of recovery is occasioned by the need for showing that cases in which one is dissociated from the other are not at variance with the general rules above set forth. Under the heading, "Difference between contract price and value of building contracted for," may be found cases in which the measure of the owner's right is the loss of the benefit of his bargain. In the cases which follow, only the right to a deduction from the contract price seems to have been considered:

Where the building is in use and the principal defect shown was in the walls spreading, which had been remedied in such a manner as to prevent all further damage and render the building safe, the measure of damages is not the cost of removing all defective work, and rebuilding, but the contractor may recover the value of the building as constructed less the difference in its value and the contract price. Short v. Moore, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1225, 43 S. W. 211.

In fixing the damages sustained by the owner, the jury should take into consideration the price of the work as declared by the contract, and then determine, if the work when done in pursuance to the contract is worth that sum, what it is worth done as it is. Marsh v. Richards, 29 Mo. 99.

If a contractor fails to construct a building in substantial compliance with the terms of the contract, and his employer refuses to accept it in its incomplete state, and by reason of the contractor's default the employer is damaged, he may recover as damages the difference between the value of the building and the price agreed to be paid by the contract; but if there has been a delivery and acceptance of the building in an incomplete condition, then the measure of damages will be the difference in value of the plant actually constructed, and the value of the plant if constructed in accordance with the terms of the contract. A. J. Anderson Electric Co. v. Cleburne Water Ice & Lighting Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 44 S. W. 929.

See also in this connection, Sherry v. Madler, 123 Wis. 621, 101 N. W. 1095, under heading, "Cost of conforming work to specifications," supra.

E. S. O.

as agreed upon. Again, the court there quotes with approval the statement of the law contained in Woodward v. Fuller, 80 N. Y. 312, where the builder had in good faith intended to comply with the contract, and had substantially complied with it. Although there may have been slight defects caused by inadvertence or unintentional omission, he may recover the contract price less the damage on account of such defects. The defects must not run to the whole, nor be so essential as that the object of the parties to have a specified amount of work done in a particular way is not accomplished.

While there is a wide divergence of opinion expressed by the several witnesses appearing in the case, a careful inspection of the entire record has convinced us that the conclusions of the trial court are well sustained by the testimony, and that there is no such departure by the contractors from the true intent and purpose of their undertaking, or such failure on their part as involved such structural or basic defects, as should deny them the right to recover the fruits of their labor, when in the same judgment provision could be made, as was made, to protect the plaintiff in error against any loss or damage whatever. This having been done, the judgment of the court below well meets the settled rule of law in this state, and at the same time seems to work out and accomplish the justice of the case. Finding no error in the judgment of the court below, it is ordered that the same be, and it is hereby, in all things, affirmed.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

S. C. CRABB et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

CELESTE INDEPENDENT SCHOOL DISTRICT.

(— Tex. —, 146 S. W. 528.)

School — action to annul district — right to maintain.

1. A resident taxpayer cannot maintain an action to annul an independent school district for irregularity in organization, if the proceedings purported to be under color of law.

Same — addition to district — extension of tax.

2. A tax voted by the taxpayers of the school district in the manner provided by the Constitution cannot be extended over territory added to the district after the vote was taken, without giving the taxpayers of such addition an opportunity to adopt or reject it in the manner provided by the Constitution, if the proceedings for the addition of the territory did not meet the constitutional requirements for the adoption of the tax.

(May 1, 1912.)

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fifth Supreme Judicial District to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court for Hunt County in defendant's favor in a proceeding to annul the incorporation of plaintiffs' lands in the defendant district, and enjoin the collection of taxes which had been levied upon them. Reversed in part.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Thompson & Mead, for plaintiffs in error:

Where a tax has been voted upon the property within the limits of a school district, other territory cannot be thereafter added, and the property within such added territory thereby made subject to such tax.

Tex. Const. art. 7, § 3; Snyder v. Baird Independent School Dist. 102 Tex. 4, 111 S. W. 723, 113 S. W. 521; Brewer v. Hall, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 111 S. W. 788; Parks v. West, 102 Tex. 11, 111 S. W. 726; Jenkins v. De Witt, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 115 S. W. 610; Patching v. Hutchison, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 118 S. W. 878; Cummins v. Gaston, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 109 S. W. 476.

When a school board attempts illegally to assume jurisdiction over territory that has never been incorporated into the school district of which they are the representatives, and attempts to levy and collect a tax upon the property situated in such territory, the owners of such property may restrain such school district and its officers

Note. — Right to extend tax over territory added to taxing district after tax voted.

This note does not cover the question generally as to the liability of territory annexed to a city or other taxing district, for debts contracted by the city or district prior to such annexation.

The case of CRABB v. CELESTE INDEPENDENT SCHOOL DIST. was decided under a constitutional provision limiting the mode of levying and collecting school taxes to a vote of two thirds of the qualified taxpaying voters of the district, and it accordingly holds that a tax voted cannot be extended over territory added to the district after the vote, without giving the taxpayers therein an opportunity to vote on the question.

Under the same constitutional provision, it has been held that no property can be annexed to a city for school purposes, and subjected to a tax voted by the city prior to the annexation, without giving the added territory an opportunity to vote upon the and representatives from such illegal procedure.

Parks v. West, 102 Tex. 11, 111 S. W. 726; Snyder v. Baird Independent School Dist. 102 Tex. 4, 111 S. W. 723, 113 S. W. 521; Cummins v. Gaston, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 109 S. W. 476.

In order to subject the property in the added territory to an existing tax, the matter must be submitted to the qualified voters of the said school district so increased, and two thirds of the qualified property taxpaying voters of such enlarged district must vote in favor of such tax.

Tex. Const. art. 7, § 3; Snyder v. Baird Independent School Dist. 102 Tex. 4, 111 S. W. 723, 113 S. W. 521; Brewer v. Hall, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 111 S. W. 788; Parks v. West, 102 Tex. 11, 111 S. W. 726; Patching v. Hutchison, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 118 S. W. 878; Cummins v. Gaston, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 109 S. W. 476; Eagle Lake v. Lakeside Sugar Ref. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 144 S. W. 709.

Messrs. Looney & Clark, for defendant in error:

The tax applies to property as incorporated.

White v. Atlanta, 134 Ga. 532, 68 S. E. 103; Hughes v. Ewing, 93 Cal. 414, 28 Pac. 1067; Madry v. Cox, 73 Tex. 541, 11 S. W. 541; Norris v. Waco, 57 Tex. 635; Laramie County v. Albany County, 92 U. S. 307, 23 L. ed. 552, Tex. Const. art. 7, § 3, art. 11, §§ 7, 10; Grout v. Illingworth, 131 Iowa, 281, 108 N. W. 528; Layton v. New Orleans, 12 La. Ann. 515; Fitzpatrick v. Mt. Sterling Public Graded Schools, 87 Ky. 132, 7 S. W. 896; Fifield v. Swett, 56 N. H. 432; Seattle School Dist. No. 1 v. King County, 3 Wash. 154, 28 Pac. 376; Pence v. Frankfort, 101 Ky. 534, 41 S. W. 1011; True v. Davis, 133 Ill. 522, 6 L.R.A. 266, 22 N. E. 410; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. 795; Van Hook v. Selma, 70 Ala. 361, 45 Am. Rep. 85; Boesch v. Byrom, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 35, 83 S. W. 18.

The fact that the taxpayers brought in had had no vote to determine whether the tax should be levied and collected is immaterial.

Norris v. Waco, 57 Tex. 635; Laramie County v. Albany County, 92 U. S. 307, 23 L. ed. 552; Grout v. Illingworth, 131 Iowa, 281, 108 N. W. 528; Layton v. New Orleans, 12 La. Ann. 515; Fitzpatrick v. Mt. Sterling Public Graded Schools, 87 Ky. 132, 7 S. W. 896.

Dibrell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Long prior to January 1, 1907, the Celeste independent school district, in Hunt county, was duly incorporated in accordance with law; and, while Celeste was an incorporated town, it had never assumed charge or control of the public free schools within its limits as such. Several years prior to January, 1907, the exact time not appearing from the record, the property tax paying voters of this independent school district voted a tax of 20 cents on the $100 valuation of the property subject to taxation therein, and for some years had annually levied and collected such tax for the support and maintenance of its public schools.

On May 24, 1907, upon the petition of a majority of the inhabitants qualified to vote for members of the legislature, certain new and additional territory was annexed to said independent school district as originally formed. The plaintiffs, who reside in this additional territory, brought this suit against the defendant, Celeste independent school district, for the twofold purpose of declaring void the action of the board of trustees of defendant in annexing the territory in which plaintiffs reside to such independent school district, and to enjoin the collection of the special proposition; and that this requirement of the Constitution is not satisfied by the fact that a majority of the taxpayers in the annexed territory petitioned the city to take them in for school purposes after the tax had been voted by the city. Eagle Lake v. Lakeside Sugar Ref. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 144 S. W. 709.

Under a territorial statute authorizing a county to tax property within an attached Indian reservation, the county cannot collect taxes upon such property for time prior to the enactment of the statute. Wagoner v. Evans, 170 U. S. 588, 42 L. ed. 1154, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730.

But where, after a school tax has been voted, but before it is assessed, the lines of a school district are so changed as to include the residence of one not theretofore within the district, the tax may be legally assessed upon the property so included. No constitutional provision seemed to affect this case. Fifield v. Swett, 56 N. H. 432.

And under a statute providing that the board of education shall fix the amount required for school purposes, and that the board of county commissioners shall collect such amount, where the boundaries of a school district are legally extended after the assessment for the year has been made and returned by the assessor, the fund should be raised from the whole district as enlarged, by equal taxation, no matter whether the assessment period commenced before or after the enlargement. Seattle School Dist. No. 1 v. King County, 3 Wash. 154, 28 Pac. 376.

H. C. Sh.

tax of 20 cents on the $100 valuation of their property subject to taxation in such territory, which had been assessed by the proper authority for the year 1908.

It will be sufficient, for the purpose of this opinion, to state in a general way that the grounds upon which plaintiffs seek to rid the territory of their residence from its connection with the Celeste independent school district were certain irregularities in the method of annexation. This subject was fully discussed, and we think properly disposed of, by the court of civil appeals in its holding that, under the pleadings and upon the evidence, the additional territory was lawfully annexed. Crabb v. Celeste Independent School Dist. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 132 S. W. 890. By reason of this view, it will not be necessary to discuss that feature of the case further than to suggest that, since the Celeste independent school district, a quasi municipal corporation, was acting under color of law, its legality could only be determined by a suit brought for that purpose in the name of the state, or by someone under the authority of the state, who has a special interest affected by the existence of such corporation. Plaintiffs, in the capacity in which they sued, could not maintain a cause of action for the purpose of annulling the independent school district. Brennan v. Weatherford, 53 Tex. 337, 37 Am. Rep. 758; Graham v. Greenville, 67 Tex. 62, 2 S. W. 742; El Paso v. Ruckman, 92 Tex. 89, 46 S. W. 25.

The only question raised by the pleadings and evidence, which this court can properly adjudicate, relates to the authority of said independent school district to levy and collect the tax of 20 cents on the $100 valuation of the property subject to taxation within the annexed territory.

It is conceded by all parties that the tax sought to be collected by plaintiffs was voted by a two-thirds majority of the taxpaying voters of the Celeste independent school district before the territory in question was annexed, and that after the annexation no vote was had authorizing the tax. The proposition presenting this issue is stated by plaintiffs' counsel as follows: "Where territory has been added to a school district, pursuant to chapter 124, § 153, of the Acts of Twenty-Ninth Legislature, and where, before such addition is made, such district has voted a tax of 20 cents on the $100 worth of property situated in such district, in order to subject the property in the added territory to such tax, the matter must be submitted to the qualified voters of the said school district so increased, and two thirds of the qualified taxpaying voters 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) of such district, as enlarged, must vote in favor of such tax."

The tax sought to be collected of plaintiffs was by virtue of § 3, art. 7, of the state Constitution, as follows: "One fourth of the revenue derived from the state occupation taxes, and a poll tax of $1 on every male inhabitant of this state between the ages of twenty-one and sixty years, shall be set apart annually for the benefit of the public free schools, and, in addition thereto, there shall be levied and collected an annual ad valorem state tax of such an amount, not to exceed 20 cents on the $100 valuation, as, with the available school fund arising from all other sources, will be sufficient to maintain and support the public free schools of this state for a period of not less than six months in each year; and the legislature may also provide for the formation of school districts within all or any of the counties of this state, by general or special law, without the local notice required in other cases of special legislation, and may authorize an additional annual ad valorem tax to be levied and collected within such school districts for the further maintenance of public free schools and the erection of school buildings therein; provided, that two thirds of the qualified property taxpaying voters of the district, voting at an election to be held for that purpose, shall vote such tax not to exceed in any one year 20 cents on the $100 valuation of the property subject to taxation in such district; but the limitation upon the amount of district tax herein authorized shall not apply to incorporated cities or towns constituting separate and independent school districts."

It is an accepted rule of construction that, where a power is expressly given by the Constitution, and the mode of its exercise is prescribed, such mode is exclusive of all others. Parks v. West, 102 Tex. 11, 111 S. W. 726.

By the terms of § 3, art. 7, of the Constitution, above quoted, the power is given independent school districts to levy and collect a tax of 20 cents on the $100 valuation of all the property subject to taxation situated within its limits; and the mode of levying and collecting such tax is limited to a vote of two thirds of the qualified property taxpaying voters of the district, voting at an election held for that purpose. The mode thus prescribed excludes all others; and it may be said that, not only is no authority conferred by the Constitution to otherwise levy and collect such special tax, but that any other method of so doing is positively prohibited. Making a practical application of this rule, where an independent school district is in-incorporated with a fixed area, and as thus formed votes the tax, and afterwards takes in additional territory and levies a tax on the property in such territory, it seeks in effect to collect a special tax by the method of territorial extension. This is clearly in violation of the Constitution; and hence cannot be done. The language of the Constitution is clear that independent school districts are permitted to levy the tax of 20 cents on the $100 valuation of property within its limits by submitting the proposition to the qualified taxpaying voters of such district, and then only upon a vote of two thirds of such qualified voters. If the tax may be levied and collected on the property subject to taxation within the new territory without submitting the proposition to a vote of the qualified taxpaying voters of the district as altered and enlarged, then that which may not be done directly may be done indirectly. This is true, for the reason that, under the law, additional territory may be taken in by the independent school district by a petition signed by a bare majority of the inhabitants of such new territory qualified to vote for members of the legislature. Sayles's Supp. to Texas Civ. Stat. 1906, p. 441.

It is no answer to this objection to say that two thirds of such qualified voters have signed such petition (although such was not shown to be the fact in this case), for the reason citizens residing in such district are entitled, under the Constitution, to have this issue determined by the ballot, with its safeguard of ascertaining the qualification of the electors, its secrecy, so essential to a free and untrammelled expression of opinion, freedom from intimidation and persuasion at the time of voting, and many other substantial rights growing out of the regulation of the polls. This principle was approved in the case of Re House Roll 284, 31 Neb. 505, 48 N. W. 275, in construing a constitutional provision of that state to the effect that county authorities shall never assess taxes beyond a certain maximum amount, unless authorized by a vote of the people. As a substitute, for this provision of the organic law, the legislature undertook to authorize the county authorities to assess the additional tax upon a petition signed by a majority of the electors of the county, which was made by such legislative act equivalent to the popular vote required by the Constitution. The supreme court of that state held, in effect, that such act was a subterfuge and an abridgement of an essential right given the citizen by the supreme law of the state. The reasons assigned by the chief justice who wrote the opinion in that case, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) for so holding, are in part these: "Where an election is duly called and advertised, the reasons for and against the proposition are discussed and considered, and the electors vote upon such proposition as they may deem for their own and that of the county's best interest; the election is open and public; and the friends and opponents of the measure meet upon common ground, and by their votes register their preference for or opposition to the proposition. None of these advantages, however, inure in favor of merely signing the petition. In such case, the petition is presented to a party who frequently, without due consideration, signs the same, or signs it under representations which he afterwards finds do not conform to the facts."

It must be borne in mind that, in cases where the Constitution authorizes the levy of a special tax by the qualified taxpaying voters, such tax is not levied by the municipality or quasi municipality, but by the delegated taxing power of the owners of property. The exercise of such power must alone be by such property owners; and by no subterfuge, indirection, or the exercise of collateral legislative grants can this delegated and restricted power be taken from the property owner. It is safe and proper to say that no special tax authorized by the Constitution to be levied by the vote of the qualified taxpaying voters of any municipality or school district can ever lawfully be levied without offering the opportunity to such property owners resident in such territory of exercising their privilege of the ballot. Cooley, Tax. 569; Fullilove v. Police Jury, 51 La. Ann. 359, 25 So. 302.

The question here presented has not heretofore been before this court, and, so far as we are able to ascertain, not before any of our courts, except the present case, which was decided by the fifth court of civil appeals, in which the tax was held valid, and the case Eagle Lake v. Lakeside Sugar Ref. Co. 144 S. W. 709, and a companion case, Eagle Lake v. Lakeside Rice Mill Co. 144 S. W. 712, by the fourth court of civil appeals, in which the tax was held void. The view of the later decision is clearly correct in its ruling that the tax levied against the property situated within the extension, without a vote, is void. We can see no escape from this conclusion, if the plain language of the Constitution is to be given the meaning it imports.

In deciding the question of constitutional construction under consideration, Judge Bookhout, in the case at bar, disposes of the question as follows: "Where a school district has voted for school purposes a tax of 20 cents, and afterwards other territory is annexed, there is nothing in the constitution requiring another election in which those in the annexed territory participate, before property in such territory is subject to such tax. The 20 cent tax for school purposes had been legally voted in the district before the territory in question was added. . . . Persons owning property in territory added to an independent school district by the extension of its boundaries must accept conditions as they find them, or bring about an election to vote off the tax, as provided for by statute."

In handling the same question, Chief Justice James, in the case of Eagle Lake v. Lakeside Sugar Ref. Co. above, in his characteristic force and direction, makes a different disposition of the question, and says: "It appears from the petition that the vote upon which the tax levied in this case rests is a vote had by the citizens of Eagle Lake several years before September, 1907, which was a vote confined to the corporate limits of the city, and did not concern this outlying territory. We are of opinion that no property could be annexed to the city for school purposes and subjected to the additional tax, without compliance with said condition prescribed by the Constitution in respect to the added territory. The vote taken in the city several years before this annexation was made was not such compliance; and it is apparent from the record and the papers filed in this case that on election or vote has been had on the subject of this outlying territory."

The question now under investigation was discussed by Chief Justice Parsons of the supreme court of Massachusetts, in the case of Richards v. Dagget, 4 Mass. 534, in determining whether a property owner in a portion of a school district where a tax had been voted, but not assessed, before such portion of the original district had been segregated, could be made to pay such tax. In that case, the chief justice said: "The case of alteration in districts after the passing of votes to raise money, and before the assessment, is not expressly provided for in the statute, which it is our duty so to construe as will be most convenient and least injurious to the inhabitants of the town. Because it is always to be presumed that the legislature intend the most beneficial construction of their acts, when the design of them is not apparent. It is not just that a man should, by virtue of this act, be assessed to the payment of money, in the raising of which he could have no agency, or from which he could not (without any fault of his own) derive any benefit. Thus, if he was included within a district after the vote to raise the money had passed, it is admitted that he could not be assessed to the payment of it; for, not being a member of the district when the money was voted, he could have had no voice in the vote."

Learned counsel for defendant have filed in this case an able argument; but nowhere have they presented any proposition on the subject of their contention which can be sustained upon either authority or reason, original or analogous. It is asserted, however, that "substantially the identical question has been passed on in a large number of cases from other jurisdictions, and we are unable to find any authority to the contrary." In connection with this statement, the following citation of authorities as sustaining such position is made: White v. Atlanta, 134 Ga. 532, 68 S. E. 103; Hughes v. Ewing, 93 Cal. 414, 28 Pac. 1067; Madry v. Cox, 73 Tex. 541, 11 S. W. 541; Norris v. Waco, 57 Tex. 635; Laramie County v. Albany County, 92 U. S. 307, 23 L. ed. 552; Tex. Const., art. 11, § 10; Grout v. Illingworth, 131 Iowa, 281, 108 N. W. 528; Layton v. New Orleans, 12 La. Ann. 515; Fitzpatrick v. Mt. Sterling Public Graded Schools, 87 Ky. 132, 7 S. W. 896; Fifield v. Swett, 56 N. H. 432; Seattle School Dist. No. 1, v. King County, 3 Wash. 154, 28 Pac. 376; Pence v. Frankfort, 101 Ky. 534, 41 S. W. 1011; True v. Davis, 133 Ill. 522, 6 L.R.A. 266, 22 N. E. 410; Van Hook v. Selma, 70 Ala. 361, 45 Am. Rep. 85; Boesch v. Byrom, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 35, 83 S. W. 18.

We have taken the time and pains to carefully review each of the authorities cited, and have concluded that no one of the authorities mentioned sustains defendant's position by enunciation of principles or from analogous reasoning. Of those cases in which the pertinent question is discussed, no constitutional provision exists to limit legislative action, and in others the questions presented are not kindred to the one under consideration. We take them seriatim.

White v. Atlanta, supra, was an equitable proceeding by some of the residents and taxpayers of the territory that had previously been outside of the corporate limits of the city of Atlanta, but subsequently brought within its limits by an extension process, to enjoin the officers of said city from putting into effect the act, so as to include such new territory. Collaterally and incidentally the question of taxation was discussed with reference to the power of the city to tax the property in the new territory to pay existing indebtedness of the city. The court held the act of extension valid, and, in addition to such holding, said: "When included within the city by legislative enactment, they take the advantage of being residents or taxpayers of the municipality; and they become subject to the corresponding proportionate burden, in the absence of lawful provision to the contrary."

It will be observed that the property within the extension was held to be subject to taxation levied by the city under authority of law; but there was involved no question of a tax levied by the property owners as provided for in our Constitution, and which furnishes the gist of the question involved in the case at bar.

In the case of Hughes v. Ewing, 93 Cal. 414, 28 Pac. 1067, the board of supervisors of Fresno county, California, changed the boundaries of Fresno city school district by excluding therefrom certain lands and transferring same to other districts. Prior to that time, the electors of the district had voted to raise a certain sum for the purpose of building a schoolhouse; but this fact was not certified to the supervisors until after such lands had been excluded from the district. However, it was sought to collect the tax on the excluded land; and the action was brought by the owners of said land to declare the tax null and void as to those lands, and to restrain the tax collector of the county from collecting same. A statement of the case precludes the possibility that the principle involved in this could have been involved in that case. It is interesting, however, to note the following holding in that case: "For all purposes of corporate power or liability, it [the school district] remained unchanged; and the property upon which the supervisors should have levied the tax is only such property as, at the time when the tax was levied, was within the boundaries of this corporation." If the proposition thus announced is sound, then it is equally sound to say that when a special tax is voted, the same can be levied only on the property that was within its boundaries at the time the tax was voted.

The question involved in Madry v. Cox, 73 Tex. 538, 11 S. W. 541, as to the power of taxation, was whether or not the property within annexed territory was subject to taxation for a debt previously incurred by a vote of the people of the city of Bonham, to which such territory had been annexed. Referring to the annexation as a fact, Judge Stayton, in that case, held: "When this is done, the indebtedness of the corporation continues; and persons within territory annexed will become, in the absence of legislation to the contrary, subject to taxation for all municipal indebtedness existing before annexation, as well as that afterward contracted." This 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) has ever been the law in this state, and, so far as we know, in all other jurisdictions, where there is an absence of legislation controlling the subject; but in what respect it throws light upon the question we are considering we are not able to determine. If, at the time a debt is created by a vote of the people of a city, a tax is likewise voted to pay the interest and create a sinking fund to pay such indebtedness, pursuant to some constitutional provision, a parallel case would be presented, and in such case we would not hesitate to rule the tax void as to property embraced in the subsequent extension of such city. In that case, a debt was created by a vote of the people; but the tax was levied by the municipality, and not by the property owners.

The question presented in the case of Norris v. Waco, 57 Tex. 635, was whether rural lands consisting solely of farm and pasture lands, embraced within the city limits of Waco, were subject to city taxes. By no possible construction can that furnish an authority for a ruling on any issue involved in this case.

A statement from the syllabus of the case of Commissioners of Laramie County v. Albany County, 92 U. S. 307, 23 L. ed. 552, will demonstrate its impertinence to any question raised in the present case, to wit: "Where the legislature does not prescribe any different regulations, the rule is that the old corporation owns all the public property within its new limits, and is responsible for all debts contracted by it before the act of separation was passed, which debts it must pay, without any claim for contribution from the new subdivision."

The case nearest in point, as sustaining the position of defendant, is that of Grout v. Illingworth, 131 Iowa, 281, 108 N. W. 528. In that case, the action was to enjoin the collection of the tax that had been voted in the school district for the purpose of erecting a school building, prior to the time when the property against which the tax was sought to be collected had been taken into the school district. In other words, the district had been extended and certain property taken within its boundaries, and a tax had been levied pursuant to a vote of the qualified electors of the original district; but at that time the property in question was not within the district.

It is clear the Iowa case, above, is not an authority for the position taken by defendant's counsel, from the fact that it is stated in the opinion by the court that the right of the property owner to participate in the proceeding with relation to the levy of the tax on his property is only fixed by the statute, and not by the Constitution. Here lies the important distinction.

tion. If we had no constitutional provision to grapple with, we would be constrained to hold that, where the legislative act gave the property owner the right to participate in the proceeding to determine whether or not the tax should be levied, another legislative act, authorizing an extension of the district where the tax had been voted, would subject the property within the extension to the tax, notwithstanding the nonparticipation of the property owner in the levy of the tax. This, however, is not the status of the case at bar; for here the right to participate in the levy of the tax is given the resident property owner by the Constitution, and the legislature is denied authority to abridge that right. Where there is no constitutional inhibition, the power of the legislature to enact laws is supreme and unlimited. But when the Constitution speaks, either by direction, negation, or necessary implication, its voice must be heeded even by the sovereign power of the legislative branch of government. State v. Brownson, 94 Tex. 436, 61 S. W. 114.

The question involved in the case of Layton v. New Orleans, 12 La. Ann. 515, was as to the power of the legislature to abolish the incorporation of three municipalities, and incorporate them into one, and authorize the one incorporation to levy a tax to pay the aggregate indebtedness of the three, irrespective of the inequality of the respective amounts due by each. The supreme court of Louisiana held in that case that, the legislature having the power to create, modify, or abolish municipal incorporations, it had the power to provide in what manner the taxes should be levied for their support, and how their debts should be paid upon their dissolution. The questions considered and determined in that case have no relation to the question here involved.

The facts in the Kentucky case of Fitzpatrick v. Mt. Sterling Public Graded Schools, 87 Ky. 132, 7 S. W. 896, are similar to those in the Iowa case reviewed above; and the validity of the tax was sustained upon the same ground as that by the Iowa court,—that there was no constitutional provision regulating the creation of the tax. In proof of this position, we take from the opinion in the Kentucky case the following excerpt: "As the question before us is therefore purely legislative, and involves no constitutional right of the taxpayers in the district as it exists under the act of 1886, the court has no power to suspend or interfere with the collection of taxes authorized by that act."

The question in the New Hampshire case (Fisfield v. Swett, 56 N. H. 432) was similar L.R.A. (N.S.)

lar to the Iowa and Kentucky cases, above, and was based upon similar facts. While the opinion does not disclose whether the tax was or not provided for by the New Hampshire Constitution, it is clearly inferable that it was pursuant to a legislative act, and the extension authorized by the same authority. It is true the reasoning in that case is dissimilar to that in the other cases, and is such that this court would hesitate to adopt. It is based upon the analogy that, because a citizen who, after a tax has been voted in a school district, voluntarily moves into such district with taxable movable property, is subject to pay such special tax, therefore a citizen who is involuntarily brought into such district is subject to such tax. Whatever may be the provision in that state authorizing the tax, whether legislative or organic, it must be unlike that of our Constitution; for here the tax is only authorized by the qualified taxpaying property owners who reside within the limits of the district. Of course, a citizen who lives beyond the limits of the district, and voluntarily moves within its limits, would be liable to pay the tax upon such property as he took with him or should afterwards acquire, just as the citizen who lives out of the district, but owns property situated within the district, is required to pay the tax. Such citizen is denied the right to vote upon the tax, and is subject to its payment; but he is required to do this for the sole reason it is thus denominated in the Constitution.

In Seattle School Dist. No. 1 v. King County, 3 Wash. 154, 28 Pac. 376, the proceeding was to obtain a construction of a clause of the act of March 26, 1890, as follows: "The board of education shall annually, at a meeting next preceding the annual tax levy for state and county purposes, report to the county commissioners an estimate of the amount of funds required for the support of the schools, . . . and the county commissioners are hereby authorized and required to levy and collect said amount the same as other taxes." As stated in the opinion: "It appears that by proper proceedings and in accordance with the law on that subject, the boundaries of the city of Seattle were somewhat enlarged on the 1st day of June, 1891, and the board of education has reported the amount of funds required, and requested that amount to be levied and collected upon the property in the district as enlarged; but the board of commissioners decline to levy upon any property, except such as was within the city limits prior to the enlargement. A mandamus was asked, requiring the commissioners and other county officers to levy, extend, and collect the tax." The court ordered the peremptory writ of mandamus. It is evident no light is shed by this case upon the issue here.

The case of Pence v. Frankfort, 101 Ky. 534, 41 S. W. 1011, is another Kentucky case which involves a question similar to that in the other case above reviewed, and upon the legislative act of that state alone is the decision based. We have heretofore shown its distinguishing feature.

In True v. Davis, 133 Ill. 522, 6 L.R.A. 266, 22 N. E. 410, it may be seen the issue here was not in that case from a statement of the question by the court: "Does the prohibition of § 11, art. 9, of the Constitution, prevent the annexation of two or more cities, incorporated towns, or villages to each other, in the manner provided by the provisions of the act entitled 'An Act to Provide for the Annexation of Cities, Incorporated Towns and Villages, or Parts of the Same, to Cities, Incorporated Towns, and Villages,' approved and in force April 25, 1889 (Laws 1889, p. 66), when such cities, incorporated towns, or villages are each indebted, and the indebtedness of one or more of them exceeds the limit named in that section?"

The question in the case of Van Hook v. Selma, 70 Ala. 361, 45 Am. Rep. 85, was as to the validity of an occupation tax for selling merchandise in the limits of the city of Selma; and the question in the present case is not in the remotest degree involved.

The questions raised in Boesch v. Byrom, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 35, 83 S. W. 18, relate solely to the authority of school districts to extend their boundaries, the election of school trustees, and the authority of de facto officers or school trustees to order the election to determine the question of a tax levy. We can gather nothing from that case to assist in determining the question we are seeking to solve.

A careful review of all the authorities to which we have been cited reveals nothing that would demand or authorize this court to place a different construction upon § 3, article 7, of the Constitution, than that, where an independent school district votes a special tax, pursuant to the authority conferred by said section of the Constitution, and afterwards extends the boundaries of such district, the existing special tax so authorized cannot be levied and collected against the property in such extension, until such assessment is authorized by a vote of the qualified taxpaying voters of the district as extended.

It follows from the construction here placed upon the provision of the Constitution in question the judgments of the District Court and Court of Civil Appeals will 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

have to be reversed and rendered, in so far as they hold the taxing question valid. It is therefore ordered by this court that the judgments of the District Court and the Court of Civil Appeals be affirmed, in so far as they sustain the validity of the Celeste independent school district, as extended by the petition of May 24, 1907; and, in so far as they sustain the validity of the tax complained of, said judgments are reversed, and judgment is here rendered for plaintiffs in error, enjoining the collection of said taxes as by them prayed for.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(Department No. 2.)

WILLIAM J. ELLIOTT, Respt.,

v.

SEATTLE, RENTON, & SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(— Wash. —, 122 Pac. 614.)

Carrier — injury to street car passenger — overcrowding — excessive speed.

1. A street railway company which runs a car at high and dangerous speed without warning, past another which is so overcrowded that the passengers in moving about crowd one of their number, who is standing on the platform, over the line of safety between the two tracks, may be liable for injury to him through collision with the car so operated.

Same — opening platform gate — act of passenger — liability for injury.

2. A street car company which by ordinance is bound to maintain gates upon the sides of car platforms next to parallel tracks is liable for injury to a passenger crowded off the platform and injured by a passing car, although the gate was opened by a fellow passenger.

Note. — As to duty of street car company to passenger on running board, see note in 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 160. As to duty to provide and keep gates on street cars or interurban cars closed, see note in 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 346. Generally as to liability of carrier for injury resulting from negligent or meddlesome act of fellow passenger, see note in 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 724.

As to contributory negligence of passenger in riding on platform of street car, see notes in 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 831, and 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 972. A similar question as to passengers standing on the running board of a street car is treated in the notes in 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1191; 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 352, and 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 972. As to liability for personal injury to passenger by crowd at station or stopping place, see note in 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 470; and as to injury by crush in entering car at elevated or subway station, see note in 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 729.

Same — injury in alighting — effect of riding on platform.

3. That a passenger on a street car rode on the platform when he might have ridden inside the car will not preclude his holding the company liable for an injury inflicted upon him while he was attempting to alight from the car at his destination.

Trial — jury — negligence of street car passenger — alighting on wrong side of car.

4. Whether or not a street car passenger is negligent in attempting to alight on the left side of the car is for the jury, under evidence tending to show that the car was so crowded that he could not reach the right-hand exit.

(April 8, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Will H. Thompson and Morris B. Sachs for appellant.

Mr. Frank E. Green, for respondent:

Appellant was negligent in unreasonably overcrowding its car.

Pray v. Omaha Street R. Co. 44 Neb. 167, 48 Am. St. Rep. 717, 62 N. W. 447; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Dumser, 161 Ill. 190, 43 N. E. 698; Graham v. Manhattan R. Co. 149 N. Y. 336, 43 N. E. 917; East Omaha Street R. Co. v. Godola, 50 Neb. 906, 70 N. W. 491; Chicago City R. Co. v. Morse, 197 Ill. 327, 64 N. E. 304; Graham v. McNeill, 20 Wash. 466, 43 L.R.A. 300, 72 Am. St. Rep. 121, 55 Pac. 631.

Appellant was guilty of negligence in operating its car, while thus unreasonably overcrowded, in a manner to cause the passengers to lurch.

Halverson v. Seattle Electric Co. 35 Wash. 600, 77 Pac. 1058; Geddes v. Metropolitan R. Co. 103 Mass. 391; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Polkey, 203 Ill. 225, 67 N. E. 793; Reber v. Pittsburg & B. Traction Co. 179 Pa. 339, 57 Am. St. Rep. 599, 36 Atl. 245; McCaw v. Union Traction Co. 205 Pa. 271, 54 Atl. 893; Hansen v. North Jersey Street R. Co. 64 N. J. L. 686, 46 Atl. 718.

Appellant violated a city ordinance in not providing its car with a guard or gate, making it impossible for passengers to alight from the left side of the car.

Augusta R. Co. v. Glover, 92 Ga. 132, 18 S. E. 406; Stappers v. Interurban Street R. Co. 56 Misc. 337, 106 N. Y. Supp. 854; Aston v. St. Louis Transit Co. 105 Mo. App. 226, 79 S. W. 999; Walters v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. 48 Wash. 233, 24 L.R.A. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(N.S.) 788, 93 Pac. 419; Kluska v. Yeomans, 54 Wash. 465, 132 Am. St. Rep. 1121, 103 Pac. 819.

It is not negligence as a matter of law, for a passenger to ride upon the platform of an electric or steam car, when the seats are all occupied by other passengers.

Halverson v. Seattle Electric Co. 35 Wash. 600, 77 Pac. 1058; Muldoon v. Seattle City R. Co. 7 Wash. 528, 22 L.R.A. 794, 38 Am. St. Rep. 901, 35 Pac. 422; Cogswell v. West Street & N. E. Electric R. Co. 5 Wash. 46, 31 Pac. 411; Graham v. McNeill, 20 Wash. 466, 43 L.R.A. 300, 72 Am. St. Rep. 121, 55 Pac. 631.

Whether the plaintiff was negligent in the position which he took and was occupying when he was crowded off the car is fairly a question for the determination of the jury.

Jacobs v. West End Street R. Co. 178 Mass. 116, 59 N. E. 639; Lehr v. Steinway & H. P. R. Co. 118 N. Y. 556, 23 N. E. 889; Trussell v. Morris County Traction Co. 79 N. J. L. 533, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 351, 77 Atl. 535; Wilde v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 163 Mass. 533, 40 N. E. 851; Graham v. McNeill, 20 Wash. 466, 43 L.R.A. 300, 72 Am. St. Rep. 121, 55 Pac. 631; McQuillan v. Seattle, 10 Wash. 465, 45 Am. St. Rep. 799, 38 Pac. 1119.

Chadwick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries. The plaintiff was a passenger upon an inbound car of the defendant company, which operates a street car line between Renton and Seattle. A part of the way the track is single, but from Hillman City into Seattle there is a double track. When running over the single track, both sides of the back platform are kept open. In running over the double track, the left side, or the one next to the double track, is closed. This was accomplished by means of a collapsible iron gate which was fastened by a catch and bolt. On the morning of the accident the testimony shows to a certainty that the conductor closed and fastened the gate at Hillman City. When plaintiff boarded the car, all of the seats were taken, and he took a position on the back platform, standing near the handle of a wheel brake on the left side. The car was one that was due to arrive in Seattle about 9 o'clock, but before arriving at Ninth street it had become so crowded that the passengers were standing on the platform and in an alcove at the end of the car, so that they were, in the language of a witness, "chest to chest; back to chest." The testimony shows that, while the seating capacity of the car was about 40, there were approximately 125 passengers on the car. The testimony of the plaintiff tends to show that, as the car approached Ninth street, where plaintiff and others who were regular patrons of the company were accustomed to alight, he crowded his way toward the left side of the car, intending to get off on the side next to the opposite track; that, as he was about to catch the handrail or handles at the side of the entrance, the brakes were set in such a way that the car lurched or jerked, so that all of those standing swayed with the car; that plaintiff was thrown off his balance, and, in attempting to save himself, caught the grab at his right with both hands. The momentum of the car threw him around so that he was facing the entrance; that at this moment a car on the opposite track, going about 20 miles an hour, with no bell sounding, was approaching; that he could not save himself, and was struck by the grabhandle of the opposite car, and received the injury of which he now complains.

The testimony of the defendant tends to show that plaintiff, who made the trip six days in every week, deliberately and to suit his own convenience started to get off the car on the off side; that he backed down the steps, holding the handle on either side of the entrance; that he threw his head back beyond the 19 inches of clearance between the cars; that he was unmindful of his own safety as well as of the fact that the double track was a token of danger, and that if the gate was open it was opened by plaintiff, or, if not by him, by another; in any event, that it was opened without the knowledge or consent of the conductor, who, because of the crowded condition of the car, was riding on one of the steps at the right entrance, and could not see the gate on the other side. We confess that, in the light of the record, the defense seems to have been the better sustained. But, as this court has so often announced, the facts are for the jury, and it having accepted the case of plaintiff as true, and rejected the testimony of the defendant, the judgment must be affirmed unless the law, as applied to the facts as found by the jury, intervenes.

It is first urged that the complaint does not state a cause of action. It is said that this must be so unless it be the law that mere negligence in allowing the car to become overcrowded, and to be carrying an excessive number of passengers, is in itself actionable merely because the passengers, in moving about, push or crowd one of their number off the car; and unless it is shown that the action of the passengers was such that it was apparent to the employees in charge of the car that their action was endangering the passenger. This may be true, but it occurs to us that defendant has overlooked an important element in the case, if indeed it be not the proximate cause of the injury. It is alleged that the accident occurred "also on account of defendant's negligence and carelessness in running another car in the opposite direction on the adjoining street car track . . . at a high and dangerous rate of speed, without giving any signal, sign, or warning of the approach thereof." We think a cause of action is stated.

It is next urged that there is no proof of actionable negligence. The only question which occurs on this assignment is whether the defendant performed its whole duty when the conductor closed the gate at Hillman City, and is not to be charged because plaintiff or someone else opened it before the accident occurred. We are bound to assume, for the jury has so found, that plaintiff did not open the gate. This being so, it would follow that, if the gate was opened by another, the company would be liable to a passenger who was innocent of offense. Being charged with a high degree of care, it is bound to so operate its safeguards that, when they are not, for any reason, under the eye of the conductor, a third person cannot undo, to the prejudice of another, the precautions which have been taken, and which the law imposes for the safety of passengers. It will be remembered that the crowd was such on this car that the conductor could not see the gate. An ordinance of the city was introduced by plaintiff, and by its terms the duty is put upon street car companies operating double track systems to equip their cars "with gates or guards upon the side of such platform of each of said cars which is next to the track of said line other than the one upon which said cars are being run or operated, which gates or guards shall so inclose the platform of said car that it will be impossible for passengers to enter such cars or alight therefrom upon the side of said platform so furnished or provided with gates and guards." This ordinance, the fact that the accident occurred, and the fact that plaintiff did not open the gate, are enough to sustain the finding of negligence. Such ordinances (and it may be questioned whether they do more than affirm a general rule) are intended to protect the absentminded from their inattention, the careless from their want of car, and the foolish from their folly; and if, in spite of such precaution, one of these opens the gate, the fact that it had once been closed would not bar an action by one who was not responsible for the condition existing at the time the accident actually occurred. Defendant has cited many cases to sustain its position, but we do not conceive them to be in point. They could only be held applicable if we assume that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, or that he opened the gate. This we have no power to do.

It is finally urged that the testimony shows that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The question is whether plaintiff should have taken his place standing inside the car or on the platform. Under the admitted facts he was making his way out, and was in the act of getting on the step at the time he was hurt. The fact that he might have ridden in the car instead of on the platform thus becomes immaterial.

Whether plaintiff should have gone to the right entrance instead of to the left is also a question for the jury, for his testimony is that the way was so crowded that he could not get to the right entrance. To hold plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence under the testimony in this case would be to hold that the mere act of a passenger in alighting from a crowded car on the off side is contributory negligence as a matter of law. The law will not sustain us in so holding.

Finding no error, the judgment is affirmed.

Dunbar, Ch. J., and Gose, Crow, and Parker, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT. (In Banc.)

STATE OF WASHINGTON

ARTHUR ASH, Appt.

('— Wash. — ,122 Pac. 995.)

Trial — instruction — manslaughter — absence of evidence.

1. If one accused of murder is, on the facts, guilty of that offense unless, by reason of his mental condition, he was not responsible for his acts, an instruction of manslaughter is erroneous.

Criminal law — former jeopardy — reversal after conviction of included offense.

2. The reversal for a new trial upon defendant's appeal of a conviction of man-

Note.—The decisions on the question of former jeopardy in retrial for higher charge after setting aside verdict on lower charge may be found in notes to State v. Gillis, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 571, and Brantley v. State, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 959.
39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

slaughter upon a charge of murder, subjects him to a retrial upon the original accusation.

(April 9, 1912.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Spokane County convicting him of manslaughter. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Crandell & Crandell for appellant.

Messrs. John L. Wiley and Robert L. McWilliams for the State.

Morris, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was tried upon an information charging murder in the first degree, and was convicted of manslaughter, from which he appeals.

The main assignments of error are based upon the instructions of the court submitting the crime of manslaughter to the jury; it being contended that there was no evidence supporting such an instruction, and hence it was error for the court to give it. It will not be necessary to review the evidence to ascertain if there was evidence upon which the instruction submitting manslaughter could be sustained. The state concedes there was none. In referring to the evidence, the state says in its brief: "The evidence in effect was that the defendant was guilty of a cold-blooded, deliberate murder, unless the defense of insanity interposed by the defendant was sufficient to justify the homicide and to warrant an acquittal."

The character of defendant's act, unless excused by his defense of insanity, would seem to be determined from the fact that he hid himself in the bushes near the residence of the deceased, where he lay in ambush all night, all the next day, and up to 9 o'clock P. M., of the second night, awaiting a favorable opportunity to shoot and kill his victim. These undisputed facts contain no element of manslaughter. The defendant was guilty of killing a human being with a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed, without excuse or justification in law; or else, by reason of his mental condition, he was not subject to the penalties of the law; and the court should so have instructed the jury. It was therefore error to submit the crime of manslaughter, since there was no evidence in the case upon which such an instruction could be predicated. The state contends that, since the greater includes the less, manslaughter is included in murder in the first or second degree. Unquestionably this is true in law, but to be included in law is not sufficient; it must also be included in fact. We have so held in a number of cases. Reference to the latest two will be sufficient.

In State v. Kruger, 60 Wash. 542, 111 Pac. 769, we said: "It is true that the greater includes the less, but the defendant is not guilty of either unless the testimony brings him within the definition of a crime. It was never the intent of the law to submit a possible verdict upon a so-called included crime, because included in law. It must be included in fact, and by the facts of the particular case."

In State v. Pepoon, 62 Wash. 635, 114 Pac. 449, it is said: "It is no doubt true that the crime of murder includes the lesser crimes of murder in the second degree and of manslaughter, and it is equally true that the jury has a right to determine the degree of crime which was committed. But that determination must, of course, be based upon evidence. That is all that gives the determination any value. The anxiety of the law is to give the defendant the full benefit of trial by jury on all questions of fact, and it will not give its sanction to a farcical and arbitrary determination of any alleged fact which the jury has had no possible means of determining. If the defendant had been informed against for manslaughter, and the state had failed to produce any evidence tending to show the commission of manslaughter, as it did fail in this case to do, there would have been no duty resting upon the jury; and it would clearly have been the duty of the court to discharge the jury, because there was nothing upon which the function of a jury could take hold, and to discharge the defendant. The legal function of the jury is not at all changed because the question for determination arises upon an information in the first degree. We are, of course, not speaking with reference to weight of testimony, but of a case where there is no testimony whatever to weigh tending to show the commission of the lesser degree."

Answering the rule of these cases, the state contends that inasmuch as it is admitted that manslaughter is included in law in a charge of murder in the first degree, and as under our practice jurors are the sole judges of the facts, the court cannot say as a matter of law there is no testimony to establish any of the lesser or included crimes, but must admit the legal inclusion and submit the inclusion in fact to the jury. This would be required where there was any fact or facts to be determined by the jury. But the court is not required to submit any determination of a fact to a jury when there is no fact, nor to permit a jury to establish by its verdict

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a fact which there is no evidence to sustain. Verdicts must be founded upon facts in evidence; and the court can only submit to the jury such verdicts as may be found from a review of the facts in evidence when there is substantial evidence to establish a fact; the court cannot weigh it nor determine its relative merit. Nor can it convert an inclusion in law into an inclusion in fact, until there is a fact. The inclusion in fact being established, the inclusion in law follows; but the latter cannot exist alone, nor find a place in any criminal trial, until the essential and indispensable facts appear in the evidence. Neither can we accept the argument of the state that appellate courts should not shut their eyes to the fact that jurors sometimes refuse to obey the instructions of the court, when there is no alternative between finding a man guilty of murder in the first degree and finding him not guilty; and oftentimes, under the impulse of sentiment or other motive, acquit rather than subject the accused by their verdict to the penalties of murder in the first degree. That jurors refuse to do their sworn duty in homicide cases, cannot influence judges in not doing theirs; and, if actuated by motives other than their obligation to the state and to themselves, jurors permit guilty men to escape their just dues, the fault must rest with the jurors, and not with the courts, who must ever refuse to commit one legal wrong in order to palliate another. We are therefore of the opinion that it was error for the court to submit an instruction involving the crime of manslaughter.

Having reached this conclusion, we are brought face to face with another grave problem,—the effect of this ruling upon the appellant. It is contended, following the rule laid down in State v. Robinson, 12 Wash. 349, 41 Pac. 51, 902; State v. Murphy, 13 Wash. 229, 43 Pac. 44; and State ex rel. Moorehead v. Chapman, 64 Wash. 140, 116 Pac. 592, that the verdict of manslaughter is in legal effect an acquittal of the higher degree of homicide; and appellant cannot again be tried for those crimes without being twice put in jeopardy for the same offense; and, as there was no evidence upon which to justify conviction of manslaughter, the result must be the discharge of the defendant. One of these rules must be departed from, or else in this case, as in many others where the verdict results from an erroneous view of the law by the court below and the submission of improper verdicts, the appellate court, in correcting the error and thus seeking to do justice as between the state and the defendant, must lay down a rule which results in the greatest injustice, and turns loose murderers and other violators of the law to prey upon other victims of their criminal lust. We have therefore carefully and conscientiously reviewed these two rules in order to satisfy ourselves which is best founded in reason, and which best serves the justice and purpose of the law. The first of these rules, as found in State v. Kruger, and State v. Pepoon, supra, was first reviewed by the court in State v. McPhail, 39 Wash. 199, 81 Pac. 683, where it is said that "the decisions are practically uniform to the effect that a defendant can only be convicted of a lesser degree or of an attempt when there is testimony to sustain such a conviction. . . . A party has no constitutional right to a compromise verdict which is not supported by any testimony." We rest our adherence to that rule, which has become one of universal application, upon the authority and reasoning of the McPhail, Kruger, and Pepoon Cases. It is to-day and ever has been the law without dissent or qualification.

The other rule that a conviction of a lesser degree of a given crime is in legal effect an acquittal of the higher degrees, entitling the defendant to a discharge of the higher degrees upon a new trial, was first noted by this court in State v. Robinson, 12 Wash. 349, 41 Pac. 51, 902, although the point was not squarely raised or passed upon until the decision of State v. Murphy, 13 Wash. 229, 43 Pac. 44, where it was held that a conviction of murder in the second degree was an acquittal of murder in the first degree, and the defendant could only be again tried for the lesser crime. The only member of the present court who took part in the decision of State v. Murphy is the present chief justice, who vigorously dissented from the rule announced. It would be useless to attempt to harmonize the American cases upon this point. They are in as direct conflict as it is possible for opposing opinions to be. The older rule is the one holding that a conviction of a lesser offense is not an acquittal of greater offenses charged in the same information, operating as a bar upon the granting of a new trial. It was first announced in 1819 in Morris v. State, 1 Blackf. 37, and has been followed in: Brantley v. State, 132 Ga. 573, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 959, 131 Am. St. Rep. 218, 64 S. E. 676, 16 Ann. Cas. 1203; Veatch v. State, 60 Ind. 291; State v. McCord, 8 Kan. 232, 12 Am. Rep. 469; Re Somers, 31 Nev. 531, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 504, 135 Am. St. Rep. 700, 103 Pac. 1073; Com. v. Arnold, 83 Ky. 1, 4 Am. St. Rep. 114, 70 Am. Crim. Rep. 210; State v. Kessler, 15 Utah, 142, 62 Am. St. Rep. 911, 49 Pac. 293; Bohanan v. State, 18 Neb. 57, 53 Am. Rep. 791, 24 N. W. 390, 6 Am. Crim. Rep. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

487; State v. Behimer, 20 Ohio St. 572; Briggs v. Com. 82 Va. 554; State v. Bradley, 67 Vt. 465, 32 Atl. 238; Turner v. Territory, 15 Okla. 557, 82 Pac. 650; State v. Gillis, 73 S. C. 318, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 571, 114 Am. St. Rep. 95, 53 S. E. 487, 6 Ann. Cas. 993; State v. Matthews, 142 N. C. 621, 55 S. E. 342; United States v. Harding, 1 Wall. Jr. 127, Fed. Cas. No. 15,301; Trono v. United States, 199 U. S. 521, 50 L. ed. 292, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121, 4 Ann. Cas. 773, and other cases from the same courts.

The theory of these cases is that, when a conviction for the lesser crime, under an indictment or information charging a greater crime, is reversed upon the voluntary appeal of a defendant, he thereby waives the acquittal upon the higher charge, and, upon the conviction being set aside, he is in the same position as if no trial had been had; the reversal operating upon the acquittal as well as upon the conviction. In some of these states statutes may be found providing, in effect, that a new trial places the parties in the same position as if no trial had been had. In others there is no such statute; while in some states having such a statute the contrary rule is held, as in Johnson v. State, 29 Ark. 31, 21 Am. Rep. 154, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 430. It would therefore seem, as stated in the note to Com. v. Arnold, 4 Am. St. Rep. 119, that the existence or nonexistence of the statute has not been a determining factor in the decisions. The contrary line of decisions commences in 1846 with Slaughter v. State, 6 Humph. 410, and this rule has been followed in many cases collected in note to dissenting opinion in Trono v. United States, supra, and in State v. Gillis, 73 S. C. 318, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 571, 114 Am. St. Rep. 95, 53 S. E. 487, 6 Ann. Cas. 993, and Brantley v. State, 132 Ga. 573, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 959, 131 Am. St. Rep. 218, 64 S. E. 676, 16 Ann. Cas. 1203. They rest upon the theory, as stated in People v. Dowling, 84 N. Y. 478, that no person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense, and that the application for a correction of the verdict is not to be taken as more extensive than the defendant's needs. He asks for a reversal of so much of the judgment as convicted him of guilt, but does not ask for a correction of so much of it as acquits him of any crime; and that, while waiving his privilege as to one offense, he keeps it as to the other; the waiver being construed to extend to the precise thing as to which relief is sought.

The only statute we have defining a new trial is Rem. & Bal. Code, § 398: "A new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision by a jury, court, or referees." This statute adds no particular strength to the position we have taken, as it only announces what would unquestionably be the rule irrespective of any statutory definition, although it would seem that, in using the phrase "a re-examination of an issue," it was meant to re-examine the whole issue as originally presented to the court or jury, and not a part of that issue less than the whole. It will not be denied that, when in an appeal in a criminal case where a single offense only is charged, a verdict of guilty is set aside, and a new trial granted, the effect is to annul the judgment below as effectively as if there had been no trial; and the defendant stands before the bar of the court upon his second trial in the identical position in which he stood upon the first trial. None of his rights have been abridged, nor have any additional burdens been cast upon him. The right of appeal is a privilege granted by law, and, when that right is taken advantage of by a defendant convicted of an included offense, he must accept the privilege with all its attendant results; and one of those results, and the one in effect prayed for in all criminal appeals, is to have the appellate court vacate the judgment against him and grant a new trial, because he has not had that fair and impartial trial guaranteed him by the Constitution, or because some rule of law has been improperly announced to his prejudice. And, when his plea for a new trial has been granted, he is no more in jeopardy as to the greater offense, of which it is said he was acquitted, than as to the included offense of which he was convicted; because by his own act he has procured the trial and its attendant judgment to be set aside and held for naught that he may again be permitted to traverse the charge, as in the first instance.

In the Trono Case, it is said in reviewing these conflicting rules: "In our opinion the better doctrine is that which does not limit the court or jury upon a new trial to a consideration of the question of guilt of the lower offense of which the accused was convicted on the first trial, but that the reversal of the judgment of conviction opens up the whole controversy and acts upon the original judgment as if it had never been. The accused by his own action has obtained a reversal of the whole judgment; and we see no reason why he should not, upon a new trial, be proceeded against as if no trial had previously taken place. We do not agree to the view that the accused has the right to limit his waiver as to jeopardy, when he appeals from a judgment against him. As the judgment stands before he appeals, it is a complete bar to any further prosecution for the offense set forth in the indictment, or of any lesser degree thereof. No power can wrest from him the right to so use that judgment, but, if he chooses to appeal from it and to ask for its reversal, he thereby waives, if successful, his right to avail himself of the former acquittal of the greater offense contained in the judgment which he has himself procured to be reversed. . . . When the first trial is entered upon, he is then put in jeopardy within the meaning of the phrase, and yet it has been held, as late as United States v. Ball, 163 U. S. 662, 671, 41 L. ed. 300, 303, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1192 (and nobody now doubts it), that, if the judgment of conviction be reversed on his own appeal, he cannot avail himself of the once-in-jeopardy provision as a bar to a new trial of the offense of which he was convicted. And this is generally put upon the ground that by appeal he waives his right to the plea, and asks the court to award him a new trial, although its effect will be, if granted, that he will be again tried for the offense of which he has been once convicted. This holding shows that there can be a waiver of the defense by reason of the action of the accused, as there is therefore a waiver in any event, and the question is as to its extent (that is, how far the accused by his own action may be deemed to have waived his right). It seems much more rational and in better accord with the proper administration of the criminal law to hold that by appealing the accused waives the right to thereafter plead once in jeopardy, when he has obtained a reversal of the judgment, even as to that part of it which acquitted him of the higher while convicting him of the lower offense. When at his own request he has obtained a new trial, he must take the burden with the benefit, and go back for a new trial of the whole case. It does not appear to us to be a practice founded on solid reason to permit such a limited waiver by an accused party, while himself asking for a reversal of the judgment."

39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

This reasoning is, to our minds, so cogent that we do not deem it profitable to further extend this opinion by enlarging upon it other than to say it preserves all the constitutional and other rights of both parties to a criminal trial,—the state and the accused. The announcement of this rule may disturb the guilty who seek through the intricate mazes of technical and refined subtleties to escape punishment for their evil deeds, as in this case, where to take the contrary view would mean that a murderer who admits his crime, and whose only regret is that he was apprehended before his lust for killing was fully satisfied, as he sought a second victim, would be left free to pursue his criminal intent until he had added other victims to his score. Courts should give to all persons accused of crime the benefit of all the law that wisdom has created to shield the innocent from false accusation, but they only bring themselves into ridicule when they seek, through meaningless technicalities and hairsplitting distinctions, to build up a protecting wall behind which the guilty may avoid the penalty of their misdeeds. It is to be deplored that juries will sometimes so forget their sworn duty as to refuse to hold up violators of the law to the full measure of their misdeeds. Courts should not aid in this miscarriage of justice by creating technical and subtle distinctions in the law, and thus enable the guilty to altogether escape. We cannot control the verdicts of juries in their failure to make true deliverance between the state and the criminal, but we can refuse to extend the farce so as to make it operate as an absolute discharge. Believing that a new trial to one found guilty of a lesser offense should on his appeal be held a new trial upon all offenses included within the charge that find sustaining facts in the evidence, we so hold, and adopt such rule for our future guidance. It may not be supported by the greater number of adjudicated cases, but it appeals to us as based upon the best reasoning and soundest judgment. It follows that State v. Murphy, and other cases expressing contrary views, are hereby overruled.

Because of the error in the improper submission of a verdict for manslaughter, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial upon the information.

Dunbar, Ch. J., and Ellis, Mount, Crow, Chadwick, and Parker, JJ., concur.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT. (Department No. 2.)

STATE OF WASHINGTON, Resp't.,
v.

F. A. POMEROY, Appt.

(— Wash. —, 123 Pac. 514.)

Intoxicating liquor — filling prescription — sale.

A statute making it unlawful to sell intoxicating liquor, with or without a license, Note. — Sale by others than retail saloon keepers as violation of statute forbidding sale within given distance of school or church.

The decision in STATE v. POMEROY, holding that a statute making it unlawful to within a prescribed distance of a school, applies to a physician, who is a pharmacist, prescribing liquor for a patient, and filling the prescription from his stock, which is located within the prescribed distance of a school.

(May 8, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Spokane County, convicting him of selling intoxicating liquor, contrary to law. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. T. Stoll and Oscar C. Nelson for appellant.

Messrs. John W. Wiley and M. E. Jessep, for the State.

Statutes prohibiting or regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors are applicable to druggists and physicians, unless exceptions or special provisions are made in their favor. But the statutes usually allow them to dispense liquors for medicinal use, either by way of exception to the general prohibitions of the law, or under a special form of license or permit.

23 Cyc. 166, 188; Woods v. State, 36 Ark. 36, 38 Am. Rep. 23; Brown v. State, 9 Neb. 189, 2 N. W. 214; Carl v. State, 89 Ala. 93, 8 So. 157; King v. State, 66 Miss. 502, 6 So. 189; State v. Fleming, 32 Kan. 588, 5 Pac. 21, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 324; Chipman v. People, 24 Colo. 520, 52 Pac. 677; Scanlon v. Denver, 38 Colo. 401, 88 Pac. 156; State v. Summers, 142 Mo. 586, 44 S. W. 797.

Dunbar, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case involves the construction of § 4744, Rem. & Bal. Code, which is as follows: "It shall be unlawful to sell or in any way dispose of any vinous, spirituous, malt, or other intoxicating liquors, with or without a license, within two thousand (2,000) feet of any normal school, agricultural college, reform school, or state school for defective youth, now established or which may hereafter be legally established within the state of Washington: Provided, that nothing in this section shall be construed to effect in any way the provisions of the last two preceding sections." The agreed statement of facts shows that the appellant for many years had been, and at the time of the filing of the information in this case was, a duly licensed practising physician and druggist, and owned a drug sell intoxicating liquor with or without a license within a prescribed distance of a school is violated where a physician, who is a pharmacist, prescribes liquor for a patient, and fills the prescription from his stock, which is located within the prescribed distance of a school, seems sound, since it store situated within 2,000 feet of the Cheney normal school. At the date mentioned in the complaint, the defendant, as a physician, prescribed a quart of whiskey for a patient, who took the prescription to the defendant's drug store, where it was filled by a duly licensed pharmacist, who had charge of defendant's drug store, acting under and by his direction and by his authority. Defendant was found guilty of violating the statute. Judgment was entered, and this appeal follows.

The single question involved is: Is the appellant, by reason of his being a physician and pharmacist exempt from the operation of the law? In support of his contention appellant cites the following from 36 Cyc. 1106: "The great fundamental rule in construing statutes is to ascertain and give effect to the intention of the legislature.

would appear that no other conclusion could be reached without judicially adding an exception not created by the legislature.

A conclusion in accord with that in STATE v. POMEROY was reached in Cotton v. Stato, 62 Ark. 585, 37 S. W. 48, where it was held that an act making it unlawful for any person to sell or give away any liquors except wines for sacramental purposes, within a certain distance of a school building, made it unlawful for manufacturers of liquors to sell in the prohibited territory, since the statute contained no exceptions as to these dealers, and the court could create none.

In Salmon v. State, 81 Ark. 56, 98 S. W. 702, where the act regulating the sale of liquor by manufacturers and the act prohibiting the sale of liquors within a certain distance of schools were amended within a few weeks of each other, and the provision in the former, authorizing manufacturers to sell without a license, was left unchanged, while the latter, as amended, prohibited the sale of liquor within a certain distance of schools, except the sale of wine for sacramental purposes, alcoholic stimulants prescribed by a regular physician, and the sale or giving away by manufacturers of wines made from grapes or berries, it was held that manufacturers of whiskey were not privileged to sell whiskey within the prohibited territory.

In J. W. Kelly & Co. v. State, 123 Tenn. 516, 132 S. W. 193, it was held that a statute providing, "It shall not hereafter be lawful for any person to sell or tipple any intoxicating liquors, including wine, ale, and beer, as a beverage, within 4 miles of any schoolhouse," was violated by a sale in wholesale quantity by one wholesaler to another wholesale dealer, who purchased to resell at wholesale.

In reaching this conclusion the court held that the word "sale," as used in the title, which prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage near a school, was used in its ordinary sense, and included all sales generally, and was not cut down by the words "as a beverage," and it was fur-

This intention, however, must be the intention as expressed in the statute, and where the meaning of the language used is plain, it must be given effect by the courts, or they would be assuming legislative authority. But where the language of the statute is of doubtful meaning, or where an adherence to the strict letter would lead to injustice, to absurdity, or to contradictory provisions, the duty devolves upon the court of ascertaining the true meaning. If the intention of the legislature cannot be discovered, it is the duty of the court to give the statute a reasonable construction, consistent with the general principles of law. . . . Closely allied to the doctrine of the equitable construction of the statutes, and in pursuance of the general object of enforcing the intention of the legislature, is the rule that the spirit or reason of the law ther held that the word "tipple," as used in the act, was merely a subdivision of the term "sale," and it was also held that the conjunction "or," used between the words "sell" and "tipple," was used in a disjunctive sense, so that the act prohibited all sales in general.

In State v. Tarver, 11 Lea, 658, the statute making it unlawful to sell or tipple any intoxicating beverage within a specific distance of schools contains an exception as to sales by manufacturers selling liquors in wholesale packages or quantities, but this exception was held not to cover a sale by a manufacturer to persons for the purpose of consumption, since such sale constituted him a retailer in the transaction.

Likewise in Harrison v. State, 96 Tenn. 548, 35 S. W. 559, where an act prohibiting the selling or tipping of any intoxicating beverage within 4 miles of any incorporated institution of learning contained an exception as to sales by manufacturers of liquor sold in wholesale packages or quantities, the act was held to be violated where a wholesaler sold a barrel of whisky to a combination of persons organized to obtain the liquor to take home, who met with their receptacles and paid their portions of the purchase price, and turned it over to one who paid it to the manufacturer, who then delivered the barrel of whisky, which was immediately divided among the contributors, since such a sale was a retail, and not a wholesale, sale, the distinction between such sales not resting upon the quantity sold, but upon the purpose for which the sale was made.

In Boyd v. State, 12 Lea, 687, it was held no defense to a prosecution for violating the act prohibiting the selling of liquor within a specified distance of an incorporated institution of learning that the sale was made by one who had complied with the United States requirements, on a steamboat while under way, where such steamer was within the prohibited distance of such an institution.

J. T. W.

will prevail over its letter. Especially is this rule applicable where the literal meaning is absurd, or, if given effect, would work injustice, or where the provision was inserted through inadvertence. Words may accordingly be rejected and others substituted, even though the effect is to make portions of the statute entirely inoperative. So the meaning of general terms may be restrained by the spirit or reason of the statute, and general language may be construed to admit implied exceptions."

Unquestionably, the first duty of the court is to determine the intention of the legislature. That is the lawmaking power. All of the canons of construction relied upon by appellant are only brought to bear where the language of the statute is of doubtful meaning, and courts should be exceedingly careful in annulling the provisions of a statute by construction when the language is plain and unequivocal, or because in its opinion the enforcement of the law as plainly expressed would lead to injustice; lest, under the claim and guise of construction, it arbitrarily substitutes its judgment for the judgment of the lawmaking power. It is fundamental that, with the wisdom or unwisdom, the policy or impolicy of the enactment, within constitutional limits, the legislature is supreme. The legislature is a representative body; the members are elected with reference to their views on questions of public policy and of local interest. Through their agents, the will of the people crystallizes into law; and, within the limits we have mentioned above, becomes supreme. And whether the enactment or enforcement of a law will lead to injustice or absurdity is for the legislature to determine. There is always a difference of opinion on these questions of public policy, and especially with reference to prohibitory or sumptuary legislation. The language of the act is in no way limited. The theme is the disposing of intoxicating liquors within 2,000 feet of certain designated institutions. The prohibition is as follows: "It shall be unlawful to sell or in any way dispose of any vinous, spirituous, malt or other intoxicating liquors, with or without a license, within two thousand (2,000) feet of any normal school," etc. It is unequivocal, plain, emphatic, without reservation, and evidently represents the legislative idea of suitable laws for the protection of students of these institutions. If, in the judgment of the legislature, an exception should have been made in favor of druggists, the exception would have been expressed, as it is in many other provisions in relation to the sale of intoxicating liquors. We have recently held, in State v. Robinson, 67 Wash. 425, 121 Pac. 848, in 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) construing the local option law, that limitations or provisions were not to be construed into a statute. In the case there under consideration, the law provides that, when a vote has become operative within a dry unit, it shall not be lawful to sell, give away, or in any manner dispose of intoxicating liquors in any quantity whatever within such unit. But special provision is made in the act for selling in such territory by druggists and pharmacists, and appellant's contention in that case was that the prohibition only reaches to sales by retail. We held, however, that, had it been the intention of the legislature to make any exceptions, it would have been expressed in the act; the court saying: "The act is pregnant with but one meaning, and that meaning is that intoxicating liquors shall not be sold in dry units except by druggists and pharmacists. Any other view would take the life blood out of the act. The wholesaler within a dry unit must, like his competitor without that unit, make his sales in wet territory. As we have suggested, had it been the intention of the lawmaking body to permit a unit to prohibit only the sale of intoxicating liquors at retail, that purpose would have been expressly stated in both the title and the body of the act, and it would not have taken 22 sections to state it. To hold that the language in the proviso at § 18 implies the right of a wholesaler in a dry unit to both sell and deliver therein would be to read out of the statute words of clear and certain meaning, and to read into it a privilege which the lawmaking branch of the government deemed it wise to withhold."

The same might with equal propriety be said here. In the law under consideration there, an exception was made in favor of druggists, but none is made in their favor in this statute. It must be concluded that none was intended. It is said by Sutherland on Statutory Construction, § 236: "The certainty of the law is next in importance to its justice. And if the legislature has expressed its intention in the law itself with certainty, it is not admissible to depart from that intention on any extraneous consideration or theory of construction." The laws governing the sale of liquor, notwithstanding the meaning of the laws can readily be ascertained by the direct and positive language employed, would indeed become uncertain if they were held susceptible of construction because, in the opinion of someone, the law was unreasonable. Laws will always be regarded as unreasonably affected by such laws; but, as we have intimated, the proper forum for a discussion and determination of such question is the legislature.

The judgment is affirmed.

Ellis, Mount, Morris, and Fullerton,
J., concur.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

ARTHUR F. BENNETT et al., Appts.,
v.

F. M. BOOTH.

(— W. Va. —, 73 S. E. 909.)

Easement — reservation — conveyance with visible burden.

1. If an owner of land erect a milldam upon it for the purpose of operating a gristmill, and thereafter convey a portion of the land, including a part of the mill pond, there is an implied reservation of an easement upon the land granted, as appurtenant to the gristmill.

Covenant — warranty — visible easement.

2. A covenant of general warranty of title is not broken by the existence of such an easement.

Judicial sale — privy — burdens.

3. A purchaser of land at a judicial sale is privy in estate with him who owned it at the time of sale, and takes the land subject to its burdens.

Easement — nonuser — loss.

4. An easement appurtenant to land is not lost by failure of the owner to use it for a period less than ten years.

(February 6, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the Circuit Court for Barbour County in defendant's favor in a suit to enjoin the maintenance of a milldam. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ware and Viquesney and William T. George, for appellants:

Injunction is the proper remedy in a case of this character.

6 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 562; 1 Spelling, Inj, § 308; Gardner v. Newburgh, 2 Johns. Ch. 162, 7 Am. Dec. 526; Masonic Temple Asso. v. Banks, 94 Va. 695, 27 S. E. 490; Burwell v. Hobson, 12 Gratt. 322, 65 Am. Dec. 247; Burden v. Stein, 27 Ala. 104, 62 Am. Dec. 758; Powell v. Bentley & G. Furniture Co. 34 W. Va. 808, 12 L.R.A. 53, 12 S. E.

Headnotes by WILLIAMS, J.

Note.—The question involved in the above case is covered by the note to Rollo v. Nelson, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 315, on "Easements created by severance of a tract of land with apparent benefit existing." 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

1085; Amick v. Tharp, 13 Gratt. 564, 67 Am. Dec. 787; Switzer v. McCulloch, 70 Va. 777; Becker v. McGraw, 48 W. Va. 539, 37 S. E. 532; Freer v. Davis, 52 W. Va. 1, 59 L.R.A. 556, 94 Am. St. Rep. 895, 43 S. E. 164; Stephenson v. Burdett, 56 W. Va. 109, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 748, 48 S. E. 846; Marcum v. Marcum, 57 W. Va. 285, 50 S. E. 246; Loyd v. Blackburn, 57 W. Va. 217, 50 S. E. 741.

If it is shown that the defendant is wrongfully backing the water on plaintiffs' lands, then he is liable, and may be enjoined.

Neal v. Ohio River R. Co. 47 W. Va. 317, 34 S. E. 914; Jones, Easements, § 706; Ames v. Dorset Marble Co. 64 Vt. 10, 23 Atl. 857; Riverside Cotton Mills v. Lanier, 102 Va. 148, 45 S. E. 875; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 959; Pixley v. Clark, 35 N. Y. 520, 91 Am. Dec. 72; Angell, Watercourses, § 330; Heath v. Williams, 25 Me. 209, 43 Am. Dec. 265; Hoy v. Sterrett, 2 Watts, 327, 27 Am. Dec. 313; Stout v. McAdams, 3 Ill. 67, 33 Am. Dec. 441.

A riparian owner is entitled to the accustomed flow of water through his land.

Omelvany v. Jagers, 2 Hill, L. 634, 27 Am. Dec. 417; 2 Farnham, Waters, § 546.

A man cannot have an easement over his own lands.

3 Kent, Com. 528; Tabor v. Bradley, 18 N. Y. 109, 72 Am. Dec. 498.

In order to establish a right by prescription, the use must be adverse, and not by permission.

Coalter v. Hunter, 4 Rand. (Va.) 58, 15 Am. Dec. 726; Stokes v. Upper Appomattox Co. 3 Leigh, 318; Gaines v. Merryman, 95 Va. 660, 29 S. E. 738; Crosier v. Brown, 66 W. Va. 273, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 174, 66 S. E. 326.

If Frederick Booth abandoned this mill, either by himself or by his agents, for a moment he abandoned what right, if any, he had to flood the lands above.

Taylor v. Hampton, 4 M'Cord L. 90, 17 Am. Dec. 710; 2 Farnham, Waters, § 562.

William Booth, and the defendant claiming under him, are estopped from now maintaining the dam.

Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Perdue, 40 W. Va. 443, 21 S. E. 755; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. §§ 803, 804; McConnell v. Rowland, 48 W. Va. 276, 37 S. E. 586; Greer v. Mitchell, 42 W. Va. 494, 26 S. E. 302; Bates v. Swiger, 40 W. Va. 420, 21 S. E. 874; Hanly v. Watterson, 39 W. Va. 214, 19 S. E. 536; Stone v. Tyree, 30 W. Va. 687; 5 S. E. 878; Brown v. Wheeler, 17 Conn. 345, 44 Am. Dec. 550; Ray v. McMurtry, 20 Ind. 307, 83 Am. Dec. 322; Musselman v. McElhenny, 23 Ind. 4, 85 Am. Dec. 445; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23, 85 Am. Dec. 157; Chouteau v. Goddin, 39

Mo. 229, 90 Am. Dec. 462; Simpson v. Pearson, 31 Ind. 1, 99 Am. Dec. 577; Hastings v. Allen, 14 Ohio, 58, 45 Am. Dec. 523; Com. v. Moltz, 10 Pa. 527, 51 Am. Dec. 499.

Messrs. Warren B. Kittle and C. M. Murphy, for appellee:

The owner of a fee may create an artificial condition upon his own land, which is bound to be noticed and respected by a subsequent vendee.

3 Farnham, Waters, § 830, p. 2440; Case v. Hoffman, 100 Wis. 314, 44 L.R.A. 728, 72 N. W. 390, 74 N. W. 220, 75 N. W. 945; Ferguson v. Witsell, 5 Rich. L. 280, 57 Am. Dec. 744.

It is not necessary, in conveying the land by the original owner, that he should expressly reserve an easement over the portion granted away by him, in order to retain that right.

Pyer v. Carter, 26 L. J. Exch. N. S. 258, 1 Hurlst. & N. 916, 5 Week. Rep. 371; Suffield v. Brown, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 249, 4 De G. J. & S. 185, 3 New Reports, 340, 10 Jur. N. S. 111, 9 L. T. N. S. 627, 12 Week. Rep. 356; 2 Minor, Inst. 4th ed. 26, 27; Hardy v. McCullough, 23 Gratt. 259; Sanderlin v. Baxter, 76 Va. 304, 44 Am. Rep. 165; Grace M. E. Church v. Dobbins, 153 Pa. 294, 34 Am. St. Rep. 706, 25 Atl. 1120; Denton v. Leddell, 23 N. J. Eq. 64; Greer v. Van Meter, 54 N. J. Eq. 270, 33 Atl. 794; John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 103 Ind. 582, 53 Am. Rep. 550, 2 N. E. 188; Dunklee v. Wilton R. Co. 24 N. H. 489; Lampman v. Milks, 21 N. Y. 505; Watts v. Kelson, L. R. 6 Ch. 171, 40 L. J. Exch. N. S. 126, 24 L. T. N. S. 209, 19 Week. Rep. 338; Seibert v. Levan, 8 Pa. 383, 49 Am. Dec. 525; Seymour v. Lewis, 13 N. J. Eq. 439, 78 Am. Dec. 108; Denton v. Leddell, 23 N. J. Eq. 64, 24 N. J. Eq. 567; Roy v. Roy, 5 La. Ann. 950; Kilgour v. Ashcom, 5 Harr. & J. 82; Scott v. Moore, 98 Va. 668, 81 Am. St. Rep. 749, 37 S. E. 342.

Abandonment must be shown by establishing an intention to abandon, as well as such acts as will in law amount to an absolute abandonment.

11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 424; Scott v. Moore, 98 Va. 668, 81 Am. St. Rep. 749, 37 S. E. 342; Camden v. Dewing, 47 W. Va. 310, 81 Am. St. Rep. 797, 34 S. E. 911; Naughton v. Taylor, 50 W. Va. 233, 40 S. E. 352; Reger v. O'Neal, 33 W. Va. 159, 6 L.R.A. 427, 10 S. E. 375; First Nat. Bank v. Thompson, 63 W. Va. 196, 59 S. E. 974; Shaffer v. Shaffer, 51 W. Va. 126, 41 S. E. 166.

The doctrine of estoppel is never applied in any of its branches upon an uncertain and speculative state of facts.

Pocahontas Light & Water Co. v. Brown—39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ing, 53 W. Va. 442, 44 S. E. 267; Bargamin v. Clarke, 20 Gratt. 544; 4 Am. & Eng. Dec. in Eq. 263; Hogg, Eq. Principles, § 106; Vanbibber v. Beirne, 6 W. Va. 168; Bolling v. Petersburg, 3 Rand. (Va.) 563.

An estoppel cannot arise from a promise with respect to a right to be acquired, even if it be upon an agreement not yet made.

5 Enc. U. S. Sup. Ct. Rep. 948; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1092; 4 Am. & Eng. Dec. in Eq. 301; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mowry, 98 U. S. 544, 24 L. ed. 674; Scott v. Moore, 98 Va. 668, 81 Am. St. Rep. 749, 37 S. E. 342.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Arthur F. Bennett and Lloyd J. Booth filed their bill in the circuit court of Barbour county, praying for a mandatory injunction to compel defendant to remove a milldam located on his own land, across a stream of water flowing through plaintiffs' land, causing the overflow of plaintiffs' land above. The case was heard upon pleadings and proof, on the 6th of October, 1909, and the temporary injunction which had been previously awarded was dissolved, and plaintiffs' bill dismissed. They have appealed.

Defendant claims the right to flood plaintiffs' land, as a right appurtenant to his own land. Frederick Booth, grandfather of defendant and of one of the plaintiffs, was originally the owner of both tracts of land, and while such owner he erected a gristmill and built a dam on a portion of the tract. Some time thereafter, in the year 1887, he conveyed to his son, Jeremiah Booth, by deed with general warranty of title, 102 acres, which is the land now owned by plaintiffs, and a portion of which is submerged by the millpond. Plaintiffs purchased the land at a judicial sale, made and confirmed, in 1906, in a suit by J. N. B. Crim against Jeremiah Booth and others. About the year 1901 a part of the fore bay washed away, and it was not repaired until six or seven years thereafter, which was a short time prior to the bringing of this suit, and after Frederick Booth had conveyed the land with the mill on it to his son William, who, in turn, conveyed it to his son, the defendant.

One of the plaintiffs is a son, and the other a son-in-law, of Jeremiah Booth, the former owner of the land burdened with the easement, if, indeed, it is so burdened; and notwithstanding the dam was out of repair and the mill not in use, at the time of their purchase, still they took the land subject to whatever burden, if any, existed upon it in the hands of Jeremiah Booth, to whose title they succeeded. By their purchase they became his privies in estate. 24 Cyc. 62; Hurxthal v. St. Lawrence Boom & Lumber Co. 53 W. Va. 87, 97 Am. St. Rep. 954, 44 S. E. 520; Long v. Weller, 29 Gratt. 347.

When a landowner has created a servitude upon one portion of his land for the benefit of another portion, and conveys the servient part, there is an implied reservation of the easement, if it is essential to the use and enjoyment of the land reserved; and such right passes with the dominant estate, as appurtenant thereto. Nor does the existence of such an easement constitute a breach of the covenant of general warranty, if the easement is so open and apparent that the contracting parties must have known of it. In such case the parties are presumed to have contracted with reference to the condition in which the land then was, and it is not to be supposed that the purchaser agreed to pay any more for the land than he thought it was worth with the burden on it. Such a burden has been held not to constitute a breach of covenant against encumbrances. Kutz v. McCune, 22 Wis. 628, 99 Am. Dec. 85; Devlin, Deeds, § 908; Prescott v. Williams, 5 Met. 429, 39 Am. Dec. 688. If not a breach of covenant against encumbrances, a fortiori it is not a breach of a covenant of general warranty, which relates more particularly to the title than it does to encumbrances.

The decisions of other states are not uniform upon the doctrine of an implied reservation in favor of a grantor; but we think the rule, as we have stated it, is supported by the better considered cases, as well as by the more modern textwriters on the subject. See the following: 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 427; Prescott v. Williams, 5 Met. 429, 39 Am. Dec. 688; Cary v. Daniels, 8 Met. 466, 41 Am. Dec. 532; Seibert v. Levan, 8 Pa. 383, 49 Am. Dec. 525; Kutz v. McCune, 22 Wis. 628, 99 Am. Dec. 85; Jones, Easements, § 136; Lampman v. Milks, 21 N. Y. 505; Mason v. Horton, 67 Vt. 266, 48 Am. St. Rep. 817, 31 Atl. 291.

A milldam is essential to a water power gristmill. Without it the mill, which is a part of the realty on which it stands, would be useless. Plaintiffs' predecessor in title knew that it backed the water upon his land. It had done so for many years before he bought it, and he is presumed to have taken the land subject to a continuation of that condition. Plaintiffs, his privies in estate, took the land subject to the burden upon it as appurtenant to the other tract of land with the mill on it, and the mill, together with the appurtenant easement, passed to defendant.

The fact that the mill and dam were in a dilapidated condition at the time plaintiffs purchased does not affect the case. Defendant's right was appurtenant to the dominant land, and passed with it. It was such a right as could be lost only by adverse possession by the owner of the servient land, for such length of time as would bar an action of ejectment. Clark v. Beard, 69 W. Va. 313, 71 S. E. 188.

Appellants contend that defendant, in repairing the dam, raised it higher than it was before, and caused more of his land to be overflowed. This, of course, he could not lawfully do. But their contention, in this regard, is not supported by the evidence. Two or three of their own witnesses testified that the dam was about as high as it was before, and some of defendant's witnesses say that it is no higher than it was at first.

We will affirm the decree.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

GEORGE F. PARLETT et al., Interveners, Appts.,

v.

DANIEL F. BLAKE, Trustee, etc., of Hal-lack-Deamer Carpet Company.

(110 C. C. A. 72, 188 Fed. 200.)

Sale — passing of title — right of bankruptcy trustee.

In a contract by which one undertakes to act as sales agent for another, for a definite period of time, and to buy and pay for at certain prices all stock on hand at the expiration of such period, title to the property passes at such expiration, and a bankruptcy trustee of the agent will be entitled to it as against the claims of the principal.

(May 18, 1911.)

Note. — When does title pass under consignment of goods for sale with provision in effect that consignee purchase balance of consignment.

General rule.

In contracts for the consignment of goods for sale at retail, an attempt has sometimes been made to include therein provisions rendering it possible to interpret the contract either as a contract of sale or agency as the interests of the consignor may dictate. These contracts are usually inconsistent in their provisions, containing clauses both of sale and agency. In construing such provisions, especially where the rights of creditors of the consignee are involved, the courts as a rule have shown no noticeable sympathy with this attempt to be in a position to claim the contract to be either an absolute sale or a mere consignment as

A PPEAL by interveners from an order of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri dismissing a petition filed by them claiming possession and ownership of certain goods turned over to them by consignors who had become bankrupt. Affirmed.

Statement by Adams, Circuit Judge:

On June 19, 1908, the Hallack-Deamer Carpet Company, the bankrupt, made a written contract with the Coppes, Zook, & Mutschler Company, of Nappanee, Indiana, as follows: "This agreement entered into this 19th day of June, 1908, between the Coppes, Zook, & Mutschler Company of Nappanee, Indiana, party of the first part, and the Hallack-Deamer Carpet Company of Kansas City, Missouri, party of the second part, witnesseth: That for the period of one year, ending July 1, 1909, said party of the second part hereby agrees to act as the agent of the party of the first part in effecting sales of furniture manufactured by said first party . . . to the furniture trade in the following territories, viz.: The state of Kansas and the western part of Missouri, after the following general manner, to wit: Said second party agrees to maintain a representative line of samples of the furniture manufactured by the said first party on the floor in their store in Kansas City for use in soliciting trade from visiting buyers, also solicit trade from the furniture dealers in the aforesaid territory by means of their traveling salesmen, catalogues, and the interests of the consignor may dictate, and if the contract contains provisions by which the consignee at some future time is required to take the consigned goods remaining unsold, at specific prices, so that in no event are the goods to be returned to the consignor, the contract will be construed to constitute an absolute sale.

Although the contract is in form one of agency yet it will be construed to be one of sale if it contains provisions by which the consignee agrees to pay for all goods received, whether sold or not. Conn v. Chambers, 123 App. Div. 298, 107 N. Y. Supp. 976, affirmed without opinion in 195 N. Y. 538, 88 N. E. 1117.

Referring to a contract by which the consignee guaranteed the sale of the consigned goods and agreed to remit at stated periods for same, and which also contained provisions indicating the contract to be one of agency, rather than sale, in Snelling v. Arbuckle Bros. 104 Ga. 362, 30 S. E. 863, the court remarked that the contract appeared to have been drawn for the purpose of enabling the consignors "to 'run with hare' or 'hold with the hounds' according as, in the exigencies of a given case their interest might dictate. On the one hand, to hold . . . [the consignee] absolutely bound in any event, to pay for all goods shipped to him by . . . [the consignors]; on the other hand, in the event of his failure to pay and his insolvency, to enable them to successfully claim all unsold goods in . . . [the consignee's] possession, and the accounts or their proceeds against his customers representing goods which he had sold but for which he had not paid;" and it is said that "the contract must be construed in the light of all of its provisions, and the legal outcome of its several stipulations construed together must control its classification. The mere name which may have been given to it by the parties thereto, cannot change the legal effect of its stipulations." The contract was accordingly held to have been one of sale, rather than one of agency as to creditors of the consignee. The same conclusion is reached as to a similar contract, where the question arose in 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

much the same way, in Arbuckle Bros. v. Gates, 95 Va. 802, 30 S. E. 496. The doctrine is here asserted that "where goods are consigned to a factory for sale, they remain until sold the property of the consignor, and are not subject to the debts of the factor; and no ingenious contract, such as that under consideration, is required to protect them from his creditors. The agreement was an attempt to accomplish that which cannot be done,—to make a sale of personal property, and at the same time constitute the buyer simply an agent of the seller to hold the property until it is paid for. The two things are incompatible and cannot co-exist. The agreement had in it every element of sale. It was in substance and effect a sale, and must be so declared. It does not matter by what name the parties chose to designate it. That does not determine its character. The courts look beyond mere names and within to see the real nature of an agreement, and determine from all its provisions taken together, and not from the name that has been given to it by the parties or from some isolated provision, its legal character and effect." Followed in Howell v. Boudar, 95 Va. 815, 30 S. E. 1007, as to contract of consignment termed an agency contract, and which required the agent at a stipulated time in the future to advance to the principal the invoice price of the consigned goods, and without any recourse to the principal for such advance.

The same construction is also placed upon a contract of similar character in Arbuckle Bros. v. Kirkpatrick, 98 Tenn. 221, 36 L.R.A. 285, 60 Am. St. Rep. 854, 39 S. W. 3; and it is said that "the contract is certainly a remarkable one partaking in many of its provisions of a contract of agency and in many others of a sale. It is evidently intended as either or both, as might suit the convenience or subserve the purposes of the complainants. It purports to be copyrighted, for what reason is not stated; but the copyright is evidently procured on account of the unusual and extraordinary provisions of the instrument (if there be a copyright).

In construing such a contract, whenever other usual means of advertising. Said second party further agrees that all sales made under this agreement shall be made at the prices as directed by the party of the first part. . . . Said party of the second part further agrees to make report daily to said first party of all sales effected on account of said first party, together with all terms and agreements relative to said sales. . . . It is further agreed that the said first party shall, for themselves, determine upon the orders to be by them accepted and the amount of credit to be extended, and in the event that sales have been made and goods delivered by said second party before said first party has expressed their approval of said sale, then it shall be at the option of said first party to charge said sale to the account of the Hallack Deamer Carpet Company, at the regular terms, and so notify them promptly.

"To the end that business may be expedited and goods promptly delivered to the trade in Kansas City and nearby points, the said party of the first part agrees to keep on hand, on consignment with the Hallack-Deamer Carpet Company such goods as may be necessary to supply the needs of the business resulting under this agreement, and to replenish such stock from time to time upon the order of the party, of the second part, and further to make their best endeavor to ship promptly such goods as are ordered to be shipped direct to the trade, or in mixed cars from Napanee, Indiana.

it affects the rights of others, it will be so construed as to protect such rights, and not to enable the complainants to carry out any double purpose. In view of its uncertainty and contradictory provisions, the court will see that third persons are not prejudiced by its construction."

In the foregoing cases the question as to the nature of the contract arose after the termination of the time when, according to the terms of the contract, the consignee was to sell for the consignor. The cases, however, apparently hold that from its inception such a contract is one of sale, rather than of consignment with an agreement to purchase at a future time, since a part of the relief therein sought was to impress as trust funds in the hands of the assignee for the benefit of creditors of the consignee, proceeds of sales made by the latter of the consigned goods during the period of the consignment; and it is denied that such proceeds are of that character, and it is asserted that the relation between the consignor and consignee as to such money was merely that of debtor and creditor.

The doctrine of these cases is also sustained by cases wherein the term of consignment is indefinite, there being a provision by which the consignee warrants or guarantees in effect the sale of all the consigned goods. These cases sustain the title to the consigned goods of an assignee or mortgagee for the benefit of creditors of the consignee, without reference to the time when the question is raised. Indeed by the very terms of the consignment it would seem that it was to continue indefinitely, or at least for a reasonable time since, there being no time mentioned, the consignor could not enforce the warranty until after the lapse of a reasonable time for the consignee to dispose of the goods. In these cases the general doctrine is asserted, that although termed a contract of agency, a contract containing a provision by which the person designated as agent warrants that every shipment shall be paid for in full, constitutes a contract of sale. Williams v. Drummond Tobacco Co. 17 Tex. 29 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Civ. App. 635, 44 S. W. 185. Especially where the person designated as agent not only guarantees the payment of the price of all goods shipped under the contract, but in addition is to execute to the consignor notes for the goods consigned. Mack v. Drummond Tobacco Co. 48 Neb. 397, 58 Am. St. Rep. 691, 67 N. W. 174. And a similar conclusion is reached in Conable v. Lynch, 45 Iowa, 84, in construing a clause in a contract by which the consignee guarantees the sale of all the articles embraced in the agreement.

Compare with a line of cases holding that such a contract is one of agency up to the date when the consignee is to purchase the goods, and that from that date on it is a contract of sale, infra, "Title prior to termination of agency or consignment."

But in Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Benedict Co. 20 C. C. A. 377, 36 U. S. App. 604, 74 Fed. 182, an agreement in a consignment contract by the consignee that no part of the consigned goods shall remain unsold or unpaid for at a certain date is held not to render the consignment a sale. The court said that a failure to sell the goods on account therefor at the prices fixed within the time agreed upon would be a breach of the covenant for which the consignor might recover damages, but such breach would not have the legal effect to convert the bailment into a sale; the goods not sold would still remain the property of the consignor.

In Ludvig v. American Woolen Co. 110 C. C. A. 180, 188 Fed. 30, a consignment contract by which the consignee guaranteed the payment of all bills and accounts for merchandise possession of which was delivered under the agreement, together with the further agreement to pay the invoice price for any merchandise delivered under the agreement, and not accounted for under a previous clause of the agreement, to the effect that the consignee shall sell the property and pay from the proceeds a certain amount to the consignor, was held not to constitute a sale, but merely a consignment or factorage or at the most a conditional sale which was valid as against the creditors of the con-

"The party of the second part agrees to furnish suitable warehouses in which to store the aforesaid goods, and to keep them insured against loss or damage by fire or water, to the amount of 90 per cent of their value, for and on account of the Coppes, Zook, & Mutschler Company. Also to do all necessary labor in handling, caring for, packing, transferring and shipping said goods, and at the final termination of this agreement to buy and pay for at the then current prices and the regular terms such goods as may be then on hand. . . .

"It is further agreed that the regular terms of sale shall be sixty days net for 2 per cent discount for cash within sixty days, and that in the event that goods are to be shipped to Chicago or other nearby points for loading in mixed cars, that the freight charges to such points shall be prepaid by the party of the first part. . . . In consideration of the aforesaid agreement, and that the party of the second part shall at all times make their best endeavor to effect said sales, to reliable and responsible trade, and to care for the delivery in a thoroughly satisfactory manner such goods as are carried by them on consignment under this agreement, the party of the first part agrees to pay, and the party of the second part agrees to receive in full payment for all services rendered, a commission fee of 10 per cent of the gross amount of the sales accepted and shipped. Said commission to be due and payable on the 10th day of each month, upon all business signee. This construction of the contract was influenced in part by another clause, that the agreement should continue for a year, and if for any reason it terminated, all of the merchandise held by the consignee thereunder at the time of the termination should be immediately returned to the consignor.

A contract by which the consignees agree to settle for all the consigned goods as soon as sold, and to keep the same under cover and insured, with the further provision that if any of the articles remain unsold twelve months from invoice they will pay for same and close the consignment, constitutes an absolute sale, and not an agency to sell on commission. Fish v. Benedict, 74 N. Y. 613.

In Re Heckathorn, 144 Fed. 499, in holding to be a contract of sale a contract in form a consignment contract by which the consignee agreed to settle for all consigned goods received by him at stated periods, either in notes or cash, the court remarked that the transaction "has the appearance on its face of seeking to have the advantage of a sale and at the same time retaining the security of a bailment;" and it is said that "this is a difficult thing to do, and we need not be surprised if the petitioners have not been more successful than have others." This case, however, merely involved the title to the consigned goods remaining at the expiration of the period when they were to be sold under the consignment.

Title prior to termination of agency or consignment.

Some cases make a distinction between the rights of the parties under a consignment contract prior to the time when a settlement is to be made according to the terms of the contract, and subsequently thereto. Thus Norton v. Fisher, 113 Iowa, 595, 85 N. W. 801, holds that a contract consigning goods to an agent to be sold and accounted for by him, but with a provision that he should buy at a stipulated price all the goods remaining on hand at a specified time, constitutes a contract of agency and sale, the consignee being the mere agent of the consignor for the sale of the property up to the stipulated time; but at such time the relation of agent ceases, and he becomes the purchaser of the property remaining, although the title does not pass until payment.

And an ordinary agency contract is not converted into a contract of sale by a provision therein by which the agent agrees that if any of the merchandise covered by the contract is unsold at a certain period of time, he will buy the same at designated prices and pay cash therefor, together with a clause reserving title, ownership, and right of possession in the principal, in so far as concerns the rights of the parties thereto prior to the date designated for the agent to purchase the property remaining unsold; and the loss of the property by fire prior to this date falls upon the principal. Norton v. Melick, 97 Iowa, 564, 66 N. W. 780.

So a contract of agency is not converted into a contract of sale by a provision that the goods remaining unsold at a certain time shall be settled for by the notes of the agent, and, if the agency is not continued, the goods shall be returned and the notes surrendered, at least as to the right of the principal to replevin goods sold in bulk by the agent, prior to the stipulated time, to a person having notice of the principal's rights to the property. Williams v. Davis, 47 Iowa, 363.

Compare with cases supra under heading, "General rule."

Where consignee to purchase at option of consignor.

An agreement by a consignee to sell all of the consigned goods within a stated period of time, or at the option of the consignor to pay cash for goods then on hand at stated prices, or give his note therefor, or store the goods subject to the order of the consignor until settlement thereof as provided, does not constitute a sale, but is rather a del credere commission. Re Galt, 56 C. C. A. 470, 120 Fed. 64.

The same construction is placed on a very transacted during the previous calendar month."

On July 3, 1908, the carpet company made a like contract with the Lincoln Upholstering Company, of Lincoln, Nebraska, for a like period ending July 1, 1909. These contracts were not acknowledged or recorded. Under them the Zook Company and the Lincoln Company each shipped goods to the carpet company. Tags were attached to these goods, indicating from whom they were shipped. Separate accounts were kept, showing the sales made from them respectively. After May, 1909, the business of the carpet company became dull and remittances to the consignors became irregular, but business went on as before and continued with no material change until August 3, 1909, when a representative of the Coppes, Zook Company went to Kansas City, examined into the condition of things, and determined to remove the goods then on hand consigned by his company from the carpet company's store; was about to do so when Mr. Deamer, the president of the carpet company, suggested that it would hurt his business if a large amount of goods should be removed, and asked if some arrangement could not be made by which the goods could be left in the store. It similar contract in Re Pierce, 85 C. C. A. 14, 157 Fed. 757. This contract contained a provision that at the option of the consignor, if the consignee failed to sell all the articles received therein, he should either purchase and pay for those unsold at prices fixed, or hold them subject to the order of the consignor for a specified period, or reship or redeliver them free of charge.

The same conclusion is also reached in Martin v Stratton-White Co. 1 Ind. Terr. 394, 37 S. W. 833, as to a contract containing a stipulation on the part of the consignee to sell all the goods ordered under the contract within twelve months, and in the event of failure so to do, at the request of the consignor to settle for the goods then remaining, either by his note or by returning the goods in good order.

And in Lenz v. Harrison, 148 Ill. 598, 36 N. E. 567, as to a provision in the consignment contract that the consignee, after a designated period from the date of shipment, shall give his note for the balance of the consignment remaining unpaid, if required by the consignor, the court said that if this clause was to be construed alone, there might be force in the claim that the transaction was a sale, but that, considering all of the provisions of the contract together, the conclusion was reached that it did not constitute a sale.

A contrary conclusion is reached in Re Rabenau, 118 Fed. 471, involving the right of creditors of the consignee in bankruptcy proceedings to the consigned goods, as against the consignor. Referring to the clause by which the consignee, after a lapse of a certain period agrees at the option of the consignor, to purchase, pay, and settle, for all of the consigned goods remaining unsold, the court said that this was nothing more than a time fixed when the consignor could compel the consignee to take and pay for the goods, and added: "It is entirely optional with the 'party of the first part,'—an unheard-of provision in a contract between principal and factor. Stripped of its names, 'consignment contract,' 'parties to receive,' and sell the same on consignment,' and 'agent,' and reduced to its last analysis, this contract is little different from an ordinary contract of sale. If a country merchant sends in an order to a wholesale house in Kansas City for goods to be shipped to him according to a price list furnished by the seller, the commission merchant usually delivers the goods f. o. b.; that is, free on the cars for shipment. If they are damaged in transit, burned up by fire, destroyed by the elements, or stolen, it is the loss of the purchaser. He stores them at his risk, and pays taxes and insurance thereon. He may pay for the goods at such times and on such terms as may be agreed upon. If he makes a profit, it is his. If he sustains a loss, it is his. These and like provisions in this contract are nothing more than a greater security for the seller, to insure him in getting his money at the stipulated price." Attention is called to the fact that in the jurisdiction wherein this decision was rendered, had this contract been construed as a conditional sale contract, the vendor would not have been entitled to claim the property in the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy of the vendee.

And in DeKruif v. Flieman, 130 Mich. 12, 89 N. W. 558, in an action between the parties thereto, a contract of sale or consignment containing a provision that if any of the articles therein mentioned remain unsold at the time of settlement, the consignor may require the consignee to settle for same by his note, or, if he prefers, such article shall remain his property, is held to constitute a sale.

So a contract, although containing clauses indicating it to be a contract of agency, if it contain a clause by which the consignee agrees to give his note, when requested, to cover the purchase price of the property constitutes a contract of sale, rather than of agency. Aspinwall Mfg. Co. v. Johnson, 97 Mich. 531, 56 N. W. 932.

Where optional with consignor to purchase.

Where the consignee of goods has the option to return those remaining on hand at a certain time or to retain same by paying for them, the transaction amounts to a sale, creating the relation of debtor and creditor, and affords no basis for the assertion as against the receiver of the consignee, that the proceeds from the sale of the goods are trust funds. Baker v. Turner, 19 App. Div. 223, 46 N. Y. Supp. 25.

A. G. S.

was finally determined that they should be turned over to Mr. George F. Parlett, who was then an employee of the carpet company, to be disposed of for account of the Coppes, Zook Company. A similar arrangement was made by the Lincoln Upholstering Company with respect to goods shipped by it to the carpet company then on hand.

Petition was filed on August 30, 1909, in the court below by the creditors of the carpet company, seeking its adjudication in bankruptcy. The adjudication followed on October 7, 1909. Later Parlett (and his wife, who seems to have become jointly interested with him in his project) filed an intervening petition claiming as against the trustee of the carpet company in bankruptcy the ownership and possession of the goods turned over to them by the two consignor companies. Their claim was denied by the court below, and the case is brought here by appeal.

Argued before Sanborn and Adams, Circuit Judges, and Wm. H. Munger, District Judge.

Messrs. Otto Basye and Charles W. Webster, for appellants.

Mr. Albert R. Strother, for appellee.

Adams, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

In the view we take of this case it is unimportant to dwell upon the arrangement between George F. Parlett and his wife, Anna B. Parlett, interveners here, and the two consignor companies. Suffice it to say the evidence shows that the carpet company was at the time of the transfer insolvent, and that the Parletts paid no consideration to that company for the goods transferred to them. If, therefore, the goods belonged to the carpet company the transfer was without consideration and in fraud of the rights of its creditors. If they belonged to the consignors, the transferees stand in their shoes and acquired their rights of property only.

The question then is whether the title to the goods on hand at the end of the contract period, July 1, 1909, passed to the carpet company or remained in the consignors. If the latter be the case the trustee in bankruptcy had no concern with them. If the former, he is their owner, and the interveners were properly non-suited.

The contracts in question were primarily contracts of agency for the sale of the consignors' goods for a period ending July 1, 1909. Goods were to be intrusted to the agent by them for sale, and any that were actually sold prior to that time were the goods of the principals, and the proceeds less the commission reserved belonged to them and had to be accounted for. Whether this relation of agency ceased on July 1, 1909, depends upon the true interpretation of this clause of the contract: "The party of the second part [the agent] agrees . . . at the final termination of this agreement to buy and pay for at the then current prices and the regular terms such goods as may be then on hand."

In Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 312, 329, 37 L. ed. 1093, 1100, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 99, it is said: "The recognized distinction between bailment and sale is that when the identical article is to be returned in the same or in some altered form, the contract is one of bailment, and the title is not changed. On the other hand, when there is no obligation to return the specific article, and the receiver is at liberty to return another thing of value, he becomes a debtor to make the return, and the title to the property is changed; the transaction is a sale."

In Re Columbus Buggy Co. 74 C. C. A. 611, 143 Fed. 859, 861, this court said: "The power to require the restoration of the subject of the agreement is an indelible incident of a contract of bailment."

The contracts before us, disclosing no obligation or right in the agent to return the undisposed of goods to the consignors, but the contrary and inconsistent obligation "to buy and pay for them," are, therefore, in our opinion, not contracts of bailment. They stand on a different footing from the goods received and sold before the expiration of the contract period. These undoubtedly were bailments, and it is equally clear, we think, that the goods remaining undisposed of on July 1st became, by virtue of the provisions of the contracts, the property of the erstwhile bailees.

It is suggested that the clause of the contracts under consideration is executory, imposing an obligation to do something in the future, rather than constituting a conclusive and final sale of such goods as might remain undisposed of at the end of the contract period.

If the clause had read: "The party of the second part [the agent] agrees . . . at the final termination of this agreement to pay for" (instead of "to buy and pay for") ". . . such goods as may be then on hand," we think it could not be successfully claimed that the obligation to keep and pay for the goods was executory. A written obligation to "buy and pay for" goods in one's possession at a given fixed time does not seem essentially different from an obligation "to pay for" them at that time; and when we are striving to ascertain the intention of practical men in the language employed in a business contract, it is difficult to imagine that such minds would regard the two obligations thus expressed as at all different. Let us suppose the goods had been destroyed by fire while in the possession of the agent charged, as it was, with the obligation "to buy and pay for them;" can it be doubted that the consignors could have recovered from the agent the price which it had agreed to pay for them? We think not.

The contracts in their main and substantial aspect were, as already stated, agency contracts for a year's period. The object obviously was to dispose of as much merchandise as possible during that period. What would promote that object more than an obligation imposed upon the agent to keep and pay for such goods as it did not sell? It was, we think, in this natural and serviceable sense that the words of the contract in question creating the obligation "to buy and pay for" were employed. By requiring the agent to keep and pay for such goods as it did not sell to the trade during the year, the business would naturally be promoted, and the agency could be at once automatically and effectually wound up at the end of the year. This, in our opinion, was the clear intent and meaning of the parties in using the words "to buy and pay for," and under well-recognized rules of construction we should recognize and enforce it if possible. Moreover, there does not appear to have been any scope for the operation of an executory promise to buy.

Before the end of the year goods had been delivered to the carpet company for two purposes; some to be sold to the trade for account of the consignors, and the remainder to be paid for by the carpet company at current prices. Those that remained undisposed of at the end of the year were the subject of ready identification, and thereby became the definite and certain subject of sale. The consignors had nothing to do but accept the purchase price. They had no option to take the goods or legal right to get them. The carpet company had no legal right to return them. Its right as well as its obligation was to pay for them, and that was all.

In view of these facts, we fail to discover any occasion or opportunity for further bargaining. The contracts as originally made operated proprio vigore upon a subject of sale which was to become and had become definite and certain.

It is said in Mechem on Sales, vol. 1, § 2: "There may be an agreement whose legal effect is that the title shall not pass until a future time, either because, in the case of an ascertained chattel, something remains to happen or be performed which the parties have treated as precedent, or because the particular chattel whose title is to be so transferred has not yet been ascertained. This is an agreement to sell, called often, for purposes of further distinction, 'an executory sale.' It does not become a sale until the precedent event has happened or the condition has been performed. It then becomes a sale by force of the present agreement aided or completed by the happening of that event or the performance of that condition."

This is our view of the present case. The original contracts, on July 1, 1909, operated upon the undisposed of goods, and by force of their provisions transferred the title at once and unconditionally to the carpet company, on the terms specified. This, we think, expresses the intention of the contracting parties as manifested by the whole instruments, the objects to be accomplished, and the conduct of the parties.

Counsel for interveners invoke the doctrine of the following cases in support of their claim to the property in question: Re Galt, 56 C. C. A. 470, 120 Fed. 64, John Deere Plow Co. v. McDavid, 70 C. C. A. 422, 137 Fed. 802, Re Columbus Buggy Co. 74 C. C. A. 611, 143 Fed. 859, and Re Pierce, 85 C. C. A. 14, 157 Fed. 757, and other like cases, but we fail to see how that doctrine has any application to this case. Those cases decided that the contracts involved in them, when properly construed, were contracts of bailment or agency as distinguished from conditional sales, and as a result that the consignor's title to property which had been delivered to the bailee or agent was good as against the trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of the agent. This case on the contrary concerns property held by the carpet company, with no option or right to return to the consignor, and therefore not as a bailee or agent, but with a duty and obligation to take and pay for it and, therefore, as the owner.

A patient investigation of authorities fails to disclose any adjudication upon the exact facts disclosed in this case. But we think the principles announced in the following cases dealing with very similar state of facts as those now before us lead unerringly to the conclusion we have reached. Conable v. Lynch, 45 Iowa, 84; Norton v. Fisher, 113 Iowa, 595, 85 N. W. 801; Fish v. Benedict, 74 N. Y. 613; Ætna Powder Co. v. Hildebrand, 137 Ind. 462, 45 Am. St. Rep. 194, 37 N. E. 136; Arbuckle Bros. v. Gates, 95 Va. 802, 30 S. E. 496; Mack v. Drummond Tobacco Co. 48 Neb. 397, 58 Am. St. Rep. 691, 67 N. W. 174; O'Neal v. Stone, 79 Mo. App. 279; Potter v. Mt. Ver- non Roller Mill Co. 101 Mo. App. 581, 73 S. W. 1005.

The court below rightly held that the interveners were not entitled to the relief sought, and its decree is affirmed.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SIXTH CIRCUIT.

NORTH CAROLINA LAND & LUMBER COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

C. F. BOYER, Sheriff.

(112 C. C. A. 162, 191 Fed. 552.)

Evidence — foreign judgment — mortgage foreclosure — attachment proceedings.

1. In a replevin suit to gain possession of mortgaged property attached in a suit against the mortgagor in one state, a record of a judgment of a court in another state where the property was located when mortgaged and from which it had been temporarily removed, strictly foreclosing the mortgage in a proceeding instituted before the attachment was levied, is admissible.

Mortgage — foreclosure — attachment — priority.

2. The declaration of a forfeiture and institution of a proceeding strictly to foreclose a mortgage on chattels vest title in the mortgagee which, when judicially established by judgment, takes precedence of an attachment levied against the property as that of the mortgagor after the foreclosure suit was begun.

Same — property out of state — effect.

3. The fact that a mortgaged chattel is temporarily out of the state when a forfeiture is declared and proceedings for strict foreclosure instituted does not prevent the title from passing to the mortgagee, which he can assert against subsequent attachments of the property in the state where the property is found as that of the mortgagor.

Note. — Foreclosure of chattel mortgage when property is out of state.

The question of the effect of foreclosure of a chattel mortgage upon property situated in another state at the time of foreclosure, as raised in NORTH CAROLINA LAND & LUMBER CO. v. BOYER, seems to be somewhat novel.

However, in Pittsburgh & State Line R. Co. v. Rothschild, 8 Sadler (Pa.) 83, 4 Atl. 385, the supreme court refused to recognize a decree of foreclosure rendered in New York, covering property situated in Pennsylvania, which grew out of a transaction that was invalid in Pennsylvania though valid in New York, on the ground that the courts of New York had no jurisdiction to pass upon the validity of the mortgage in Pennsylvania.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Attachment — pendente lite — priorities.

4. The attachment of a mortgaged chattel as the property of the mortgagor pending a suit for strict foreclosure of the mortgage is subject to the determination of the foreclosure suit, even though the attachment was levied and the foreclosure suit begun when the property was temporarily in another state.

(October 2, 1911.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Tennessee to review a judgment in defendant's favor in a replevin action brought to recover from the defendant property alleged to have been wrongfully attached by him. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Severens and Knappen, Circuit Judges, and Evans, District Judge.

Messrs. A. S. Barnard and W. J. & W. D. McSween, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. G. W. Pickle, H. N. Cate, and W. O. Mims for defendant in error.

Evans, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff brought this action of replevin in the court below to recover from the defendant, the sheriff of Cocke county, Tennessee, one Climax engine or locomotive of the value of $2,500, which the sheriff is alleged to have wrongfully attached as the property of the Catalouchee Company in a suit instituted in the chancery court of Cocke county, styled "Borches & Company v. Catalouchee Company and others." It is averred in the declaration that the defendant unlawfully retained possession of the engine until August 12, 1905, at which time it was turned over to the plaintiff under a writ issued in this cause. Previous to the issue of the writ the plaintiff executed a replevin bond in due form under date of

And as to the necessity for recording an instrument creating a lien or reserving title to personal property, in the state to which it is subsequently removed, see Adams v. Fellers, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 385, and note. The effect upon that general question of the mortgagee's consent to the removal is considered in the note to Jones v. Northern Pacific Fish & Oil Co. 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 940.

As to foreclosure of a mortgage upon land in another state, see Dickson v. Loehr, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 986, and note.

And as to the jurisdiction of equity over suits affecting real property in another state or country, see Burton-Lingo Co. v. Patton, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 420, and note, and the earlier notes referred to therein.

R. L. S.

August 10, 1905. On March 21, 1910, the defendants filed a petition, in which it was averred that, while the plaintiff was using the engine over its railroad it was derailed, wrecked and destroyed. Under the law of Tennessee applicable to such a situation, they prayed for judgment for the value of the engine. The parties having waived a jury, the court tried the case, and, without making a finding of facts, rendered a judgment against the plaintiff for $2,500, with interest for several years, the whole amount being $3,194.70, which it was adjudged, should be paid to Boyer, the sheriff, and be held by him in lieu of the engine attached in the suit pending in the state court, and which we shall call the Borches suit.

The plaintiff has brought the case here, and one of the vital questions involved is whether the trial court erred in sustaining the objections of the defendant to the introduction as evidence of a duly certified copy of the record of the circuit court of the United States for the western district of North Carolina, at Asheville, in the case of the North Carolina Land & Lumber Company against the Catalouchee Company, and which, for brevity, we shall refer to as the North Carolina Case. As stated in the first assignment of error. "This record was offered for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff at the time the defendant levied an attachment upon the locomotive sued for had a prior valid lien upon said locomotive, which lien had been at the time of the commencement of this suit foreclosed in the said circuit court of the United States in the western district of North Carolina, and title to said locomotive had been, by the judgment and decree of said circuit court of the United States for the western district of North Carolina, declared to be in the plaintiff. And further to show that at the time the defendant levied his attachment the plaintiff had declared a forfeiture of all rights of the Catalouchee Company in and to the locomotive sued for.

"The plaintiff is seeking by this action to recover possession of the locomotive which was attached by the defendant as the property of the Catalouchee Company. The error of the court consisted in not receiving and considering this evidence upon the ground that the defendant was not a party to the suit in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of North Carolina and was not bound thereby, whereas, the court should have admitted said evidence, and should have considered the same, because the defendant levied upon said locomotive as the property of the Catalouchee Company, and is claiming it as the property of said Catalouchee Company, and is therefore bound by any judgment or decree against said company in respect to the title to said property."

The suit thus referred to was instituted on October 10, 1903, and, upon the ground that the conditions therein stipulated had been broken, sought the foreclosure of a mortgage made by the Catalouchee Company to the North Carolina Land & Lumber Company upon a great amount and variety of property in North Carolina, including the Climax engine or locomotive now in question. Soon after the institution of the North Carolina suit, the court appointed receivers therein, who took possession of all the mortgaged property then in North Carolina. The engine, however, had been used by the Catalouchee Company, in hauling its freight over the railroad of another company which extended partly into Tennessee. On October 3, 1903, the Tennessee & North Carolina Railroad Company, S. H. Stanaberry & Sons, and other creditors of the Catalouchee Company, had separately sued the latter company in the state court of Cocke county, Tennessee, and, having obtained attachments, had caused them to be levied upon the engine in question while it was upon a journey into that state. But on October 12, 1903, the receivers, under the orders of the court in the North Carolina case, had made some satisfactory arrangement with those creditors, all their attachments were released, and possession of the engine was given to the receivers. However, before they got it back to North Carolina, it was on October 15, 1903, seized and levied upon under the attachment in the Borches Case. It was in respect in this seizure that this action was brought.

At the outset, it may be remarked that, while the receivers thus got possession of the engine in Tennessee for the purposes of the North Carolina Case, we lay little stress upon their possession of it at the time of the levy of the attachment in the Borches Case, because in the view we take of the case the result must be the same, whether or not any effect be given to such possession by them.

Under the law of North Carolina the right of strict foreclosure exists. This right was sought to be enforced in the North Carolina Case begun on October 10, 1903, and, by the decree in that case rendered July 12, 1904, the complainant therein was afforded that relief, and was adjudged to be the owner of the engine. Did the decree in that case relate back either to the breach of the condition of the mortgage or to the commencement of the action, and did the plaintiffs in the Borches Case, who acquired their attachment lien after both of those events and during the pendency of the North Carolina Case, take their rights under that lien, subject to having it defeated by the judgment in the previously pending suit for foreclosing the mortgage? In the North Carolina Case the engine appears to have been impleaded as a part of the mortgaged property, although at the time the suit was brought it was actually in Tennessee, having been taken there in the way indicated. Can the latter part have any influence upon the plaintiff's right?

The views of the case held by the learned trial judge can best be stated in his own language. In his opinion it is said: "The engine was attached by the defendants as the property of the Catalouchee Company in their suit in the chancery court of Cocke county on October 15, 1903. Obviously, therefore, there was no wrongful seizure or detention of the engine by the defendants so far as the North Carolina Land & Lumber Company is concerned, unless it held the legal title to the engine at the time of the attachment. And the decree rendered by the United States circuit court at Asheville in the case of North Carolina Land & Lumber Company v. Catalouchee Company, on March 12, 1904,—if the same is to be properly construed as vesting title in the plaintiff to the engine in question on that date, as to which I express no opinion,—would be manifestly unavailing in so far as the rights of the plaintiff in the present suit is concerned, since, if the engine was the property of the Catalouchee Company at the time it was attached, a subsequent decree transferring the title of the Catalouchee Company thereto to the plaintiff, in a suit in which the present defendants were not parties, would clearly only transfer such rights as the Catalouchee Company had, and be subject to whatever prior rights in the engine the defendants had acquired by reason of their prior attachment in the chancery court. In order, therefore, for the plaintiff to succeed, it must show that it had become the owner of the engine on the day of the attachment, October 15, 1903, or otherwise held the legal title thereto on that date. This, I think it has entirely failed to show. The subsequent decree of the chancery court at Asheville obviously does not show this, as it could not in any aspect purport to be a divestiture of title prior to the date of the decree; nor does it recite that the engine had become the property of the Land & Lumber Company on or before October 15, 1903, the decree, which was dated March 12, 1904, merely reciting that the Catalouchee Company should 'from henceforth stand absolutely debarred and foreclosed of and from all right, title,' and interest in the property described in the decree; and, even if it did so recite, its recitals would, it seems, not be competent as evidence against the present defendants, who were not parties to that cause."

The plaintiff at the trial failed to show its ownership of the engine "on or before October 15, 1903," only because the court refused to permit it to read as evidence the record in the North Carolina Case, and we have reached the conclusion that that ruling was erroneous upon two grounds. The first and most important of these is that upon the breach of the condition of the mortgage the legal title to the mortgaged property, including the engine in question, at once vested in the mortgagee,—namely, the plaintiff in this case,—subject to be divested only by an exercise of the right of redemption, which right the mortgagor in fact failed to exercise. The general doctrine to which we refer was stated in the opinion of the Supreme Court in Waterman v. Mackenzie, 138 U. S. 258, 34 L. ed. 926, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336, in this language, viz.: "By a mortgage of personal property, differing in this respect from a pledge, it is not merely the possession or a special property that passes; but, both at law and in equity, the whole title is transferred to the mortgagee as security for the debt, (subject only to be defeated by performance of the condition, or by redemption on bill in equity within a reasonable time; and the right of possession, when there is no express stipulation to the contrary, goes with the right of property."

And that this is the general rule is stated in Jones on Chattel Mortgages, § 703. It follows that the decree in the North Carolina Case was a judicial declaration of a pre-existing right.

From the breach of the condition of the mortgage in this instance, it resulted that the plaintiff became the legal owner of the engine previous to the commencement of the foreclosure action in North Carolina on October 10, 1903, which ownership, thus acquired, was judicially established by the judgment in that case. That record thus became the muniment of the plaintiff's title and was clearly admissible as testimony in support of its claim for the recovery of the engine. If this be not so, it would follow that the ownership thus acquired and confirmed could not be shown at all outside of North Carolina in any litigation with a creditor of the Catalouchee Company who might attach the engine as the property of that company after its title had passed to the plaintiff. The attachment of Borches & Company was against the property of the Catalouchee Company, but in fact was levied, not upon its property, but upon that of the plaintiff; and yet, when the plaintiff sued for the possession of the property thus taken, it was not permitted at the trial to introduce the record which clearly established its right thereto. If the legal title to the engine had passed to the plaintiff before the filing of the bill in the North Carolina Case, it was wholly immaterial that such title passed in North Carolina, instead of Tennessee. The passage of the title was effective wherever it took place. If it passed at all, the creditors of the previous owner, the Catalouchee Company, had no right thereafter to seize it as the property of their debtor, and the seizure neither devested the plaintiff's title nor conferred any right upon Borchess & Company. Some stress is laid upon the fact that the engine was actually in Tennessee when the North Carolina suit was brought; and it is claimed, for that reason, that the circuit court of the United States did not acquire jurisdiction over the engine. We have no doubt that the situs of this piece of property was in North Carolina. We think that situs was not changed by the casual trips the engine made into Tennessee when it was being used in hauling the freight of the Catalouchee Company from North Carolina across the Tennessee state line. There was no intention that the engine should remain in Tennessee, but the intention was that it should, in regular course, return to North Carolina, where it was owned. We think it is inadmissible to hold that the situs of personal property can be changed in that way. Great confusion might result from any other rule as applied to property along the borders of our various states. The situs of personal property is ordinarily in the state of the domicile of its owner. If not there, it is in a state where it is so permanently located as to become part of the mass of the property there. Situs is not acquired nor fixed by mere temporary presence in or passage through another state. In considering this phase of the case, we may discern quite instructive analogy and illustration in what the Supreme Court said in Louisville & J. Ferry Co. v. Kentucky, 188 U. S. 396, 47 L. ed. 518, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 463, where, after discussing many previous cases, it was remarked that it had theretofore been held in Hays v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co. 17 How. 599, 15 L. ed. 255, "that certain steamers engaged in interstate commerce were not subject to taxation in a state where they might be temporarily when prosecuting their business, but were taxable at their home port, which was their situs, and where they belonged, the court saying: 'We are satisfied that the state of California had no jurisdiction over these vessels for the purpose of taxation. They were not, properly, abiding within its limits, so as to become incorporated with the other personal property of the state. They were there but temporarily engaged in lawful trade and commerce, with their situs at the home port, where the vessels belonged, and where the owners were liable to be taxed for the capital invested, and where the taxes had been paid.'"

The situs of this piece of property being in North Carolina, the court there had jurisdiction over it as being embraced in the mortgage. This jurisdiction was not destroyed when the engine, being temporarily out of that state for purposes of interstate commerce, was wrongfully seized as the property of another to whom it did not belong.

We come now to the consideration of the second reason for the conclusion that the ruling of the trial court was erroneous. When the holder of the legal title to property or the mortgagee thereof is made a party to an action concerning it, when such action is not collusive and is diligently prosecuted to a final judgment, the general doctrine is that a purchaser, a mortgagee, or an attaching creditor whose rights or liens are acquired pendente lite, takes subject to the determination of the pending suit and cannot relitigate the rights settled by the judgment therein. It is also the general rule that the judgment rendered in the pending suit relates back to the date of its commencement. The manifest object and purpose of the North Carolina Case was to obtain a strict foreclosure of the mortgage by a judgment of the court to the effect that, when the breach of the condition occurred, the legal title to the mortgaged property passed at once to the mortgagee. The judgment in the case went accordingly on July 12, 1904. The result was the extinguishment of the mortgagor's equity of redemption and the confirmation of the title of the plaintiff as of the 10th of October, 1903, the date of bringing the suit, if, indeed, it was not as of the previous date when the breach of the condition of the mortgage occurred. That suit, it is true, was pending in North Carolina when the attachment lien was created. But the situs of the engine was then in North Carolina, and there it remained. Can the accidental circumstances that, when the North Carolina foreclosure suit was begun, the engine was in Tennessee, whither it had been sent on one of its regular journeys across the North Carolina state line, defeat the effect of the pendency of the suit to enforce it? We think not. In Story's Eq. Jur. 13th ed. § 406, the general doctrine is thus stated: "Ordinarily it is true that the decree of a court binds only the parties and their privies in representation or estate. But he who purchases during the pendency of a suit is held bound by the decree that may be made against the person from whom he derives title. The litigating parties are exempted from taking any notice of the title so acquired, and such purchaser need not be made a party to the suit. Where there is a real and fair purchase without any notice, the rule may operate very hardly. But it is a rule founded upon a great public policy; for otherwise alienations made during a suit might defeat its whole purpose, and there would be no end to litigation. And hence arises the maxim, Pendente lite, nihil innovetur, the effect of which is not to annul the conveyance, but only to render it subservient to the rights of the parties in the litigation. As to the rights of these parties, the conveyance is treated as if it never had any existence, and it does not vary them."

The same views are clearly expressed in Bennett on Lis Pendens, pp. 86-90. The authorities also seem to agree, for obvious reasons, that in applying the lis pendens doctrine an attaching creditor cannot stand on a better footing than that of an innocent purchaser for value. In the case of Fletcher v. Ferrel, 9 Dana, 372, 35 Am. Dec. 143, the court of appeals of Kentucky dealt with questions very closely related to those involved in this case, and, speaking through Judge Ewing, among other things, said: "Whatever may be the doctrine applicable to purchases made in, and by citizens of, a distinct and independent nation, from that in which the suit is depending, we cannot doubt that within these United States purchases in one state pending a suit in another must be treated as pendente lite purchases, and subject to the rule applicable to such purchases."

We have been able to find no case in which the Supreme Court ruled upon the applicability of the lis pendens doctrine to personal property (other than negotiable paper and articles of ordinary commerce, as to which all the authorities seem to agree), but the subject of litigation in the Kentucky case was another kind of personal property, viz., slaves. Nevertheless the lis pendens doctrine was applied.

In Carr v. Lewis Coal Co. 15 Mo. App. 551, in the course of an elaborate and interesting opinion, the St. Louis court of appeals said: "In Murray v. Lylburn, 2 Johns. Ch. 441, Chancellor Kent doubts whether the doctrine ought to be carried so far as to affect sales of movable property, such as horses, cattle, and grain; and Judge Bradley in Warren County v. Marcy, 97 U. S. 106, 24 L. ed. 981, supra, says that the doctrine is applicable to personalty, with the two exceptions of negotiable paper and articles of ordinary commerce sold in the usual way. In New Hampshire, however, the courts refuse to apply the doctrine to personalty (Chase v. Searles, 45 N. H. 511); whilst in Mississippi, on the other hand, it is said that the doctrine at this day applies with equal force to contracts in regard to personalty and those concerning real estate. M'Cutchen v. Miller, 31 Miss. 65. In Pennsylvania the doctrine is applied to nonnegotiable securities. Diamond v. Lawrence County, 37 Pa. 353, 78 Am. Dec. 429.

"So far as the reasons on which the rule itself is based go, they seem to apply with equal force to personal property and real estate. The doctrine is an equitable one; but in law the same effect is produced by the rule that the purchaser takes only the title of his vendor. Every man is supposed to be attentive to what passes in the superior courts of the sovereignty where he resides, and some courts have based the doctrine upon the theory of notice. But it would seem that the doctrine really rests upon the public policy which does not allow litigating parties to give to others, pending the litigation, rights to the property in dispute, so as to prejudice the opposite party. . . .

"We think that both reason and authority are for the conclusion that the doctrine of lis pendens is to be applied to personal property of the character in question in the present case, which is not an article of ordinary commerce, as are cattle and grain."

And it would seem reasonable that this doctrine should be applied in a case where, as here, the property is a distinct article not kept for sale as merchandise. In such case the reasons sometimes urged against the inclusion of personal property under the doctrine of lis pendens do not exist; and we have reached the conclusion that the devolution of the legal title upon the breach of the condition of the mortgage, and the pendency of the North Carolina suit at the time the Borches suit was begun, alike extinguished and annulled the attachment lien acquired in the latter, eo instanti the judgment in the North Carolina case was rendered.

It results that it was erroneous to exclude the record in the North Carolina Case as evidence in support of the title of the plaintiff. We think it was clearly admissible for that purpose. To hold otherwise and affirm the judgment of the court below obviously would destroy the plaintiff's rights under the mortgage and make paramount those acquired long subsequently by the levy of the attachment, all because the mortgaged engine in doing the work for which it was designed, and in the regular course of that work from day to day, passed out of one of the states of the Union into another which adjoined it. We think the rights of a mortgagee of such property should not be so easily taken from him.

It is, however, contended by the defendant that it is not shown by the record in the North Carolina Case that the engine was actually embraced in the mortgage enforced in that case, either as property existing when the mortgage was made, or as property acquired thereafter and coming within the terms of that instrument. It is true that the averments of the bill are expressed in somewhat general terms. The engine in question is not particularly described by name, either in the bill or in the mortgage agreement. The latter describes the personal property in this language, namely: "Fourth. The party of the second part agrees that, in the event of their failure to comply with the provisions of this contract, then all the property, both real and personal, belonging to the said party of the second part and situate upon the said land or used in the development of the same, shall become and be the property of the party of the first part, and the party of the second part shall not remove any of said plant or equipment, except through and by the consent of the party of the first part, and party of the second part agrees that all equipment and improvements that they put on the property shall be free and clear of all encumbrances."

By the decree in the North Carolina Case it is "ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the defendant, the Catalouchee Company, do from henceforth stand absolutely debarred and foreclosed of and from all rights, title, interest, estate, and equity of redemption of and in the following described land and premises, to wit," and, after specifically describing the lands, it proceeds: "Together with all and singular the mills, machinery, railroad track, rolling stock, and equipment used in connection with said railroad, and all other improvements and fixtures attached to or located or standing upon said tracts of land or either of them; and all the rights of way which have been acquired by the said defendant, the Catalouchee Company, over and upon the land of any person or persons whatsoever, together with the railroad track and the privileges and appurtenances thereunto belonging, or in anywise appertaining, which has been constructed by the said defendant, and running from the mouth of Big Creek up to and upon the lands heretofore described, said railroad track being in its entire length about 4½ miles.
30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

"And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said North Carolina Land & Lumber Company is the owner in fee simple and entitled to immediate possession of all of said tracts of land and the machinery and improvements above described, free from and divested of any claims or liens of the defendant, the Catalouchee Company, for or on account of or by reason of its contract of purchase from the said North Carolina Land & Lumber Company or otherwise, or for any amount which the Catalouchee Company may have paid under the terms and provisions of said contract."

After a most careful consideration we are of opinion that the entire record in the North Carolina Case, as distinguished from the judgment alone, sufficiently shows that the engine was embraced in the mortgage, and that the title thereto passed to the plaintiff, as we have indicated. The record was therefore competent as evidence in behalf of the plaintiff in the deraignment of its title.

We need not notice the other errors assigned, because they may not arise at another trial.

But for the error indicated the judgment must be reversed, with costs, and, upon the return of the case, a new trial must be awarded, and further proceedings taken in accordance with law and the principles announced in this opinion.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, THIRD CIRCUIT.

HOWARD HAZLETT, Admr., etc., of Augustus Pollack, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

POLLACK STOGIE COMPANY et al

(— C. C. A. —, 195 Fed. 28.)

Tradename — right of personal representative — misleading public.

The personal representative of one who has established a trade right in the use of his own name in connection with a manufactured product may lose the right of protection in the use of such name in the business continued by him, if he leads the pub-

Note — The effect of false representations extrinsic to a tradename or trademark upon the right to protection against infringement is discussed in notes to Johnson & Johnson v. Seabury & Johnson, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1201, and Nelson v. Winchell, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151.

As to the invalidity of deceptive trademarks, see note to Joseph v. Macewsky, 19 L.R.A. 53.

lie to believe that the originator of the business is still alive, and his personality was a factor in the creation and retention of the good will which the product enjoyed.

(J. B. McPherson, Dist. J., dissents.)

(March 28, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Pennsylvania dismissing a bill brought to enjoin defendants from an alleged unfair use of a tradename which was alleged to have been developed by plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Gray, Circuit Judge, and Bradford and J. B. McPherson, District Judges.

Messrs. Thomas S. Brown and Brown & Stewart for appellant.

Messrs. Frank F. Reed and Edward S. Rogers for appellees.

Bradford, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a final decree of the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania, dismissing a bill in equity, brought by Howard Hazlett, administrator of Augustus Pollack, deceased, against the Pollack Stogie Company, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, a corporation of Pennsylvania, and C. G. Kiskaddon, M. W. DeWaters, John Benz, Joseph Pollack, stockholders, directors, and officers of said corporation, and Joseph Raubitschek, Rudolph Raubitschek, and Edward Raubitschek, partners doing business under the firm name of Raubitschek Brothers, alleging unfair competition in trade and infringement of trademarks on the part of the defendants, and praying for an account and injunctive relief. The court below, being of opinion upon the proofs that, while the defendants had clearly violated the rights of the complainant, the latter had not come into court with clean hands, decreed the dismissal of the bill, but without costs to the defendants, the respective parties to pay their own costs. It appears that during a period of many years prior to his death in 1906 Augustus Pollack had been engaged in the manufacture and sale of a species of cigars known as stogies, and had established an extensive and lucrative trade in that line. Such was the excellence of his product that in connection with sundry marks, labels, printed statements, and other forms of dress used in the conduct of his business, his stogies became so associated in the public mind with his name as to be generally known as "Pollacks." The learned judge below said:

"The personality of Pollack was a factor in the creation and the retention of the trade good will which his product enjoyed;" and this certainly was true in the sense that his known connection with the manufacture of stogies largely accounted for the good will which attached to his business. Owing to the defective execution of his intended will Augustus Pollack died intestate, and letters of administration on his estate were granted to Howard Hazlett, who by agreement of the widow and children of the decedent continued the business established by him. That the complainant in the conduct of this business, after the death of Augustus Pollack, pursued a course calculated, if not intended, to mislead the public into the belief that the decedent was still living, and engaged in its active management, clearly appears from the evidence. For years after the death of Augustus Pollack, and both before and since the commencement of this suit, the complainant made use of a circular letter which was placed in each box of stogies sent out from the factory. The letter is dated Wheeling, West Virginia, has a circular trademark at its head, bearing the name "Augustus Pollack," and is addressed "To the Trade, Consumers, and Public." It bears a facsimile of Augustus Pollack's signature. The body of the letter is as follows:

Gentlemen:

The Crown Stogies Cigars, originated and manufactured by Augustus Pollack of Wheeling, W. Va. U. S. A., distinguished by national recognition for perfect purity, absolute naturalness, and uniform excellence, have achieved their rank and fame by the cultivation under most trying circumstances, during more than a generation, of an unceasing devotion to ideal industrial integrity, loyalty to fair wages, elevating conditions of labor, and highest standard of expert workmanship, by the undersigned. The maker of the Crowns honored by the eloquent testimonials from distinguished sources in different sections of our country, conveying the popular impressions created by "The Pollack Crown Stogies," gratefully acknowledges his indebtedness to American encouragement, and, requesting a continuance of approval and favorable consideration, avails himself of this occasion to tender his assurance of appreciation and high esteem.

Yours truly,

Augustus Pollack.

At the foot of the letter was the statement that "the grades of the Crowns under protection of U. S. Patent Office registration and guarantee of Augustus Pollack" consisted of those shown in a list of Patent Office trademark registrations, therein set forth. This statement was misleading to purchasers, for the registrations were obtained, not by Augustus Pollack, but after his death by the complainant, and the use of the words, "guarantee of Augustus Pollack," in that connection was deceptive, to say the least. But this circular letter carried on its face by necessary implication an averment that Augustus Pollack was still living. No other interpretation can be put upon the clause: "The maker of the Crowns, honored by the eloquent testimonials from distinguished sources in different sections of our country, conveying the popular impressions created by 'the Pollack Crown Stogies,' gratefully acknowledges his indebtedness to American encouragement, and, requesting a continuance of approval and favorable consideration, avails himself of this occasion to tender his assurance of appreciation and high esteem.

"Yours truly,

Augustus Pollack."

It appears from the testimony of the complainant that the circular letter above quoted was used before the death of Augustus Pollack, and it also appears that the latest date on that letter is 1910. But whether it was used in the lifetime of the decedent is in our view immaterial; for after his death its continued use by the complainant without explanation amounted to a false representation that such death had not occurred, and that purchasers would obtain the product, not of the complainant, but of Augustus Pollack. And this misrepresentation was accentuated by the insertion in the circular letter of a date years after Augustus Pollack had died. That the identification of Augustus Pollack in the public mind, with the continued manufacture and sale of crown stogies cigars, was considered by the complainant as an important factor in securing custom, there can be no question; for it is stated that, manufactured by Augustus Pollack, they "have achieved their rank and fame by the cultivation under most trying circumstances, during more than a generation, of an unceasing devotion to ideal industrial integrity . . . and highest standard of expert workmanship by the undersigned," to wit, "Yours truly, Augustus Pollack." The record discloses a number of letters written after the death of Augustus Pollack, which were put in evidence by the complainant for the purpose of showing the high reputation of the Pollack stogies, and it is a significant fact that of twenty-one such letters written in the years 1908 and 1909, fourteen were addressed to Augustus Pollack personally. If one, having right by succession to employ a trademark, tradename, label, or other distinguishing mark in the conduct of his business, deliberately makes such use of it as is intended or calculated to deceive or mislead the purchasing public with respect to the origin, manufacture, or ownership of the goods in connection with which it is used, he is not entitled to relief in equity against persons infringing or wrongfully using such trademark, tradename, label, or other distinguishing mark to his detriment in connection with the sale of their own goods. While little can be said by way of justification of the conduct of the defendants, and without discussing the evidence in detail, we agree with the court below that the course of the complainant after succeeding to the business of Augustus Pollack was not such as was demanded by a proper regard for the protection of the public against deception touching the subject-matter as to which protection is sought against the defendants, and that his acts and omissions leave him no standing in a court of equity for relief in the premises. With respect to the contention that the complainant, being a foreign administrator who has not obtained ancillary letters in Pennsylvania, has no title to maintain this suit, it is unnecessary in view of the conclusion reached to express an opinion. For the reasons above given the decree of the court below is affirmed, the costs in this court to be paid by the appellant.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

J. B. McPherson, District Judge, dissents, believing that the facts of this case do not call for the application of the doctrine of "clean hands."

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

ST. LOUIS, IRON MOUNTAIN, & SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

MRS. W. L. MILLER.

(—Ark. —, 145 S. W. 889.)

Carrier — baggage — articles intended for business.

1. Bed linen and other articles designed for use in his business by one moving from

Note. — Household goods or supplies as baggage.

It is said in 6 Cyc. 666, that "in general, the term 'baggage' (or 'luggage,' which means the same thing) includes such articles of necessity and convenience as are one locality to another to engage in the hotel business cannot be carried by him as baggage at the risk of the carrier.

Same — notice to carrier.

2. The mere fact that articles tendered by a passenger for transportation as baggage are packed in a basket does not charge the carrier with notice of their character, so as to charge it with liability for their loss as baggage in case they are not properly checked.

On Petition for Rehearing.

Same — collection of freight — liability for loss.

3. A carrier which accepts for transportation as baggage, articles known by it to be freight, assumes the liability of a freight carrier, and may collect the regular trans-usually carried by passengers for personal use and comfort or protection during the continuance of the journey; and in determining the question, the station in life, circumstances and business of the passenger, and the nature and extent of the contemplated journey, may be taken into account." This general definition of "baggage" seems to exclude household goods or supplies, and in fact the cases, with a few exceptions, have held that such articles cannot be regarded as falling within the generally accepted meaning of the term "personal baggage."

The rules laid down in the respective cases vary slightly, but the variance is one of phraseology rather than of meaning.

Thus, the rule has been stated to be that "baggage" consists of whatever a passenger takes with him for his own personal use and convenience, according to the habits and wants of the particular class to which he belongs, either with reference to the immediate necessities or to the ultimate purposes of the journey. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Whitten, 90 Ark. 462, 119 S. W. 835, 21 Ann. Cas. 726, holding that quilts, cooking utensils, and groceries taken on a fishing trip constituted baggage; Glovinsky v. Cu-nard S. S. Co. 4 Misc. 268, 24 N. Y. Supp. 136, holding that feather beds and coverings were "under the circumstances" (not set out in report of case, but probably consisted of fact that traveler had to furnish own bedding) properly considered as baggage of an immigrant and her small children; Smith v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. 3 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 192, 2 Ohio N. P. 29, holding that household supplies for third persons did not constitute baggage; Bullard v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 586, holding that an embroidered table centerpiece did not constitute baggage; Missouri P. R. Co. v. York, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 557, holding that bedding intended for the personal comfort and convenience of immigrants on the journey constituted baggage; Bruty v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 32 U. C. Q. B. 66, holding that a concertina and sewing machine are not ordinary personal luggage; McCaffrey v. Cana- portation charge where the statute prohibits all discrimination in rates.

(March 4, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Nevada County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the value of property lost while in defendant's possession for transportation. Reversed.

Statement by Wood, J.:

W. L. Miller and wife, the appellee, were engaged in the hotel business at Heber. In the month of September, 1910, they bought tickets from Heber to Little Rock. On their tickets, they checked a trunk, containing dian P. R. Co. 1 Manitoba L. Rep. 350, holding that window curtains, bedding, cutlery, books, pictures, and parlor ornaments do not constitute ordinary personal luggage; Macrow v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. 612, 40 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 300, 24 L. T. N. S. 618, 19 Week. Rep. 873, holding that bedding intended for household use when the passenger was settled in a home at the journey's end could not be considered as "ordinary passenger's luggage;" Belfast & B. R. Co. v. Keys, 9 H. L. Cas. 573, 8 Jur. N. S. 367, 4 L. T. N. S. 841, 9 Week. Rep. 793, dictum per Lord Wensleydale that furniture and household goods do not constitute baggage. And, under this rule, it has been held that baggage for "the purpose of the journey" does not include household goods such as bedding, table linen, table and dresser covers, curtains, draperies, china ware, silverware, clock, ice cream freezers, etc., where "the purpose of the journey" is to change the place of abode, and the household goods are not intended for use on the journey. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Baldwin, 113 Tenn. 205, 81 S. W. 599 (also set out in ST. LOUIS, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. MILLER). Texas & P. R. Co. v. Ferguson, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 724, which involved a loss of bedding, is to the same effect. But in Ouimit v. Henshaw, 35 Vt. 605, 84 Am. Dec. 646, the court, in holding that bedding belonging to a poor man, who was moving with his family, could properly be called baggage, said: "A bed, pillows, bolster, and bed quilts belonging to a poor man, who is moving with his wife and family, may properly be called baggage. It is very common for such persons to take such articles with them as baggage,—their poverty makes it necessary, and such things are frequently about all they have that would make baggage. They are not merchandise, are of small value, may be put in a box or trunk like apparel, are frequently of immediate and necessary personal use to the owners; and both from custom, and from a regard to the poverty of such travelers, are often and properly treated as baggage."

And in Parmelee v. Fischer, 22 Ill. 212, 74 Am. Dec. 138, under an instruction to as-the wearing apparel of the appellee, and a laundry basket, containing articles which are described and values given in a list furnished by appellee, and for which this suit was brought, as follows:

Laundry basket.....	$ 4 00
Linen sheets, pillow cases, towels, tablecloths, and napkins.....	100 00
Four silver bread trays.....	6 00
Two lamps.....	4 00
Hotel dishes.....	10 00
One gold locket and chain.....	6 00
One hotel register book (acct. unpaid).....	14 00
One burnt-wood box.....	1 00
Three sets glasses.....	1 20
One pair lace curtains.....	5 00
Three celery glasses.....	1 05

They changed cars at Kensett, where they saw the laundry basket, and came on to Little Rock, where they surrendered the checks given by the Missouri & North Arkansas Railroad at Heber, and took new checks for the laundry basket and contents and their trunk to Prescott. The laundry basket, containing the articles specified, was lost, and Miller and his wife brought a joint suit against the appellant for the alleged value of the basket and contents. During the progress of the trial, the suit was dismissed as to certain articles shown to belong to W. L. Miller, and the cause proceeded on behalf of the appellee for the articles set out above. The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of appellee for the sum of $100.

sess the damage for "such articles of necessity and convenience as are usually carried by passengers for their personal use, comfort, instruction, amusement, and protection, having regard to the object and length of the journey," a verdict was found for plaintiff on a count for failing to deliver a chest containing, among other things, feather beds and pillows, coverlets, blankets, table covers, dishes, spoons, towels, and a teapot.

So it has been held under the rule that "travelers' baggage" consists of what is customarily known and carried as such, that engravings do not constitute baggage. Nevins v. Bay State S. B. Co. 4 Bosw. 225. But under this rule, bedding carried by an immigrant bound to provide her bedding for the voyage has been held to constitute a part of her baggage. Hirschsohn v. Hamburg American Packet Co. 2 Jones & S. 521.

In some instances the rule has been stated to be that household goods or supplies not intended for use on the journey do not constitute "baggage," especially if the carrier did not understand, and did not have good reason to understand, the nature of the goods. This rule was applied in the following cases in which the parenthesized household articles were held not to constitute

Messrs. W. E. Hemingway, E. B. Kinsworthy, J. H. Stevenson, and W. V. Tompkins, for appellant:

The articles lost were not baggage.

Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Baldwin, 113 Tenn. 205, 81 S. W. 599; Macrow v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. 612, 40 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 300, 24 L. T. N. S. 618, 19 Week. Rep. 873; Connolly v. Warren, 106 Mass. 146, 8 Am. Rep. 300; St. Louis & C. R. Co. v. Hardway, 17 Ill. App. 321; Mauritz v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 23 Fed. 765; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Boyce, 73 Ill. 510, 24 Am. Rep. 268; Church v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 6 S. D. 235, 26 L.R.A. 616, 60 N. W. 854; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Whitten, 90 Ark. 462, 119 S. W. 835, 21 Ann. Cas. 726; Humphreys v. Perry, 148 U. S. 628, 37 L. ed. 588, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 711; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Swift, 12 Wall. 274, 20 L. ed. 429.

The railroad company cannot contract to carry free the freight of one person, when it charges other persons the rates fixed in the schedule for carrying similar freight.

Myar v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. 71 Ark. 555, 76 S. W. 557; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 200 U. S. 361, 50 L. ed. 515, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 272; Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 209 U. S. 56, 52 L. ed. 681, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U. S. 467, 55 L. ed. 297, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 671, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 265.

personal baggage: Mauritz v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 23 Fed. 765 (bedding, curtains, table cloths and covers, books, pictures, and albums); Connolly v. Warren, 106 Mass. 146, 8 Am. Rep. 300 (feather bed). And in Bell v. Drew, 4 E. D. Smith, 59, it was held that the carrier was not liable for silverware lost in a trunk checked as ordinary baggage, on the ground that it was not "necessary for traveling." So, perishable articles, such as fruit, packed in a trunk, are not "baggage." Georgia R. Co. v. Johnson, 113 Ga. 589, 38 S. E. 954. And see Pettigrew v. Barnum, 11 Md. 434, 69 Am. Dec. 212, wherein, in holding that an innkeeper is not liable for table silver carried in a trunk, it was intimated that the term "baggage of a traveler" does not embrace merchandise or other valuables not designed for use or personal convenience on the journey.

But if household goods are accepted as baggage, they will be classed as such in determining the carrier's liability. Mauritz v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. supra; Minter v. Pacific R. Co. 41 Mo. 503, 97 Am. Dec. 288, holding the carrier liable for a carpet received by its agent as baggage and lost in transit; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Slater, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 25, hold-

Messrs. Hamby, Haynie, & Hamby, for appellee:

The articles were baggage.

Macrow v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. 612, 40 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 300, 24 L. T. N. S. 618, 19 Week. Rep. 873; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Skinner, 88 Ark. 191, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 850, 113 S. W. 1019; Curtis v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 74 N. Y. 116, 30 Am. Rep. 271; Ouimit v. Henshaw, 35 Vt. 605, 84 Am. Dec. 646; Cadwallader v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 9 Decisions des Tribunaux, 169; Bruty v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 32 U. C. Q. B. 66; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Folliard, 66 Tex. 603, 59 Am. Rep. 632, 1 S. W. 624; Parmelee v. Fischer, 22 Ill. 212, 74 Am. Dec. 138; Hubbard v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 112 Mo. App. 459, 87 S. W. 52; Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Ware, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 60 S. W. 343; Kast v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 107; Cooney v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 121 Ala. 368, 53 L.R.A. 690, 25 So. 712; Atwood v. Mohler, 108 Ill. App. 416; 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1647.

The possession of a baggage check is prima facie evidence of the receipt of the baggage by the carrier.

Davis v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. 22 Ill. 278, 74 Am. Dec. 151; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Weaver, 9 Lea, 38, 42 Am. Rep. 654; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Stone, 78 Ark. 318, 95 S. W. 471; Graham & M. Transp. Co. v. Young, 117 Ill. App. 257; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Steear, 53 Neb. 95, 73 N. W. 466; Ahlbeck v. St. Paul, M.

ing the carrier liable for framed pictures, a chandelier, and a mirror which it had accepted and had charged and received extra compensation at baggage rates for carrying as baggage, it being said that this was the imperative rule, whether the carrier knew of its character or not, unless inquiry was made of the owner and false and fraudulent answers made; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Green, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 13, 97 S. W. 531, holding that the carrier's liability for china ware carried as baggage depended upon the carrier's knowledge as to its character, it being said that if the carrier did not know the character of the goods, it would not be liable; but that if it did know that the box contained china ware, and notwithstanding that fact, accepted it as baggage, it would be liable for damages resulting from the loss thereof.

And where the contract of carriage limits the baggage to wearing apparel, it has been held that the carrier is under no obligation to carry packages of groceries. Bullock v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 60 N. J. L. 24, 37 L.R.A. 417, 36 Atl. 773.

In the following cases, which do not state any particular rule, the respective articles were held not to constitute "baggage:" Vasse v. Ball, 2 Dall. 270, 1 L. ed. 377 (fur-

& M. R. Co. 39 Minn. 424, 12 Am. St. Rep. 661, 40 N. W. 364.

If a carrier received merchandise as personal baggage, knowing its true character, it will be liable for it as for baggage.

Rossier v. Wabash R. Co. 115 Mo. App. 515, 91 S. W. 1018; Trimble v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 162 N. Y. 84, 48 L.R.A. 115, 56 N. E. 532; 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1646.

Wood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The evidence is sufficient to show that appellant is liable if the articles, for the loss of which judgment was rendered, were baggage. Therefore that is the only question we need consider.

Mr. Hutchinson, in his excellent work on Carriers, says: "When the facts are agreed or undisputed, the question, What is baggage? is one strictly of law, and must be determined by the court. What constitutes baggage, in any given or supposed case, is a question which depends upon principles of law upon which the courts have agreed with great unanimity, whatever discrepancies there may be in decisions; and, although it is said in many of the cases to which reference has been made, that the question is one for a jury, it must be understood that this is the case only when there is uncertainty or dispute as to some fact upon which the whole question may turn." 3 Hutchinson on Carriers, § 1255. In the case at bar, the facts are undisputed.

This court, in the case of Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. McGahey, 63 Ark. 344, niture); St. Louis & C. R. Co. v. Hardway, 17 Ill. App. 321 (silk quilt); Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Boyce, 73 Ill. 510, 24 Am. Rep. 268 (silver napkin rings); Wheeler v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. 52 Hun, 75, 5 N. Y. Supp. 101, reversed on other grounds in 125 N. Y. 155, 21 Am. St. Rep. 729, 26 N. E. 248, (pictures); Davidson v. Cunard S. S. Co. 134 App. Div. 288, 118 N. Y. Supp. 929 (cradle, bedding, and silverware); St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Dickerson, 29 Okla. 386, 118 Pac. 140 (piano or pulpit cover); Mexican C. R. Co. v. DeRosear, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 109 S. W. 949 (drawn-work centerpiece, table linen, and bedding).

Early cases upon the general question of the liability of a passenger carrier in transporting merchandise intrusted to it by a passenger are treated in the note to Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Higdon, 14 L.R.A. 515. And early cases upon the general question of what constitutes baggage are discussed in the notes to Carpenter v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 11 L.R.A. 759, and Hartwell v. Northern P. Exp. Co. 3 L.R.A. 346.

As to whether articles intended for gifts are baggage for which carrier is responsible, see note to Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Skinner, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 850. G. J. C.

36 L.R.A. 781, 58 Am. St. Rep. 111, 38 S. W. 659, adopted the definition of baggage as given by Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, in Macrow v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. 612, as follows: "[Baggage] is whatever the passenger takes with him for his personal use or convenience, according to the habits or wants of the particular class to which he belongs, either with reference to the immediate necessities or to the ultimate purpose of the journey." Other cases where this definition has since been approved are the following: Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. v. State, 65 Ark. 363, 41 L.R.A. 333, 67 Am. St. Rep. 933, 46 S. W. 421; Little Rock & H. S. W. R. Co. v. Record, 74 Ark. 125, 109 Am. St. Rep. 67, 85 S. W. 421; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Skinner, 88 Ark. 189, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 850, 113 S. W. 1019; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Whitten, 90 Ark. 462, 119 S. W. 835, 21 Ann. Cas. 726.

To warrant the transportation of articles as baggage, it must appear that they are such articles as are adapted to the traveler's personal use and convenience, "when considered with reference to the immediate necessities or to the ultimate purpose of the journey." Obviously baggage does not include such articles as have no reference whatever to the journey itself, and such as are being transported by the traveler to be used after the purpose of his journey has been consummated. Where a traveler, as in the instant case, is moving from one location to another, for the purpose of settling at the latter location and engaging in some permanent business, he cannot include as baggage such articles as are only useful and necessary for that business, and articles that are being transported to be used in connection with and for the purpose of that business. Here the appellee and her husband were moving from Heber to Prescott. The purpose of their journey was the removal of themselves and their household effects from one location to the other. The purpose of the journey was ended when this removal was effected. The business that they were to engage in as hotel keepers, after the journey came to an end, had no reference to or connection whatever with the journey itself. Under the undisputed evidence, the journey itself ended the moment the removal was effected from Heber to Prescott. The articles contained in the list, except the gold locket and chain, for the loss of which judgment was had, were not adapted to appellee's personal use and convenience while on her journey at all. They were such articles as were fitted for use in her business as hotel keeper, after she had become permanently located at Prescott.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The supreme court of Tennessee, in passing upon whether articles of a similar character were baggage, in Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Baldwin, 113 Tenn. 205, 81 S. W. 599, said: "The items . . . are properly classified as household goods, and do not fall within the designation of baggage, it not appearing that they were intended for use upon the journey, but were being transported simply because the defendants in error were 'moving,'—that is, changing from their former home to a new home or place of abode."

The court erred in submitting to the jury as to whether the articles on the list, except the gold locket and chain, were baggage. The court should have declared as matter of law, under the uncontroverted evidence, that such articles were not baggage, and that the locket and chain were articles of baggage.

2. In the case of Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. McGahey, supra, Mr. Justice Battle, speaking for the court, said: "When a passenger presents to the carrier for transportation his goods and chattels, and makes known what they are, or exposes them to view, or packs them in a way to give anyone concerned good reason to understand and know that they are not usually carried as baggage, and demands transportation of them as his luggage, and the carrier receives and carries them accordingly, he will be responsible for them as baggage, notwithstanding he was not bound to accept and transport them as such."

But it cannot be said, as matter of law, because the articles in suit were packed in a laundry basket, that the appellant company had notice that they were such articles as were not usually carried as baggage. This method of packing would not of itself give the appellant notice of the character of the articles that the laundry basket contained. For aught that appellant knew to the contrary, such basket might have contained only articles of clothing, or such articles as would be classified in law as baggage.

The appellee testified that "the agent at Heber Springs knew we were moving from Heber to Prescott. When we went from Prescott to Heber Springs, we shipped this same basket in the same way, and almost the same identical articles. We had other baggage shipped at the same time this was." But she does not testify that she informed the agent at Heber Springs of what the basket contained, and, as we have stated, there was nothing in the mere manner of the packing of the basket that was calculated to advise the appellant of the kind of articles that the basket contained.

The appellee did not ask that the question of whether appellant had notice or knowledge that the articles were not baggage, and yet received them as such, be submitted to the jury. The question as to whether appellant had such notice was not fully developed and submitted.

The judgment, for the error indicated above, is reversed, and remanded for a new trial on the issue as to whether appellant accepted the articles as baggage, knowing or having notice at the time that they were not baggage. Judgment will be rendered in favor of appellee for the value of the gold locket and chain.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, the following response was handed down on April 8, 1912:

If the appellant accepted the articles to be transported free, as baggage, when it knew or had notice that such articles were freight, it would be liable for their loss as a common carrier of freight. For, under the present statutes, requiring railroad companies to provide printed schedules of tariff charges, and to keep same posted, etc., and prohibiting discriminations in rates, a railroad company cannot accept freight to be carried as baggage, knowing or having notice that same was freight, and escape the liability for its loss. See §§ 6802, 6803, 6804, and 6813, Kirby's Digest. A contract of that kind is void, and the parties to it will be held to the mutual duties and obligations of shipper and carrier imposed by the statutes. The railroad company would be compelled to charge, and the shipper to pay, according to the regular schedule of tariff charges, fixed as the law requires. Sections of the Digest, supra.

The purpose of our law in requiring the schedule of rates and prohibiting discriminations is to guarantee to all shippers, for the same service, and under the same conditions, the same tariff of charges. As was said by Chief Justice White, in speaking of the interstate commerce act (act Feb. 4, 1887, chap. 104, 24 Stat. at L. 379, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3154): "The great purpose of the act, . . . whilst seeking to prevent unjust and unreasonable rates, was to secure equality of rates as to all, and to destroy favoritism; these last being accomplished by requiring the publication of tariffs, and by prohibiting secret departures from such tariffs, and prohibiting rebates, preferences, and all other forms of undue discrimination." New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 200 U. S. 361-391, 50 L. ed. 515-521, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 272; Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 209 U. S. 56-72, 52 L. ed. 681-691, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U. S. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

467, 476-478, 55 L. ed. 297, 301, 302, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 671, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 265.

This court, in Myar v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. 71 Ark. 555, 76 S. W. 557, held that a station agent of a railway company "could not lawfully discriminate in favor of one shipper by charging him for transportation a lower rate than was allowed to others; and such did not come within the apparent scope of his authority."

In the recent case of St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wolf, — Ark. —, 139 S. W. 536, we held, quoting syllabus (official report): "Where a railway agent, by mistake, inserted in a bill of lading for an interstate shipment a rate less than the published rate, the railroad company is not bound thereby; and it is immaterial in such case that the shipper and the agent were both ignorant of the published rate." See Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Tonn, — Ark. —, 143 S. W. 577.

It follows that if the articles in controversy had not been lost, appellant could have collected from appellee the regular schedule freight tariff on both articles. If appellant knew or had notice that such articles were freight, as we have stated, it would be liable for their loss, although it shipped them as baggage. But, on the other hand, if appellant did not know, and was not put on notice by appellee, that such articles were freight, and appellant shipped them as baggage, then appellant would not be liable for their loss, unless through gross or wilful negligence, because, in such case, appellant, at most, could sustain no higher relation to appellee than that of a gratuitous bailee. There would be no contract of carriage whatever between appellant and appellee. Appellant would be a mere mandatar, without pay, of the goods for the exclusive benefit of the bailor; and the loss, except for gross or wilful negligence, would have to be borne by appellee. 5 Cyc. 186.

The motion for a rehearing is denied.

Hart, J., concurs for the reasons given in the original opinion.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

PINE BROTHERS

v.

CHICAGO, BURLINGTON, & QUINCY
RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(— Iowa —, 133 N. W. 128.)

Carrier — animal — illness — duty to hasten shipment.

A railroad company which has taken an animal for transportation on a regular freight schedule is not liable for its loss because it refuses to attach the car to a passenger train or otherwise hasten the shipment, upon receiving notice that the animal is ill, where the train carrying it is substantially on schedule time, and there is no faster freight train to which it could be attached.

(November 18, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Ringgold County in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover damages for injury to property while in defendant's possession for transportation. Reversed.

Note.—Duty of carrier to hasten shipment or take other precaution to prevent loss threatened without any antecedent fault on its part.

As indicated by its title, this note does not deal with the duty of the carrier to transport freight promptly, nor with the general question of care or negligence on its part; but is confined strictly to the duty of a carrier to take special precautions to avoid a loss which is threatened as the result of some disaster or delay not due to any antecedent fault on its part. The question indicated, so far as it involves the duty of a carrier after an act of God has occurred, is treated in the note to Armstrong v. Illinois C. R. Co. 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 671.

As to the burden of proof of cause of injury to live stock during transportation, see note to Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Sherwood, 17 L.R.A. 339; as to statutory duties of carriers of live stock with reference to care of stock during transportation, see note to Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. American Exch. Bank, 44 L.R.A. 449; as to liability of carrier for damage to or loss of live stock by contagious disease contracted during transit, see note to Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Dever, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 712.

Live stock—general doctrine.

There is an ex post facto wisdom, which, after everything has been done without success, can suggest that something else should have been attempted, but this is a sagacity much more astute than ordinary human foresight, and can hardly furnish a fair rule by which to determine the propriety of what has been done in good faith, and with judgment exercised under the best light afforded. American Exp. Co. v. Smith, 33 Ohio St. 511, 31 Am. Rep. 561.

When a railroad company accepts stock for shipment, if a delay in transportation shall occur, whatever the cause, it has been said that the company, within the measure of its duty, must take care, by such steps as lie within its power, to protect such stock, to the end that the same shall be fully insured against increased danger of injury on account thereof, and the requirement for commensurate care is equivalent to the highest degree of care possible to the situation. L.R.A. (N.S.)

Statement by Weaver, J.:

Action to recover damages for injury to property in course of transportation over defendant's road. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

Messrs. Spence & Smith and Miles & Steele for appellant.

Messrs. C. J. Lewis and V. R. McGinnis for appellees.

Weaver, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellees purchased a valuable stallion at Bushnell, Illinois, and delivered it ation and necessary to safety. Colsch v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. — Iowa, —, 117 N. W. 281.

But on a second appeal, the rule as to degree of care required of the carrier, when a shipment of live stock is delayed en route through no fault of the carrier, is modified, the court holding that the degree of care required under such circumstances is not the highest, but only ordinary and reasonable care,—such care as an ordinarily careful person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances,—especially when the owner accompanies his stock; and the expressions found in Kinnick Bros. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 69 Iowa, 665, 29 N. W. 772, which lay down a different rule, are declared unnecessary to the decision of that case, and are disapproved. No reference is made to the former appeal in this case. Colsch v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 149 Iowa, 176, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1013, 127 N. W. 198.

Where the shipper of stock does not agree to furnish a care taker, and some of the animals die or are injured for want of care or protection in transit, the carrier must bear the loss; but where the owner is in charge of live stock in transit, the burden is on him to show a loss caused by the carrier's negligence. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Williams, 61 Neb. 608, 55 L.R.A. 289, 85 N. W. 832; Terre Haute & L. R. Co. v. Sherwood, 132 Ind. 129, 17 L.R.A. 339, 32 Am. St. Rep. 239, 31 N. E. 781, and cases cited.

—cold.

Generally as to carrier's liability for injury to live stock by weather conditions, see note to Colsch v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1013.

As to snowstorm as act of God which relieves carrier from liability, see note to Cormack v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1209.

Where a carload of cattle was left standing on a side track in an exposed position in cold weather, and were freezing, and the carrier refused to comply with the shipper's demand that the stock be either forwarded to destination or unloaded and placed in proper shelter, the carrier was held liable for the loss, for, whatever the cause of the

to the appellant at that place to be shipped to their home in Diagonal, Iowa. The horse, which was accompanied by one of its owners, was taken sick during the trip, and died soon after reaching its destination.

The theory of plaintiffs' case, as alleged in the petition and presented upon this appeal, is that the transportation was unreasonably and unnecessarily delayed, and that, by reason of such delay and resulting exposure to inclement weather, the horse contracted the disease of which it died. Appellant insists, on the other hand, that there was in fact no material delay, and that the record discloses no evidence on which a verdict charging it with negligence as alleged in the petition can be sustained.

After considerable investigation, we are forced to the conclusion that the appellant's contention must be sustained. Bushnell, Illinois, and Diagonal, Iowa, are both stations upon the defendant's railway system. The plaintiffs reside at the place last named, but were personally present at Bushnell when the horse was delivered for shipment. The defendant's freight schedules upon which the road was then being operated were so arranged that a car sent out of Bushnell on the afternoon or evening of May 5, 1908, and making all the connec-delay, the carrier was said to be bound to use the highest degree of care for the safety of the stock. Colsch v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. — Iowa, —, 117 N. W. 281.

But on a second appeal, it was held that the carrier was bound to use only ordinary and reasonable care, since the delay was not caused by any negligence of the carrier; and especially where, as here, the owner accompanied his stock. 149 Iowa, 176, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1013, 127 N. W. 198.

But where a carload of hogs was snowed in en route, and delayed more than a day, and several died from the cold, and it was shown that it was impossible to unload them on account of the drifting snow, that attempts to place doors against the sides of the car failed because of the high wind, and that as soon as possible the yards were shoveled out and the hogs unloaded, fed, and cared for until the next train out, it was held that this action warranted a verdict for the carrier, the court stating that in such cases the carrier is not required to bestow the highest degree of care, but only ordinary or reasonable care and diligence, to secure the property from loss, the delay not being the result of its own negligence. Black v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 30 Neb. 197, 46 N. W. 428.

In Jones v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 91 Minn. 229, 103 Am. St. Rep. 507, 97 N. W. 893, where a train containing two carloads of stock was overtaken by an unusually severe blizzard, and the stock froze to death, the fact that after the train became stalled, the crew did all they could to procure relief, is treated as of weight in holding the carrier not guilty of negligence.

For other cases as to duty of carrier where act of God has occurred or is threatened, see note to Armstrong v. Illinois C. R. Co. 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 671.

—down and dying.

As to liability of carrier in respect of property which it accepts improperly packed or crated, see note to Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Rice, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1214.

If a crated animal gets down in the crate and is in danger of dying, and the carrier's agent knows this, but permits it 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

to remain down, there is negligence; it is the carrier's duty to remedy the situation by putting the animal on its feet, and if no sufficient force is at hand to raise it with, the agent should procure such force. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Emerson, 101 Mo. App. 62, 74 S. W. 132.

When, during the transportation of stock, the shipper's agent requests the conductor to set off the car, containing both cattle and hogs, because the cattle are down and dying, it is the duty of the conductor to comply; and he is not excused on the ground that the stock pen at that point would not hold hogs, when the hogs could have been retained upon the car and the suffering cattle unloaded, and especially when the carrier is under duty to make the pens secure. Johnson v. Alabama & V. R. Co. 69 Miss. 191, 30 Am. St. Rep. 534, 11 So. 104.

And even if cars of cattle are overloaded by mistake of the shipper, if, while in transit, his agent in charge discovers some of them down and in bad condition, and calls the attention of the conductor to them and requests him to have them unloaded, and he refuses, the carrier will be liable for later damages caused by such refusal, but not for damages already suffered; and it may be that the carrier cannot be held bound to exercise "all possible means," in avoiding future loss. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Kemp, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 30 S. W. 714.

But where, because a horse was down in a car and in danger of dying, the owner who accompanied it requested that his car be laid out for twenty-four hours, so that he might rearrange his load and rest his stock, and the carrier's agent refused, it was held that he was justified in refusing, on the ground that there was no custom to lay out cars when only a few horses were shipped (less than a carload), and that the shipper had not contemplated such a privilege when he made the contract nor when he loaded his goods, and that, if there was any obligation founded in common humanity, it was on the shipper to recognize it, and to make a new contract for longer use of the car, or abandon his present contract and lose his payment of freight. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Peterson, 68 Miss. 454, 14 L.R.A. 550, 10 So. 43.

tions provided for in said schedules, would not arrive in Diagonal until about noon of May 8th. There is no claim that plaintiffs did not fully understand the time required to make this trip, or that they asked for or received any assurance that the progress of their car could or would be accelerated beyond the rate indicated by the schedules. The shipment was delivered to the defendant about the middle of the afternoon of May 5th. It was accompanied by the plaintiffs, or one of them, and it arrived at its destination substantially on schedule time.

No fault appears to be found by the plaintiffs with the train schedules, but they say that, after discovering signs of sickness in the horse, they applied to the defendant's agents to hasten the transportation by attaching the car to a passenger train or otherwise, and that such requests were not granted. We think there are obvious reasons why failure to accelerate the movement of freight by attaching freight cars to pas—fright.

As to extraordinary unloading of live stock in transitu, see note to Illinois C. R. Co. v. Petersen, 14 L.R.A. 550.

When a carrier sees that a crated animal is so frightened as to throw him into an uncontrollable fit of terror, causing him to fall down in the crate so that he cannot get up, the carrier is under a duty to use ordinary care to protect the animal from further injury, and if unloading and recrating is necessary, it should be done at the first practicable place. The carrier ought not to carry him hundreds of miles past many stops until the brute is practically dead, before taking steps for his relief. Kelly v. Adams Exp. Co. 134 Ky. 208, 119 S. W. 747.

If, in the course of transportation, the agents of a carrier are notified by the owner of animals or his agent that the transportation is causing them fright, whereby they are acting badly and are in danger of being killed or hurt by further transportation, and if the carrier is requested by the owner to set the car on a side track at an intermediate station, it is the duty of the carrier to do so, if it can reasonably be done. Coupland v. Housatonic R. Co. 61 Conn. 531, 15 L.R.A. 534, 23 Atl. 870.

But when two out of fourteen horses going from New Jersey to New Orleans became frightened, and were plunging, and were in danger of serious injury, and the owner's agent requested the carrier to be allowed to unload them, the car being attached to a passenger train, and there being no chute for unloading at that place, and where the carrier offered to side track the car so that the horses might be unloaded, and let the whole shipment wait twelve hours until the next train should come, and refused to hold his train for the side tracking and unloading, which would have disarranged the whole time schedule; and where the horses went on and there was a loss,—the court held that the offer and refusal of the carrier were reasonable. Regan v. Adams Exp. Co. 49 La. Ann. 1579, 23 So. 335.

—heat, suffocation, and overcrowding.

As to duty of carrier to shower hogs during shipment, see note to Peck v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 883.

A carrier's agent who refuses to comply with the request of the owner of crated animals to aid him in placing them where they can get more air, and so prevent them from dying from overheating, is guilty of neglecting his plain duty, when he could reasonably have complied, and where, after one animal dies, he does comply as to the others; and the carrier is liable for the loss, and cannot avoid such liability by inserting in the contract or bill of lading a provision relieving it from liability for damage or loss from its own negligence. United States Exp. Co. v. Council, 84 Ill. App. 491.

Even where the contract of shipment provides that the shipper is to load and unload the cattle, and he overloads one car, and upon discovery of that fact demands that the cars be reset and the cattle reloaded (once before the shipment moved, and once at an intermediate point), and the carrier refuses to comply, such carrier becomes responsible for the injury done to the cattle by carrying them in the crowded condition. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Pool, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 575, 59 S. W. 911.

Where a train containing a carload of hogs was delayed by an obstruction on the track, it was held that the carrier was bound to use the highest degree of care during the delay for the safety of the property; and if injury to the hogs could have been prevented by unloading them or giving them personal attention while in the car, the carrier was bound to do so; even though the loss came through the natural propensity of the hogs to crowd, or through the overcrowding of the car by the shipper with the knowledge of the carrier. Kinnick Bros. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 69 Iowa, 665, 29 N. W. 772.

Even if the car is not overloaded and the hogs are in good condition at the beginning of the journey, if the weather is very hot, mere showering with water may not be sufficient, and if, in spite of that precaution, they continue to die; the carrier may be negligent in not setting the car off the train, and unloading the stock before the destination is reached. Lindley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 36 Minn. 539, 1 Am. St. Rep. 692, 33 N. W. 7.

But where the owner's agent is negligent in allowing hogs to be overcrowded, and later, on discovering their suffering, asks the carrier to have them transferred to other cars, but, on being told there are none, does not insist on having the car detached and left, but goes on with them to the destination, the carrier is not liable. Squire v.

senger trains should not be held culpable negligence, and there is here no evidence of other or faster freight trains by the aid of which the destination of the plaintiffs' car could have been sooner reached. It is true that the train taking the car west from Galesburg could have taken it to the junction point at Osceola, Iowa, on the evening of May 6th, instead of leaving it to be picked up by succeeding trains, which brought it to said junction the following morning, but the movement of the car south from Osceola would not thereby have been hastened for the only connecting train did not leave there until about noon of May 7th, nor would it have been sooner forwarded out of Van Wert, the last junction point.

The charge of negligence made by the plaintiffs appears, therefore, to be without evidence to support it, and it follows that the judgment appealed from must be, and it is, reversed.

New York C. R. Co. 98 Mass. 239, 93 Am. Dec. 162.

And where cattle are delayed in transit by storm, and because of the delay there is a loss by heat, suffocation, and crowding, if the owner's agent has full control of the shipment and of loading and unloading, the responsibility is on him; and if, by constructing a temporary platform, they could have been unloaded where the train stood, and the carrier did nothing to prevent the unloading, such carrier is not liable for the loss, even though it refused to comply with the owner's request to unload the stock or furnish facilities for so doing. Penn. v. Buffalo & E. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 204, 10 Am. Rep. 355, reversing 3 Lans. 443.

But it is the duty of the carrier in such a case, upon reasonable request, so to place the cars as to be convenient to the usual and accessible means of unloading, if that be practicable. Bills v. New York C. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 5, former appeal in 53 N. Y. 608.

—sickness.

A railroad company is not liable for the death of a horse because it refuses, upon information that the animal is sick in transit, to attach the freight car to a passenger train, when the freight train is practically on schedule time. PINE BROS. v. CHICAGO, B. & Q. R. Co.

If an animal is sick during transportation, and subsequently dies from the sickness, and if the carrier is not forewarned of the sickness, and does all in its power to protect the animal after the attack comes on and while it has custody of the same, the death will be regarded as inevitable accident. Klair v. Wilmington S. B. Co. 4 Penn. (Del.) 51, 54 Atl. 694.

When a carrier, in order to give proper medical and surgical attendance to horses which had been burned in transit, and to avoid the infliction of unnecessary pain upon them, removes them from the car and places them in charge of a veterinary surgeon, such carrier is within his legal rights, and is not liable in conversion, although they die from their injuries or are refused by the consignee when delivered at destination, and although the shipper objects to their removal. Spokane Grain Co. v. Great Northern Exp. Co. 55 Wash. 545, 104 Pac. 794.

But where, in effecting a transfer en route, a horse was held in a switching yard and discovered there in a sick condition by the care taker at 11 A. M., and he immediately advised the carrier of the fact, paid the charges to that point, and demanded that the horse be unloaded and that the shipment cease, and, notwithstanding repeated requests, the car was not moved to the unloading platform until 7 in the evening, and in the meantime a storm came on so that the horse had to be unloaded and taken to the veterinary hospital in the midst of it, and later died, the evidence was held sufficient to warrant a verdict holding the carrier liable. Wente v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 79 Neb. 179, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 756, 115 N. W. 859, reversing on rehearing the opinion in 79 Neb. 175, 112 N. W. 300.

—starvation.

In a case where a shipment of cattle was delayed by flood, and they were suffering for food, it was held proper to leave to the jury the question whether it was not gross negligence in the carrier to omit to send for assistance, when such help could readily have been obtained, even though this might warrant a finding of negligence in not sending 43 miles for an engine. Bills v. New York C. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 5.

But where, in the exercise of due care and diligence, cattle were driven by the carrier from stock yards in order to escape a flood, and confined in overhead viaducts where they were compelled to remain for more than a week without food, and as a result many died and all were injured, it was held that, under the unusual conditions then existing, there was no liability on the part of the carrier for the loss, even for the starvation. Empire State Cattle Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 135 Fed. 135, affirmed in 77 C. C. A. 601, 147 Fed. 457, and again in 210 U. S. 1, 52 L. ed. 931, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 607, 15 Ann. Cas. 70.

—strangulation.

Where a horse died of strangulation by its halter while in transit, the court says it was for the jury to say whether prudence did not require that a servant of the carrier should have been stationed in or about the car so as to observe the conduct and condition of the animals constantly or at short intervals. Clarke v. Rochester & S. R. Co. 14 N. Y. 570, 67 Am. Dec. 205.

—disposal of carcass.

Finally, if by inevitable accident upon a railroad, animals are killed in transit, the carrier is under no duty to dress or prepare the animals for market immediately, nor to deliver the carcasses. Lee v. Marsh, 28 How. Pr. 275.

Inanimate freight—general doctrine.

Safe custody is as much the duty of the carrier as conveyance and delivery; and when he is unable to carry the goods forward to their place of destination from causes which he did not produce, and over which he has no control, he is still bound by the original obligation to take all possible care of the goods, and is responsible for every loss or injury which might have been prevented by human foresight, skill, and prudence. He is bound to the utmost exertions in his power to save the goods from impending peril. The Niagara v. Cordes, 21 How. 7, 16 L. ed. 41.

When goods in the hands of a carrier are placed in danger of flood, the degree of care to be exercised in order to save them from injury is not "all the diligence which human sagacity could suggest," but the carrier is bound to use, actively and energetically, "only such diligence as prudent, skilful men engaged in that kind of business might fairly be expected to use under like circumstances." Nashville & C. R. Co. v. David, 6 Heisk. 261, 19 Am. Rep. 594.

In the case of The Generous, 2 Dodson, Adm. 324, it was said that the carrier would be protected if, being in peril, he used all practical endeavors to surmount the difficulties which on fair trial he found unsurmountable or such as might reasonably be expected from a fair degree of discretion and an ordinary knowledge of business, and is not bound to use all the endeavors which the wit of man as it exists in actual understanding might suggest.

Whether everything was done which could have been done to save goods from loss in time of accident or disaster is a question for the jury to determine, and not a proper one for a witness to express his opinion upon. Montgomery & W. P. R. Co. v. Edmonds, 41 Ala. 667.

When a ship is stranded or wrecked, the duties of a carrier with regard to goods on board, and not perishing with the wreck, are not decreased but still continue, and the carrier is bound to show that no human diligence or skill or care could save the property from being lost as an indirect result of the stranding or shipwreck. Such duty does not end until the property is delivered at the port of destination, or returned to the possession of the owner, or kept safely until the owner can resume it, or until it is otherwise carefully disposed of. King v. Shepherd, 3 Story, 349, Fed. Cas. No. 7,804.

This note does not go into the question of the duty of a shipowner generally in cases of accident to the ship, to forward the goods in the ship or to deliver the goods at an intermediate point, and accept pro rata freight.

—abandonment.

Where a vessel went upon a reef, and the master left a box of gold coin unprotected and unguarded while wreckers employed by him were at work removing the freight, and the gold was stolen either by the crew or by the salvors, the shipowners were held liable for the loss. King v. Shepherd, supra.

Where a train was stopped by a flood, but the cars containing packages of whisky were left standing unharmed upon the track, and in daylight and in the presence of the crew, a band of ruffians broke open the car and appropriated a part of the whisky, the carrier in the meantime abandoning it to the crowd, and later, in order to prevent the rest of the whisky from being consumed by undesirable citizens, a self-constituted committee of townsmen destroyed it, the carrier was held liable. Lang v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 154 Pa. 342, 20 L.R.A. 360, 35 Am. St. Rep. 846, 26 Atl. 370.

Where a car containing benzine was thrown from the track by a broken axle, and the benzine was left lying where it fell, and two men happening along, in order to satisfy their curiosity as to whether it was oil or whisky, drew a match across it, whereupon their curiosity was immediately satisfied, the jury was instructed, among other things, that they should consider whether, after the cars were thrown from the track, the railway company used such further care, diligence, and caution as was, under the circumstances, necessary to protect the oil from being lost or destroyed. Lucisco Oil Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 2 Pittsb. 477.

—delay.

When a carrier is prevented by inevitable accident or by act of God from completing the transportation, he is bound, if possible, to transmit the goods promptly over another line. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Manning, 23 Neb. 552, 37 N. W. 462.

Where it was customary to ship perishable goods by train to a junction point, and from there to destination by boat, and the water carrier understood his duty, in case of delay of the boat, to be either to forward such goods by some other conveyance without delay, or to take such care of them as to prevent injury by the delay, and after receiving dressed poultry for shipment the boat was delayed before starting two days by fog, and the officials neglected all attempts to preserve the poultry, either by transferring it to the cars as they had done upon previous occasions, or by placing it in a part of the boat the least likely to be affected by the heat of the boiler, and the poultry was injured, the carrier was held liable, although the receipting officer did not actually know the contents of the boxes, and although the carrier's attention was not called to the danger. Peck v. Weeks, 34 Conn. 145.

But where a carrier of perishable goods is not responsible for carriage beyond its own line, only undertaking to forward the same as opportunity may afford, and the usual and contemplated method fails (e. g., by failure of the boat to run), if the carrier exercises due care and prudence in forwarding them by another route, it will not be liable for any loss on the ground of negligence in not giving notice of change of route to consignee, especially where such notice would not have avoided the loss. Regan v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 61 N. H. 579.

And where a train was delayed by the washing away of a bridge, and the railway company used all practicable despatch to transport the goods by wagon and boat to another line of railroad, and thence to deliver them to consignee, it was held that this was a resort to all the means which a prudent man would use to expedite the shipment, and was sufficient. Lipford v. Charlotte & S. C. R. Co. 7 Rich. L. 409.

A carrier is justified in selling perishable goods at once if the shipment is delayed by inevitable accident, and there is no other route by which they can be transported to destination in time to save them. American Exp. Co. v. Smith, 33 Ohio St. 511, 31 Am. Rep. 581.

As to liability of carrier for sale of perishable property when delayed in transportation, or for its destruction by strikes, see note to Empire Transp. Co. v. Philadelphia & R. Coal & I. Co. 35 L.R.A. 623.

—fire.

Where an express car containing a package of jewelry was overturned by a furious gale, and was almost immediately burned, and the jewelry was not rescued but lost, the court, although adhering to the rule that if, by proper diligence and attention, the goods could have been rescued, a failure to secure them would have fixed the liability upon the carrier, held that this case did not fall within the rule, for it was almost impossible for men to stand or walk in the gale, the air was full of flying material, the messenger escaped with difficulty, and any attempt to rescue the goods would have been unavailing. Blythe v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 15 Colo. 333, 11 L.R.A. 615, 22 Am. St. Rep. 403, 25 Pac. 702.

In a case of goods burned in transit, the court instructed the jury as follows: "If you should come to the conclusion that the fire was communicated to the cotton without any fault of the servants of the defendant, then you will consider whether, after the fire ignited the cotton, they did all that reasonable men could have done to prevent its entire destruction. After the cotton caught fire, they were bound to exert themselves, as fair and prudent men should, to save as much of the cotton as possible. If they did not put forth the necessary efforts to save the burning cotton, then the defendant is responsible for so much of the cotton as could have reasonably been saved." Woodward v. Illinois C. R. Co. 1 Biss. 407, Fed. Cas. No. 18,006.

The jury disagreeing, upon a retrial the court charged as follows: "If you shall find that the burning was not occasioned by the want of due care and diligence on the part of the defendant, then the next question is, Did the agents of the defendant make all proper and necessary efforts to save the property, and was any of it destroyed in consequence of the want of such efforts? If so, then the defendant ought to be held answerable for all that could have been so saved. . . . It was not, of course, necessary that they should incur actual danger to their persons by fire, but only that they should do all in their power to preserve the property, having reference to the rapidity of the fire and the means at their disposal." Woodward v. Illinois C. R. Co. 1 Biss. 449, Fed. Cas. No. 18,007.

—freezing.

When freight in transit is delayed by act of God, a carrier must use reasonable care to protect it from freezing or other injury, and he is not relieved by efforts of the owner to accomplish the same result. White v. Minneapolis & R. River R. Co. 111 Minn. 167, 126 N. W. 533.

But when a train is delayed in cold weather by a storm, and only a portion of the train can be taken on, in the absence of any stipulation in the bill of lading, the conductor is not bound to choose cars laden with perishable goods to be moved first, rather than others whose contents he does not know. He is bound to assume that it is important to each owner of freight that his property shall be carried through with all reasonable care and speed. Swetland v. Boston & A. R. Corp. 102 Mass. 276.

The duty of the carrier where an act of God has occurred or is threatened is treated in the note to Armstrong v. Illinois C. R. Co. 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 671.

—goods becoming wet.

Where a vessel was stranded and sank in 7 or 8 feet of water within 10 or 15 rods of the beach, and about half a mile from a settlement, and the master, after consultation, left the ship in that position with the hatches down from December to March, and then opened the hatches only at midships, and did not remove the goods until May, although he might have done so, he was held liable for the damage to the goods from the long period of confinement and from heat and discoloration; prompt attention would have saved the property and protected the shipper from loss. The Niagara v. Cordes, 21 How. 7, 16 L. ed. 41.

Where goods on board a ship were wet by a flood, and thereafter held boxed up in their wet condition from Monday until Friday, although the owner requested that they be turned over to him, it was held that the carrier should either have opened and dried them, or given the owner an opportunity to do so for himself. Pearce v. The Thomas Newton, 41 Fed. 106.

Where bales of cotton were thrown into the water by the sinking of a flatboat, and the crew immediately rescued them and placed them upon the bank of the river upon their edges and a little distance apart to dry, leaving them for several days, during which time it rained and saturated them, the court held that the carrier was negligent in leaving the cotton exposed to the weather and the almost daily rains common at that season of the year, but that he should have left a tarpaulin to cover the cotton during the rains, or provided other means of shelter. Blocker v. Whittenburg, 12 La. Ann. 410.

Where a flood partially submerged a carload of wheat, and it stood thus for ten days, it was held to be the duty of the carrier, if it could have been done by the use of reasonable care and diligence, after the flood had subsided, to save the wheat or as much as possible of it from ruin by removing it. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Keedy, 75 Md. 320, 23 Atl. 643.

Where a consignment of furs became wet through accident to the boat, it was held that the carrier was bound to use proper diligence and due care after the accident to preserve the goods from damage, and should have had them unpacked and dried. Chouteaux v. Leech, 18 Pa. 224, 57 Am. Dec. 602.

Where perishable goods are discharged from a ship upon the proper wharf in a rain, if the consignee, by reason of insufficient notice of their arrival, is unable to remove them in time to save them from damage, the carrier is charged with the duty of caring for them. McAndrew v. Whitlock, 52 N. Y. 40, 11 Am. Rep. 657.

A shipowner will be liable for the loss when, at an intermediate point in its course, its cargo is, without negligence on his part, saturated with sea water, and he does nothing to arrest the process of decomposition, and, refusing to deliver it to the owner at that place with a proportional abatement in the freight, carries it on to its appointed destination, and it is greatly deteriorated in value by reason of having remained so long in the saturated condition. Notara v. Henderson, L. R. 5 Q. B. 346.

But the court says: "It cannot be contended that, if a vessel happened to ship a heavy sea, and goods on board become wetted and liable to be damaged, but the ship still remained in a fit condition to prosecute the voyage, the master would be bound to put into the nearest port in order to tranship and dry the cargo. Nor would it be more reasonable to hold that, having been compelled to put into port to repair, he is bound, beyond doing all that he reasonably can do during his stay there to improve the condition of the damaged cargo and to mitigate the injury as far as possible, to wait till the cargo is fit to be carried on, though the voyage might be thereby unduly protracted." Ibid.

If, by inevitable accident, a cargo of coffee becomes wet, it is the duty of the carrier as bailee to use all means in his power to dry it, even to break open the barrels containing it. This was a case of shipment on the Mississippi river, decided in 1821, Bird v. Cromwell, 1 Mo. 81, 13 Am. Dec. 470.

But in The Lynx v. King, 12 Mo. 272, 49 Am. Dec. 135, decided in 1848, where wheat shipped upon the Mississippi river became wet by reason of a storm, it was held that the shipowner was not bound to dry the wheat, the court saying that if all the means that skill, science, and labor can bestow are to be required in drying several thousand bushels of wheat, the business of the carrier is lost sight of.

In referring to the case of Bird v. Cromwell, supra, the court says that "to impose upon him the burthen of repairing the effects of accidents for which he is not responsible is requiring of him a task he has never undertaken, and for which we may presume he has no special skill. . . . Is the master of the boat to withdraw his crew from their ordinary employments in the prosecution of the voyage, and to employ them in this onerous and tedious business, totally foreign to his general duty, and utterly destructive, it may be, of the interests of the owners, insurers, and other shippers? . . . The facts of the case may have authorized a verdict against the boat or her owners, but the instruction approved by the court in its unqualified sense was certainly imposing an extraordinary duty upon common carriers. . . . The navigation of the Mississippi by keels and barges in 1820 may have been attended with different duties from those devolving on the owners and officers of steamboats at the present day. When it required from six weeks to two months to make the voyage from New Orleans to St. Louis, the officers and the crew of the barge thus slowly impelled by human power, and having no intermediate points of trade, may have been subjected by the custom of the trade to a greater variety of duties than would now be held to devolve upon the class of navigators which have succeeded them." The Lynx v. King, supra.

Where a carload of goods delayed by a washout was injured by an overflow of the river, and the carrier used all reasonable diligence consistent with the personal safety of its men, after information of the overflow, to procure a boat in order to reach the goods, and the engineer could not get up steam because the fire box of the locomotive was flooded, it was held that all was done that could be done to save the goods, and that the carrier was exonerated from all liability. Smith v. Western R. Co. 91 Ala. 455, 11 L.R.A. 619, 24 Am. St. Rep. 929, 8 So. 754.

In case of damage to good on shipboard by water, the shipper will not be permitted to claim damage because of the failure of the master of the vessel to remove the cargo and have it dried, unless he has alleged that failure in his pleadings. Soule

v. Rodocanachi, 1 Newberry, Adm. 504, Fed. Cas. No. 13,178.

—miscellaneous.

A common carrier transporting a cask of brandy, upon being informed that the cask is leaking, is under a duty to have it examined and the leak stopped. Beck v. Evans, 16 East, 244, 3 Campb. 267, 14 Revised Rep. 340.

Where a carrier by canal agreed to let the goods remain upon the boat ninety days after arrival at destination without extra charge, and upon their arrival the consignee refused to receive them, it was held that the carrier from then on held the goods only as bailee, and was required to use only ordinary care in their protection, and was not liable for injury to them without fault on his part. Hathorn v. Ely, 28 N. Y. 78.

If the owner refuses to accept goods because they have been interfered with by strangers while in the possession of the carrier, the latter is not liable in conversion because it has the box opened for the purpose of ascertaining the character and condition of the contents, and if necessary taking steps to preserve them. Silverman v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 51 La. Ann. 1785, 26 So. 447.

No responsibility to stir grain to keep it from heating attaches to a carrier until it takes possession of the grain, although the carrier delays taking possession for reasons of its own after ordered so to do. Hamilton v. McPherson, 28 N. Y. 72, 84 Am. Dec. 330.

H. C. Sh.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

MYRTLE BREWER.

(147 Ky. 166, 143 S. W. 1014.)

Carrier — lunatic in car — injury to pregnant woman—liability.

A railroad company is not liable for in-

Note. — Liability of carrier for injury to pregnant woman by seeing lunatic on train.

An extended search discloses no case in addition to LOUISVILLE & N. R. Co. v. BREWER, in which the question stated in the title has been answered. The general principles applicable to such a state of facts are well settled, however, text writers and redacteurs generally agreeing that "it is the duty of the servants of the carrier to exercise great care and vigilance in preserving order and guarding passengers from violence or insult threatened by fellow passengers" (6 Cyc. 602), and that "whenever a carrier, through its agents or servants, knows or has opportunity to know of a threatened injury to a pregnant woman from sight of a lunatic in the car who was acting strangely, where its employees had no knowledge of her condition, and there was nothing in the conduct of the lunatic to appraise a person of ordinary prudence that danger to other passengers was to be anticipated.

(February 27, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Muhlenberg County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for injuries sustained by plaintiff through fright because of the presence of a lunatic upon defendant's train upon which plaintiff was riding. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Benjamin D. Warfield, with Messrs. Browder & Browder, for appellant:

It was the duty of the carrier to accept the insane girl properly attended, for transportation.

4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1577; Hutchinson, Carr. 3d ed. § 983; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McEwan, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 408, 31 S. W. 465.

No recovery can be had in any event for the alleged damage or injury to the unborn child.

4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 719; Harper v. Archer, 4 Smedes & M. 108, 43 Am. Dec. 472; Thellusson v. Woodford, 4 Ves. Jr. 227, 4 Revised Rep. 205, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 498; Walker v. Great Northern R. Co. Ir. L. R. 28 C. L. 69.

Mr. R. Y. Thomas, Jr., for appellee.

Hobson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On May 24, 1908, Mrs. Myrtie Brewer, with five children, the oldest of whom was about ten years old, was a passenger on a train of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, from Cleaton to Drakesboro. When she got off the train at Drakesboro she was white, nervous, and weak. She jury, . . . and fails or neglects to take the proper precautions or to use proper means to prevent or mitigate such injury, the carrier is liable" (5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 553), but that the carrier is not liable where it had no reason to apprehend that danger existed.

For a clear statement of the general reasoning upon which the carrier's liability is based in case of injury of one passenger by a fellow passenger, see the quotation in LOUISVILLE & N. R. Co. v. BREWER, from 2 Hutchinson on Carriers, § 980.

As to duty of carrier to accept insane persons as passengers, see note to Connors v. Cunard S. S. Co. 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 171.

G. J. C.

went to bed on going home and remained in bed about two weeks. Ninety days afterwards she was confined, and continued to have weak spells after her confinement. She brought this suit against the railroad company for the injury to her health, which she charged was due to her being frightened by a lunatic on the train. On the trial of the case she recovered $500. The railroad company appeals.

The distance from Cleaton to Drakesboro is 4 miles. The running time of the train between the two points is thirteen minutes. When Mrs. Brewer got on the train, a lunatic girl in charge of a lady attendant was sitting about the middle of the coach, facing the door at which Mrs. Brewer entered. Mrs. Brewer took a seat near the front of the coach, facing the lunatic, and rode backwards to Drakesboro; her children being about her. She makes this statement as to the lunatic: "She was talking and laughing, and when the train started she screamed and hallooed like she was in distress. She screamed and hallooed very loud. She would scream and say: 'Take him away. Don't let him to me.' And she would laugh and talk and whistle and then scream again." Another witness, who was introduced for the plaintiff, makes this statement as to the lunatic: "When I first saw her she was sitting by the window, singing and whistling, and then she seemed to be weeping or moaning for someone. It seems she thought someone was coming to her, and she hallooed to them to take him away." Another witness for plaintiff makes this statement as to the lunatic: "She was talking and whistling and kind of giggling, and then she would rail out and say she was George R. Garrett's daughter, or something to that effect. She was talking loud. She really didn't scream any during that time." The lunatic at no time left her seat. She was at all times in charge of her attendant, who was on the seat by her. She at no time was nearer Mrs. Brewer than when Mrs. Brewer took her seat in the car, probably about one fourth of the car away from her. She did not address Mrs. Brewer at any time, or make any effort to hurt her or anyone else. The lunatic was at no time dangerous, boisterous, or disorderly. Mrs. Brewer sat facing the girl, and the trouble that ensued with her seems to have been due to her being pregnant, and to the fact that thus the unnatural appearance and doings of the lunatic made a deep impression upon her mind, as often happens in the case of pregnant women. Mrs. Brewer made no complaint to the conductor or to any officer of the train. None of them knew that Mrs. Brewer was pregnant, or that the lunatic was giving her any inconvenience.

In 2 Hutchinson on Carriers, § 980, discussing the liability of a carrier to a passenger on account of the conduct of other passengers on the cars, the learned author says: "The negligence for which the carrier is held liable is not the wrong of the fellow passenger or the stranger, but it is the negligent omission of the carrier's servants to prevent the wrong from being committed. In order that such omission may constitute negligence, there is involved the essential element that the carrier or his servants had knowledge, or with proper care could have had knowledge, that the wrong was imminent, and that he had such knowledge, or the opportunity to acquire it, sufficiently long in advance of the infliction of the wrong upon the passenger to have prevented it with the force at his command."

The rule thus stated has often been applied by the courts in cases where fellow passengers were obscene, drunk, disorderly, or of unsound mind; but we have found no case where the carrier has been held liable where the conduct of the passenger was not sufficient to apprise a person of ordinary prudence that danger was to be anticipated. And while peculiar care is due to persons who are sick or infirm, only the care required in the case of persons in ordinary health is demanded of the carrier, where he is not informed of the infirmity of the passenger, and has no reason to apprehend the danger to him. 6 Cyc. 598, 603; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Evans, 71 Tex. 361, 1 L.R.A. 476, 9 S. W. 325; Spohn v. Missouri P. R. Co. 87 Mo. 74; Tall v. Baltimore Steam Packet Co. 90 Md. 248, 47 L.R.A. 120, 44 Atl. 1007; Fritz v. Southern R. Co. 132 N. C. 829, 44 S. E. 613; Felton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 69 Iowa, 577, 29 N. W. 618; Franklin v. Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co. 74 S. C. 332, 54 S. E. 578; Norris v. Southern R. Co. 84 S. C. 15, 65 S. E. 956. Our own opinions are to the same effect. In Illinois C. R. Co. v. Cruise, 123 Ky. 463, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 299, 96 S. W. 821, 13 Ann. Cas. 593, a passenger complained because she was not helped to leave the car at the station. It was held that, as she did not ask assistance, and the company had no notice of her infirmity, she could not recover; the steps and platform being so reasonably lighted that the ordinary traveler could alight from the train in safety. The same rule was laid down in Adams v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 134 Ky. 620, 135 Am. St. Rep.

425, 121 S. W. 419, 21 Ann. Cas. 321, where a passenger was injured by the fall of a valise from the rack overhead; it being held, however, in that case, that the facts were sufficient to apprise a person of ordinary prudence of the danger to the passenger.

A carrier cannot absolutely refuse transportation to insane persons. These people must be carried to the asylums, and they can only be carried on the trains. Justice to them as well as humanity requires that they should be admitted to the trains, unless their presence will endanger others, and, as has been well said, in the case of these unfortunates, who are at best involuntary passengers, and not responsible for their conduct, more allowance must be made than in the case of ordinary passengers. There was nothing in the conduct of this poor girl that would have justified the railroad company in refusing to admit her to the train, or that would have justified the railroad company in expelling her from the train at a station along its road, after she had been admitted to the train. The company had a right to require that she be in charge of an attendant, and it was its duty to see that she did not hurt anybody. But she was not a violent lunatic. There was no danger of physical hurt to the other passengers. It is said the child born afterwards to Mrs. Brewer acts like the lunatic, but the effect on Mrs. Brewer was simply an accident, due, perhaps, more than to any other cause, to the fact that she sat facing the lunatic, and so the lunatic's image became impressed upon her mind.

In Owens v. Macon & B. R. Co. 119 Ga. 230, 63 L.R.A. 946, 46 S. E. 87, the lunatic was dangerous and violent, and it was held that the company had sufficient reason for not taking him on the train. In Meyer v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 4 C. C. A. 221, 10 U. S. App. 677, 54 Fed. 116, the lunatic on the train killed a fellow passenger, but it was held that the company was not responsible, because it had no reason to apprehend danger from him until he suddenly became insane. We do not see that there is anything in either of these cases not in keeping with the general current of authority.

We therefore conclude that there was no negligence on the part of the defendant, and that the court should have sustained its motion for a peremptory instruction to the jury to find for it for the reasons stated. This conclusion makes it unnecessary for us to consider the other questions raised.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

CITY OF PASS CHRISTIAN, Appt.,

v.

ERNEST FERNANDEZ, by Next Friend.

(— Miss. —, 56 So. 329.)

Negligence — infant.

1. A four-year-old child is incapable of contributory negligence which will prevent its recovery for injury to it by a vehicle while it is playing in the street.

Municipal corporation—removing trash — governmental function.

2. The driver of a city cart engaged in removing trash or dirt for the city is not engaged in a governmental duty which will relieve the municipality from liability for injuries inflicted by his negligence in managing the outfit.

(October 23, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Harrison County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hardy & Hardy for appellant.

Messrs. McDonald & Marshall for appellee.

Mayes, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Ernest Fernandez, a child four years old, while playfully chasing a hoop in the street of the city of Pass Christian, was run over by a city cart and had his leg broken. Through his next friend, he sued the city for damages, and recovered judgment for $1,000, from which judgment the city prosecutes an appeal.

The facts show that, when the child was struck by the cart, the driver was conversing with two women, and had his head turned in a different direction from that in

Note. — Liability of municipality for injury by employee engaged in removing refuse.

This note is supplemental to the note to Haley v. Boston, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1006.

As indicated in the earlier note, there is a conflict in the cases on this question, owing to the difference of opinion as to whether the removal of refuse by a city is a governmental function within the rule that a municipality is not liable for the negligence of its officers and servants while engaged in the performance of governmental duties.

The case of PASS CHRISTIAN v. FERNANDEZ is in accord with the opinions of the higher courts of New York, as set out in the earlier note, to the effect that the re-which the child was approaching. The driver disputes this; but the verdict of the jury fixes the facts this way.

As appears above, the child was only four years of age, and therefore incapable of contributory negligence. The only real defense is that, at the time of the injury, the cart and driver were engaged in a governmental duty, and on account of this no liability attaches on the part of the city. The case of Alexander v. Vicksburg, 68 Miss. 564, 10 So. 62, is cited as conclusive of this contention. We shall show that the above case is not in point further on.

It may be true, as an abstract proposition of law, that damage occasioned by the city in the exercise of a purely governmental duty does not render the city liable; but it must be a governmental duty, and the idea that a driver of a city cart engaged in hauling trash and dirt for the city is engaged in a "governmental function," in any sense in which the word is used in the law, requires a stretch of the imagination that is beyond our power to make. It is a matter of no little difficulty to define what are and what are not purely governmental duties of a city. To a very large extent, these questions can only be settled by the facts of each particular case, so variant are the conditions under which this question arises.

The public or governmental duties of a city are those given by the state to the city as a part of the state's sovereignty, to be exercised by the city for the benefit of the whole public, living both in and out of the corporate limits. All else is private or corporate duty, and for any negligence on the part of the agents or employees of the municipality in the discharge of any of the private duties of the city, the city is liable for all damage just as an individual would be. The use of the cart in hauling dirt or trash for the city is for no governmental purpose, as connected in any way with the sovereign duty of the state. The state does owe the duty to all its citizens of protecting the person from assault and the property from destruction, and all done by the city in furtherance of this duty of the state is done in a governmental capacity. But the hauling of dirt and trash is for the removal of refuse is not a governmental duty of a municipality, and that the municipality is accordingly liable for injuries negligently inflicted by one of its employees engaged in such removal.

In the later case of Silverman v. New York, 114 N. Y. Supp. 59, the city does not seem to have contested liability upon the ground that the negligent workman was engaged in a governmental duty of the city, but on the ground that for other reasons he was not its servant; and it was merely held that where a city foreman in charge of the work of keeping one of the city parks in proper condition has selected the driver of a wagon employed in the removal of rubbish, has power to remove and discharge him from the work, and directs him in the work to be done, and as to how and in what manner it is to be done, the driver is a servant of the city, for whose negligence in driving his wagon over the foot of a person seated upon a public bench in the park, the city is bound to respond in damages, although the driver is in the general employ of a private individual who pays his wages and supplies the wagon, team, and driver to the city foreman, and is, in turn, paid for the use of the team and the driver's services by the city.

In Young v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 126 Mo. App. 1, 103 S. W. 135, where, owing to the negligence of a municipal employee engaged in carting away piles of dirt and rubbish which had been gathered along a street, his cart and mule were struck by a street car and thrown against a pedestrian to his injury, the municipality was held liable for the injury, on the ground that it was not acting, through its employee, in a governmental capacity for the general public good, although the work in which he was 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) engaged might incidentally be conducive to the public health, or might, in some remote degree, be referable to governmental regulation,—but that the servant was engaged only in removing piles of dirt which, if left remaining, would have rendered the municipality liable, if damage had been caused by them.

On the other hand, in Louisville v. Carter, 142 Ky. 443, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 637, 134 S. W. 468, the municipality was held not liable for an injury to a pedestrian caused by his being run over by a wagon used for the purpose of removing refuse from the streets, by reason of its being hitched to a sprinkling cart for removal from one part of the city to another, although there may have been a safer or better way of moving it,—as the wagon was employed in a use that was for the general public good, and the function which the municipality exercised in its use was a governmental function, and the municipality was not required to use the safest or best or any particular means in conducting its governmental business.

And in Johnson v. Somerville, 195 Mass. 370, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 715, 81 N. E. 268, it was held that a municipality is not liable for the flooding of a cellar caused by the dumping of ashes into a water course on the next lot, by one of its employees engaged in removing ashes from private residences, as he was not, in legal contemplation, a servant of the municipality, but was in the performance of a public service from which the municipality derived no private benefit.

As to the liability of a municipality for injuries from its use of a dumping ground, see note to Denver v. Davis, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1013.

A. C. W.

use and advantage of the city in its corporate capacity, is a corporate duty, and the city is liable for all damage done by any officer or agent so employed.

The case on trial is different from the case of Alexander v. Vicksburg, supra. In the Alexander Case the injury was inflicted by the fire department on its way to extinguish a fire in the city of Vicksburg. The fire company was under the control and management of the city, and this court held that in such case the city was not liable. It might be well argued that, when a city undertakes to protect the property of a citizen from destruction by fire, it is acting in a governmental capacity and for the universal good, even though the state does not so undertake to do, and for this reason should be protected from liability in damages while so engaged; but this argument cannot be made as to a trash or garbage cart, used in the furtherance of purely corporate purposes.

Affirmed.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

J. W. CARMICHAEL, Appt.,
v.

SOUTHERN BELL TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

(157 N. C. 21, 72 S. E. 619.)

Damages — wrongful removal of telephone.

1. The damages recoverable by a subscriber whose telephone is wrongfully removed after he has paid the rental are not limited, even in an action for breach of contract, to the amount of rent wrongfully exacted, but may include compensation for the inconvenience to which he is put by breach of the contract.

Same — tort — items.

2. The damages to be awarded for wrong-

Note. — Measure of damages for removal of telephone.

The measure of damages for wrongfully disconnecting a telephone because of mistake as to payment of rent is the amount which will compensate the patron for the injuries caused by the breach of contract. Cumberland Teleph. & Telegr. Co. v. Hendon, 114 Ky. 501, 60 L.R.A. 849, 102 Am. St. Rep. 290, 71 S. W. 435.

The damages to be awarded for wrongful removal and refusal to reinstall a subscriber's telephone may include compensation for the pecuniary loss, and also for inconvenience and annoyance occasioned by being without the use of the telephone, since the damage sustained by the loss of a telephone in its very nature is largely composed of ful removal by a telephone company of a subscriber's phone may include compensation for the necessary inconvenience and humiliation fairly attributable to the wrong done, and an allowance may be made for anxiety increased by loss of telephone communication with a relative sick in the hospital, of which fact the telephone company has notice.

Same — punitive — wilfulness — disregard of rights.

3. The malicious or wilful removal of a subscriber's telephone in wanton or reckless disregard of his rights may carry punitive damages.

Evidence — wilfulness — explanation of agent.

4. Upon the question of wilfulness in removing a telephone for nonpayment of rent, although the subscriber claimed that he had paid it and had a receipt, evidence is to be considered both that the phone was removed notwithstanding this claim, and that he had been in arrears before, and that the collecting agent had informed the company that only part of the amount due had been paid.

(November 15, 1911.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for New Hanover County granting him insufficient relief in an action brought to recover damages for wrongfully removing a telephone from premises. Reversed.

Statement by Hoke, J.:

Civil action to recover damages for wrongfully removing a telephone from plaintiff's premises, tried before his Honor, R. B. Peebles, judge, and a jury, at April term, 1911, of the superior court of New Hanover county. There was evidence tending to show that the telephone charges due from plaintiff were at the rate of $4.50 per quarter, payable in advance, beginning January 1st. The plaintiff, on the 3d of June, 1908, paid defendant the $4.50 for the inconvenience and annoyance. Cumberland Telegr. & Teleph. Co. v. Hobart, 89 Miss. 252, 119 Am. St. Rep. 702, 42 So. 349.

And a recovery may be had for prospective profits. Owensboro Harrison Teleph. Co. v. Wisdom, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 97, 62 S. W. 529.

Accordingly, the wrongful removal of a telephone after several months' service, when it had been installed under a contract to furnish telephone service for a period of three years, will entitle the patron to recover prospective profits for the whole contract period; a verdict of $300 was said to be warranted by the evidence, where it appeared plaintiff was engaged in the messenger business which was shown to be a growing business. Ibid.

In the absence of proof of special loss be-quarter beginning April 1st, and took a receipt for same. That in the latter part of June plaintiff was notified there was a balance against him of $3 for said quarter, and, unless same was paid, the telephone would be removed. Plaintiff protested, and informed the agents of defendant company that he had paid the dues, and could produce a receipt. Plaintiff failed to find the receipt readily, as he had given it to his wife, who was temporarily from home in daily attendance on her father, who had been operated upon, and was in the hospital; and thereupon, in afternoon of June 27, 1908, defendant company, while plaintiff was absent, disconnected the phone, and deprived plaintiff and his family of its use from Saturday night until Monday morning, June 29th. That on Monday morning, June 29th, plaintiff went to the offices of the company, paid the $3 claimed under protest, and the service was thereupon restored. That in July following the plaintiff found the receipt for the $4.50, the entire price for the quarter, and on failure to adjust matters action was instituted. On the question of damages, plaintiff testified, among other things, that the telephone was used for the purpose of calling up physicians, hospitals, druggists, doing the marketing, grocery business, and other general household uses, and proposed further to show that at this particular time, plaintiff suffered special inconvenience and annoyance by reason of the fact that his father-in-law had been operated on, and was then at the hospital in a dangerous condition, and plaintiff was unable to communicate with the hospital concerning him, or with his family, which was then at the beach some distance away. There was evidence from which knowledge of these special conditions on the part of the company might be inferred. The proposed evidence, was excluded, and plaintiff excepted. There was testimony on the part of defendant to the effect that plaintiff was not prompt in payment of his telephone dues, and that on two or three occasions before this it had been necessary to disconnect his telephone for nonpayment of dues. That while plaintiff produced a receipt for the $4.50, the dues for the quarter ending June 30, 1908, as a matter of fact, he had only paid $1.50, and it was so reported to the company by the collecting agent. That the receipt for $4.50 was signed by mistake to a printed form, in which the amount was so stated; the agent failing to change this to $1.50, the amount actually paid; and that the books of the company showed the amount due to be $3, and that in fact such amount was due for said quarter. That defendant had no malicious or improper motive in disconnecting the telephone, or in collecting the $3, but acted on the honest belief it was enforcing its rights in the premises.

His Honor ruled that plaintiff could not in any event recover damages in excess of $3, the amount of overcharge as claimed by cause of the disconnection, the compensatory damages to be awarded are the amount paid for the service for the time during which it was refused. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Hendon, supra.

It has been held that it is possible for a finding of 30 cents to include both nominal and general damages for the wrongful removal of a telephone, where no special damage is shown; it appearing that the order for removal was due to a misunderstanding that plaintiff desired his telephone removed; and that he did not discover its absence until the next morning, when it was immediately reinstalled. Jenkins v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 7 Ga. App. 484, 67 S. E. 124.

Removing the telephone from the plaintiff's residence because of his refusal to pay the full rental on the claim of poor service, and requiring him to go to the central office and pay tolls in advance for long-distance service, do not subject the company to liability for exemplary damages, in the absence of evidence that it acted from wanton, oppressive, and malicious motives. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Baker, 85 Miss. 486, 37 So. 1012.

That a telephone company has not the means to supply service to one applying for it may be shown in mitigation of damages for refusal to comply with its duty in that regard, but not in justification thereof. Gwynn v. Citizens' Teleph. Co. 69 S. C. 434, 67 L.R.A. 111, 104 Am. St. Rep. 819, 48 S. E. 460.

So belief in the existence of a legal right to refuse telephone service to one applying for it, although erroneous, and refusal to furnish service for the purpose of protecting the rights of the telephone company, will prevent the imposition of punitive damages for such act. Ibid.

Right to refuse telephone service to coerce payment of bill, see note to Danaher v. Southwestern Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1027.

As to the right of withdrawing telephone service because of the abuse of the privilege by subscribers, see note to Huffman v. Marcy Mut. Teleph. Co. 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1010.

On the liability of telephone company for failure to make connections for subscriber, see notes to Lebanon, L. & L. Teleph. Co. v. Lanham Lumber Co. 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 115, and Volquardsen v. Iowa Teleph. Co. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 554.

Right of addressee to recover damages for failure to summon him to receive a long-distance telephone message, see note to McLeod v. Pacific States Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 810. A. L. R.

plaintiff, and under such ruling the following verdict was rendered:

"(1) Did the defendant unlawfully cut out plaintiff's telephone, as alleged in the complaint? Answer. Yes.

"(2) If so, what damage is plaintiff entitled to recover therefor? Answer. Three dollars, and interest to date from June 29, 1908."

Judgment on the verdict for $3, with interest, and plaintiff excepted and appealed, assigning errors.

Messrs. Rountree & Carr, for appellant:

Plaintiff is entitled to recover such reasonable sum as the jury may think just and fair as compensation for the inconvenience, annoyance, and humiliation of being without a telephone.

Williams v. Carolina & W. R. Co. 144 N. C. 498, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 191, 57 S. E. 216, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1000; Cumberland Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Hobart, 89 Miss. 252, 119 Am. St. Rep. 702, 42 So. 349; The Mediana [1900] A. C. 113, 69 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 35, 48 Week. Rep. 398, 82 L. T. N. S. 95, 16 Times L. R. 194, 9 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 41; Harvey v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 153 N. C. 567, 69 S. E. 627; Ives v. Humphreys, 1 E. D. Smith, 201; Hewlett v. George, 68 Miss. 703, 13 L.R.A. 684, 9 So. 885; Cumberland Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Hobart, 89 Miss. 252, 119 Am. St. Rep. 702, 42 So. 349.

Plaintiff was entitled to punitive damages.

Jackson v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 139 N. C. 356, 70 L.R.A. 738, 51 S. E. 1015; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 106, 107, 37 L. ed. 97, 101, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 261; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489, 23 L. ed. 374; Hansley v. Janesville & W. R. Co. 117 N. C. 565, 32 L.R.A. 551, 53 Am. St. Rep. 600, 23 S. E. 443; Barry v. Edmunds, 116 U. S. 550, 29 L. ed. 729, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 501; Emblen v. Myers, 6 Hurlst. & N. 54, 30 L. J. Exch. N. S. 71, 2 L. T. N. S. 774, 8 Week. Rep. 665, 8 Eng. Rul. Cas. 304; Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 58, 41 L. ed. 632, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 265; Remington v. Kirby, 120 N. C. 320, 26 S. E. 917; 1 Sedgw. Damages, 53; 13 Cyc. 106; Purcell v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 108 N. C. 414, 12 L.R.A. 113, 12 S. E. 954, 956; Stewart v. Cary Lumber Co. 146 N. C. 69, 59 S. E. 545; Kentucky Heating Co. v. Hood, 133 Ky. 383, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 588, 134 Am. St. Rep. 457, 118 S. W. 337; Owen v. Western U. Teleg. Co. — S. C. —, 71 S. E. 782; 3 Sutherland, Damages, §§ 935, 937; Hansley v. Janesville & W. R. Co. 117 N. C. 569, 32 L.R.A. 551, 53 Am. St. Rep. 600, 23 S. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

E. 443; Brown v. Asheville Electric Co. 138 N. C. 533, 69 L.R.A. 631, 107 Am. St. Rep. 554, 51 S. E. 62; Duncan v. Stalcup, 18 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. L.) 440.

Messrs. H. E. Palmer, B. J. Clay, and J. D. Bellamy for appellee.

Hoke, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

An impression not infrequently exists, and is sometimes acted on, that in the larger number of ordinary causes compensatory damages should be confined to actual pecuniary loss, and that any recovery above actual loss in money or time, having definite pecuniary value, partakes of the nature of punitive damages. Speaking to this question in a concurring opinion in Ammons v. Southern R. Co. 140 N. C. 199, 52 S. E. 733, it was said: "The court below and the parties litigant seem to have considered that the seventh issue on actual damages was confined to pecuniary loss, and that any recovery over and above this must be had, if at all, on the eighth issue, above set out. But this is not at all true. 'Actual,' in the sense of compensatory damages, is not restricted necessarily to the actual loss in time or money. The claimant may be confined to this, if the jury so determine; but more than this is contained in the term, and more than this is covered by the issue. As was said by Clark, Ch. J., in Osborn v. Leach, 135 N. C. 628, 66 L.R.A. 648, 47 S. E. 811: Where the facts and nature of the action so warrant, 'actual damages include pecuniary loss, physical pain, and mental suffering,' etc. And again: 'Compensatory damages include all other damages than punitive, thus embracing not only special damage as direct pecuniary loss, but injury to feelings, mental anguish,' etc.,—citing 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1082; Hale, Damages, pp. 99, 106. And this last author says: 'It may be stated as a general rule, in actions of tort, that whenever a wrong is committed which will support an action to recover some damages, compensation for mental suffering may also be recovered, if such suffering follows as a natural and proximate result.' And so here, where a passenger is wrongfully ejected from a railroad train, the demand may be considered as one in tort, and, on an issue as to actual or compensatory damages, he may recover what the jury may decide to be a fair and just compensation for the injury, including his actual loss in time or money, physical inconvenience, and mental suffering, or humiliation endured, and which could be considered as a reasonable and probable result of the wrong done. McNeill v. Durham & C. R. Co. 135 N. C. 683, 67 L.R.A. 230, 47 S. E. 765; Head v.

Georgia P. R. Co. 79 Ga. 358, 11 Am. St. Rep. 434, 7 S. E. 217; Hale, Damages, supra, § 261. As said by Bleckley, J., in Head's Case: 'Wounding a man's feelings is as much actual damages as breaking his limb. The difference is that one is internal and the other external; one mental, the other physical. At common law, compensatory damages include, upon principle, and, I think, upon authority, salve for wounded feelings, and our Code had no purpose to deny such damages where the common law allowed them.' And on the subject of punitive damages it was further said: Exemplary or punitive damages are not given with a view to compensation, but are under certain circumstances awarded in addition to compensation, as a punishment to defendant, and as a warning to other wrongdoers. They are not allowed as a matter of course, but only where there are some features of aggravation, as when the wrong is done wilfully and maliciously, or under circumstances of rudeness or oppression, or in a manner which evinces a reckless and wanton disregard of plaintiff's rights." In the view of compensatory damages suggested with approval in this citation, there was error in the ruling which limited plaintiff's recovery, in any aspect of the case, to the $3, the amount of money wrongfully collected by defendant, whether the action should be considered as one for a breach of contract or for a tort.

It is true that recovery for breach of contract is confined to such damages as were in the reasonable contemplation of the parties at the time same was made, and which are susceptible of ascertainment with a reasonable degree of certainty, and that ordinarily this damage is limited to pecuniary recompense for the loss sustained by the injured party; but this will be found to have its origin and basis in the fact that the vast majority of contracts concern themselves with pecuniary values, and have the pecuniary standard for adjustment alone in contemplation; but, where an agreement clearly has reference to a different standard, damages in case of breach must be awarded according to the standard which the parties have adopted. This is the principle upon which recoveries for mental anguish in a certain class of telegraph cases, and when treated simply as actions for breach of contract, are properly made to rest, as shown in the well-considered opinion by our present chief justice, in Young v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 N. C. 370, 9 L.R.A. 669, 22 Am. St. Rep. 883, 11 S. E. 1044, a decision since followed and applied by the court in numerous cases; and so in contracts for telephone service for household purposes, pecuniary values are not ordinarily in contemplation, and on breach, even when the action is simply for breach of contract, a different standard of adjustment must necessarily or may properly be adopted, to wit, a fair compensation for the loss and for the inconvenience and annoyance in being wrongfully deprived of the service stipulated for. Cumberland Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Hobart, 89 Miss. 252, 119 Am. St. Rep. 702, 42 So. 349; Hale, Damages, p. 102.

On the allegations of the complaint, however, and the facts in evidence, the plaintiff is not confined to a recovery for breach of contract. It appears that defendant is a public service corporation, operating under a public franchise, and for breach of duty in rendering the service it has undertaken to perform, one having contract relations with such company, and suffering special injury by reason of such breach, is entitled to sue in tort, and, in case of recovery, have his damages admeasured as in that character of action. This was held in Virginia-Carolina Peanut Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 155 N. C. 148, 71 S. E. 71, citing several other decisions to like effect, and see in that case more especially the concurring opinion of Associate Justice Allen, as to the obligation of diligence imposed by the law upon corporations of this kind, and the character of action available in case of breach causing special damages to persons having contract relations with such companies. Plaintiff, then, having a right to sue in tort, if his cause of action is established, is entitled to recover a compensation for the annoyance and inconvenience and humiliation fairly attributable to the wrong done, and under facts as they existed at the time the same was committed. Virginia-Carolina Peanut Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. supra.

And in this view the annoyance and inconvenience naturally arising from the fact that plaintiff's father-in-law was at the time in the hospital, and supposed to be in a dangerous condition, if this circumstance was known to the company or its managing officers,—not, of course, the suffering and anxiety caused by the father-in-law's placing and condition, but the annoyance and anxiety occasioned by the loss of the telephone service at such time,—in considering any damages imputable to this source, the obligation on plaintiff to do what he could reasonably do to lessen his anxiety is also a proper subject for consideration. Bowen v. King, 146 N. C. 385, 59 S. E. 1044; Pittsburg, J. E. & E. R. Co. v. Wakefield Hardware Co. 143 N. C. 54, 55 S. E. 422.

On the question of punitive or exemplary damages, recurring again to the doctrine as stated in the Ammons Case, supra, if the jury should find that the wrong complained of was committed, and that the same was done maliciously, or under such circumstance of wilfulness on part of defendant as to show a wanton or reckless disregard of plaintiff's rights, they may, in addition to compensatory damages, award such additional damages by way of punishment as they may deem right and proper. In this aspect of the matter, the principles and authorities applicable are more fully discussed and referred to in the case of Williams v. Carolina & W. R. Co. 144 N. C. 502, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 191, 57 S. E. 216, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1000.

On this question of allowing exemplary damages, as well as the amount, in case the jury should determine to award the same, the fact that plaintiff informed defendant of the payment of the amount due, and that defendant still insisted there was no such payment, and further the fact that plaintiff had several times before made default in payment of his dues, and that this collecting agent had informed the managing officers of the company there was a balance still due, and that the books of the company showed this to be correct, are circumstances relevant to the inquiry.

For the error indicated, plaintiff is entitled to a new trial of this cause, and it is so ordered.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF DURANT, Plff. in Err.,
v.
SCHOOL DISTRICT NUMBER 4, BRYAN
COUNTY.

(— Okla. —, 120 Pac. 614.)

Check — liability on.

1. Checks are but inland bills of exchange, and subject to all the rules applicable to instruments of that character, and impose no obligation upon the drawees until accepted; and, until presented and paid, are revocable by the drawer, who has the legal control of the money to his credit until actual acceptance or payment of the checks.

Headnotes by KANE, J.

Note. — Action by drawee essential to terminate drawer's right to stop payment of check.

This note, assuming the general rule as to the right of the drawer, as against the drawee bank, to stop payment of a check at any time before the bank has paid the check or done anything to commit itself in 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Draft — assignment of fund — acceptance.

2. A draft drawn in the ordinary form does not constitute an equitable assignment pro tanto of funds in the hands of the drawee to the credit of the drawer before such draft has been accepted or presented for payment.

(January 9, 1912.)

ERROR to the County Court for Bryan County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover a deposit made by plaintiff in the defendant bank. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Utterback & Hayes for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. J. T. McIntosh and C. B. Cochran, for defendant in error:

No acceptance by the bank of said check or order is shown.

Auerbach v. Princhett, 58 Ala. 451; Moeser v. Schneider, 158 Pa. 412, 27 Atl. 1088; Pfaff v. Cummings, 67 Mich. 143, 34 N. W. 281; Shutt Improv. Co. v. Erwin, 66 Kan. 261, 71 Pac. 521; Lynch v. First Nat. Bank, 107 N. Y. 179, 1 Am. St. Rep. 803, 13 N. E. 775; Hall v. Flanders, 83 Me. 243, 22 Atl. 158; Ætna Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 82, 7 Am. Rep. 314; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. James, 78 Ark. 490, 95 S. W. 804, 8 Ann. Cas. 611; Matteson v. Moulson, 11 Hun, 268, 79 N. Y. 627; Dickinson v. Marsh, 57 Mo. App. 566; Sands v. Matthews, 27 Ala. 401; Dunavan v. Flynn, 118 Mass. 537; McEowen v. Scott, 49 Vt. 376; Overman v. Hoboken City Bank, 31 N. J. L. 564; Colorado Nat. Bank v. Boettcher, 5 Colo. 190, 40 Am. Rep. 142, 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 220; Rousch v. Duff, 35 Mo. 312; Hall v. Steel, 68 Ill. 231; Holbrook v. Payne, 141 Mass. 383, 21 Am. St. Rep. 456, 24 N. E. 210; McPherson v. Walton, 42 N. J. Eq. 282, 11 Atl. 21; Short v. Blount, 99 N. C. 49, 5 S. E. 190; Guthrie Nat. Bank v. Gill, 6 Okla. 560, 54 Pac. 434; Koch v. Howell, 6 Watts & S. 350; Pickle v. Muse (Pickle v. People's Nat. Bank) 88 Tenn. 380, 7 L.R.A. 93, 17 Am. St. Rep. 900, 12 S. W. 919; Bank of Rutland v. Woodruff, 34 Vt. 89; Hough v. Loring, 24 Pick. 254; Briggs v. Sizer, 30 N. Y. 647.

Checks are but inland bills of exchange any way to its payment (see note to Canterbury v. Bank of Sparta, 30 L.R.A. 845), considers only the question as to what action by the drawee, other than actual payment or certification of the check, will terminate the drawer's right, as against the drawee, to stop payment thereof. As to the right of the drawer to stop payment of a certified check, see note to Blake v. Hamil- and subject to all the rules applicable to instruments of that character, and impose no obligation upon the drawees until accepted; and, until presented and paid, are revocable by the drawer, who has the legal control of the money to his credit until actual acceptance or payment of the checks.

Etna Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 82, 7 Am. Rep. 314; National Bank v. Millard, 10 Wall. 156, 157, 19 L. ed. 899, 900; First Nat. Bank v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 344, 24 L. ed. 230; Bull v. First Nat. Bank, 123 U. S. 111, 31 L. ed. 100, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 62; Pullen v. Placer County Bank, 138 Cal. 169, 94 Am. St. Rep. 19, 66 Pac. 740, 71 Pac. 84; Florence Min. Co. v. Brown, 124 U. S. 385, 31 L. ed. 424, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 531; Colorado Nat. Bank v. Boettcher, 4 Colo. 185, 40 Am. Rep. 142; Harrison v. Wright, 100 Ind. 515, 58 Am. Rep. 805; Carr v. National Secur. Bank, 107 Mass. 45, 9 Am. Rep. 6; Van Buskirk v. State Bank, 35 Colo. 142, 117 Am. St. Rep. 182, 83 Pac. 778; Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Metropolitan Nat. Bank, 54 Ohio St. 60, 31 L.R.A. 653, 56 Am. St. Rep. 700, 42 N. E. 700; Atty. Gen. v. Continental-L. Ins. Co. 71 N. Y. 325, 27 Am. Rep. 55; Saylor v. Bushong, 100 Pa. 23, 45 Am. Rep. 353; Lunt v. Bank of North America, 49 Barb. 221; Chapman v. White, 6 N. Y. 412, 57 Am. Dec. 464; Duncan v. Berlin, 60 N. Y. 151; Byles, Bills p. 61, note 1; 2 Parsons, Bills & Notes, p. 61, note 1; Bush v. Foote, 58 Miss. 5, 38

Am. Rep. 310; First Nat. Bank v. Shoemaker, 117 Pa. 94, 2 Am. St. Rep. 649, 11 Atl. 304; Creveling v. Bloomsbury Nat. Bank, 46 N. J. L. 255, 50 Am. Rep. 417; Grammel v. Carmer, 55 Mich. 201, 54 Am. Rep. 363, 21 N. W. 418; Pease v. State Nat. Bank, 114 Tenn. 693, 88 S. W. 172; Kahn v. Walton, 46 Ohio St. 205, 20 N. E. 203; Fourth Street Nat. Bank v. Yardley, 165 U. S. 634, 41 L. ed. 855, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 439; Schneider v. Irving Bank, 1 Daly, 501; O'Connor v. Mechanics' Bank, 124 N. Y. 324, 26 N. E. 816; Randolph v. Allen, 19 C. C. A. 353, 41 U. S. App. 117, 73 Fed. 42; State ex rel. St. Amand v. Bank of Commerce, 49 La. Ann. 1078, 22 So. 207; House v. Kountze Bros. 17 Tex. Civ. App. 402, 43 S. W. 561; Sunderlin v. Macosta County Sav. Bank, 116 Mich. 281, 74 N. W. 478; Chicago Heights Lumber Co. v. Miller, 219 Ill. 79, 109 Am. St. Rep. 314, 76 N. E. 52; Guthrie Nat. Bank v. Gill, 6 Okla. 560, 54 Pac. 434; National Bank v. Millard, 10 Wall. 156, 157, 19 L. ed. 899, 900.

Kane, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action commenced by the defendant in error, plaintiff below, against the plaintiff in error, defendant below, to recover a deposit made by the plaintiff in the defendant, a national bank. After the evidence was in, the court instructed the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff, ton Dime Sav. Bank Co. 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 290.

Where a check, having been presented by a bona fide holder, through the clearing house, where he has received credit upon it, is received in due course by the drawee bank, and the latter "checks" it from the clearing-house file, cancels it as a paid check, and charges it to the account of the drawer, such acts constitute payment and terminate the drawer's right subsequently to recall the check by notifying the bank not to pay it. Albers v. Commercial Bank, 85 Mo. 173, 55 Am. Rep. 355, affirming 9 Mo. App. 59.

But under a clearing-house rule giving banks the right to return "checks not good" to the bank depositing them, before 1 o'clock P. M. of the day they are received from the clearing house, where a drawee bank, merely for its own convenience and to expedite the transaction of its business, immediately places upon a canceling file a check received from the clearing house, and then enters the check in the journal, but does not carry it forward to the ledger, such acts are, at most, only a conditional acceptance, subject to the right of the bank to revoke it for cause and return the check at any time before 1 o'clock; and the drawer of the check may, as against the drawee, stop payment of the check at any time while the drawee may thus return it. German Nat. Bank v. Farmers' Deposit Nat. Bank, 118 Pa. 294, 12 Atl. 303.

And the drawee's mere affirmative reply to a telegram from the payee of certain checks, inquiring if the drawer's checks for the amount of those drawn to him are good, does not terminate the drawer's right to stop payment of the checks held by the inquiring payee. Kahn v. Walton, 46 Ohio St. 195, 20 N. E. 203.

The decision in FIRST NAT. BANK v. SCHOOL DIST. No. 4, it will be noted, turns upon the fact that the drawer had no funds on deposit with the drawee, at the time the check was presented to the latter by the payee and the provision of the statute that an acceptance of a bill must be made in writing. If the drawer of the check had had on deposit with the drawee, at the time sufficient funds to pay the check, it would seem that the acts of the vice president of the drawee bank in retaining the check when presented by the payee, and saying to the latter that the bank would give him credit for the amount of the check, against which he might draw at pleasure, might have been deemed a payment of the check, which would have terminated the drawer's right to stop payment, although no credit was then given to the payee in writing. In the absence of the statute requiring that upon which judgment was duly entered, to reverse which this proceeding in error was commenced. For convenience, the plaintiff below will be called the school district and the defendant below the bank.

It seems that on the 8th day of September, 1908, the school district gave to one Bartsch a check or order on the bank for the sum of $250; that the next morning E. T. Lawrence, treasurer of the school district and acting therefor, asked the vice president of the bank if the check or order had been paid, and upon the vice president answering that he had seen the check or order and the same had not been paid, Lawrence told the vice president not to pay the same, and the vice president said he would not; on the 13th day of October, 1908, the school district deposited at said bank the sum of $1,000, the price received for certain school district bonds; on the 8th day of September, before payment of the check or order was countermanded, Bartsch took the same to the vice president of the bank, who retained the same, and said to said Bartsch the bank would give him credit for said amount against which he might draw at pleasure; that said order was not accepted in writing by said bank, but was put in the note case with other notes of the bank, and kept there until it was returned to the school district, with other vouchers, when its account was closed. Upon said account being closed, it appeared that on the 11th day of September, 1908, said bank paid Bartsch on his check or order the sum of $150, and on October 2, 1908, $100, making a total of $250 paid to said Bartsch by virtue of his arrangement with the vice president of the bank, after the payment of the check or order of the school district had been countermanded. The peremptory instruction was given upon the theory that, said check or order not having been accepted in writing by the bank, plaintiff was entitled to countermand its payment, and thereafter the bank was not authorized to pay the same. The judgment of the court below is correct.

"Checks are but inland bills of exchange, and subject to all the rules applicable to instruments of that character, and impose no obligation upon the drawees until accepted, and until presented and paid, are revocable by the drawer, who has the legal control of the moneys to his credit until actual acceptance or payment of the checks, and this upon the principle that the contract and obligation of the banker is to and with the depositor, and not the holders of his checks." Aetna Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 82, 7 Am. Rep. 314. Section 3666, Wilson's Statutes (§ 4700, Compiled Laws of Oklahoma 1909), provides: "An acceptance of a bill must be made in writing, by the drawee, or by an acceptor for honor; and may be made by the acceptor writing his name across the face of the bill with or without other words." Section 3668, Wilson's Statutes (§ 4702, Compiled an acceptance of a bill must be made in writing, it would also seem that such acts of the bank officer, although the drawer had no funds in the bank at the time, might have been deemed an "acceptance" which would likewise have terminated the drawer's right to stop payment. And although the drawer had no funds on deposit with the drawee at the time, if the bank had actually given the payee credit for the amount of the check, in writing, either by a pass-book entry, or on the books of the bank, or both, it would seem that this would have constituted an "acceptance written . . . upon a separate paper," within the meaning of the statute, which would also have terminated the right to stop payment.

In jurisdictions where the holder of an unaccepted check is deemed to have a right of action thereon against the drawee, provided the latter has on hand sufficient funds of the drawer to pay it, on the ground that the check constitutes an assignment pro tanto of the drawer's deposit with the drawee, the drawer has no right to stop payment after his check has passed to the hands of a bona fide holder, who is either the payee holding for value received by the drawer or a bona fide indorsee; and no action by the drawee is necessary to fix the rights of a bona fide holder of the check as against the drawer's power to stop payment. 29 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Union Nat. Bank v. Oceana County Bank, 80 Ill. 212, 22 Am. Rep. 185; First Nat. Bank v. Keith, 183 Ill. 475, 56 N. E. 179, affirming 84 Ill. App. 103; Loan & Sav. Bank v. Farmers' & M. Bank, 74 S. C. 210, 114 Am. St. Rep. 991, 54 S. E. 364.

And in Illinois, even if the drawer of a check had not sufficient funds on deposit with the drawee to pay the check, at the time he gave it, he cannot, as against a bona fide holder, by notifying the drawee not to pay the check, stop the payment thereof out of funds subsequently deposited and remaining on deposit when the check is presented for payment. Gage Hotel Co. v. Union Nat. Bank, 171 Ill. 531, 39 L.R.A. 479, 63 Am. St. Rep. 270, 49 N. E. 420, reversing 69 Ill. App. 681.

And where a check works an assignment pro tanto of the drawer's deposit, although the payee has no right of action thereon against the bank, the drawer cannot, as against the drawee, at any time after the giving of a check for a valuable consideration, under such circumstances that it is irrevocable between him and the payee, so revoke the check, by a notice to the drawee to stop payment, as to render the latter liable to him for a subsequent payment to the holder. Raesser v. National Exch. Bank, 112 Wis. 591, 56 L.R.A. 174, 88 Am. St. Rep. 979, 88 N. W. 618. A. C. W.

Laws of Oklahoma 1909), provides: "The holder of a bill of exchange may, without prejudice to his rights against prior parties, receive and treat as a sufficient acceptance: (1) An acceptance written upon any part of the bill, or upon a separate paper; (2) an acceptance qualified so far only as to make the bill payable at a particular place within the city or town, in which, if the acceptance was unqualified, it would be payable; or (3) a refusal by the drawee to return the bill to the holder after presentment; in which case the bill is payable immediately without regard to its terms." Counsel for plaintiff in error contend that when the vice president of the bank took said order and retained the same, and stated to the holder that the bank would give him credit for said amount, and afterwards returned it to the school district as a voucher against its account, that was not only an acceptance of the bill, but it was also an assignment of the account in so far as the immediate parties were concerned. The authorities do not seem to support this contention. In Chicago Heights Lumber Co. v. Miller, 219 Ill. 79, 109 Am. St. Rep. 314, 76 N. E. 52, it was held: "The verbal acceptance by the drawee of a bill of exchange, who holds no funds of the drawer, is no more than a parol promise to answer for the debt of another."

Nor can the contention that the giving of the check or order to Bartsch constituted an assignment of that much of the money belonging to the school district on deposit in the bank be sustained. In the case at bar, the bank had no funds in its possession belonging to the school district, and was not in debt to the school district in any manner whatever at the time of its transaction with Bartsch. But, if at that time the school district was a creditor at the bank, still the check given to Bartsch would not operate as an assignment pro tanto of funds deposited.

"A draft drawn in the ordinary form does not constitute an equitable assignment pro tanto of funds in the hands of the drawee to the credit of the drawer before such draft has been accepted or presented for payment." Guthrie Nat. Bank v. Gill, 6 Okla. 560, 54 Pac. 434. In Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Metropolitan Nat. Bank, 54 Ohio St. 60, 31 L.R.A. 653, 56 Am. St. Rep. 700, 42 N. E. 700, it was held: "The giving of a check is not an assignment of so much of the creditor's claim. It passes no title, legal or equitable, to the holder in the moneys previously deposited, nor does it create a lien on the fund; for there is no special fund out of which the check can be paid, nor does it transfer any money to the credit of the holder. It is simply an order which may be countermanded and payment forbidden by the drawer any time before it is actually cashed or accepted."

Finding no error in the record, the judgment of the court below is affirmed.

All the Justices concur, except Williams, J., disqualified, not sitting.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

G. W. McKAY, Appt.,

v.

H. A. HALL et al.

(— Okla. —, 120 Pac. 1108.)

Note — transfer after maturity — set-off.

1. A defendant may set off a debt arising upon a contract due him from the payee of a negotiable note, against the note in the hands of a person to whom the payee transfers it after maturity.

Same — joint maker — individual set-off.

2. One joint maker of a note can set off against it an indebtedness from the payee due him individually.

(January 16, 1912.)

Headnotes by ROSSEN, C.

Note. — Right to set off against transferee of negotiable paper after maturity, claim against original payee.

The earlier cases upon the question stated in the title are treated in the note to Vann v. Marbury, 23 L.R.A. 326, and the present annotation is merely supplementary thereto.

Cases involving the right to set off claims against an intermediate indorsee are not included in this note, as they involve distinctive principles.

As is stated in the earlier note, there is a conflict among the authorities, although the overwhelming weight of authority permits the right of set-off. There is, however, a great diversity of conclusion as to what claims may be used in set-off, but in most instances this conflict is more apparent than real when consideration is taken of the facts involved, and especially whether the set-off is claimed under a statute or is equitable in nature, and whether the claim arises out of the same or collateral transactions, as will be observed by an examination of the cases.

Thus numerous cases in the main turn upon the question whether or not the set-off claimed and the negotiable instrument in question arose out of the same or collateral transactions. Thus in Hunleth v. Leahy, 146 Mo. 408, 48 S. W. 459, it was said to be the settled law of the state that a negotiable promissory note in the hands

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the County Court for Stephens County in plaintiffs' favor in an action on a note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. L. Herr for appellant.

Mr. J. B. Wilkinson, for appellees:

The holder of a negotiable promissory note after maturity for value takes the same free from all set-offs not in some way attached to the note, and free from all independent indebtedness owing by the original payee to the maker.

Johnson v. Acme Harvesting Mach. Co. 24 Okla. 468, 103 Pac. 638; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 532; 8 Cyc. 62-64.

Mutuality is essential to a set-off, and one of two parties jointly liable on an indebtedness cannot set off against the plaintiff a claim due to one of the parties.

Richardson v. Penny, 10 Okla. 32, 61 Pac. 584; Murphy v. Colton, 4 Okla. 181, 44 Pac. 208; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 519, ¶ 8; Van Arsdale v. Edwards, 24 Okla. 41, 101 Pac. 1123.

Rosser, C., filed the following opinion:

This is a suit originally brought before Elzey W. Moore, justice of the peace for the town of Comanche, Oklahoma. The case was appealed to the county court of Stephens county. The county court sustained a demurrer to the amended answer of the defendant. The defendant declined to plead further, and there was a judgment for the plaintiffs for the amount of the note, and of an indorsee after maturity is subject to such equities only as are connected with the note itself, and not such as grow out of independent and distinct transactions between the original parties.

And under the Washington statute claims arising out of collateral matter cannot be set off against an assignee of a note delivered after maturity. Harrisburg Trust Co. v. Shufeldt, 31 C. C. A. 190, 59 U. S. App. 532, 87 Fed. 669.

And under Georgia Civil Code, §§ 3750, 4944, it is held that the maker may set off against the holder of a promissory note received in dishonor, to the extent of the amount due on the note, any sum which may be due him from the payee which is in any way connected with the debt sued on or the transaction out of which it sprang. Butler v. Mitchell, 128 Ga. 431, 57 S. E. 764; Butler v. Scandrett, 128 Ga. 432, 57 S. E. 764.

And in Ludwig v. Dearborn, 8 Pa. Dist. R. 69, it was held that the indorsee of an overdue note may enforce it against the maker, free from offsets growing out of distinct transactions, even when the indorsement is made for the express purpose of shutting off a set-off which would have been good against the indorser. And in Davis v. Noll, 38 W. Va. 66, 45 Am. St. Rep. 841, 17 S. E. 791, it was held that, in the absence of legislative enactment, the indorsee of an overdue negotiable instrument does not take it subject to set-offs arising out of collateral and wholly independent matters, and this although he gave no consideration and took it with notice of and for the purpose of defeating the offset. But of course where a statute provides that the transfer of any writing with intent to delay, hinder, or defraud shall be void, the transfer of an overdue note made for the purpose of defeating an offset between the original parties is void as to such an offset, unless made to a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of such intent. Idem.

So, in Crawford v. Johnson, 87 Mo. App. 478, it was held generally that the taker for value of a past-due promissory note is not subject to equities against his indorser, arising out of collateral transactions.

And the maker of a purchase-money note was held in Wolf v. Shelton, 159 Ind. 531, 65 N. E. 582, to be entitled to set-off as against the assignee of the note after maturity a sum that he had been compelled to pay in discharge of a lien on the purchased property, the court saying: "The note went to appellee [assignee] discredited upon its face by nonpayment at maturity. It was a broken contract when appellee purchased it; and he was bound to take notice of the defense, and to know that he would have no greater right to enforce payment than the payee had, and that it would be open to the same defenses in his hands that it would have been subject to if it had remained the property of the payee."

And in Harrell v. Citizens' Bkg. Co. 111 Ga. 846, 36 S. E. 460, where the payee of a promissory note converted the collateral security, it was held that the maker could recoup the value of such collateral in an action by the purchaser of the note after maturity, on the ground that the purchaser took the note subject to the equities between the original parties. In connection with this case it may be stated that recoupment in Georgia differed from set-off, in that the former term was applied to claims arising out of the same contract, while the latter term was applied to collateral matters.

In Gordon v. Decker, 19 Wash. 188, 52 Pac. 856, in holding that the purchaser of a past-due note takes it subject to all the equities that existed between the original parties, and that a judgment arising out of the transaction could be pleaded against such purchaser, who took with notice, the court said that the assignee cannot be allowed to intrude himself between the original parties to the note and destroy any equity which the maker of the note had, or any defense that he had to it before it matured, whether it was taken with or without notice of the existing equities.

But in McDonald v. Mackenzie, 24 Or. 573, 14 Pac. 866, the court, in dealing with the contention that set-off does not extend

Laws of Oklahoma 1909), provides: "The holder of a bill of exchange may, without prejudice to his rights against prior parties, receive and treat as a sufficient acceptance: (1) An acceptance written upon any part of the bill, or upon a separate paper; (2) an acceptance qualified so far only as to make the bill payable at a particular place within the city or town, in which, if the acceptance was unqualified, it would be payable; or (3) a refusal by the drawee to return the bill to the holder after presentment; in which case the bill is payable immediately without regard to its terms." Counsel for plaintiff in error contend that when the vice president of the bank took said order and retained the same, and stated to the holder that the bank would give him credit for said amount, and afterwards returned it to the school district as a voucher against its account, that was not only an acceptance of the bill, but it was also an assignment of the account in so far as the immediate parties were concerned. The authorities do not seem to support this contention. In Chicago Heights Lumber Co. v. Miller, 219 Ill. 79, 109 Am. St. Rep. 314, 76 N. E. 52, it was held: "The verbal acceptance by the drawee of a bill of exchange, who holds no funds of the drawer, is no more than a parol promise to answer for the debt of another."

Nor can the contention that the giving of the check or order to Bartsch constituted an assignment of that much of the money belonging to the school district on deposit in the bank be sustained. In the case at bar, the bank had no funds in its possession belonging to the school district, and was not in debt to the school district in any manner whatever at the time of its transaction with Bartsch. But, if at that time the school district was a creditor at the bank, still the check given to Bartsch would not operate as an assignment pro tanto of funds deposited.

"A draft drawn in the ordinary form does not constitute an equitable assignment pro tanto of funds in the hands of the drawee to the credit of the drawer before such draft has been accepted or presented for payment." Guthrie Nat. Bank v. Gill, 6 Okla. 580, 54 Pac. 434. In Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Metropolitan Nat. Bank, 54 Ohio St. 60, 31 L.R.A. 653, 56 Am. St. Rep. 700, 42 N. E. 700, it was held: "The giving of a check is not an assignment of so much of the creditor's claim. It passes no title, legal or equitable, to the holder in the moneys previously deposited, nor does it create a lien on the fund; for there is no special fund out of which the check can be paid, nor does it transfer any money to the credit of the holder. It is simply an order which may be countermanded and payment forbidden by the drawer any time before it is actually cashed or accepted."

Finding no error in the record, the judgment of the court below is affirmed.

All the Justices concur, except Williams, J., disqualified, not sitting.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

G. W. McKAY, Appt.,

v.

H. A. HALL et al.

(— Okla. —, 120 Pac. 1108.)

Note — transfer after maturity — set-off.

1. A defendant may set off a debt arising upon a contract due him from the payee of a negotiable note, against the note in the hands of a person to whom the payee transfers it after maturity.

Same — joint maker — individual set-off.

2. One joint maker of a note can set off against it an indebtedness from the payee due him individually.

(January 16, 1912.)

Headnotes by ROSSER, C.

Note. — Right to set off against transferee of negotiable paper after maturity, claim against original payee.

The earlier cases upon the question stated in the title are treated in the note to Vann v. Marbury, 23 L.R.A. 326, and the present annotation is merely supplementary thereto.

Cases involving the right to set off claims against an intermediate indorsee are not included in this note, as they involve distinctive principles.

As is stated in the earlier note, there is a conflict among the authorities, although the overwhelming weight of authority permits the right of set-off. There is, however, a great diversity of conclusion as to what claims may be used in set-off, but in most instances this conflict is more apparent than real when consideration is taken of the facts involved, and especially whether the set-off is claimed under a statute or is equitable in nature, and whether the claim arises out of the same or collateral transactions, as will be observed by an examination of the cases.

Thus numerous cases in the main turn upon the question whether or not the set-off claimed and the negotiable instrument in question arose out of the same or collateral transactions. Thus in Hunleth v. Leahy, 146 Mo. 408, 48 S. W. 459, it was said to be the settled law of the state that a negotiable promissory note in the hands

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the County Court for Stephens County in plaintiffs' favor in an action on a note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. L. Herr for appellant.

Mr. J. B. Wilkinson, for appellees:

The holder of a negotiable promissory note after maturity for value takes the same free from all set-offs not in some way attached to the note, and free from all independent indebtedness owing by the original payee to the maker.

Johnson v. Acme Harvesting Mach. Co. 24 Okla. 468, 103 Pac. 638; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 532; 8 Cyc. 62-64.

Mutuality is essential to a set-off, and one of two parties jointly liable on an indebtedness cannot set off against the plaintiff a claim due to one of the parties.

Richardson v. Penny, 10 Okla. 32, 61 Pac. 584; Murphy v. Colton, 4 Okla. 181, 44 Pac. 208; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 519, ¶ 8; Van Arsdale v. Edwards, 24 Okla. 41, 101 Pac. 1123.

Rosser, C., filed the following opinion:

This is a suit originally brought before Elzey W. Moore, justice of the peace for the town of Comanche, Oklahoma. The case was appealed to the county court of Stephens county. The county court sustained a demurrer to the amended answer of the defendant. The defendant declined to plead further, and there was a judgment for the plaintiffs for the amount of the note, and of an indorsee after maturity is subject to such equities only as are connected with the note itself, and not such as grow out of independent and distinct transactions between the original parties.

And under the Washington statute claims arising out of collateral matter cannot be set off against an assignee of a note delivered after maturity. Harrisburg Trust Co. v. Shufeldt, 31 C. C. A. 190, 59 U. S. App. 532, 87 Fed. 669.

And under Georgia Civil Code, §§ 3750, 4944, it is held that the maker may set off against the holder of a promissory note received in dishonor, to the extent of the amount due on the note, any sum which may be due him from the payee which is in any way connected with the debt sued on or the transaction out of which it sprung. Butler v. Mitchell, 128 Ga. 431, 57 S. E. 764; Butler v. Scandrett, 128 Ga. 432, 57 S. E. 764.

And in Ludwig v. Dearborn, 8 Pa. Dist. R. 69, it was held that the indorsee of an overdue note may enforce it against the maker, free from offsets growing out of distinct transactions, even when the indorsement is made for the express purpose of shutting off a set-off which would have been good against the indorser. And in Davis v. Noll, 38 W. Va. 66, 45 Am. St. Rep. 841, 17 S. E. 791, it was held that, in the absence of legislative enactment, the indorsee of an overdue negotiable instrument does not take it subject to set-offs arising out of collateral and wholly independent matters, and this although he gave no consideration and took it with notice of and for the purpose of defeating the offset. But of course where a statute provides that the transfer of any writing with intent to delay, hinder, or defraud shall be void, the transfer of an overdue note made for the purpose of defeating an offset between the original parties is void as to such an offset, unless made to a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of such intent. Idim.

So, in Crawford v. Johnson, 87 Mo. App. 478, it was held generally that the taker for value of a past-due promissory note is not subject to equities against his indorser, arising out of collateral transactions.

And the maker of a purchase-money note was held in Wolf v. Shelton, 159 Ind. 531, 65 N. E. 582, to be entitled to set-off as against the assignee of the note after maturity a sum that he had been compelled to pay in discharge of a lien on the purchased property, the court saying: "The note went to appellee [assignee] discredited upon its face by nonpayment at maturity. It was a broken contract when appellee purchased it; and he was bound to take notice of the defense, and to know that he would have no greater right to enforce payment than the payee had, and that it would be open to the same defenses in his hands that it would have been subject to if it had remained the property of the payee."

And in Harrell v. Citizens' Bkg. Co. 111 Ga. 846, 36 S. E. 460, where the payee of a promissory note converted the collateral security, it was held that the maker could recoup the value of such collateral in an action by the purchaser of the note after maturity, on the ground that the purchaser took the note subject to the equities between the original parties. In connection with this case it may be stated that recoupment in Georgia differed from set-off, in that the former term was applied to claims arising out of the same contract, while the latter term was applied to collateral matters.

In Gordon v. Decker, 19 Wash. 188, 52 Pac. 856, in holding that the purchaser of a past-due note takes it subject to all the equities that existed between the original parties, and that a judgment arising out of the transaction could be pleaded against such purchaser, who took with notice, the court said that the assignee cannot be allowed to intrude himself between the original parties to the note and destroy any equity which the maker of the note had, or any defense that he had to it before it matured, whether it was taken with or without notice of the existing equities.

But in McDonald v. Mackenzie, 24 Or. 573, 14 Pac. 866, the court, in dealing with the contention that set-off does not extend the defendant appeals. The note was given by C. M. Rutcliff and the defendant, G. W. McKay, to J. T. Morris. J. T. Morris indorsed the note to plaintiffs without recourse after maturity. In his amended answer the defendant pleaded that Morris at the time of, and prior to, the transfer of the note was indebted to him for 20 bushels of cotton seed to the amount of $7, and for services rendered on oral contract in the case of the State of Oklahoma v. J. T. Morris in the sum of $200, and claimed those amounts as set-off against the note. The defendant further alleged that the plaintiffs had full knowledge of the indebtedness existing against Morris in favor of the defendant, prior to the transfer of the note.

The question in this case is whether or not the items as set forth in the answer could be pleaded as a set-off against the note in the hands of a holder, to whom it had been indorsed after maturity. In arriving at a decision of this question, it will be necessary to consider the provisions of the statutes of Oklahoma bearing upon the question. Section 5638 of Snyder's Compiled Laws is as follows: "A set-off can only be pleaded in an action founded on contract, and must be a cause of action arising upon contract or ascertained by the decision of a court." Section 5640 of Snyder's Compiled Laws is as follows: "When cross demands have existed between persons under such circumstances that, if one had brought an action against the other, a counterclaim or set-off could have been set up, neither can be deprived of the benefit thereof by the assignment or death of the other; but the two demands must be deemed compensated so far as they equal each other." Section 5559 of Snyder's Compiled Laws provides that "in the case of an assignment of a thing in action, the action of the assignee shall be without prejudice to any set-off or other defense now allowed; but this action shall not apply to negotiable bonds, promissory notes, or bills of exchange transferred in good faith and upon good consideration before due." An examination of these statutes leads to the conclusion that the demurrer should have been overruled. The action was on contract, and the set-off pleaded was one arising upon contract, and, therefore, if the suit had been brought by Morris the set-off pleaded would have come squarely within the terms of § 5638, supra. Section 5640, supra, preserved the benefit of the act, notwithstanding the assignment; or, if that section be construed to apply only in cases where there has been a general assignment, as possibly it should be, still § 5559, supra, preserved the right of set-off against the assignee. And the exception of negotiable bonds, etc., "transferred in good faith and upon good consideration before due" from its terms indicates clearly that the right to claims arising out of collateral matters, holds that one who took negotiable paper after maturity took it subject not only to equities inherent in the paper, but subject also to all set-offs in the nature of payments that may have attached to it in the hands of the original parties by reason of an agreement between them.

In some cases where the original payee was insolvent at the time of the transfer, it is held that such insolvency raises an equity sufficient to warrant the allowing of a set-off. Thus in Eigenmann v. Clark, 21 Ind. App. 129, 51 N. E. 725, it was held that the maker of a note, sued by the payee's assignee, may set off payments made by him as surety on a note executed by such payee, where the payee was insolvent at the time of the assignment, which was after maturity; the decision being based upon the fact of insolvency, and it being said that insolvency is a distinct equitable ground of set-off outside of the statute, that the assignment gave the assignee only the right that the assignor had in the notes, and that as they were past due they were charged with all equities outstanding between the original parties.

And in Gemmell v. Hueben, 71 Mo. App. 201, it was said that in equity the transferee of a past-due note takes it subject to all the equities between the parties, but that the mere existence of a cross demand would not be sufficient to justify a set-off against such transferee, it being necessary that there be some fact disclosing imminent danger of loss. Applying this rule, the court held that a judgment in favor of the payee against the maker of a note connected with the transaction out of which the note grew could be set off in equity against the indorser after maturity suing on the note, where the payee of the note was insolvent, it being said that the insolvency raised an equity requiring the maker to be protected.

So, in Craighead v. Swartz, 219 Pa. 149, 67 Atl. 1003, the maker of promissory notes was held entitled to set-off against them. In a suit by the assignee thereof, a liability which had matured against him on notes indorsed by him as surety for the payee of the notes in suit, who was insolvent, it being said that set-off in such case was an equitable one.

And in Little v. Sturgis, 127 Iowa, 298, 103 N. W. 205, where a note payable to an insolvent bank was assigned after maturity by the bank's assignees for creditors, it was held that the maker was entitled to set off against the note the amount of his deposit account with the bank; the court saying that the rights of the assignee must be measured by what would have been the rights of the original payee. The opinion in this case does not expressly treat the case as one of equitable set-off arising from of set-off applied as against such instruments transferred after due.

In the case of Wilbur v. Jeep, 37 Neb. 604, 56 N. W. 198, the first paragraph of the syllabus is as follows: "Any set-off to a promissory note, which would have been good between original parties, may be pleaded against an indorsee who acquires it after maturity, as he takes it subject to any set-off which the maker had against any prior holder." This decision was based on provisions of the Nebraska Statutes identical with §§ 5638 and 5640, Snyder's Compiled Laws, supra. The cases bearing upon this subject are collected in a note to Vann v. Marbury, 23 L.R.A. 325. The annotator states that there is a diversity of opinion as to whether set-off is permissible, and cites quite a number of cases holding that a collateral matter cannot be used as set-off, but says that there is another line of cases which go to the full extent of holding that a set-off should be allowed for any claim held against the assignor at the time of the assignment, and cites the following cases, all of which are in point: McKenna v. Kirkwood, 50 Mich. 544, 15 N. W. 898; Armstrong v. Chadwick, 127 Mass. 156; Bond v. Fitzpatrick, 4 Gray, 89; Harris v. Burwell, 65 N. C. 584; Hurdle v. Hanner, 50 N. C. (5 Jones, L.) 360; Harrington v. Wilcox, 53 N. C. (8 Jones, L.) 349; Haywood v. McNair, 19 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. L.) 283; O'Callaghan v. Sawyer, 5 Johns. 118;

the insolvency of the bank; but that fact would, at least, render the case similar to the Eigenmann Case, supra.

And a note given for corporate stock and assigned after maturity in pledge, the corporation having become insolvent, was held subject to a set-off of a claim against the corporation for services rendered under a contract for employment entered into in consideration of the purchase of the stock, in Indiana Novelty Mfg. Co. v. McGill, 15 Ind. App. 1, 43 N. E. 464.

Miscellaneous cases.

Under the Nebraska statute any set-off against negotiable paper which would have been good as between the original parties may be set off against an indorsee who acquires it after maturity. Wilbur v. Jeep, 37 Neb. 604, 56 N. W. 198, set out in McKAY v. HALL.

And see Brown v. Smedley, 136 Mich. 65, 98 N. W. 856, to the effect that a set-off for services may be pleaded in defense to a note indorsed to plaintiff after maturity.

But in Gemmell v. Hueben, supra, under a statute providing that if two persons are mutually indebted in any manner, one debt may be set off against the other although such debts are of a different nature, it was 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Ford v. Stuart, 19 Johns. 342; Bank of Niagara v. McCracken, 18 Johns. 493; Robinson v. Perry, 73 Me. 168; Norton v. Foster, 12 Kan. 44. See also Johnston v. Humphrey, 91 Wis. 76, 51 Am. St. Rep. 873, 64 N. W. 317; Sargent v. Southgate, 5 Pick. 312, 16 Am. Dec. 409; Phipps v. Shegogg, 30 Miss. 241; Bissell v. Curran, 69 Ill. 20. Section 2546 of the Iowa Code of 1873 provided that "in case of the assignment of a thing in action, the action by the assignee shall be without prejudice to any counterclaim, defense, or cause of action, whether matured or not, if matured when plead, existing in favor of the defendant and against the assignor before notice of the assignment; but this section shall not apply to negotiable instruments transferred in good faith and upon valuable consideration before due." The resemblance between this section and § 5559 of Snyder's Compiled Laws is very close. In the case of Downing v. Gibson, 53 Iowa, 517, 5 N. W. 699, it was held that under that section in an action by the assignee of negotiable paper, transferred after due, the defendant could set off a note executed by plaintiff's assignor and assigned to defendant before notice of the assignment to plaintiff. The court said: "We think no importance should be attached to the use of the word 'assignment,' instead of 'indorsement,' in the statute under consideration." No reason is perceived why the rule should be held that a judgment against the payee of a note cannot be set off against the indorsee after maturity of such payee, the ground being that the maker and the indorsee were not "mutually indebted" within the meaning of the statute.

And under the Washington statute the demand sought to be set off must have existed at the time of the assignment. Harrisburg Trust Co. v. Shufeldt, 31 C. C. A. 190, 59 U. S. App. 532, 87 Fed. 669.

In Merchants' Exch. Bank v. Fuldner, 92 Wis. 415, 66 N. W. 691, it was held that the maker of a promissory note could set off deposits in the insolvent payee bank against the note in the hands of a transferee after maturity who was not a bona fide holder, where the set-off was good at the time of the transfer of the note.

The general question of the rights of a holder of negotiable paper transferred after maturity is exhaustively treated in the note to Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium Co. v. Rockford Nat. Bank, 46 L.R.A. 753.

For a discussion of the general question of set-off against assignee of commercial paper of claim against assignor, see note to Vann v. Marbury, 23 L.R.A. 325.

As to set-off against assigned claim of debtor's demand against assignor, see note to Bradley v. Thompson Smith's Sons, 23 L.R.A. 305. G. J. C.

otherwise. The maker of a note who has a claim against the payee arising out of a contract should certainly be allowed to set it off in a suit against him by the payee. As soon as the payee became indebted by contract, the note would be reduced just that much as between the parties, whether credited with the amount or not, and the assignee, after maturity, cannot get more than the payee had. He stands in the shoes of the assignor. The fact that the note is not paid puts him upon inquiry. As was said by Chief Justice Shaw in Fisher v. Leland, 4 Cush. 456, 50 Am. Dec. 805: "Where a negotiable note is found in circulation after it is due, it carries suspicion on the face of it. The question instantly arises, Why is it in circulation—Why is it not paid? Here is something wrong. Therefore, although it does not give the indorser notice of any specific matter of defense, such as set-off, payment, or fraudulent acquisition, yet it puts him on inquiry. He takes only such title as the indorser himself has, and subject to any defense which would be made if the suit were brought by the indorser."

Plaintiff relies upon the case of Johnson v. Acme Harvesting Mach. Co. 24 Okla. 468, 103 Pac. 638, to uphold the action of the lower court in sustaining the demurrer. In that case the defendant was sued on a note given a machine company for a mower. As a defense against an assignee after maturity, he pleaded that he had bought a binder from the same company, for which he had executed notes, and that the binder failed to do good work. He made no complaint as to the mower for which the note was given. The court held that the counterclaim for defects in the binder could not be pleaded in a suit upon the note given for the mower. The holding in that case does not conflict with the conclusions arrived at here. The defense there was a counterclaim. A counterclaim must arise out of the contract or transaction set forth in the petition as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or be connected with the subject of the action. The claim pleaded as a defense here is a set-off. The defendant is entitled to use the set-off as a defense to the note, but, of course, if it exceeds the note, he cannot recover any excess against the plaintiff. The plaintiff owes him nothing. All that he can do with the set-off is to show that he owes plaintiff nothing. The plaintiff by purchasing the note after maturity did not incur any liability to pay the defendant anything. Norton v. Foster, 12 Kan. 44. The authorities cited by plaintiff to sustain the proposition that there must be allegation and proof of insolvency of the assignor before the set-off could be allowed against the assignee are cases of equitable set-off, and have no application to this case.

Another contention of plaintiff is that the defendant cannot set off the claim pleaded in the answer, because the defendant is a joint maker of the note with C. M. Rutcliff, and that the debts attempted to be set off are due McKay individually, and that, therefore, there is a want of mutuality. Following the weight of authority the supreme court of the territory of Oklahoma, in the cases of Murphy v. Colton, 4 Okla. 181, 44 Pac. 208, and Richardson v. Penny, 10 Okla. 32, 61 Pac. 584, decided this question favorably to the contention of plaintiff; but since the act of 1905 (§ 3, art. 7, chap. 28, Snyder's Compiled Laws § 5635), which provides, "Either party can plead and prove a set-off or counterclaim of a proper nature in defense of the liability sought to be enforced by the other party, and it shall not be necessary that such set-off shall exist as between all parties plaintiff and defendant in such suit, but any party may enforce his set-off or counterclaim against the liability sought to be enforced against him,"—it was held in the case of Loeb v. Loeb, 24 Okla. 384, 103 Pac. 570, that the set-off or counterclaim could be pleaded and proven, whether it existed between all the parties plaintiff and defendant or not. This holding seems to follow as a matter of course from the terms of the statute quoted. And a large number of courts in other states have decided that one of the makers of a joint obligation may set off a debt due from the obligee to him individually. 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. 525, and cases cited under note 2. It is believed that the better reasoning favors this rule, even in the absence of statute directly permitting it. In the case of Leach v. Lambeth, 14 Ark. 668, Mr. Justice Walker, in deciding that one defendant could plead as a set-off a debt due him individually against cause of action against several, said: "A payment by one defendant is, in effect, a payment by all. The defendants may plead separately, and any defense to the merits of the action inures to the benefit of all; and, if the plaintiff is indebted to one of several defendants, and such defendant should choose to pay and discharge the debt of himself and his codefendant out of it, it is, in effect, the payment and satisfaction of both, and no good reason seems to exist why he should not be permitted to do so. Such defense in no wise affects the rights of the codefendant or of the plaintiff; not of the defendant, because so far from increasing his liability it lessens it by discharging a debt for the whole of which he was bound to the plaintiff; nor does it prejudice the rights of the plaintiff, because if in truth he owes the defendants or either of them he should not, in good conscience, be permitted to coerce payment from them, or one of them (which is in effect from both), without at the same time paying that which he owes them; and to compel this, and prevent litigation and unnecessary costs and delay, the statute of set-off was passed."

This case should be reversed and remanded, with instructions to overrule the demurrer, and for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

LENA LILLY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

ST. LOUIS & SAN FRANCISCO RAIL-ROAD COMPANY.

(— Okla. —, 122 Pac. 502.)

Carriers — refusing information to passenger — carrying past destination.

1. Plaintiff, a passenger upon one of defendant's trains, had purchased a ticket from defendant's agent at one of its stations to another station upon defendant's road;

Headnotes by HAYES, J.

Note. — Carrier: liability for failure to notify passenger when and where to change cars.

It is the duty of a carrier to give a passenger reasonable notice of the necessity for changing cars at junction points. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Ashley, 159 Ala. 154, 48 So. 981.

And a passenger who is informed by the carrier's agent who sells him his ticket that no change is necessary is justified in relying upon that information, unless he is later notified that a change is necessary; and it is not sufficient to show that the announcement was made at the opposite end of the car from where he was sitting, but the proof must show that he actually heard it, or that it was made under such circumstances that it can be reasonably said that he should have heard it. But if the correct information comes to the passenger in an intelligible manner from an authorized agent of the carrier, it will not be liable if the passenger elects to ignore such information, and rely upon that first given to him. Dye v. Virginia Midland R. Co. 9 Mackey, 63.

However, if before or on reaching the junction point the passenger is given actual notice of the necessity for changing, or if such means is used to give him such notice but, in order for her to reach her destination, it was necessary that she change at an intervening station to another train upon another of defendant's lines of railway. She was without knowledge as to her route, or where she would be required to change. Before reaching the destination at which she was required to change, she made repeated efforts to ascertain from defendant's servants and employees in charge of the train information regarding her route, and as to where she would have to change; but they disregarded her and failed and refused to instruct her as to where she would have to make the change, on account of which she was carried beyond the junction point off her route, and to a town where she was required to take passage upon another railway than defendant's, in order to reach her destination, and expended an additional sum for fare, and caused her to suffer a loss of time and certain inconveniences. Held, that a petition stating in substance the foregoing facts stated a cause of action against defendant railway company, and a general demurrer thereto should not have been sustained.

Damages — exemplary — misleading passenger.

2. Where defendant's employees wilfully neglected and refused to give plaintiff the information requested, as stated above, plaintiff may in such case recover exemplary damages.

(March 12, 1912.)

ERROR to the District Court for Carter County to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to a petition filed to recover that by it every traveler of ordinary intelligence, by the use or reasonable care and attention, would have acquired a knowledge that a change was necessary, the company would not be liable. Barker v. New York C. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 599, affirming 6 Duer, 523.

And a passenger who learns that he must change cars before reaching his destination must find out where such change should be made, and is not authorized to rely on a promise by the conductor to give him special notice when that point is reached, beyond the customary announcement, such promise being beyond the scope of his authority. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. McCullough, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 534, 45 S. W. 324.

Nor is a carrier liable for failure of its conductor to awaken a passenger at the junction point, although he has promised to do so. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Kendrick, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 32 S. W. 42.

And it follows that no liability would result from failure of the conductor to give personal notice that the junction point had been reached, to a passenger who had been informed of the junction point and warned not to go to sleep, but who did so in spite of the warning. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Cohn, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 11, 53 S. W. 698.

R. L. S.

ment that the defendants have been convicted and sentenced to death without a fair and impartial trial—brings up for decision an issue of vital concern to every citizen of the state. By our Constitution, the people have set the law above themselves, except as they choose to change it by the methods which they themselves have ordained; and they have laid upon the courts the duty of enforcing their promise that the weak, as well as the strong, shall be condemned only after a fair trial according to law before an impartial jury. In the faithful performance of their promise by the people, and in the discharge of their duty by the courts, is involved, not only the public honor, but public safety, prosperity, and happiness; for in the long run neither individual nor community success is possible, unless men feel that they will not lose life nor liberty nor property without a fair and impartial trial under the law of the land. Therefore the complaint of the defendants that a large and hostile crowd of persons so interfered with the trial that it was not a fair trial concerns, not only the defendants, but all the people.

Ideal conditions, it is true, are not to be expected, and verdicts should not be set aside by an appellate court for misconduct in a trial, unless the evidence is clear and convincing that extraneous influences so interfered with the conduct of the trial, or so pressed upon the jury, as to become factors in the result. A vast number of cases might be cited to show that this court will refuse and constant contact with the audience as that remarks of bystanders as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, or other indications of public feeling for or against him, may reach their ears or come under their observation. The bar, at least, should at all times be kept sufficiently open and clear for the prompt and orderly despatch of the business of the court."

In Massey v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 371, 20 S. W. 758, a judgment upon conviction for murder was reversed for unfairness, where certain people of the county where the trial was had organized and agreed among themselves that, if a change of venue was granted to the defendant, they would hang him before he left the courthouse; that a great crowd surged around the jail and gathered in the courthouse yard, and the court refused to grant a change of venue for the reason "that it would at once precipitate an attack upon the jail, which he desired to avoid;" that the defendant, through fear, waived his right to be present at the time the verdict was rendered, and the "spirit, if not the presence, of that same howling, threatening, tumultuous, blood-thirsty mob had overawed the justice [and] dominated the court." It was said: "Such a state of affairs existing,

... the court being environed and dominated by such a mob breathing out such threats to the life of appellant, it is solemn mockery to talk, think, or imagine a fair trial, under such conditions. Appellant was not required to apply for a change of venue, when, if granted, his life would be forfeited,—the price. To hold that a trial under such circumstances was fair, impartial, and legal would be a travesty on decency, law, common sense, and justice, notwithstanding good men may have tried appellant."

And while the person said to have been assaulted in Collier v. State, 115 Ga. 803, 42 S. E. 226, reversed on another point, on a former appeal in 115 Ga. 17, 41 S. E. 261, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 608, was testifying in rebuttal to the evidence introduced by the defendant, she became very much excited and began upbraiding the defendant and the husband of the witness took hold of a chair in a threatening manner as if to strike the defendant with it, but was seized by an officer and forced to take his seat; and the crowd at this point became very much excited, got upon the seats, looking and moving towards where the defendant was sitting, but became seated again, after a little while, when commanded so to do by the trial judge; but subsequently, while the jury was in its room considering the case, a large number of men collected in the court room and courthouse yard, swearing and using threatening language towards the jury. It was held that the defendant did not have a fair and impartial trial, which the law guaranteed to him, and to which he was entitled whether he was guilty or innocent.

But in Long v. State, 59 Tex. Crim. Rep. 103, 127 S. W. 551, Ann. Cas. 1912 A, 1244, where, upon a trial for the murder of a school teacher in one of the public schools of a city, it appeared that the school practically adjourned or took a recess in order that the teachers and pupils might attend the trial during the closing argument for the state, and many of the children did attend, as well as some of the school teachers,—the defendant alleging that this was done by concert of action for the purpose of influencing the jury in behalf of the state, and that for this reason his trial was not fair,—the court said that it was not prepared to agree that the trial was not a fair one, and that it was a matter of such grave moment as to require a reversal of the judgment of conviction.

So, in Young v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 207, 92 S. W. 841, where, upon a motion for a new trial, the defendant, among various errors assigned, urged that the spectators were permitted to lean in the jury box and crowd the court room, but did not state that they in any way interfered with the trial of his case, the court was of the opinion that the bare allegation was not sufficient to warrant a new trial.

As to plea of guilty under intimidation, see note to Little v. Com. 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 257.

E. M. S.

to heed unsubstantial charges that trials have not been fair. Yet in all the course of the development of the administration of law in England and America since that time, there has never been a doubt of the rule laid down in 1819, in the case of the Rex v. Hunt, 2 Chitty, 130, when the court said it is of the greatest importance that the administration of justice should be free not only from spot or blame, but that it should be, as far as human infirmity could allow it to become, as free from all suspicion.

The special judge, Hon. George W. Brown, who presided at the trial, has certified that, according to the facts as they appeared to him, the rights of the defendant were safeguarded and the trial properly conducted. His opinion and that of Judge Prince, who denied the motion for a new trial, are entitled to great consideration, for their ability and their solicitude that the defendants should have a fair trial cannot be doubted. In passing upon the correctness of their conclusions of law, every statement of fact made by the trial judge will be taken as true; and the evidence offered on behalf of the defendants will be taken as true only in so far as it is consistent with the statement of fact found in the report of the trial judge.

Looking at the case in this way, we find these to be the material facts: An atrocious murder of a worthy citizen had properly aroused the interest and indignation of the entire community. One of the persons suspected had confessed, and implicated as active participants in the crime the two defendants. Very soon after the murder, a special term of court had been ordered to try both the confessed murderer and these defendants. An immense number of people assembled at the trial intensely hostile to the accused, and crowded the courthouse. The defendants being without counsel, the presiding judge sent for Mr. W. F. Clayton and requested him to undertake their defense. On his way to the court through the dense crowd, Mr. Clayton "heard expressions in regard to lynching," which convinced him that, if he should ask for the three days of preparation allowed by law, the prisoners would be lynched, and under the compulsion of this fear he gave up that most vital right and went immediately into the trial court without preparation. That the danger of mob violence was present and imminent is made further manifest by the statements of Mr. Lucien W. McLemore and the stenographer of the court, Mr. F. F. Covington, both witnesses of high character. Not a particle of evidence was offered by the state to controvert this showing. The presiding judge, it is true, says that the crowd was quiet, and that it manifested no mob spirit to his eye nor in his hearing; but this statement does not impair the force of the testimony of those who mingled with the people, and thus had better opportunity to observe. Thus it appears, beyond all doubt, that the circumstances of the trial were such that counsel of experience and courage gave up, under the most urgent compulsion, the right to three days of preparation guaranteed to the accused by the law; and that, too, when he had been called into the case by the court without previous notice. Compulsion is sufficient to annul a will or a contract for the sale of property. How, then, can it be held that a trial involving life or death was fair and impartial, according to the law of the land, when the accused, under the compulsion of a reasonable apprehension of lawless violence, surrenders a right vital to his defense?

In an opinion delivered by the distinguished Judge Elliott, the supreme court of Indiana, under circumstances very similar to those appearing here, set aside for compulsion a plea of guilty, which defendant's counsel showed to the court had been entered, by their advice, on the reasonable apprehension that if their client should be acquitted, he would be lynched. Sanders v. State, 85 Ind. 318, 44 Am. Rep. 29.

It is argued, however, that counsel should have sought the protection of the court. No doubt, that course would have been the most judicious; but, in view of the surroundings, and especially in view of the fact that the judge's seat was itself pressed upon by the crowd, it would be an unjust judgment to hold that the accused lost a vital right by the failure of their counsel to do the most judicious thing in the sudden emergency which he was called on by the court to meet.

Consideration of the further proceedings deepens the conviction that the trial was not fair. With respect to the charge that the space within the bar immediately around the judge, the jury, and the witnesses was so taken by the great crowd that the trial could not proceed with decorum and fairness, the presiding judge says that it was the best behaved crowd he ever saw, and that there was nothing to indicate to him a sign of a riotous spirit; that it did crowd within the bar, but that it was not in possession of the courthouse. He says further: "In every instance when I observed that it was becoming too much crowded within the bar, or my attention was called to such conditions, my admonitions received the most respectful consideration and obedience, and there was never any crowding within the bar that in any way interfered with the orderly despatch of the business of the court, or with the rights of the counsel of the accused." The affidavit of Mr. Clayton contains the following statement: "That during the trial of the case deponent did not see the jury until he addressed them, from the crowd intervening; that on several occasions deponent requested the judge to compel the sheriff to clear away the crowd that he might see the witness whom he was examining." There is no statement of fact made by the presiding judge inconsistent with the statement of Mr. Clayton. It thus appears that a large number of persons hostile to defendants were allowed to so press upon the court that counsel for the defense had to ask several times that they be cleared away so that he could see the witness under examination, and to so press around the jury that counsel could not see them until he stood before them to argue the case. We are unable to assent to the opinion of the presiding judge that such a state of affairs did not interfere with the orderly conduct of the business of the court, or with the rights of the accused. Trials must be public; but the right of the accused to a fair trial is superior to the right of the public to witness the trial. In all trials, not only the dignity and decorum which should characterize the administration of justice, but the preservation of the rights of the people and of the parties to the cause, require that the public should be kept away from the witnesses and the jury and the counsel, to the end that the issue may be tried and decided without interference or extraneous influence. In this case, the public was not so kept away. On the contrary, a large number of persons justly indignant at an atrocious murder, and undeniably hostile to the accused, pressed upon the court, the jury, and the witnesses.

Clearing away the hostile crowds from time to time did not meet the case. Fairness required that at least the space between the accused and their counsel, the jury, and the witnesses should have been kept free from intrusion. Courts cannot control public sentiment; but their commission from the people is to keep the inviolable precincts of the prisoner's dock, the counsel's place, the witness chair, the jury seats, and the intervening space, free from either hostile or friendly invasion or intrusion, lest the accused be terrified or his counsel confused in making his defense, lest the witness testify falsely under fear of inducement, lest the jury be overawed, or their minds influenced by an atmosphere surcharged with hostility or partiality. The intrusion into these inviolable precincts of a large number of persons, part of a vast assemblage hostile to the prisoners, was calculated to terrify the defendants, to confuse their counsel, to intimidate the witnesses, and to overawe the jury. This, with the fact that counsel gave up the right of the accused to have three days to prepare for their trial, under the compulsion of a reasonable apprehension that the assertion of the right would result in their death by lynching, compels the conclusion that the defendants did not have a fair and impartial trial.

Applying the law more specifically, we reach these conclusions: The conditions under which counsel conducted the defendants' cause, and under which their witnesses were examined, substantially interfered with the due exercise of the right granted by § 49 of the Criminal Code of 1902, "that the accused shall, at his trial, be allowed to be heard by counsel, may defend himself, and shall have a right to produce witnesses and proofs in his favor, and to meet the witnesses produced against him face to face."

The jury was not so safeguarded against extraneous influences as to allow the defendants the right of trial by an impartial jury, guaranteed by § 18, art. 1, of the Constitution; and the defendants were, by the compulsion of the fear of death by lynching, deprived of the right to have three days to prepare for their trial, conferred on them by § 40 of the Criminal Code.

Under varying facts, other courts have, with practical unanimity, held that verdicts should not be allowed to stand, where action by those in attendance on a trial was calculated to overawe or influence the jury, or substantially interfere with the rights vital to the parties. Hamilton v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 372, 37 S. W. 431; Woolfolk v. State, 81 Ga. 551, 8 S. E. 724; Raines v. State, 81 Miss. 489, 33 So. 19, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 404; Sanders v. State, 85 Ind. 318, 44 Am. Rep. 29; People v. McMahon, 244 Ill. 45, 91 N. E. 104; Doyle v. Com. 100 Va. 808, 40 S. E. 925; State v. Wilcox, 131 N. C. 707, 42 S. E. 536, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 606; Robinson v. State, 6 Ga. App. 696, 65 S. E. 792.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the Circuit Court be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Gary, Ch. J., and Hydrick, J., concur.

TEXAS COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS.

BILL MAYHEW, Appt.,
v.
STATE OF TEXAS.

(— Tex. —, 144 S. W. 229.)

Homicide — self-defense — excessive force — liability.

1. The use of more force than is necessary, which results in killing the assailant, will not render one guilty of murder, who goes to the defense of his child against an assault which threatens death or serious bodily injury.

Same — defense of child — right to act.

2. The culpability of one who kills an assailant in defense of his son is not measured by the rights which the son might have had to defend himself, but upon the appearance of conditions when the father appeared upon the scene, unless he knew, or might reasonably have known, the actual rights possessed by the son under the circumstances of the conflict.

Same — threats — justification.

3. That one who kills another in defense of his son was informed and believed that deceased had made threats of bodily harm or death against the son will justify his acting, although the threats were not in fact made.

Same — concert of action — necessity.

4. A concert of action between two persons assailing another with intent to kill him or do him great bodily harm is not necessary to justify the father of the latter in defending the son against the attacks of both or either, to the extent of taking life, if necessary.

Same — defense — prior threats — effect.

5. That one had, because of provocation, threatened to kill another, will not render him guilty of murder if, upon the latter's attacking his son, he goes to the aid of the son and kills the assailant, for the sole purpose of protecting the son from death or great bodily injury.

(February 7, 1912.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Eastland County, convicting him of murder in the second degree. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. C. H. Jenkins, Scott & Brelsford, W. L. Grogan, and J. J. Butts for appellant.

Note. — Is one assisting relative in peril bound by the latter's act in bringing on the difficulty.

The subject here under consideration is covered in the notes to Foutch v. State, 45 L.R.A. 703, and State v. Cook, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1013, and only the decisions which have passed upon the point since the writing of the last note are here included.

As laid down in the former notes it is a general rule that one who interferes on behalf of a relative will not be allowed the benefit of a plea of self-defense unless such plea would have been available to the relative in whose behalf he interfered.

This rule was applied in Weaver v. State, 1 Ala. App. 48, 55 So. 936, where it was held that the fact that one who committed a homicide while assisting his brother, honestly and reasonably believed that the latter was not at fault in bringing on the difficulty, did not justify him in striking in defense to his brother, although the latter was in imminent peril; but it was held that the brother must in fact have been free from fault in bringing on the difficulty in order to authorize the defendant to intervene and strike in self-defense in his brother's behalf.

In State v. Cox, 153 N. C. 638, 69 S. E. 419, it was held that the same principles applied to the conduct of a son fighting in defense of his father, who had willingly entered the fight, that applied to the father; and that if he had not retreated to the wall, or if he used excessive force, he could not successfully set up a plea of self-defense. It would seem from the statement of this 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

case that the defendant must have had knowledge of all facts relative to the commencement of the difficulty. No point, however, is specifically made of this fact.

So, in Wheatley v. State, 93 Ark. 409, 125 S. W. 414, it was held that one might lawfully do for his brother, when threatened with death or great bodily injury, what the latter could lawfully do for himself; and it was held that where the brother was in fault in provoking the assault, the defendant must retreat as far as he safely could before he would be justified in killing his brother's assailant. No point is made in this case of the knowledge by the defendant of his brother's fault in bringing on the difficulty, but it would seem from the facts that the defendant must have had such knowledge.

And in Wheat v. Com. — Ky. —, 118 S. W. 264, where one of the defendants had gone to the assistance of his brother, who apparently to his knowledge had brought on the difficulty, it was held that when a person attempts to excuse his act upon the ground that it was done in defense of another, that other must himself be without blame, or be in such a position that the law would excuse him if he had done in his own behalf what the other did for him.

In State v. Eastham, — Mo. —, 144 S. W. 492, where the defendant's brother, in starting the difficulty, intended only an ordinary battery on the deceased, and the latter subsequently assaulted him with a pistol, it was held that the brother had the right to kill deceased without being guilty of any greater crime than manslaughter, and that therefore defendant, who knew all of the

Messrs. John A. Mobley, Assistant Attorney General, James T. Wilson, D. G. Hunt, and J. R. Stubblefield, for the State:

The defendant had a right to use whatever force was necessary to defend himself or Jim Mayhew against an unlawful attack, or what reasonably appeared to be an unlawful attack, viewed from his standpoint; but he had no right to use greater force than reasonably appeared to be necessary to defend himself or Jim Mayhew against real or apparent danger.

Rucker v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 47 S. W. 1015.

Davidson, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was convicted of murder in the second degree; the jury awarding him a term of five years in the penitentiary.

The issues presented may be briefly stated as follows: The state's contention from the evidence was that appellant and Jim Mayhew and Aaron Mayhew had entered into an agreement or sort of conspiracy to whip and probably kill the deceased, Will Burkhead. On the day of the homicide, prior thereto in the morning, about 11 o'clock, a difficulty occurred in Jim Mayhew's barber shop between one of the Mayhew boys and Burkhead, which resulted in an ordinary fist fight. In that fight, Jim Mayhew undertook to reach Burkhead, the deceased, with a razor, but was prevented. The parties were separated. In some way, information of this trouble was conveyed to appellant. This angered appellant, and on account of this, and the fact that Burkhead owed him a considerable amount of money, and had not paid it, caused appellant to make a threat against deceased; and it is further shown on the part of the state that appellant sought Burkhead, but failed to find him, and he also remarked, in speaking of the former fight, something to the effect that if Jim Mayhew got in a contest with deceased the result of the fight might be different from what it was with the other Mayhew, with whom he had had a fight in the barber shop. It is shown that about 2:30 or 3 o'clock Jim Mayhew went to where the deceased was, or met him (deceased), who was on horseback, and caught the bridle reins of his horse; whereupon deceased jumped from his horse, and a fight ensued. In the meantime, appellant had gone to his store, and was engaged about his usual business. One of the younger Mayhews informed appellant that they had his son Jim down, and were killing him. Appellant immediately ran to where the trouble was, and as he approached a man named Pruett picked up a rock and threw it, striking appellant. Appellant ran to where his son Jim and Burkhead were engaged in their difficulty, and began cutting Burkhead with his knife. From these wounds Burkhead died. It is shown also by the evidence that Burkhead made some threats, which were communicated to appellant. The evidence also suggested the issue of self-defense in favor of appellant personally, as well as in favor of his defense of his son.

1. The court undertook to charge these various theories in instructions given the jury. It will be seen from this brief summary the issue of murder in the second degree was in the case from the state's standpoint. From the defendant's standpoint, there was self-defense, defense of his son, and self-defense, viewed from the standpoint of communicated threats. Error is assigned upon these various charges of the court, and various and sundry special charges asked and refused. It is not the facts concerning the difficulty, could not be convicted of murder in killing the deceased in defense of his brother.

In Cooper v. State, 123 Tenn. 37, 138 S. W. 826, where a son had gone to his father's assistance, it was laid down as a general rule that one who intervenes in a difficulty between others stands with and must accept all the responsibility of the party for whom he intervenes. And in this case an instruction to the effect that if the son believed that his father intended to go and meet the deceased solely for the purpose of talking with him, and that when they met the deceased began firing on the son, he had the right to kill the deceased, although the father had gone toward the latter for the purpose of provoking the difficulty, was held erroneous where it was undisputed that the son knew of his father's threat to kill the deceased in sight, that such threat had been 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) communicated to the deceased, that his father approached the latter without informing him of any change of purpose, and that the son followed the father for the purpose of protecting him in case a difficulty ensued.

In Arnett v. Com. 137 Ky. 270, 125 S. W. 700, where the difficulty was brought about by reason of language used by the defendant's brother to the deceased, it was held that if the defendant killed the deceased when the latter was wrongfully attempting to strike defendant's brother with a deadly weapon, he would not be guilty if he believed and had reasonable grounds to believe that his brother was in immediate danger of death or great bodily harm, and he used no greater force in defending his brother than he reasonably believed necessary.

J. T. W.

purpose of this opinion to review all these matters in detail. It is deemed unnecessary to do so. In charging self-defense, the court gave the following: "Every person, in law, is permitted to defend himself, or to defend the person of another, against any unlawful attack, or against what to him might reasonably appear to be an unlawful attack, reasonably threatening injury to his person or to the person of another, and is justified in using all necessary and reasonable force to defend himself or the person of another, but no more than the circumstances reasonably indicate to be necessary; and homicide is justified by law, when committed in defense of one's person, or the person of another, against what, to him, reasonably appears to be an unlawful attack, made in such a manner as to produce a reasonable expectation or fear of death or some serious bodily injury," etc.

Exceptions were reserved to this charge, especially that portion of it which limited his perfect right of self-defense to the use of no more force than was necessary. This charge is not the law in regard to the matter of perfect self-defense as held by an unbroken line of authorities in this state. It has been held error to charge that, if defendant used more force than necessary to protect himself, he would be the aggressor, where perfect self-defense is the issue. When the state's case is an unprovoked attack, and the defendant's case is perfect self-defense, and where defendant had the right of self-defense at all, the question of excessive force is not involved. Rice v. State, 51 Tex. Crim. Rep. 286, 103 S. W. 1156; Terrell v. State, 53 Tex. Crim. Rep. 604, 111 S. W. 152; Hightower v. State, 56 Tex. Crim. Rep. 252, 133 Am. St. Rep. 966, 119 S. W. 691. If the evidence shows that defendant was authorized to use any force upon the theory of perfect self-defense, he was authorized to use all force necessary; and it is error to charge on the theory of excessive force. Scott v. State, 46 Tex. Crim. Rep. 313, 81 S. W. 950; Rice v. State, 51 Tex. Crim. Rep. 286, 103 S. W. 1156. It has been held error, also, to charge the defendant was not authorized to use more force than necessary, or reasonably indicated to be necessary, and where there is no evidence of excessive force, and when, if defendant's theory is to be credited, he acted while deceased was making an attack upon him. Carson v. State, 57 Tex. Crim. Rep. 394, 136 Am. St. Rep. 981, 123 S. W. 590; Huddleston v. State, 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 93, 130 Am. St. Rep. 875, 112 S. W. 64; Scott v. State, 46 Tex. Crim. Rep. 313, 81 S. W. 950.

Appellant's theory of the case, as before stated, was that of self-defense, both as to himself, as well as to protect his son from death or serious bodily injury. Under such circumstances, the question of excessive force is not in the case, and it was error to limit the right to act in perfect self-defense by charging the jury that the accused could use no more force than was necessary. Where the right of perfect self-defense is involved, and is the issue, forming the predicate of the charge, then the accused has the right to use all force necessary, without any limitation as to the quantity of such force. This doctrine also applies where the party is defending another; and this must be viewed from his standpoint, and not that of the attitude of the party to whose defense he goes. The law is that whatever he may do for himself he may do for another, under such circumstances, and this to be viewed from his standpoint. Johnson v. State, 5 Tex. App. 47; Glover v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 227, 26 S. W. 204; Glaze v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 45 S. W. 906; Garcia v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 57 S. W. 651; Martinez v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 88 S. W. 234; Johnson v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 59 S. W. 269; Monson v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 63 S. W. 647; Palmer v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 270, 83 S. W. 202; Parnell v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 424, 98 S. W. 269; Griffin v. State, 57 Tex. Crim. Rep. 280, 122 S. W. 553; Scott v. State, 60 Tex. Crim. Rep. 318, 131 S. W. 1073; Sterling v. State, 15 Tex. App. 256.

2. This brings us to another exception to the charge, which is as follows: "A person acting in behalf of another, to prevent such other from being killed, disfigured, or to sustain serious bodily injury, is entitled to the same right and justification under the law as would have the party in whose behalf he acted." Various and sundry objections are urged to this charge. The vice in this charge, it is contended, among other things, is that it is a proposition of law tersely stated, and it stands out in the charge as a separate paragraph. This charge, as stated, cannot be the law of this case. It places the defendant's attitude in an erroneous light before the jury, and one that was evidently detrimental to him. The evidence seems to be without contradiction that Jim Mayhew was in the wrong in the difficulty between himself and Burkhead, the deceased; that he went to or met Burkhead, who was riding, caught the bridle reins of his horse, and said or did something which provoked or brought about the difficulty. Burkhead alighted, and they engaged in a fight. Appellant was not present, and was not informed of the circumstances of the fight. His notification from one of the Mayhews was to the effect that they had his son down, and were killing him. In this attitude, he ran to his rescue, and as he approached the scene, he found Burkhead had his son down, and was on him. As he approached, Pruett interfered, and struck him with a rock. This charge limited appellant's right to defend his son to the same right that the son had to defend himself. Under the facts of this case, this was not the correct proposition. The unquestioned correctly stated proposition of law in regard to this matter in Texas is that the culpability of one who acts in defense of another is measured by the intent with which he acted, and not by the intent of the other, or the party for whom he was acting, unless the defendant knew or might reasonably have known the intent of the other party. Monson v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 63 S. W. 650; Guffee v. State, 8 Tex. App. 187; Henry v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 50 S. W. 399; Chambers v. State, 46 Tex. Crim. Rep. 66, 79 S. W. 572; Glover v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 227, 26 S. W. 204; Foster v. State, 8 Tex. App. 253; Snell v. State, 29 Tex. App. 240, 25 Am. St. Rep. 723, 15 S. W. 722; Parnell v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 420, 98 S. W. 269; Hargrove v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 431, 26 S. W. 903. If the appellant knew nothing about who brought on the difficulty between his son and the deceased, and came upon the scene and saw his son in peril of his life or serious bodily injury, and he interfered and killed the deceased, it would be on his part a homicide in self-defense. Chambers v. State, 46 Tex. Crim. Rep. 66, 79 S. W. 572; Parnell v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 420, 98 S. W. 269, and authorities already cited.

It is an undeniable proposition of law in this state that the apprehension of danger must always be viewed from the standpoint of the accused, whether he acts in his own behalf or in behalf of another. Parnell v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 420, 98 S. W. 269; Griffin v. State, 57 Tex. Crim. Rep. 280, 122 S. W. 553; Glover v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 227, 26 S. W. 204; Snell v. State, 29 Tex. App. 236, 25 Am. St. Rep. 723, 15 S. W. 722; Saens v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 20 S. W. 739. A party acting in defense of another is only bound to answer for his own intent. The intent of his codefendant, unless he adopts the same acts with the same intent, does not bind him. Authorities already cited. These would seem to be a sufficient number of authorities to sustain the proposition that this charge of the court was erroneous. Under this charge, the jury could have found, and doubtless did from the verdict, that appellant and his son Jim were in an agreement for Jim to bring on the difficulty, and that his father was to interfere, if it became necessary. Under the court's charge, they could easily and readily, and, perhaps, did, reach that conclusion. The state's theory was that this agreement or understanding was had between the parties, and in pursuance of this, when the fight came on, appellant rushed upon the scene and engaged in the conflict. This was the state's theory, and this theory is emphasized in the charge by leaving the jury to look at the defense's proposition from the standpoint of the son, and not the standpoint of the appellant. The son had provoked the difficulty, and if appellant knew that, and engaged in the difficulty under these circumstances, the charge was correct; but it was an issue earnestly combated by appellant in his testimony and throughout the trial. This was error.

3. The charge on threats, is also made the subject of exception. As before stated, it had been communicated to appellant that deceased had made threats. The language employed by the court is as follows: "You are further charged that, should you believe from the evidence that prior to the difficulty between the deceased and Jim Mayhew, the deceased made a threat or threats to take the life of Jim Mayhew, or to do him serious bodily harm, and if, from knowledge of such threats, it reasonably appeared to the defendant, at the time he stabbed and cut the deceased, if he did so, that the deceased was then about to carry out and to put in execution such threat so previously made, and was then about to take the life of Jim Mayhew, or to do him serious bodily harm, or, should you believe from the evidence that, at the time the defendant stabbed and cut the deceased, if he did so, it then reasonably appeared to the defendant that he (deceased) was then making any hostile demonstration toward Jim Mayhew reasonably evidencing an intention to put into execution such threat, if any, and was then about to inflict death or some serious bodily harm upon Jim Mayhew, and that, reasonably believing such action to be necessary to prevent the infliction of death or serious bodily harm upon said Jim Mayhew, the defendant stabbed and cut the deceased, if he did do so, you would in such case acquit the defendant."

A casual inspection of this charge will discover that the jury was required to believe the threats were made, and not that the defendant so believed. If defendant was informed that the threats were made, and believed and acted upon them, they were the same to him as if they were in fact made; but the jury was not so instructed on this phase of the law, but on the contrary, the criterion was given the jury that they should believe the threats were or had been made. If the defendant believed the threats had been made, and acted upon them under the conditions stated, he would be entitled to an acquittal, whether the jury, in the light of subsequent events, believed them or not. It is the defendant's belief of the threats that prompts his action, and the case must be viewed from that standpoint, and not from the jury's standpoint. It has been always held error to require the jury to find that threats were made. Defendant would have the right to act on them if he believed they were made. Swain v. State, 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 103, 86 S. W. 335; Huddleston v. State, 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 93, 130 Am. St. Rep. 875, 112 S. W. 64; Buckner v. State, 55 Tex. Crim. Rep. 517, 117 S. W. 802; Lundy v. State, 59 Tex. Crim. Rep. 131, 127 S. W. 1034; Hightower v. State, 56 Tex. Crim. Rep. 251, 133 Am. St. Rep. 906, 119 S. W. 691.

4. There is another exception to the charge which it may be well enough to notice. The court charged the jury that if defendant made an attempt to go to the place where Will Burkhead and Jim Mayhew were engaged in a conflict on the ground, if they were so engaged, and in making such attempt was attacked by one A. M. Pruett, and at the time he stabbed or cut deceased, if he did so, it reasonably appeared to defendant that Will Burkhead and A. M. Pruett were then present and acting together for the purpose of taking the life of said Jim Mayhew, or doing him some serious bodily injury, then defendant had the right to take the life of either or both the said Will Burkhead and A. M. Pruett, if it reasonably appeared, etc. The contention is made that this limited the right of self-defense on the part of appellant, and made it contingent on whether Burkhead and Pruett were acting together, and whether Pruett made an actual attack on defendant; whereas he would have the right to defend as well against either or both as if they were not acting together, and equally so if Pruett had made an attack upon the defendant. This charge is, to say the least of it, awkwardly framed, and upon another trial appellant's legal rights in regard to this phase of the testimony should be more aptly stated. This seems to have been a limitation upon appellant's right of self-defense, and may have been so regarded by the jury. While it is unquestionably true that appellant would have the right to defend against Burkhead and Pruett, acting together to take the life of his son, at the same time, he would have the right to act against Burkhead and deceased as well without a concert of action as with such concert. The limitation, from this aspect of the case, upon another trial, should not be so strictly limited to a concert of action between the parties to take the life of the son of appellant.

5. There are several charges asked, among others, by the accused to the effect that if the killing occurred, not on a previously formed design, but on a subsequently formed design, that the jury would attribute it to the latter, and not the original design. There had been a difficulty in the morning, as before stated, in which appellant was not a party in any way, but which had been communicated to and angered him, and he used language indicating resentment. This had passed, and defendant's testimony was that he had gone to his place of business, and was engaged in other matters, when he was informed of the trouble between his son and the deceased, and that he then rushed to his defense. The jury's attention should have been called to this, and if the killing occurred with reference to the latter transaction, and the purpose to kill was in defense of his son from that standpoint, and not from any previous provocation that may have arisen, then they would give defendant the benefit of that view of the case, and impute it to the latter, instead of the former, design. The state's theory was appellant was acting under former design, aided by the claimed agreement to whip or kill deceased. Appellant contradicted this by his testimony. Such a charge was called for and pertinent. We understand this to be the law in Texas since the famous decision by Judge Roberts, in the case of McCoy v. State, 25 Tex. 33, 78 Am. Dec. 520.

There are other errors urged for reversal, but, in view of what has been said, we deem it unnecessary to discuss them.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

KOKOMO NATURAL GAS & OIL COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

ELIZABETH L. MATLOCK.

(— Ind. —, 97 N. E. 787.)

Pleading — oil and gas lease — completion of well.

1. One suing for the rental to be paid for Note. — Lease as encumbrance or conveyance within statute requiring joinder or consent of spouse.

Perkins v. Morse, 78 Me. 17, 57 Am. Rep. 780, 2 Atl. 130, holds that a lease is not a an option to explore land for oil and gas need not allege that no well had been completed which would change the measure of compensation, since such fact would be matter of defense.

Husband and wife — encumbrance of wife's estate — oil and gas lease.

2. An option to explore land for oil and gas for a period of five years, with right of renewal, is not an encumbrance so as to require a man to join his wife in the granting thereof upon her land, under a statute giving her control of her separate estate with a right to its rents and profits, but providing that no conveyance or encumbrance of the property shall be made unless he joins in the conveyance.

Landlord and tenant — oil and gas — action for rent — necessity of possession.

3. That the lessee never took possession of land under an oil and gas lease does not defeat an action for the compensation provided by the lease to be paid for the right to explore the property for these substances.

(March 6, 1912.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Tipton County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the compensation provided by a gas and oil lease. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

conveyance within the meaning of a statute forbidding conveyances by a married woman without the joinder of her husband. In this case the court said: "The word 'convey' or 'conveyance' must refer to an alienation of the estate,—a transference of the title. It is 'real estate' that cannot be conveyed. A lease is personal property. It bargains away a temporary possession,—does not dispose of any fee or title. There is no inhibition against a sale of personal property by the wife alone, although given to her by the husband. Real estate 'conveyed to' a married woman is the property described; 'cannot be conveyed by her' are the words to be interpreted. A lease may be in a sense a conveyance, but such is not the commonly accepted nor the accurate meaning of the term. When we say 'premises are leased' we generally mean that the use of them is transferred; and by the term 'conveyed' that the title is deeded. It is a significant fact that the word 'convey' is many times used in the Revised Statutes, and especially in chapter 73 relating to conveyances, and generally, if not at all times, in the sense of an alienation of the title to real estate. The distinction is clearly observed in § 8, which provides that 'no conveyance of an estate, etc., or lease for more than seven years,' shall be effectual against third persons, unless the deed be recorded. If the legislature intended that the wife should not lease property acquired by her through her husband, it would have been easy to declare its intention in explicit terms. It is 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. Bell & Purdum for appellant.
Messrs. Joseph C. Henon and Oglebay & Oglebay for appellee.

Monks, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellee brought this action against appellant upon a written contract, to recover the compensation provided therein for the right to explore 112½ acres of land for natural gas and oil. Trial by the court, and judgment for appellee.

The errors assigned call in question the action of the court in overruling appellant's demurrer to the complaint and the motion for a new trial. The written contract sued on was entered into by appellee with one Forehand, granting him the exclusive right to explore the land therein described, belonging to her, "for natural gas and oil, for the period of five years, with the privilege of a further period of five years for the same purpose and upon the same terms, and as much longer as gas and oil may be found in paying quantities," the second party, Forehand, to pay to the party of the first part compensation at the rate of 50 cents per acre per annum after the expiration of the first year, "until the completion of a well on said premises, which shall, in his opinion, produce gas in sufficient quantities hardly to be supposed that it was left to be implied. A married woman is not limited in the management of her property, however obtained by her. She may control its income, unless she releases it to her husband. How can she manage this property or control its income, when not occupying it, unless she can rent it? The counsel for the defendant argues that if the wife could lease at all, she can lease the farm for ninety-nine years,—a lease practically equivalent to a conveyance of title. This argument is quite plausible, but not in our judgment sound. If the wife cannot make a lease for two years, it must be because she cannot lease at all. If the lease is for ninety-nine years, a rent will be presumed to be reserved. It would be different from an absolute conveyance, which might result in a waste or loss of the property. If the statute needs amendment, the legislature can amend it. We construe it as it stands."

And it was held in New Jersey that a married woman could execute a lease for years upon her real property, notwithstanding the statute in relation to property of married women provided that nothing therein should enable a married woman to execute any conveyance or any instrument encumbering the same without her husband joining therein. Sullivan v. Barry, 46 N. J. L. 1, followed in Sullivan v. Barry, 47 N. J. L. 339, 1 Atl. 240.

This rule was recognized in Shipley v. Smith, 162 Ind. 526, 70 N. E. 803; but the case held the lease subject to disaffirm-to justify said second party in marketing said gas." The contract then provides what compensation shall be paid after a well is completed. "Said payments to be due and payable semiannually, on the 1st day of January and the 1st day of July. The second party to have the right to cancel and end the contract at any time. . . . All conditions and rights between the parties hereto shall extend to their heirs, executors, and assigns." On February 4, 1905, said Forehand assigned said contract to the Indiana Northern Oil & Gas Company, and said corporation afterward assigned said contract to appellant. Appellant afterward, on June 24, 1908, canceled said contract, as it had the right to do under the terms thereof.

Appellant insists that the complaint was insufficient because it was not alleged therein that "neither appellant nor its immediate or remote assignor had drilled or completed any well upon said land." It will be observed that the compensation to be paid was 50 cents per acre per annum after the first year, until a well had been completed, as provided in the contract. If any such well had been completed by appellant or its assignors, the same was a matter of defense as to so much of the complaint as sought to recover the compensation of 50 cents per acre per annum thereafter. In an action on a contract by which the defendant is only to pay the consideration until the doing of some act by the defendant or other person, as the completion of a well, the plaintiff is not required to aver that the act has not been done or the contingency has not happened. That is a matter of defense to be set up by the defendant. 1 Chitty, Pl. 14th Am. ed. by Perkins, § 321; 1 Chitty, Pl. 16th Am. ed. by Perkins, § 246; Gould, Pl. §§ 17, 19, pp. 164, 165; 9 Cyc. 727; 1 Abbott, Trial Brief Pl. & Demurrer, 2d ed. § 182, p. 360; Root v. Childs, 68 Minn. 142, 146, 70 N. W. 1087; Wooters v. International & G. N. R. Co. 54 Tex. 294; Redman v. Aetna Ins. Co. 49 Wis. 431, 435-442, 4 N. W. 591; Griswold v. Scott, 13 Ga. 210, 214.

The second error assigned by appellant is the overruling of the motion for new trial on the ground that the finding of the court was not supported by sufficient evidence, and was contrary to law. It is contended that the contract upon which appellee sued "was void, for the reason that appellee, being a married woman, was prohibited by statute from conveying or encumbering her land unless her husband had joined in such conveyance or encumbrance." The question presented is whether or not this con-ance, upon the ground that the married woman was also an infant, the court saying that this statute simply removed the disability of coverture, but did not emancipate from the disability of infancy.

Perhaps it should be observed that in the case of Heal v. Niagara Oil Co. 150 Ind. 483, 50 N. E. 482, which is otherwise sufficiently set out in KOKOMO NATURAL GAS & OIL CO. v. MATLOCK, it was urged that the lease was void under the Indiana statute forbidding a married woman to encumber or convey property except by deed in which her husband should join.

It was said in Vandevoort v. Gould, 36 N.Y. 639, that where the instrument creating the separate estate of the wife expressly stated that the property was conveyed to her for her sole use and benefit, free from all interference by her husband, a lease thereof by her for five years was not a sale and conveyance, within the purview of a statute requiring the assent of the husband to a conveyance by the wife.

Some decisions, however, incline toward the contrary view.

Thus, an oil lease for twelve years executed by a married woman, her husband not joining, was declared void in Buchanan v. Hazzard, 95 Pa. 240, on the authority of Trimmer v. Heagy, 16 Pa. 487. The latter case, however, involved a deed, and not a lease, and it appears therein that the statutes provided that the real estate of the wife could be conveyed by a deed executed by the husband and wife. However, in Welsh v. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Oates, 9 Phila. 154, Lynd, J., holds that a lease for a year is not a disposal or conveyance, within the meaning of this statute, but is a right accruing to her under a provision assuring her the "use and enjoyment" of her separate estate. The court disapproved language to the contrary, appearing in Miller v. Harbert, 6 Phila. 531, holding that the respective length of leases which should be deemed to have been executed as incident to the right of use and enjoyment, and of those which constituted a disposal, was a question of law; and that necessarily the right to use and enjoyment included the power to lease for a term of one year.

So, it is held that a lease is an encumbrance within the meaning of a statute in relation to community property, and that therefore the husband could not execute a lease of the community without the wife's joinder. Hoover v. Chambers, 3 Wash. Terr. 28, 13 Pac. 547.

Without expressly discussing the matter, the court, in Emrick v. Sullivan, 25 U. C. Q. B. 105, seemed to assume that a life lease was a conveyance in which the husband must join, for, in holding the lease void for nonjoinder of the husband, the court said that the statute, although enabling a married woman to hold and enjoy her real estate free from the debts and obligations of the husband, left the law "as to the conveying such estate untouched."

In Melley v. Casey, 99 Mass. 241, holding that to make a lease by the wife binding upon the husband, it must be made with his tract for exploring her land for natural gas and oil for five years, with privilege of renewal, was a conveyance or encumbrance of said land within the meaning of the statute. Section 7852, Burns's 1908, provides that "no lands of any married woman shall be liable for the debts of her husband; but such lands and the profits therefrom shall be her separate property, as fully as if she were unmarried: Provided, that such wife shall have no power to encumber or convey such lands, except by deed in which her husband shall join." Section 7853, Burns's 1908, provides that "a married woman may take, acquire, and hold property, real or personal, by conveyance, gift, devise, or descent, or by purchase with her own separate means or money; and the same, together with all the rents, issues, income, and profits thereof shall be and remain her own separate property, and under her own control, the same as if she were unmarried."

assent, which the statute requires, it did not appear whether or not the statute expressly specified leases. So, also, as to Child v. Sampson, 117 Mass. 63, holding that the statute was sufficiently complied with when the husband signed merely as an attesting witness.

Ables v. Ables, 86 Tenn. 333, 9 S. W. 692, holds merely that, while a statute providing that the rents and profits of the wife's separate estate shall in no manner be subject to the husband's debts or contracts, except by her written consent, protected such rents from the husband's creditors, and extinguished his right to contract them away over her objection, still it did not in any other respect interfere with the husband's ancient right as governor of the family, to control his wife's land; and that therefore she could not lease such lands without his consent.

It was held in an Alabama case that a wife was authorized to lease her statutory separate estate when joined by her husband, by a statute authorizing her to sell and convey real and personal property. Warren v. Wagner, 75 Ala. 188, 51 Am. Rep. 446.

Other cases seem to take the position that leases not required to be in writing by the statute of frauds are not such conveyances as require the joinder of the spouse.

Thus, it has been held that a lease for a period of time coming within the exception of the statute of frauds, and therefore not required to be in writing, is not an encumbrance or conveyance within the meaning of a statute providing that the wife shall have no power to encumber or convey her separate property, except by deed in which the husband shall join. Pearcy v. Henley, 82 Ind. 120, cited in Nash v. Berkmeir, 83 Ind. 536, which does not, however, decide the precise question.

And, conversely, it was held in Chandler v. Jost, 81 Ala. 411, 2 So. 82, that while the husband could as trustee lease his wife's separate estate for a period of one year, a 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Where a married woman is given by statute the right to the rents, issues, income, and profits of her land, and is given the control of the land, the same as if unmarried, it is evident that she has the power to lease her land for a term of years, without her husband joining in such lease. In Illinois a statute similar to § 7853, supra, has been construed to mean that a married woman may lease her separate property for a term of years without the consent of her husband, and such a lease for a period of ten years was held binding. Parent v. Callender, 64 Ill. 97; 21 Cyc. 1501. It has been held in this state that a lease of real estate for years is personal property and passes to the personal representative of the lessee, and not to his heir. Shipley v. Smith, 162 Ind. 526, 528, 529, 70 N. E. 803, and cases cited. It has also been held under §§ 7852, 7853, supra, that a lease by a married woman of her lands for the purpose of cultivation, for lease for a longer term was a species of sale required to be in writing, and in which the wife must unite to make it valid.

So, it is held in Dority v. Dority, 96 Tex. 215, 60 L.R.A. 941, 71 S. W. 950, that a lease of land which is the separate estate of a married woman, for a period of more than one year, is a conveyance within the meaning of a statute requiring husband and wife to join in the conveyance of real estate, the separate property of the wife, and forbidding the conveyance of an estate for a term of more than one year, unless the conveyance be in writing; and the wife must therefore join in this execution, notwithstanding a statute giving the husband the sole management of the wife's property during marriage.

As to the effect of one spouse joining in the execution of the other's deed or mortgage, to convey the former's separate property included therein, see the note in 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 289.

As to the effect of the nonjoinder of the husband in the wife's executory contract to convey, where his joinder is essential to a conveyance, see the note in 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 353.

As to the validity of the limitation upon the power of alienation imposed upon a grant or devise of an equitable estate to a married woman, see the note in 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 426.

As to the power of the husband without the wife's consent, to abandon the homestead, or to convey premises by his sole deed after abandonment, see the note in 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 807.

As to the validity of a conveyance or encumbrance of the homestead by the wife, after the husband has abandoned her, see the note in 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1024. And as to the husband's conveyance of the homestead after abandonment by the wife see the note in 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 565.

L. A. W.

a term not exceeding three years, is not an encumbrance or conveyance within the meaning of this statute, and that it was not essential to the validity of the lease that the husband join in the execution thereof. Ibid.; Pearcy v. Henley, 82 Ind. 129; Nash v. Berkmeir, 83 Ind. 536.

Appellant contends, on the authority of these cases, that a contract by a married woman for the exploration of her land for natural gas and oil, in which her husband did not join, and which runs for a term longer than three years, is an encumbrance under the statute, and therefore void. Said cases do not sustain this contention. While they sustain leases made by a married woman of her lands for three years, where her husband did not join therein, they do not hold that such a lease so executed would be void if for a longer period than three years. It has been held by this court that the rules applying to the relation of landlord and tenant have no application to a contract like the one in this case. Hancock v. Diamond Plate Glass Co. 162 Ind. 146, 153, 70 N. E. 149; New American Oil & Min. Co. v. Troyer, 166 Ind. 402, 412, 76 N. E. 253, 77 N. E. 739; Dill v. Frazee, 169 Ind. 53, 57, 79 N. E. 971. In Heal v. Niagara Oil Co. 150 Ind. 483, 486, 50 N. E. 482, 483, the contract was executed by a married woman, Mrs. Swan, her husband not joining therein, giving the exclusive right of prospecting and exploring for gas and oil on her land, and was substantially the same as the contract sued upon in this case, except that the provisions in regard to the term were "for the term of one year and as much longer as oil and gas is found in paying quantities thereon or the rental paid by lessee. . . . If no well be completed on the above-described premises within six months from the date hereof, then this lease shall become null and void, unless the lessee shall thereafter pay for the further delay at the rate of $80 per year, until a well shall be completed." The court held in that case that the contract only gave the right of prospecting and exploring for natural gas and oil, and that Mrs. Swan, the married woman who executed the same, parted with "no immediate title or estate," and that any "title or estate which may be contemplated remaining inchoate and of no effect until oil or gas is found. . . . For the purpose of prospecting, such leases involve a mere use, and part with no greater interest in the freehold than the ordinary agricultural lease. We have here no question of the effect of the instrument of Mrs. Swan to carry a freehold estate; the question being as to the validity of the lease to the appellees, in vesting the exclusive right of prospecting or operating for gas and oil. For such purpose we do not doubt the power of Mrs. Swan to lease without her husband joining." New American Oil & Min. Co. v. Troyer, 166 Ind. 402, 411, 412, 76 N. E. 253, 77 N. E. 739. In this case no well was ever completed, and the contract under which appellant had the right to explore said real estate of appellee for natural gas and oil was canceled by appellant on June 24, 1908. Appellant canceled said contract according to the provisions thereof. Upon the authority of Heal v. Niagara Oil Co. supra, we hold the contract sued upon in this case was not an encumbrance or conveyance of appellee's land, and was valid, although her husband did not join therein. The mere fact that such a contract gives five years with the privilege of renewal, for prospecting and exploring for natural gas and oil, does not make it any more an encumbrance or conveyance than if it were for a period less than three years.

It is contended by appellant that the finding of the court is not sustained by sufficient evidence, because it was not shown that appellant ever took or held possession of said land under said contract. It is not material whether appellant or its assigns took or held possession of said land. It may be, as the contract sued upon is not a lease, and the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between appellant and appellee (Dill v. Frazee, 169 Ind. 53, 57, 79 N. E. 971, and cases cited) that, unless there was a beneficial use or occupation of the land by appellant, no action could be maintained on an implied agreement to pay. Dill v. Frazee, supra, 169 Ind. 57. This, however, is not an action on an implied agreement, but on an express contract to pay 50 cents per acre per annum, not as rent, but compensation for the delay. As long as said contract was in force, appellant had the right to enter upon said land and prospect for natural gas and oil, and it is liable for the compensation fixed in said contract for such right, to the date said lease was canceled. In Hancock v. Diamond Plate Glass Co. 162 Ind. 146, 150, 70 N. E. 149, 151, where no possession had been taken, this court said: "On the part of the company, it agreed, in equally certain terms, to give appellants for the valuable concession a supply of free gas for domestic use, and pay them $20 in cash, not for one year, but for every year that might elapse before it made a well on the premises, and thereafter $100 per annum for each well. As we have seen, the company has not bound itself to construct a gas well on appellant's land within any specified time; but, so long as natural gas continues in general use for manufacturing purposes, it has bound itself to pay the annual sum of $20 until it does make such a well. The parties themselves have agreed upon the thing to be done, and the exact amount to be paid when done, and for the delay in the doing of it, and we cannot look beyond the agreement. It is not to be supposed for a moment that either party understood when the contract was entered into that the company was to have these valuable and continuing rights without rendering to appellants what was deemed to be a coequal, valuable, continuing consideration. Nor is it to be doubted that it was the mutual understanding that, as long as the company excluded others from mining the gas on appellant's land, it should be liable for the sum it agreed to pay for the right to do so. We must so view the agreement, because in accord with the plain, simple meaning of its terms, and in harmony with a proper sense of fairness and natural justice."

Finding no error, the judgment is affirmed.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

RE PETITION OF ANNA M. CLARK, on behalf of George W. Clark.

(86 Kan. 539, 121 Pac. 492.)

Criminal law — insane criminal — incarceration — ex post facto law.

1. Section 5 of chapter 299 of the Laws of 1911, providing that a person acquitted of a criminal charge on the ground that he was insane when the offense was committed shall be committed to the asylum for the dangerous insane, and shall not be liberated therefrom except as prescribed in the act, is not ex post facto as to a person tried and acquitted on that ground after the statute was enacted for an offense committed before its passage.

Same — constitutionality.

2. The section referred to in the preceding paragraph is not obnoxious to the provision of the Federal Constitution that a state shall not deprive any person of due process of law, nor to the provisions of the state Constitution that all persons for injuries to person, reputation, or property shall have remedy by due course of law.

(February 10, 1912.)

Headnotes by BENSON, J.

Note. — The question of confinement of one acquitted of crime by reason of insanity is covered by notes to Ex parte Brown, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 540, and People ex rel. Peabody v. Chanler, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 946.

Trial of insane person as former jeopardy, see note to Com. v. Endrukut, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 470.
38 L.R.A.(N.S.)

PETITION for a writ of habeas corpus to secure the release of George W. Clark from an insane asylum to which he had been committed upon acquittal of murder because of insanity. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Edgar Foster and Albert Hoskinson for petitioner.

Messrs. Clad Hamilton, Clay Hamilton, and E. R. Thorpe, with Mr. John S. Dawson, Attorney General, for respondent:

No person has a vested right in a rule of procedure regardless of the time when a cause of action has arisen, and the procedure must be that prescribed by law at the time of trial.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 326, 327; State ex rel. Thompson v. Snell, 49 Wash. 177, 94 Pac. 926; St. Louis v. Calhoun, 222 Mo. 44, 120 S. W. 1152; Re Patterson, 155 Cal. 626, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 654, 132 Am. St. Rep. 116, 102 Pac. 941, 18 Ann. Cas. 625; Harris v. United States, 4 Okla. Crim. Rep. 317, 31 L.R.R.A.(N.S.) 820, 111 Pac. 982, Ann. Cas. 1912 B. 810.

Petitioner is not confined as punishment for crime, but because of a mental deficiency or condition of insanity which renders him dangerous to the public.

Com. v. Ellis, 207 Mass. 572, 93 N. E. 823; State v. Strasburg, 60 Wash. 106, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1216, 110 Pac. 1020, Ann. Cas. 1912 B, 917; People ex rel. Peabody v. Chanler, 133 App. Div. 159, 117 N. Y. Supp. 322.

There was due notice and a hearing.

Re Brown, 39 Wash. 160, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 540, 109 Am. St. Rep. 868, 81 Pac. 552, 4 Ann. Cas. 488; Brown v. Urquhart, 139 Fed. 846, 205 U. S. 179, 51 L. ed. 760, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459.

The statute provides for release upon recovery.

Re Brown, 39 Wash. 160, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 540, 109 Am. St. Rep. 868, 81 Pac. 552, 4 Ann. Cas. 488; Re Boyett, 136 N. C. 415, 67 L.R.A. 972, 103 Am. St. Rep. 944, 48 S. E. 789, 1 Ann. Cas. 729.

The legislature may empower the court to act upon the theory that a mental state recently shown to exist continues to exist up to the time of the order of commitment.

State ex rel. Thompson v. Snell, 46 Wash. 327, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1191, 89 Pac. 931; Re Brown, 39 Wash. 160, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 540, 109 Am. St. Rep. 868, 81 Pac. 552, 4 Ann. Cas. 488; People ex rel. Peabody v. Chanler, 196 N. Y. 525, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 946, 89 N. E. 1109, 133 App. Div. 159, 117 N. Y. Supp. 322; People ex rel. Thaw v. Lamb, 118 N. Y. Supp. 389; People ex rel. Peabody v. Baker, 59 Misc. 359, 110 N. Y. Supp. 848; Re Thaw, 138 App. Div. 91, 122 N. Y. Supp. 970; People ex rel. Peabody v. Chanler, 116 N. Y. Supp. 62.

Benson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On a trial for murder George W. Clark introduced evidence to prove that he was insane when the homicide occurred. The jury found the defendant not guilty, because at the time of the commission of the offense he was insane. Thereupon the defendant was committed to the Asylum for the Dangerous Insane for safe-keeping and treatment, and was in that institution when this writ was issued. The contention is that the statute under which he was committed is ex post facto as to Clark; that it is unconstitutional because it deprived him of the right to trial by jury in the probate court, of the question of his sanity at the time of commitment, and, if insane, of the benefit of admission to a regular hospital for treatment; and that it deprives him of the right to institute proceedings to obtain his discharge and of liberty without due process of law. Section 5 of the statute, which took effect March 17, 1911, reads: "Whenever during the trial of any person on an indictment or information, and evidence is introduced to prove that he was insane, an idiot or imbecile, or of unsound mind, at the time of the commission of the offense, and such person shall be found to have been at the date of the offense alleged in said indictment or information, insane, an idiot, or an imbecile, and is acquitted on that ground, the jury or the court, as the case may be, shall so state in the verdict, and in said case it shall be the duty of the jury to pass specially on the question of the sanity of the defendant, and the court shall thereupon forthwith commit such person to the State Asylum for the Dangerous Insane for safe-keeping and treatment, and such person shall be received and cared for at said institution. No such person so acquitted shall be liberated therefrom except upon the order of the court committing him thereto, and until the superintendent of the said Asylum for the Dangerous Insane shall certify in writing to such committing court that in his opinion such person is wholly recovered, and that no person will be in danger by his discharge." Laws 1911, chap. 299, § 5. The homicide occurred on December 12, 1910, and the trial took place in April, 1911.

When the act charged in the information was committed, there was no provision for commitment to an asylum for the dangerous insane, and it is argued that the statute passed afterwards authorizing such commitment is ex post facto. There were, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

of course, at that time, other provisions of law providing for the restraint of insane persons, and their treatment in institutions provided for the purpose. The commitment is not for punishment, but for the restraint and treatment of insane persons. State v. Linderholm, 84 Kan. 603, 114 Pac. 857; State ex rel. Thompson v. Snell, 49 Wash. 177, 181, 94 Pac. 926.

The term ex post facto, as used in the Constitution, relates to criminal punishment, and has no relation to other retrospective laws. Cooley, Const. Lim., 6th ed. 318; Meffert v. State Bd. of Medical Registration (Meffert v. Packer) 66 Kan. 710, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 811, 72 Pac. 247. The statute merely provides a new procedure for the restraint, care, and treatment of a class of the insane. It would be strange if the legislature could not change the procedure affecting insane people, or if such new procedure could not relate to persons thus afflicted before the passage of an act authorizing the inquiry. The state also has the undoubted right to classify the insane for treatment, and this is constantly done in ordinary asylums. Certainly those who are dangerous may be segregated in a separate building as well as in a separate ward. It is contended that the act by its terms authorizes the deprivation of liberty without due process of law, first, because there is no provision for finding whether an accused person is insane at the time of his trial on the criminal charge, and, second, because he has no power to commence proceedings for release when restored to reason. While an orderly proceeding adapted to the nature of the case is essential, inquests called in cases of alleged insanity, such as are ordinarily provided by the statutes of various states and by laws of our state, are sufficient. Gen. Stat. 1909, §§ 4819-4854, chap. 8464-8470. A jury trial is not necessary, although the tribunal provided for the purpose may be called a jury, and the inquest designated a trial. State v. Linderholm, 84 Kan. 603, 114 Pac. 857; Re Latta, 43 Kan. 533, 23 Pac. 655; Re Dowdell, 61 Am. St. Rep. 290, and note, 293 (169 Mass. 387, 47 N. E. 1033) notes in 13 Ann. Cas. 877, and 1 Ann. Cas. 733. The same well-established rule applies in cases where delinquent children are committed to industrial schools. Ferrier's Petition, 103 Ill. 387, 43 Am. Rep. 10. "Legislation is not open to the charge of depriving one of his rights without due process of law, if it be general in its operation upon the subjects to which it relates, and is enforceable in the usual modes established in the administration of government with respect to kindred matters; that is, by process or proceedings adapted to the nature of the case." Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 124, 32 L. ed. 623, 626, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231, 234. The confinement of persons acquitted of crime by reason of insanity is a matter of common statutory regulation in this country. Note in 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 540. It was said in the note last cited: "The right to confine one who is still insane, and who is dangerous to the public peace and safety, until such time as he can be released with safety, providing that the present existence of such insanity or dangerous condition is properly shown, has apparently never been questioned; and it would seem that no objection thereto could be successfully raised."

Questions arising under such statutes relating to the present existence of insanity, and how that fact should be determined, have afforded occasion for much judicial consideration. A statute of Washington contains this provision: "When any person indicted or informed against for an offense shall, on trial, be acquitted by reason of insanity, the jury, in giving their verdict of not guilty, shall state that it was given for such cause; and thereupon, if the discharge or going at large of such insane person shall be considered by the court manifestly dangerous to the peace and safety of the community, the court may order him to be committed to prison, or may give him into the care of his friends, if they shall give bonds, with surety to the satisfaction of the court, conditioned that he shall be well and securely kept; otherwise he shall be discharged." 2 Ballinger's, Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 6959. In Re Brown, 39 Wash. 160, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 540, 109 Am. St. Rep. 868, 81 Pac. 552, 4 Ann. Cas. 488, it was contended that the statute was void for the reasons urged here. The court said: "Has the petitioner been deprived of due process of law in the premises? He was tried before a jury, to whom he himself submitted the issue that he was insane when the crime was committed. He was permitted to fully introduce his evidence upon that subject, and the jury were instructed as to their duty in the premises. The verdict returned was in his favor upon the issue which he tendered, and he was therefore accorded due process of law and the right of trial by jury upon that subject." The opinion referred to the presumption that general insanity once shown to exist still continues, and held that the burden was upon the accused person to show that he was sane at the time of the trial, which he neither alleged nor proved, but demanded his discharge as a matter of right, which was denied, and the act was held valid. A later application in habeas corpus proceedings in behalf of the 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) same prisoner was made to a Federal court, which also held that the act was valid; that, while it provided no procedure for trying the issue of insanity at the time of the commitment, the court had the inherent right to cause an arraignment, and to give a hearing upon the question in an ordinary course of practice, still, because that was not done, his discharge was ordered. Brown v. Urquhart (C. C.) 139 Fed. 846. This judgment of the Federal court was, however reversed in Urquhart v. Brown, 205 U. S. 179, 51 L. ed. 760, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459, but without expressing any opinion on the constitutionality of the act. In a later case the supreme court of the same state held that a statute providing for inquiry concerning persons alleged to be insane, and their commitment to a hospital, had no application to persons acquitted of crime on the ground of insanity. The court, reaffirming the constitutionality of the statute relating to such persons, said: "The question is suggested as to what evidence establishes his 'manifestly dangerous' condition. The fact of his having killed a human being is conclusive that he was 'dangerous,' and the verdict of the jury that he was insane at the time of the homicide; and, unless there is clear, ample, and conclusive evidence that his mental condition has undergone a radical change toward a normal condition since that time, the trial judge should not hesitate to find him 'manifestly dangerous' within the meaning of the statute." State ex rel. Thompson v. Snell, 46 Wash. 327, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1191, 89 Pac. 931. The courts of New York have given much consideration to a statute of that state somewhat similar to our own on this subject, and designed to accomplish the same end, in the various Thaw Cases. Thaw was committed to a hospital for the criminal insane in pursuance to a provision of the New York Criminal Code as follows: "When the defense is insanity of the defendant, the jury must be instructed, if they acquit him on that ground, to state the fact with their verdict. The court must, thereupon, if the defendant be in custody, and they deem his discharge dangerous to the public peace or safety, order him to be committed to the state lunatic asylum until he becomes sane." Cook's Crim. & Penal Code of N. Y. 1897, Crim. Code, § 454. He sought release in habeas corpus proceedings. Mr. Justice Jenks in an opinion upon this application, reported in People ex rel. Peabody v. Chandler, 123 App. Div. 159, 117 N. Y. Supp. 322, said: "But, as there is no provision for enlightenment of the court in any other manner, it must be that the legislature intended that the court could rest its conclusion upon the evidence given at the trial and the appearance of the defendant thereat. If the defendant's plea was insanity, and it had prevailed, it would follow that insanity was litigated at the trial. Although the inquiry at the trial would be directed to insanity at the time of the commission of the offense, yet the evidence might establish that such insanity had not ceased, but had continued; that it was chronic, that the defendant might then or thereafter, in the very nature of his disease, be subject to recurrences of a state of mind like unto that in him when he committed the alleged crime. And, moreover, such evidence might well bear directly upon the condition of the defendant at the time of trial. . . . It cannot then be said that a defendant who makes the plea of insanity, and seeks to establish it, did not have notice under this provision of a hearing that might reveal his condition of insanity at the time of his trial, and a hearing of which the result might be such commitment upon acquittal for insanity, under the said provision of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as was made in this case. . . . Such a commitment is not for the punishment of such a defendant, for there can be no punishment for him who has been acquitted, but it is for protection for the public, made in the exercise of the police power of the state, which permits the restraint of an insane person who at large would be a danger to the peace and safety of the people. . . . Freund on the Police Power (§ 255) says: "The right to apply at any time for discharge has been held to reconcile even the absence of hearing in the first instance with the constitutional requirement of due process, and, if upon such proceeding the petitioner is found to be insane, his detention may be continued." pp. 160-163. The opinion of Judge Jenks also states that, by the provision of the Code (quoted above), the defendant had notice and a hearing that contemplated the process upon which he was committed, and, besides, the provisions of express law whereby he could institute proceedings to establish his sanity and secure his release satisfied the constitutional safeguards invoked against the statute. Mr. Justice Rich, in a concurring opinion in the same case, said: "Upon his trial Thaw had established his insanity at the time the crime was committed. It is presumed to continue until the contrary is shown, which in this case has not been done. His condition had led to one murder, and it cannot be said that the duty devolving upon the court to safeguard the public by the detention of the prisoner under the provisions of § 454 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was improperly exercised. The order was a valid adjudication of his then insanity to an extent rendering his liberty dangerous to the public." p. 173. The court of appeals affirmed the judgment denying the writ, upon the opinions of the two justices referred to. People ex rel. Peabody v. Chanler, 196 N. Y. 525, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 947, 89 N. E. 1109.

The grounds upon which the statute was held valid suggested in these opinions may be briefly summarized thus: (1) That insanity of a nature dangerous to others proved on the trial was presumed to continue to the time of the commitment; (2) that the commitment was based on evidence showing the continuance of such insane condition; and (3) that, the commitment resulting from the express command of the statute, the trial and verdict upon the criminal charge was only an equivalent of proceedings provided to determine the question of insanity in cases not involving a charge of crime. Doubtless there is merit in each of these views, and each should have weight in upholding a statute which is not to be set aside unless clearly unconstitutional. If the legislature in framing the law sought to give practical effect to the ordinary presumption referred to, which, so well accords with ordinary observation and experience, no good reason is perceived why it could not do so, leaving a reasonable opportunity for a future determination of the question whether and when the detention should cease.

A further question remains to be considered. It is earnestly insisted that the right to a remedy by due course of law is denied by this act; that it prevents the subject or anyone acting for him from instituting proceedings for his release when restored to sanity. The alleged deprivation rests upon the requirement of a certificate from the superintendent that the person is recovered, and is not dangerous, as a condition of release. The same argument was urged in the Thaw Case just referred to. It is stated in the opinion of Judge Rich that one objection urged to the New York statute was that "it authorizes the commitment of a defendant acquitted of the crime for which he has been tried to a state lunatic asylum, and provides no way in which he can be discharged other than one dependent upon the volition of the superintendent of such asylum. . . . The same principles of law are applicable in the one case as in the other, the same objects are accomplished, and the same results obtained. If the statute under the provisions of which a lunatic is, by a civil proceeding, temporarily restrained of his liberty, with its prescribed summary procedure, is constitutional,—which cannot be seriously questioned,—the statute under which a person charged with crime, who is acquitted because of insanity at the time the crime was committed, may be summarily deprived of his liberty for the protection of the public while his insanity and dangerous proclivities continue, is constitutional" (p. 168), and the judge quotes from the statute: "A patient held upon an order of a court or judge having criminal jurisdiction in an action or proceeding arising from a criminal offense may be discharged upon the superintendent's certificate of recovery, approved by any such court or judge." 1 Laws of N. Y. 1908, chap. 261, § 2. The opinion, however, appears to hold that this remedy is not exclusive, since it is also said that Thaw was at all times entitled to the writ of habeas corpus, and that, "upon establishing in such proceeding his then sanity, he was entitled to be discharged." p. 171. An examination of our statute (Laws 1911, chap. 299) containing the § 5, first above quoted, discloses a scheme for the care and treatment in the asylum for the insane persons found in state institutions, not only those in penal institutions who are insane when committed, but those who become insane afterward, and also inmates of hospitals for the insane or epileptic, or home for the feeble minded, who have homicidal tendencies, or whose presence is dangerous to other inmates. All these unfortunates thus placed in the asylum for the dangerous insane are under the immediate care of the medical superintendent, and any or all of the superintendents of state hospitals may be called in consultation with him when deemed necessary.

The particular provision for liberation of a person acquitted of a criminal charge because of insanity, and committed under this statute, specifies two conditions, vis., the order of the court issuing the commitment, and the certificate of the superintendent that the person is recovered, and that no one will be in danger by his discharge. This action of the court may be taken upon the application of the person committed or of someone in his behalf. No particular procedure is prescribed, but ordinary methods by which the action of a court is invoked and a judicial investigation carried on in other matters, adapted to the end sought, under the supervision of the court as to notice and hearing, are sufficient. Nor is the certificate of the superintendent a condition precedent to, or a necessary accompaniment of, the application, but it should be presented so that the court may give it consideration and effect at the hearing. A Massachusetts statute provided that one acquitted of murder or manslaughter by reason of insanity should be committed to a lunatic hospital for life, with the further provision, however, that he might be discharged by the governor and council whenever it appeared that he might be discharged without danger to himself or others. The statute did not require the court to inquire whether the insanity continued at the date of the trial. In an action involving the question whether the state or a municipality was liable for expenses of the support of a person so committed, who it appeared was sane, the supreme court of that state said: "The practical effect of the Stat. of 1873 is to provide that, in case of an indictment for homicide, the insanity of the defendant is not a defense which entitles him to an unconditional acquittal, but that he shall be detained in confinement until it appears to the governor and council that he may be discharged and set at large without danger to others. He is not committed to the hospital for the purposes of treatment as a lunatic. He is not held there as other inmates are held. He cannot be discharged, as others can be, by the trustees or by a court upon proof that he is not insane, or, if insane, can be sufficiently provided for by himself or his friends, or the town of his settlement. Pub. Stat. chap. 87, § 40. He is confined in the hospital as a place of detention, because his being at large would be dangerous to the peace and safety of the community." Gleason v. West Boylston, 136 Mass. 489. While objections to the law such as are made here were not presented or considered, no doubt of its validity was suggested in the opinion. A similar statute of North Carolina provided for like commitment in such cases, and that there should be no discharge therefrom unless by an act of the legislature; and it was held in Re Boyett, 136 N. C. 415, 67 L.R.A. 972, 103 Am. St. Rep. 944, 48 S. E. 789, 1 Ann. Cas. 729, that the act was void. The opinion quotes freely from many other cases on this subject, and concludes with the conservative direction that the person so detained be brought into court upon habeas corpus, but that the affidavit should show that he is not a dangerous lunatic. From this conclusion it would seem that in the opinion of that court a dangerous lunatic should not be summarily placed at liberty, notwithstanding the invalidity of the statute under which he was committed.

As an inquest provided by statute to determine charges of insanity may determine that question, and commitment to a hospital be made thereon without the intervention of a jury, it follows that a proper tribunal provided by law may pass upon the question of his restoration. Under our statute in cases of lunacy generally this may be done by an inquiry in the probate court with or without a jury (Gen. Stat. 1909, § 8466), but the jury referred to here is composed of four triers of the fact, who are not really a jury (Gen. Stat. 1909, § 8470; State v. Linderholm, 84 Kan. 603, 114 Pac. 857). In that statute it is provided that a written statement of the case must be presented by the superintendent, although it is not provided that a certificate favorable to the claim of the applicant for discharge shall be a positive condition upon which it shall be granted, and in this respect the statute differs from the one under which this commitment was issued. The legislature probably made this distinction to provide an additional safeguard where persons have taken life, or otherwise committed offenses punishable as crimes if done by a responsible person. The legislature must have believed that the person qualified for the highly important duty of superintending such an institution, and who is in a position to observe conduct and symptoms, is qualified to determine the condition of mind of an inmate, and will be just to him and the public alike. The practical difficulties in deciding such questions upon the testimony of experts called by the parties, and great variance in their opinions, are the subject of much comment and criticism, leading to earnest inquiry whether the truth of such an issue ought not to be determined by the aid of disinterested persons appointed to investigate and testify or report. Report of Committee on Insanity and Criminal Responsibility, Journal of Am. Inst. of Criminal Law and Criminology, November, 1911, p. 621. The statute is in aid of a judicial proceeding for the determination of a matter in which not only the subject of the inquiry, but the public, have a profound interest. It is a legislative effort to discover the truth of a vital issue, not altogether novel, for a statute with essentially the same provisions was enacted by the legislature of Minnesota in 1907. The supreme court of that state has expressed no opinion concerning its validity, although brought to its attention in November, 1911, in Northfoss v. Welch, 116 Minn. 62, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 578, 133 N. W. 82. Northfoss had been committed in 1894 to a hospital for the insane for safe-keeping and treatment, upon an acquittal of a criminal charge because of insanity. The superintendent refused to certify that the petitioner was not dangerous, and habeas corpus proceedings were instituted in a district court, which held that the statute applied, and that it was con-situtional, and refused a discharge. On appeal it was held that the statute was not intended to be retroactive, and that persons committed under a former act should be released according to its provisions, rather than those of the later statute, and the constitutional question was not decided. The state, as parens patriæ, may make provision for the care of those unable to care for themselves, as in the case of insane persons and neglected children. Re Dowdell, 169 Mass. 387, 61 Am. St. Rep. 290, 47 N. E. 1033. It was said in Re Wares, 161 Mass. 70, 36 N. E. 586, where a child had been committed to the care of the commissioners of public institutions of Boston, who were also vested with the power of discharge, that "the discretionary power given to the board or officers to whose custody the child may be committed, to discharge it before the end of the term if the object of the commitment had been accomplished, is to the advantage rather than disadvantage of the parent, and we see no valid objection to bestowing it upon such board or officers. Equally important discretionary powers vested in other boards have been upheld, and similar powers exercised by the trustees of the state industrial and reform schools have never, so far as we are aware, been questioned." p. 75. The decision appears to be based upon the fact that, after a proper commitment, the right of the party was concluded when it was decided, after a full and fair hearing by the board, that the object of the commitment had not been accomplished. It was said that the liberty remained to apply for a discharge by habeas corpus, if rights are prejudiced by errors of law or wrongful conduct of the board. Construing the provision of our law requiring a certificate as stated in the act as a necessary condition of the discharge, if that opinion is sound, the act is not thereby necessarily unconstitutional. The presumption is that the officer will do his duty faithfully, but, if the certificate should be corruptly or oppressively withheld, the applicant would not be without remedy.

The petition does not allege that Clark is now sane, nor that he is not dangerous, and the claim to release is based solely on the supposed unconstitutionality of the statute; but an immediate release would not necessarily follow, even if that view should be adopted. As already noted in the Boyett Case in North Carolina, where the law was held void, proof that the person was not a dangerous lunatic was required. And in the Thaw Case, Mr. Justice Gaynor, who in a strong dissent held the act void, still said that the petitioner should be held for proceedings and commitment under the general insanity law of that state. Again, it does not follow that the statute in question is wholly void, even if the provision requiring the certificate referred to is obnoxious to the Constitution. That clause is separable and independent, and there is no reason to believe that the legislature would not have passed the provisions for commitment without the provisions for discharge. Turner v. Woodson County, 27 Kan. 314; Hardy v. Kingman County, 65 Kan. 111, 68 Pac. 1078, Harrod v. Latham Mercantile & Commercial Co. 77 Kan. 466. 95 Pac. 11. If the provisions for discharge should fail, it would leave the person detained any remedy available before its enactment to a sane person held as an inmate of a hospital for the insane. Having reached the conclusion that so much of the statute as authorized a commitment is valid, it follows that the relief now sought should be refused, whatever views are entertained concerning the particular clause requiring a superintendent's certificate. It seems best, however, now that the matter has been fully presented, to state the views of the court upon the validity of the entire act, which we do, holding that its passage was within the constitutional powers of the legislature. The purposes of the statute are highly beneficent. It gives protection to the public against repetitions of homicides, or other acts of irresponsible frenzy or distraction, and affords to the unfortunate persons so committed safe seclusion and humane treatment, which it is the province of the state to give in the exercise of its parental power. The judicial department may not interfere with the legislative conscience, unless there is a clear violation of some provision of the Constitution. Linn County v. Snyder, 45 Kan. 636, 23 Am. St. Rep. 742, 26 Pac. 21; Wulf v. Kansas City, 77 Kan. 358, 94 Pac. 207; Underwood v. People, 32 Mich. 1, 20 Am. Rep. 333; Doyle's Petition (Re Gannon) 16 R. I. 537, 5 L.R.A. 359, 27 Am. St. Rep. 759, 18 Atl. 159, and other cases, are cited as being at variance with the views or some of the views herein expressed. These cases and others have been carefully considered, but it is believed that the conclusions reached are in harmony with the best considered precedents, and are sustained by the better reasoning.

The petitioner's husband is remanded.

Johnston, Ch. J., concurring specially:

I concur in the judgment remanding Clark to custody, and in holding that the law under which he was committed to the Asylum for the Dangerous Insane is valid, but I reach this conclusion on the theory that the legislature intended that a person so committed, who had been restored to sanity, may be liberated by the proper court with or without the consent of the superintendent of the asylum. The duty and action required of that officer is in aid of a judicial proceeding for a discharge, but, in my view, it was not intended that his decision should be a substitute for a judicial proceeding, nor that his adverse decision would prevent a judicial inquiry as to the sanity of the inmate. Serious questions might arise if a statute were enacted which provided that a release from custody of one restored to sanity could not be had in a judicial proceeding until the consent of the superintendent of the asylum was obtained, or where application to the judicial department for release depended on the will of a ministerial officer. Under our statute, it is the duty of the superintendent to bring his opinion or certificate that there has been a restoration to the attention of the court, but his opinion does not preclude a judicial inquiry, nor bind the court when an inquiry is made. There was the requisite authority in the court which committed Clark to the asylum. There was the essential inquiry and finding that he was insane at the time he was committed; and the statute affords him, and anyone so restrained, an opportunity to directly apply to a court for discharge on the ground that he is no longer insane. Not having availed himself of this remedy, nor shown a restoration to sanity, he is not entitled to a discharge.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF NEBRASKA, Plff. in Err.,
v.
M. ELAM.

(— Neb. —, 136 N. W. 59.)

Food — cream — time of payment — regulation.

The statute provides that testing of cream for commercial purposes "shall be done in accordance with the rules and regulations therefor prescribed by said commission." Anno. Stat. 1911, § 9838. The commissioner made a rule that payment for cream pur-

Headnote by SEDGWICK, J.

Note. — Right to regulate time of payment therefor as incident to authority to make rules and regulations as to testing foods.

The decision in STATE v. ELAM, to the effect that under a statute providing that "in testing milk or cream for commercial purposes . . . the same shall be done in accordance with the rules and regulations chased for commercial purposes should not be made on the same day of the purchase. Held, that the defendant could not be punished criminally for a violation of this rule.

(May 13, 1912.)

EXCEPTIONS to a ruling of the District Court for Richardson County in a prosecution charging defendant with violation of the pure food act which resulted in a judgment in his favor. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Grant G. Martin, Attorney General, Frank E. Edgerton, Assistant Attorney General, and Amos E. Gantt, for plaintiff in error:

As long as the regulation is necessary for the proper execution of a law enacted by the legislature, it may properly be delegated to an executive authority by the legislature.

St. Louis Merchants' Bridge Terminal Co. v. United States, 110 C. C. A. 63, 188

Fed. 192; Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 694, 36 L. ed. 310, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495; Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. 498, 13 Am. Rep. 716; United States v. Eaton, 144 U. S. 677, 36 L. ed. 591, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 764; United States v. Bailey, 9 Pet. 238, 9 L. ed. 113; Re Kollock, 165 U. S. 526, 41 L. ed. 813, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 444; Pierce v. Doolittle, 130 Iowa, 333, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 143, 106 N. W. 751; Hurst v. Warner, 102 Mich. 238, 26 L.R.A. 484, 47 Am. St. Rep. 525, 60 N. W. 440.

Mr. Frank Reavis, for defendant in error:

Until the defendant has violated one of the laws of the legislature of this state, he cannot be subjected to a prosecution in the name of the state. The pure food commission cannot enact laws.

United States v. Eaton, 144 U. S. 677, 36 L. ed. 591, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 764; Re Kollock, 165 U. S. 526, 41 L. ed. 813, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 444.

therefor prescribed by said commission," the commission had no power to make a rule that payment for cream purchased for commercial purposes should not be made on the same day of the purchase, although the delay in payment might have a tendency to afford more time for testing and be more convenient, seems sound.

No other case dealing with this exact question has been disclosed. An act of this character, however, clearly cannot be enlarged and extended beyond the purpose for which it was enacted.

This principle is well illustrated by the decision in United States v. Bohl, 125 Fed. 625, where it was held that a statute for the protection of the public health, authorizing the secretary of agriculture to cause an inspection to be made of renovated butter, and to make rules and regulations for carrying such act into effect, did not authorize the making of a rule forbidding the obliteration of the brand on the product, which tended in no way to aid in the protection of the public health, but was designed solely to prevent fraud.

In United States v. Eaton, 144 U. S. 677, 36 L. ed. 591, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 764, it was held that a wholesale dealer in oleomargarin who wilfully neglected to keep a book showing the oleomargarin received and sold by him, and omitted to make monthly returns, as required by the regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, was not liable to the penalty imposed by a section of the act regulating the sale of oleomargarin, where the act required manufacturers to keep books, but did not impose such a duty upon wholesalers. The court said: "It is a principle of criminal law that an offense which may be the subject of criminal procedure is an act committed or omitted 'in violation of a public law, either forbidding or commanding it,' 4 Am. & 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Eng. Enc. Law, 642; 4 Bl. Com. 5. It would be a very dangerous principle to hold that a thing prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as a needful regulation under the oleomargarin act, for carrying it into effect, could be considered as a thing 'required by law' in the carrying on or conducting of the business of a wholesale dealer in oleomargarin, in such manner as to become a criminal offense punishable under § 18 of the act; particularly when the same act, in § 5, requires a manufacturer of the article to keep such books and render such returns as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may, by regulation, require; and does not impose, in that section or elsewhere in the act, the duty of keeping such books and rendering such returns upon a wholesale dealer in the article. It is necessary that a sufficient statutory authority should exist for declaring any act or omission a criminal offense; and we do not think that the statutory authority in the present case is sufficient. If Congress intended to make it an offense for wholesale dealers in oleomargarin to omit to keep books and render returns as required by regulations to be made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, it would have done so distinctly in connection with an enactment such as that above recited, made in § 41 of the act of October 1, 1890. Regulations prescribed by the President and by the heads of departments, under authority granted by Congress, may be regulations prescribed by law, so as lawfully to support acts done under them and in accordance with them, and may thus have, in a proper sense, the force of law; but it does not follow that a thing required by them is a thing so required by law as to make the neglect to do the thing a criminal offense in a citizen, where a statute does not distinctly make the neglect in question a criminal offense." J. T. W.

Sedgwick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant was informed against in the district court for Richardson county for an alleged violation of the pure food act. A general demurrer was filed to the information, which was sustained by the court, and the county attorney was permitted to file his exceptions in this court to obtain a construction of the statute under which the prosecution was brought. The information alleges that the defendant held a permit from the pure food commissioner to test cream, and that on a certain day he purchased cream for commercial purposes and paid for the cream on the same day that he purchased it, "contrary to the provisions of regulation 59 of the rules and regulations of the food, drug, and dairy laws, and contrary to the form of the statute," etc. The pure food commissioner has adopted regulations, among which is regulation 59, which recites that the test of cream requires great care and exactness, and that to make a test it requires at least thirty minutes, and agents cannot test deliveries of cream as they are received and give a test the necessary time and attention, and continues: "Pursuant to the above facts it is hereby ruled by the food, drug, and dairy commissioner that samples of cream shall be grouped and tested at the close of each day's receipts or the following morning. The samples to be kept in closed jars while being held. In order to prevent any evasion of the above ruling it is further ruled that the payment in whole or in part for cream shall be suspended until the following day, or the time of the next delivery. Payment for cream, prior to the day following delivery, as a means of securing business or of taking advantage of another operator, is a violation of the rule, and punishable under the law."

The gist of the offense which it was attempted to charge against the defendant is that he paid for the cream on the same day that he purchased it. The statute provides: "In testing milk or cream for commercial purposes under the provisions of this act the same shall be done in accordance with the rules and regulations therefor prescribed by said commission." Anno. Stat. 1911, § 9838. "The term 'to test milk or cream, as used in this act, is hereby defined as the process or method by which the percentage of butter fat in said milk or cream is determined." Section 9832. The contention of the state appears to be that since it requires thirty minutes or more to test cream properly, and it is not convenient for the party testing it to collect his samples and make his tests until "at the close of each day's receipts or the following morning," paying for the cream purchased is so far a part of the testing, or so necessarily connected with the testing, as to justify the regulation thereof by the food commissioner; and since this regulation is therefore within the jurisdiction of the food commissioner, to make payments for the cream on the same day of purchase is a violation of the act, and subjects the defendant to punishment under § 9840. "Any person violating any provision of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined in a sum not less than $50 nor more than $500, at the discretion of the court." Anno. Stat. 1911, § 9840.

No doubt the legislature may by statute "delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend." Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 694, 36 L. ed. 294, 310, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495, 505. The legislature, however, cannot delegate its power to make laws. The time and manner of paying for the cream purchased cannot, in the nature of things, have any connection with the testing of the cream. The fact, if it is a fact, that delay in payment for the cream would have a tendency to afford more time or convenience for testing it, does not in any way affect the character or efficiency of the testing, or make the payment for the cream any part of the testing. The statute contains some directions in regard to the manner of making the test, and authorizes the food commissioner to make further rules for that purpose if the same should be found necessary; but this does not include the power to make rules to prevent unfair competition in business or "taking advantage of another operator." We think the district court was right in holding that a criminal prosecution cannot be sustained for a violation of this rule of the commissioner.

Other questions that might be presented as to the sufficiency of this information are not discussed in the briefs, and they are not considered.

The exceptions are overruled.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

CHARLES J. MCCARTHY et al.

v.

MARY MULLEN, Admr., etc., of Thomas Flynn, Deceased, Plff. in Err.

(— N. J. —, 82 Atl. 51.)

Descent — Liability for ancestor's debt. Under the "act for the relief of creditors Headnote by PITNEY, C.

against heirs and devisees," passed March 7, 1797 (Paterson's Laws, p. 243; 2 Gen. Stat. 1895, p. 1679), where a devisee dies without selling or aliening the lands devised, liability for the debts of the devisor, in respect of the lands devised, devolves not upon the personal representatives, but upon the heirs and devisees of the deceased devisee of the original debtor.

(January 9, 1912.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Sussex County to review a judgment in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to enforce the statutory liability for debt of Thomas Flynn, deceased. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Theodore E. Dennis for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Coult & Dolan for defendants in error.

Pitney, C., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants in error, who were plaintiffs below, by their declaration averred that one Thomas Flynn in his lifetime was indebted to them for goods sold and delivered, money loaned, etc., and being so indebted departed this life leaving a last will and testament, whereby he devised and bequeathed to Timothy Flynn all his estate, both real and personal; that the said Timothy Flynn thereby became possessed of more than sufficient real and personal property to meet the debt so due and owing from the said Thomas Flynn to the plaintiffs; and that thereafter the said Timothy Flynn departed this life leaving a last will and testament, whereof Mary Mullen, the defendant, is the sole executrix; that Thomas Flynn in his lifetime promised the plaintiffs to pay to them the said indebtedness, yet the said Thomas Flynn in his lifetime, and the said Timothy Flynn, his devisee, since the death of the said Thomas, and the said Mary Mullen, executrix, since the death of the said Timothy, have not paid the same or any part thereof, but, on the contrary, have refused and still do refuse to pay the same. The defendant demurred, on the ground that the declaration disclosed no ground of recovery against her as executrix of Timothy Flynn. The circuit court overruled the demurrer, and after assessment of the damages rendered final judgment in favor of the plaintiffs. To review this judgment, the defendant sued out the present writ of error.

As will be seen presently, the action, if it have legal foundation, must rest upon the "act for the relief of creditors against heirs and devisees," passed March 7, 1797, as a part of what is known as Judge Paterson's

Note.—Upon whom does the liability of an heir or devisee for his decedent's debts devolve at his own death.

The majority of the courts which have passed upon this question agree with the statement in McCARTHY v. MULLEN that the heir of such deceased heir or devisee is liable for the debts of the ancestor. Liability, however, is limited, as in case of the first heir, to the extent of the property received. This question is viewed more in the nature of an attempt to hold the property of the original debtor, and the courts have been liberal in allowing this to be held wherever found.

Thus, in Rinard v. West, 48 Ind. 159, an heir who inherited through two intermediate descents, and who was not of the blood of the debtor, was held liable for the debt to the extent of the property received by her, under a statute providing that heirs, devisees, and distributees of a decedent shall be liable to the extent of the property received. In the course of the opinion it is stated by the court that it is the receipt of the property which renders the heir liable, and if that property by another descent cast come to the hands of one not an immediate heir, or not of the blood of the deceased, it should not change the rule.

And in Buford v. Pawling, 5 Dana, 283, in passing upon a demurrer, it was held that the heirs of a devisee are liable to an action in equity for the debt of the testator to the extent of the land devised. The court states that the land is regarded as a fund for the payment of debts, and the heirs as holding as trustees until such debt is paid. On a second appeal of this case, reported in 3 B. Mon. 224, it was held that where the creditor so negligently conducted an action against the executor as to permit personal estate to be wasted, none of which came into the hands of the devisee or her heirs, the heirs were not liable in equity.

In Traud v. Magnes, 17 Jones & S. 309, the heirs of a devisee were held liable to the extent of the property received by them, on a bond of the devisor, in which he bound himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators.

And in Waller v. Ellis, 2 Munf. 88, the liability of the heirs of an heir and devisee of the obligor on a bond in which he bound himself and his heirs is recognized, to the extent of the property received.

And in Pyatt v. Waldo, 85 Fed. 399, the heir of a devisee who took the same share under the will that he would have taken by inheritance was held liable on a bond of the ancestor to the extent of the property received.

So, an heir who inherited assets from his ancestor, part directly and part by reason of the death of his brother, has been held chargeable to the extent of the entire assets, on a bond in which the father bound himself and his heirs. Anonymous, 3 Dyer, 368a.

Revision, and which still remains unrepealed. Paterson's Laws, p. 243; 2 Gen. Stat. 1895, p. 1679. The court below, in overruling the demurrer, did so upon the ground that by this act the liability imposed upon a devisee of the original debtor is of a personal nature, and survives against the personal representatives upon the death of such devisee; relying upon the decision of the supreme court in Congar v. Brady, 62 N. J. L. 641, 42 Atl. 415.

Before proceeding to deal with this question (which is the only question that has been argued before us), we may first dispose of the suggestion that arises out of the averment of the declaration that Timothy Flynn became possessed of certain personal property upon the death of Thomas Flynn. Defendants in error do not rely upon this as a ground of recovery against the executrix of Timothy Flynn, nor is it sufficient to warrant such a recovery. An action at law would not lie against Timothy, as legatee, for the debt of Thomas. The creditor should sue Thomas's executor, or, if barred of such suit, should proceed as provided in the orphans' court act (P. L. 1898, p. 742, §§ 77, 78). It is not averred that Timothy Flynn was the executor of Thomas; and were this true it would not render his executrix liable in this action, for under our statute concerning executors (2 Gen. Stat. 1425, pl. 2) the executor of an executor does not represent the first testator. Nor is it averred that Timothy Flynn, in consideration of having received the property of Thomas Flynn, or for any other consideration, made Thomas's debt his own by expressly promising to pay the same. There is no averment of any promise either by Timothy Flynn or by the defendant, his executrix. It is clear, therefore, that the declaration raises no other question than whether the action may be maintained under the "act for the relief of creditors against heirs and devisees." In considering this question, it is to be borne in mind that the declaration does not aver either (1) that Timothy Flynn in his lifetime sold or aliened any of the lands that came to him by devise from Thomas or (2) that Timothy by his will devised those lands or any of them to the defendant.

In Congar v. Brady, supra, suit was brought against an heir at law of a deceased devisee of the original debtor. A demurrer to the declaration presented the question whether, by virtue of the statute, the defendant was chargeable with the payment of the obligations of the original debtor to the extent of the value of the lands so descended. This question was answered in the negative, the opinion declaring: "An examination of that statute will at once disclose that although it makes the devisee of a deceased debtor liable for his debts, no action is given against any successor to the title of such devisee. The right of action is not given for the purpose of creat-

In Dennyes's Case, Noy, 56, the court states that debt lies against the heir of an heir upon an obligation of the ancestor, who obliges himself and his heirs, unto the tenth degree.

In Holley v. Weeden, 2 Ch. Cas. 175, 1 Vern. 400, the devisee of an heir who inherited through an intermediate descent was held not liable for the debt of the ancestor, notwithstanding the creditor had recovered a verdict on the debt against such heir, who died before the day in bank, so that the creditor could not have judgment. This decision, however, was one rendered under the old common law, when the devisee was not in any event liable for the debt, even if he were a devisee of the original debtor.

In an action upon a bond of an ancestor, in which he bound himself and his heirs, where the land of such ancestor is held by his heirs and heirs of a deceased heir in common, the heirs of the deceased heir, being liable to the extent of the land received, should be joined with the direct heirs. St. Mary's Church v. Wallace, 10 N. J. L. 311. In a concurring opinion rendered in this case the bond is spoken of as having been signed by the ancestor and also his son (the deceased heir), and as binding "themselves and their heirs jointly and severally."

Other courts treat the question as being whether or not a cause of action is given against the heir of a deceased heir or devi-

see. Thus, in Fink v. Berg, 50 Hun, 211, 2 N. Y. Supp. 851, a decision rendered subsequent to the decision in Traud v. Magnes, supra, and in which the earlier case is not referred to, it is held that under the statute making devisees liable for the debts of the decedent to the extent of the property devised to them, a devisee who, subsequent to the death of the testator, inherited part of the property devised to another devisee, owing to the death of such devisee, is not liable for the debts of the testator as to the property thus inherited.

And in Green v. Dunlop, 136 App. Div. 116, 120 N. Y. Supp. 583, the heirs of the heirs of an intestate were held not liable in an action for breach of covenant of their ancestor.

In Congar v. Brady, 62 N. J. L. 641, 42 Atl. 415, under the statute that was under consideration in MCCARTHY v. MULLEN, it was held that an action could not be maintained on a bond of the ancestor binding his heirs, executors, and administrators, against as heir of his devisee, to whom his lands had descended.

Liability of personal representative.

Where the devisee has aliened the lands devised to him, his personal representative is liable to the extent of the lands aliened. Traud v. Magnes, 17 Jones & S. 309.

W. A. E.

ing and enforcing a lien upon the lands devised. It is not the land, but the devisee who is made liable for the indebtedness. That liability is purely personal, and survives, if at all, not against the heirs, but against the executors and administrators of the devisee upon his decease."

It seems to us that if the statute by proper construction does create a purely personal liability on the part of the devisee, that liability would, on general principles, survive against his personal representative upon his decease. To quote from Williams on Executors, *1721: "The general rule has been established from very early times, with respect to such personal claims as are founded upon any obligation, contract, debt, covenant, or other duty, that the right of action on which the testator or intestate might have been sued in his lifetime survives his death and is enforceable against his executor or administrator. Therefore it is clear that the executors or administrators are answerable, as far as they have assets, for debts of every description due from the deceased, either debts of record, as judgments, statutes, or recognizances; or debts due on special contract, as for rent or on bonds, covenants, and the like, under seal; or debts on simple contract, as notes unsealed, and promises not in writing, either expressed or implied."

In at least two previous decisions the supreme court had expressed views at variance with the decision in Congar v. Brady, above cited. In St. Mary's Church v. Wallace (1829) 10 N. J. L. 311, it was held upon much consideration that in an action against surviving heirs of a deceased obligor, the heirs of a deceased heir having lands by descent should be joined in the action, or their nonjoinder might be pleaded in abatement. This was upon the ground that (where the lands have not been aliened prior to suit brought) the heirs are responsible for the debt only with respect to and to the extent of the lands descended; that if the lands have passed through more than one descent the heir of the heir is liable; and that where there are several heirs all ought to be joined in the suit, to the end that they may have contribution from each other. The learned opinions delivered by Chief Justice Ewing and Mr. Justice Ford wholly negative the theory that (except for false pleading or the like, or the alienation of the lands prior to suit brought), there is any personal liability on the part of the heir. In Muldoon v. Moore (1893) 55 N. J. L. 410, 21 L.R.A. 89, 26 Atl. 892, the decision proceeded upon the ground that, in an action under our statute, a creditor of a deceased obligor may recover in an action against the heir 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) or devisee either: (1) If defendant plead properly, a special judgment requiring the debt to be made only out of lands descended or devised to defendant which have not been by him bona fide aliened before the commencement of the action; or (2) if defendant plead falsely or improperly or fail to plead, a general judgment for the debt as if it were a debt of the defendant; or (3) if the lands have been bona fide aliened before action brought, a like general judgment, but only for the value of those lands.

In view of these conflicting decisions respecting the proper construction of our act, it may be proper to briefly review the practice in England, both under the common law and under act 3 & 4 Wm. & Mary, cap. 14, upon which our statute was for the most part modeled.

At the common law, heirs were liable on specialties of the ancestor only when he had assumed by express mention of "his heirs" to bind them; and then they were held liable (except for false pleading or the like) only for the lands descended to them. Prior to the act of Parliament, the heir might alien the lands free of any charge by reason of the ancestor's debt, and he was not in that event even bound to answer for their value (at least not in an action at law), but if suit was brought on the obligation before alienation, the lands were bound in the hands of the heir, and the obligee upon recovery could have execution on the lands descended, even in the hands of an alienee pending suit. But he could have no further recovery, unless the heir had made himself personally liable by false pleading or otherwise. The hardship upon creditors consequent upon allowing the heir to alien before suit brought, and without being responsible even for the value of the lands, was relieved by the act of Wm. & Mary, which provided that where the heir did thus alien, he should be liable to the value of the lands descended, but that the lands aliened should not be liable. The same act for the first time gave a remedy against devisees, for since devisees did not come within the words of the obligation (not being in the description of "heirs"), they could formerly enjoy the land or alien it free from any claim of creditors (at least at law) against either the alienee or themselves; for remedy of which act 3 & 4 Wm. & Mary, cap. 14, gave an action against devisees upon such obligations as bound the heirs.

This act is found in 3 Stat. at Large, 481 [England], 1 Evans's Stat. 462; and the substance of it (but without the preamble) is given in Bacon, Abr. title, "Heir and Ancestor," ¶ F. It was made in terms to continue for three years only, but was made perpetual by act of 6 & 7 Wm. III. cap. 14. Its title is: "An Act for the Relief of Creditors against Fraudulent Devises." After a preamble which recites that persons "having by bonds or other specialties bound themselves and their heirs" have, to the defrauding of such creditors, by their wills disposed of their lands so that the creditors have lost their said debts, it is at the outset enacted that as against such creditors all wills and testamentary dispositions of lands shall be void. It is next enacted that "every such creditor" may maintain his "action . . . of debt upon . . . said bonds and specialties, against the heir and heirs at law of such obligor or obligors, and such devisee and devisees, jointly, by virtue of this act; and such devisee or devisees shall be liable and chargeable for a false plea by him or them pleaded, in the same manner as any heir should have been for any false plea by him pleaded, or for not confessing the lands and tenements to him descended."

The 5th section (after a preamble which recites that heirs at law, to avoid the payment of such just debts as in regard of the lands descended to them they have been liable to pay, have aliened such lands before any process was or could be issued against them) enacts that "where any heir at law shall be liable to pay the debt of his ancestor in regard of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments descending to him, and shall sell, alien, or make over the same before any action brought or process sued out against him, that such heir at law shall be answerable for such debt or debts in an action or actions of debt, to the value of the said land so by him sold, aliened, or made over; in which cases all creditors shall be preferred, as in actions against executors and administrators, and such execution shall be taken out upon any judgment or judgments so obtained against such heir, to the value of the said land, as if the same were his own proper debt or debts; saving that the lands, tenements, and hereditaments bona fide aliened before the action brought shall not be liable to such execution."

The 6th section enables the heir to plead riens per descent at the time of the original writ brought or the bill filed against him, and the plaintiff may reply that he had lands, etc., from his ancestor before the original, etc., and if upon issue joined it be found for the plaintiff, the jury shall inquire of the value of the lands so descended, and thereupon judgment shall be given and execution shall be awarded as aforesaid; but if judgment be given against such heir by confession of the action, without confessing the assets descended, or upon demurrer, or nihil dicit, it shall be for the debt and damages, without any writ to inquire of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments so descended.

By § 7 it is enacted: "That all and every devisee and devisees made liable by this act shall be liable and chargeable in the same manner as the heir at law by force of this act, notwithstanding the lands, tenements, and hereditaments to him or them devised shall be aliened before the action brought."

For a general review of the English law and practice, both before and after the act of Wm. & Mary, reference may be had to Bacon Abr. title, "Heir & Ancestor," ¶¶ F. G. and H; Vin. Abr. title, "Heir," ¶¶ C and D; Davy v. Pepys, 2 Plowd. 438, and reporter's comments thereon; note to Jefferson v. Morton, 2 Wms.' Saund. 7, note 4; 4 Griff. Ann. Law Reg. 1286; St. Mary's Church v. Wallace, 10 N. J. L. 311; Muldoon v. Moore, 55 N. J. L. 410, 21 L.R.A. 89, 26 Atl. 892; Myers v. Weger, 62 N. J. L. 432, 439, 42 Atl. 280.

That by the ancient common law the heir, when sued for the debt of his ancestor, could, by confessing the action and showing what lands he had by descent, limit the recovery to a judgment specially to be levied of the lands descended, is clear from all the authorities. The form of pleading and judgment may be found in Davy v. Pepys, 2 Plowd. 438, 440,—a case that antedated by more than a century the act of 3 & 4 Wm. & Mary. See also Tidd, Pr. 937, 938. And likewise, prior to the act, it had been repeatedly held that in case of the death of the heir before action brought, the creditor could sue his heir in his stead, and so on through any number of inheritances. Anonymous (22 Eliz.) 3 Dyer, 368, pl. 46; Jenks's Case, Cro. Car. 151; Denny's Case, Noy, 56, where the court said the liability of the heirs extended unto the tenth degree.

In an early book of entries (Rast. Ent. 172, b. pl. 4), there is found a form of declaration for an action of debt to be brought against the executor of an heir upon an obligation of the ancestor. Although this precedent was often referred to (note to Henningham's Case, 3 Dyer, 344a; note to Davy v. Pepys, 2 Plowd. 441; Chief Justice Dyer's Comment in Hinde and Lyon's Case, Leon, pt. 2, p. 11; Leon, pt. 3, pp. 64 and 70), we are unable to find that this course of procedure (by suit against the executor of an heir) was followed or approved in any reported case. In Bacon, Abr. title, "Heir & Ancestor," par. F, written after the act of Wm. & Mary, the precedent referred to is cited in a note, but in the text is the following: "It seems that neither before nor since this statute the executor or administrator of the heir are liable; for the person of the heir is not chargeable, but with respect to the land," etc.

In Bowyer v. Rivet, Popham, 155, Doderidge, J., is reported to have said: "Debt will lie against his [the heir's] executor, as it is said in Plow. Com., and so against the heirs of the heir to many generations, albeit of this Plowden makes a doubt," etc. A reference to Plowden, however (page 441), makes it plain that his doubt was whether there was any liability on the part of the executor of the heir, not whether the heir of the heir was liable.

In 1 Lill. Mod. Entr. 147, is a form of declaration against the heir of the heir of the heir of the original debtor; and in 2 Lill. Mod. Entr. 504, is the form of a special judgment in an action against an heir in the third degree.

It seems to us that by the reason of the matter as well as by the weight of authority, it must be taken to have been the law of England, prior to the act of Wm. & Mary, that upon the death of an heir the liability, in respect of the lands descended, devolved upon his heirs, and not upon his personal representatives. The action (except for false pleading or the like) was in effect an action to enforce a lien upon lands, and that only; and it followed the lands so long as they passed by successive inheritances. And such was the view taken by our supreme court in St. Mary's Church v. Wallace, 10 N. J. L. 311. There followed the act of Wm. & Mary, with its very clearly expressed purpose of rendering all devises void as against creditors, and subjecting devisees to action in the same manner and to the same extent that heirs were theretofore liable (of course, with the modifications contained in the act itself), requiring, indeed, that the heirs and devisees should be sued jointly. And then came our act of 1797, giving a more extensive remedy to creditors, in that it includes obligations arising "whether by simple contract or specialty, and whether the heirs are mentioned therein or not," but making no essential change in the character of the remedy. It authorizes an action to be maintained "against the heir and heirs at law, and devisee and devisees of such debtor, in case such debtor made any last will and testament." It omits the word "jointly" used in this connection in the act of Wm. & Mary, but we think it at least permits. if it does not require, that the heirs and devisees be joined in a single action. At least, it very clearly evinces the intent that devisees shall be subjected to the like liability with heirs.

As this court pointed out in Dodson v. Taylor, 53 N. J. L. 200, 204, 21 Atl. 293, the statute is remedial, and should receive a liberal interpretation.

Excluding, for the present, those provisions of the act that have to do with alienations before suit brought, and the consequent liability imposed upon the heir or devisee thus aliening, it seems to us plain that in the case of heirs and devisees alike no personal liability is imposed (save for their own improper pleading or failure to plead), and that the action is in effect an action to enforce a lien upon the lands of the debtor in the hands of his heirs and devisees; and that as no number of inheritances would at the common law operate to deprive the creditor of his action, so, under the statute, the action may be maintained against not only heirs and devisees, but against heirs of heirs, devisees of heirs, heirs of devisees, and devisees of devisees, so long as the lands of the original debtor remain in the hands of any person by descent or devise. And this view of the statute is at the same time inconsistent with the theory that the executor of a devisee may be held responsible where the devisee in his lifetime made no alienation of the lands. The executor, as such, does not succeed to any title to the lands, and would have to pay the debt from personal property, whereby the creditor would be deprived of the direct lien upon the realty that it was the very object of the statute to give him. At the same time, in the case of several heirs and devisees, some dying and others surviving, the question of contribution among them would be hopelessly confused.

This view is borne out by the phraseology of § 6 of the "act making lands liable to be sold for the payment of debts," passed February 18, 1799 (only two years after the act now under consideration), found in Patterson's Laws, p. 369, and which is now § 1 of the act respecting executions (2 Gen. Stat. 1414). This section, in prescribing the form of a writ of execution against lands, provides that "when such execution shall be issued against terre tenants or heirs or devisees (unless they shall have made their estate liable by false pleading or otherwise), it shall only command the sheriff or other officer that of the lands, etc., whereof the ancestor, testator, or person deceased was seised on the day when the said lands, etc., became liable as aforesaid, or at any time afterwards, etc., he cause to be made the debt, etc., in said writ mentioned."

Upon full consideration, therefore, it seems to us that the primary object of the statute is to afford to the creditor alternative remedies against the heirs and devisees, dependent upon whether the lands descended or devised have been aliened before suit brought, viz.: (1) If not so aliened, or with respect to such as have not been aliened, the remedy is in effect an action at law to enforce a lien for the debt upon the lands descended or devised; in this action, if the defendants plead properly, no personal responsibility is imposed, but the judgment and consequent execution are special, and limited in their effect to the lands descended and devised so far as not aliened before action brought. (2) In case of such alienation, the lands aliened being freed from the debt by the express terms of the act, a personal liability to the extent of their value is imposed upon the heir or devisee who has made the alienation, as a substitute for the lien upon the lands of which the creditor has been thereby deprived. (3) But the statute further provides (and this may be called its secondary object) that for false pleading, or for confession of the action without confessing the assets descended, or if judgment go against defendant upon demurrer or nihil dicit, there shall be a personal judgment (at least, if the plaintiff so elects) for the amount of the debt, irrespective of the value of the lands descended or devised.

This view of the statute is substantially in accord with that adopted by the supreme court in Muldoon v. Moore, 65 N. J. L. 410, 21 L.R.A. 89, 26 Atl. 892, and is consistent with the earlier decision of the same court in St. Mary's Church v. Wallace, 10 N. J. L. 311.

As already pointed out, the declaration in the case before us does not aver that Timothy Flynn, the devisee, in his lifetime, sold or aliened the lands devised or any part of them, and without this it shows no ground of recovery against the defendant as his executrix, because it shows no personal liability on Timothy's part; and the declaration does not aver that he (Timothy) at his death devised the lands of the original debtor or any of them to the defendant, and without this it shows no ground for suing defendant as devisee.

The judgment under review should therefore be reversed, and final judgment be entered in favor of the defendant, with costs. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF OHIO EX REL. WALLACE
D. YAPLE

v.

DAVID S. CREAMER, State Treasurer.

(85 Ohio St. 349, 97 N. E. 602.)

Master and servant — employees' insurance act — constitutionality.

The act entitled "An Act to Create a State Insurance Fund for the Benefit of Injured and the Dependents of Killed Employees," etc., 102 O. L. 524, is a valid exercise of legislative power, not repugnant to the Federal or state Constitutions, or to any limitation contained in either.

(February 6, 1912.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel the defendant as state treasurer to pay a certain traveling expense voucher contracted by the members of the liability board of awards. Demurrer to petition overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Timothy S. Hogan, Attorney General, Clarence D. Laylin, Frank Davis, Jr., J. Harrington Boyd, Wallace D. Yaple, James L. Boulger, Daniel J. Ryan, and J. L. Hampton for relator.

Mr. George B. Okey, for Ohio State Federation of Labor:

The act does not conflict with § 2 of the Ohio Bill of Rights, nor with the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, which guarantee the equal protection of the laws.

State ex rel. Schwartz v. Ferris, 53 Ohio St. 314, 30 L.R.A. 218, 41 N. E. 579; Consolidated Coal Co. v. Illinois, 185 U. S. 203, 46 L. ed. 872, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616; McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539, 53 L. ed. 315, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206; Mégoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 293, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. May, 194 U. S. 267, 48 L. ed. 971, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638; Field v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 194 U. S. 618, 48 L. ed. 1142, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 784; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 106, 43 L. ed. 913, 19

Headnote by the COURT.

Note.—The constitutionality of compulsory industrial insurance is discussed in State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 466, and note, and in Borgnis v. Falk Co. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 489, since which there have been no other decisions on the subject.

As to the constitutionality of workmen's compensation legislation in general, see note to Ives v. South Buffalo R. Co. 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 162.

Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Orient Ins. Co. v. Dagga, 172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Turnipseed, 219 U. S. 35, 55 L. ed. 78, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 226, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136, Ann. Cas. 1912 A, 463; People ex rel. Duntz v. Coon, 67 Hun, 525, 22 N. Y. Supp. 865; W. W. Cargill Co. v. Minnesota, 180 U. S. 452, 45 L. ed. 619, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 423.

The act is not void as in contravention of §§ 1 and 19 of the Ohio Bill of Rights, or of § 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, which guarantee all persons against deprivation of property without due process of law.

Jones v. Brim, 165 U. S. 182, 41 L. ed. 678, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 282; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 37 L. ed. 599, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721; Deems v. Baltimore, 80 Md. 164, 26 L.R.A. 541, 45 Am. St. Rep. 339, 30 Atl. 648; State ex rel. Walker v. Section "A" Crim. Dist. Judge, 39 La. Ann. 138, 1 So. 437; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Clark v. Russell, 38 C. C. A. 541, 97 Fed. 902; State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 466, 117 Pac. 1101.

Messrs. Lentz, Karns, Linton, & Hengst, for respondent:

The workmen's compensation act of the state of Ohio is unconstitutional and void.

Ives v. South Buffalo R. Co. 201 N. Y. 271, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162, 94 N. E. 431, Ann. Cas. 1912 B, 156; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 102, 24 L. ed. 616, 619; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Outcalt, 2 Colo. App. 395, 31 Pac. 177; Catril v. Union P. R. Co. 2 Idaho, 576, 21 Pac. 416; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Lackey, 78 Ill. 55; Thompson v. Northern P. R. Co. 8 Mont. 279, 21 Pac. 25; Bielenberg v. Montana Union R. Co. 8 Mont. 271, 2 L.R.A. 813, 20 Pac. 314; Jensen v. Union P. R. Co. 6 Utah, 253, 4 L.R.A. 725, 21 Pac. 994; Camp v. Rogers, 44 Conn. 291; Ziegler v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 58 Ala. 594; Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Smalley, 1 Wash. 206, 22 Am. St. Rep. 143, 23 Pac. 1008; Ex parte Falk, 42 Ohio St. 638; State v. Ellet, 47 Ohio St. 90, 21 Am. St. Rep. 772, 23 N. E. 931; Gaylord v. Hubbard, 56 Ohio St. 37, 46 N. E. 66; Hixon v. Burson, 54 Ohio St. 470, 43 N. E. 1000; State ex rel. Gard v. Harmon, 13-23 Ohio C. C. 292; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. State, 26 Ohio C. C. 348; French v. Shirley, 9 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 181, 7 Ohio N. P. 26; Kane v. R. Co. 14 Ohio 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Fed. Dec. 542; State ex rel. Schwartz v. Ferris, 53 Ohio St. 314, 30 L.R.A. 218, 41 N. E. 579; Senior v. Ratterman, 44 Ohio St. 678, 11 N. E. 321; State ex rel. Monnett v. Guilbert, 56 Ohio St. 627, 38 L.R.A. 519, 60 Am. St. Rep. 756, 47 N. E. 551; Lucas County v. State (Davies v. State) 75 Ohio St. 114, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1196, 78 N. E. 955; Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455; Wisconsin Keeley Institute Co. v. Milwaukee County, 95 Wis. 153, 36 L.R.A. 55, 60 Am. St. Rep. 105, 70 N. W. 68; Putney Bros. Co. v. Milwaukee County, 108 Wis. 554, 84 N. W. 822; State ex rel. Garrett v. Froehlich, 118 Wis. 129, 61 L.R.A. 345, 99 Am. St. Rep. 985, 94 N. W. 50; State ex rel. Garth v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 287, 40 L.R.A. 280, 65 Am. St. Rep. 653, 45 S. W. 245; State ex rel. Huston v. Perry County, 5 Ohio St. 497; Fayette County v. People's & D. Bank, 47 Ohio St. 503, 10 L.R.A. 196, 25 N. E. 697; Monroe v. Collins, 17 Ohio St. 685; Byers v. Meridian Printing Co. 84 Ohio St. 408, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 913, 95 N. E. 917; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Stankard, 56 Ohio St. 224, 49 L.R.A. 381, 60 Am. St. Rep. 745, 46 N. E. 577; Franklin v. United R. & Electric Co. 57 Bulletin, Bureau of Labor 689.

Messrs. S. H. Tolles, H. B. Arnold, H. H. McKeehan, M. B. Johnson, H. H. Johnson, T. H. Hogsett, Outhwaite, Linn, & Thurman, D. N. Postlewaite, Theodore W. Reath, F. M. Rivinus, and Henry Bannon also for respondent.

Johnson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The statute in question provides for the creation of a state liability board of awards, which shall establish a state insurance fund from premiums paid by employers and employees in the manner provided in the act. It provides a plan of compensation for injuries not wilfully self-inflicted, resulting from accidents to employees of employers, both of whom have voluntarily contributed to the fund in the proportion of 10 and 90 per cent respectively. It applies only where the employer has five or more operatives regularly in the same business or in or about the same establishment. An employer who complies with the act is relieved from liability to respond in damages at common law or by statute, for injury or death of an employee who has complied with its provisions, except when the injury arises from the wilful act of himself or officer or agent, or from failure to comply with any law or ordinance providing for protection of life and safety of employees, in which event the employee or his representatives have their election between a suit for damages and a claim under the act. Employers of five or more who do not pay premiums into the fund are deprived, in actions against them, of the common-law defenses of the fellow-servant rule, the assumption of risk, and of contributory negligence. Where the parties are operating under the act, the injured employee and his dependents in case of death, are compelled to accept compensation from the insurance fund in the manner provided, except in the cases above set forth.

The objections to the validity of the act are stated by different counsel at the bar, and in their briefs, under various heads. All of them are substantially comprised in the following: First. That it is an unwarranted exercise of the police power and directs the state to use public funds for private purposes. Second. That §§ 20—1 and 21—1 take private property without due process of law, in contravention of §§ 5, 16, and 19, art. 1, of the Constitution of Ohio, and the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of United States, in that it deprives employers of the defense of assumption of risk, and deprives the employee of part of his wages to be paid to the state insurance fund, of the right to sue for injuries sustained, of recourse to the courts, and of a trial by jury. Third. That it deprives parties of the freedom of contract and impairs the obligations of contracts. Fourth. That it makes an unjust and arbitrary classification, and does not affect all who are within its reason.

Sections 20—1 and 21—1 are as follows, viz.:

"Sec. 20—1. Any employer who employs five or more workmen, or operatives regularly in the same business or in or about the same establishment, who shall pay into the state insurance fund the premiums provided by this act, shall not be liable to respond in damages at common law or by statute, save as hereinafter provided, for injuries or death of any such employee, wherever occurring, during the period covered by such premiums, provided the injured employee has remained in his service with notice that his employer has paid into the state insurance fund the premiums provided by this act; the continuation in the service of such employer with such notice shall be deemed a waiver by the employee of his right of action as aforesaid. Each employer paying the premiums provided by this act into the state insurance fund shall post in conspicuous places about his place or places of business typewritten or printed notices stating the fact that he has made such payment; and the same, when so posted, shall constitute sufficient notice to his employees of the fact that he has made such payment, and of any subsequent payments he may make after such notices have been posted.

"Sec. 21—1. All employers who employ five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business or in or about the same establishment, who shall not pay into the state insurance fund the premiums provided by this act, shall be liable to their employees for damages suffered by reason of personal injuries sustained in the course of employment, caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of the employer, or any of the employer's officers, agents, or employees, and also to the personal representatives of such employees where death results from such injuries; and in such action the defendant shall not avail himself or itself of the following common-law defenses: the defense of the fellow-servant rule, the defense of the assumption of risk, or the defense of contributory negligence."

The law was passed after a report referred to in the briefs, of a commission appointed by the governor, in obedience to a statute passed for that purpose. The report was prepared after an exhaustive research into industrial conditions in many countries, and an examination of laws which have been passed in the effort to improve such conditions. Substantially, its conclusions are: That the system which has been followed in this country, of dealing with accidents in industrial pursuits, is wholly unsound; that there is an intelligent and widespread public sentiment which calls for its modification and improvement, and that the general welfare requires it; that there has been enormous waste under the present system, and that the action for personal injuries by employee against employer no longer furnishes a real and practical remedy, annoys and harasses both, and does not meet the economic and social problem which has resulted from modern industrialism. Conceding the desirability of improvement, of legislative and governmental action, and the good results in other countries which have no written Constitution to limit the legislative power, we, in this country, have the problem of devising a plan which shall not infringe the fundamental law.

It is apparent, from a contemplation of the whole enactment and its scope and purpose, as well as of the participation of the state in its administration, that it must find its validity, if at all, in the police power of the state. There is now

(it can be fairly said) general concurrence in the meaning of the term "police power" and as to its extent. Prof. Freund, in his work, says, at § 2: "The term 'police' has never been circumscribed. It means at the same time a power and function of government, a system of rules, and an administrative organization and force." And in § 3, after discussing its nature and aims, he says: "It will reveal the police power not as a fixed quantity, but as the expression of social, economic, and political conditions. As long as these conditions vary, the police power must continue to be elastic, i. e., capable of development." In State ex rel. Monnett v. Buckeye Pipe Line Co. 61 Ohio St. 520, 56 N. E. 464, as to the constitutionality of the Ohio anti-trust law, it is said: "The definite proposition of counsel upon this point is that, although the act is an exercise of legislative power, it transcends the provisions of the state and Federal Constitutions, which render inviolable the rights of liberty and property, which include the right to make contracts. It would be difficult to place too high an estimate upon these guaranties, and they include the right to make contracts. But it is settled that these guaranties are themselves limited by the public welfare or the exercise of the police power." In Phillips v. State, 77 Ohio St. 216, 82 N. E. 1065, it is said: "It is almost an axiom that anything which is reasonable and necessary to secure the peace, safety, morals, and best interests of the commonwealth may be done under the police power; and this implies that private rights exist subject to the public welfare. These principles are plainly recognized in article 14, § 1, of the Constitution of the United States, and article 1, § 19, of the Constitution of Ohio." The cases of Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 55 L. ed. 112, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1062, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186, Ann. Cas. 1912 A, 487, and Assaria State Bank v. Dolley, 219 U. S. 121, 55 L. ed. 123, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 189, involved the constitutionality of laws enacted by Oklahoma and Kansas, in the exercise of the police power to establish bank depositors' guaranty funds created by levy on each of the banks. Objection was made that the tax was an appropriation of the property of one bank to pay debts of another, without due process of law. Mr. Justice Holmes said: "The substance of the plaintiff's argument is that the assessment takes private property for private use without compensation. . . . Nevertheless, notwithstanding the logical form of the objection, there are more powerful considerations on the other side. In the first 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

place, it is established by a series of cases that an ulterior public advantage may justify a comparatively insignificant taking of private property for what, in its immediate purpose, is a private use. . . . It may be said in a general way that the police power extends to all the great public needs. Campfield v. United States, 167 U. S. 518, 42 L. ed. 260, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 864. It may be put forth in aid of what is sanctioned by usage, or held by the prevailing morality or strong and preponderant opinion, to be greatly and immediately necessary to the public welfare." We think it clear that the objects and purposes as above set forth, which the legislature contemplated in the passage of the law in question, are sufficient to sustain the exercise of the police power, and the participation of the state in the manner provided. Whether the plan adopted is the most appropriate or best calculated to accomplish those objects are matters with which the court is not concerned, and the law should not be held to be invalid unless clearly in violation of some provision of the Constitution.

It is urgently insisted that while the law is apparently permissive, and leaves its operation to the election of employers and employees, it is really coercive, and upon this premise much persuasive argument against the validity of the law is based. This is an important question in the case.

An examination of the section touching the questions made is here necessary. After providing in § 20—1 that an employer who elects to comply with the act shall be relieved from liability to the employee at common law or by statute (except as provided in § 21—2), it is then enacted in § 21—1: "All employers who shall not pay into the insurance fund, . . . shall be liable to their employees for damages, . . . caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of the employer, his agents," etc. And in such cases the defenses of assumption of risk, fellow servant, and contributory negligence are not available. So that an employer who elects not to come into the plan of insurance may still escape liability if he not guilty of wrongful act, neglect, or default. His liability is not absolute, as in the case of the New York statute hereinafter referred to. And it cannot be said that the withdrawal of the defenses of assumption of risk, fellow servant, and contributory negligence, as against an employer who does not go into the plan, is coercive, for such withdrawal is in harmony with the legislative policy of the state for a number of years past. The law known as the Norris law, passed in 1910, withdrew these defenses in the particulars covered by the law.

As to the employee, if the parties do not elect to operate under the act, he has his remedy for the neglect, wrongful act, or default of his employer and agents, as before the law was passed, and is not subject to the defenses named. If the parties are operating under the act, the employee contributes to an insurance fund for the benefit of himself or his heirs, and, in case he is injured or killed, he or they will receive the benefit, even though his injury or death was caused by his own negligent or wrongful act, not wilful. And that is not all. Under § 21—2, if the parties are operating under the act, and the employee is injured or killed, and the injury arose from the wilful act of his employer, his officer or agent, or from failure of the employer or agent to comply with legal requirements as to safety of employees, then the injured employee or his legal representative has his option to claim under the act or sue in court for damages. Therefore the only right of action which this statute removes from the employee is the right to sue for mere negligence (which is not wilful or statutory) of his employer, and it is within common knowledge that this has become in actual practice a most unsubstantial thing.

It is conceded by counsel that the particulars named in § 21—2 are such as form the basis for a large portion of claims for personal injuries. Many employers may elect to remain outside its provisions; it would not be strange if many do so. On the other hand, some workmen may feel disposed to do likewise in spite of what would seem to be to their manifest advantage in securing the benefits of the insurance. However, if there should be such general acceptance of and compliance with the statute as its framers hope for, so as to bring a large part of the labor employed in the industrial enterprises of the state within its influence and operation, that would not demonstrate its coercive character. On the contrary, it would justify the enactment. Naturally time and experience will disclose imperfections and inefficiencies in the plan; but if it should prove to be feasible, and appropriate in a general way, these imperfections can be corrected by the legislature. On account of the common-law and statutory rights still preserved to the parties by this statute (as we have pointed out), in cases where the election is made to come under its provisions, as well as not to do so, taken in connection with the advantage to each which the plan contemplates, we cannot say that the statute is coercive. As was said in the Wisconsin case: "Laws cannot be set aside upon mere speculation or conjecture. The court must be able to say with certainty that an unlawful result will follow." [147 Wis. 327.] We do not see how any such thing can be said here. Every consideration of prudence and self-interest (things not easily associated with compulsion and coercion) would seem to lead an employee to voluntarily make the contribution and waiver contemplated.

Second. Does this statute take private property without due process of law, and deny the guaranties of the Constitution as claimed?

Perhaps no exact definition of "due process of law" has been agreed on. Judge Story defines it in his work on the Constitution, § 1936: The right "to be protected in life and liberty and in the acquisition and enjoyment of property, under equal and impartial laws which govern the whole community. This puts the state upon its true foundation, a society for the establishment and administration of general justice,—justice to all, equal and fixed, recognizing individual rights, and not impairing them." In Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, § 356, it is said: "Due process of law, in each particular case, means such an exercise of the powers of government as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the classes of cases to which the one in question belongs."

The case of Ives v. South Buffalo R. Co. 201 N. Y. 276, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162, 94 N. E. 431, Ann. Cas. 1912 B, 156 (relied on by some of counsel), involved a statute different in many essentials from the Ohio law. Its controlling feature was that every employer engaged in any of the classified industries should be liable to a workman for injury arising in the course of the work by a necessary risk inherent in the business, whether the employer was at fault or not, and whether the employee was at fault or not, except when his fault was wilful. The court held the law invalid, as imposing the ordinary risks of a business (which under the common law the employee was held to assume) on the employer. The court states one of the premises on which it proceeds, as follows: "When our Constitutions were adopted it was the law of the land that no man who was without fault or negligence could be held liable in damages for injuries sustained by another." But that rule was not of universal application. At common law one may sustain such relation to the inception of an undertaking that he will be held liable for negligence in the progress of the enterprise, even though he have no part or connection with the negligent act itself which caused the injury. Such, for instance, as where the owner of property contracts with an independent contractor to do work which, though entirely lawful, yet has inherent probabilities of harm if negligently performed. The position in the line of causation which employers sustain in modern industrial pursuits is, of course, the basic fact on which employers' liability laws rest.

As to the right to abolish the defense of assumption of risk, it is enough to say here that the great weight of authority is against the New York position and the position of such of the counsel in this case as insist on that rule. Some of counsel appearing against the validity of this law concede the right to abolish the defenses referred to. The supreme courts of Massachusetts, Wisconsin, and Washington have recently held, in cases sustaining the validity of statutes similar to the one here attacked, that it is within the legislative power to abolish the defense referred to. Opinion of Justices, 209 Mass. 607, 96 N. E. 308; Borgnis v. Falk Co. 147 Wis. 327, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 489, 133 N. W. 209; State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 466, 117 Pac. 1101.

Since the argument of this case, the Supreme Court of the United States has decided the case of Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, and has sustained the constitutionality of the employers' liability law passed by Congress. The abolition of these rules was urged as an objection to the law. The court say: "Of the objection to these changes it is enough to observe: First. 'A person has no property, no vested interest, in any rule of the common law. That is only one of the forms of municipal law, and is no more sacred than any other. Rights of property which have been created by the common law cannot be taken away without due process; but the law itself, as a rule of conduct, may be changed at the will . . . of the legislature, unless prevented by constitutional limitations. Indeed, the great office of statutes is to remedy defects in the common law as they are developed, and to adapt it to the changes of time and circumstances.' Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 134, 24 L. ed. 77, 87; Martin v. Pittsburg & L. E. R. Co. 203 U. S. 284, 294, 51 L. ed. 184, 191, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 100, 8 Ann. Cas. 87; The Lottawanna (Rodd v. Heartt) 21 Wall. 558, 577, 22 L. ed. 654, 663; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Commercial Mill. Co. 218 U. S. 408, 417, 54 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) L. ed. 1088, 1091, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 59, 21 Ann. Cas. 815."

The recent case of State v. Boone, 84 Ohio St. 346, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 95 N. E. 924, is cited as indicating limitations of the police power which apply here. The act involved in that case required the physician in attendance on a case of confinement to investigate and certify without compensation to certain facts which would not naturally come within the knowledge of the attending physician, and as to matters wholly outside the scope of his professional duty. The court held the statute unconstitutional as to physician and midwife, because of an unreasonable and arbitrary exercise of the police power. That was the proposition of law decided in that case, and no other proposition was decided. The court was careful to point out in the opinion and also on motion for rehearing that the state might require the physician to report to proper authority facts which would come naturally under his observation in the line of his duty without compensation. Other matters referred to in the opinion were not included in the syllabus, which stated the law decided by the court.

The court remarks that the police power inhere in the sovereignty. Its foundation "is the right and duty to provide for the common welfare of the governed." Manifestly the reasoning which led to the conclusion in that case that the statute had been passed by an unreasonable exercise of the police power, can have no application here.

State ex rel. Ward v. Hubbard, 22 Ohio C. C. 253, affirmed without opinion in 65 Ohio St. 574, 58 L.R.A. 654, 64 N. E. 109, and State ex rel. Monnett v. Guilbert, 56 Ohio St. 575, 38 L.R.A. 519, 60 Am. St. Rep. 756, 47 N. E. 551, involving the validity of statutes creating a teachers' pension fund, and the Torren's law to establish an insurance fund for the protection of land titles, concerned laws which were wholly compulsory with no element of choice, and were not claimed to have been passed under the police power to cure undesirable public conditions, but for mere private benefit. These cases can therefore have no relation to a plan adopted to promote the general welfare, the contributions to which are made after an election by the parties to participate in the undertaking.

It is urged by counsel opposing this law, that the case of Byers v. Meridian Printing Co. 84 Ohio St. 408, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 913, 95 N. E. 917, is of conclusive weight condemnatory of the legislation we are examining. In that case it is ruled that an amendment to § 6094, Revised Statutes (changing the presumption of malice and burden of proof in actions for libel, where retraction is made on demand, in the manner stated), is unconstitutional. The decision was put on the ground that plaintiff was guaranteed his remedy by due course of law for an injury done in his land, goods, person, or reputation, under article 1, § 16, Constitution of Ohio. When the injury was done to the reputation of plaintiff by the libel, he was entitled to his constitutional remedy at law; but at the same time he was entitled to demand of the publisher a retraction of the libel. Therefore the legislature had no right to put him on his election as to two courses, both of which he was entitled to follow. The court is careful to declare that it is not disposed to question that a citizen may waive a constitutional right. But being compelled to elect between two rights, both of which a person is entitled to, has no resemblance to waiver. And under the law under investigation here, as already shown, the right of action (for injury by wilful act of the employer, and for his failure to comply with requirements as to the safety of employees) is still reserved to the employees. So that the only thing withdrawn by this law, and to which withdrawal he consents by his voluntary election to operate under the law, is his right of action for mere negligence, and in place of it he receives the substantial protections and privileges under the state insurance fund.

It is stated in Butt v. Green, 29 Ohio St. 670, that persons may expressly or impliedly waive either constitutional or statutory provisions intended for their benefit, and, as above shown, the court in the Byers Case state it is not disposed to question that one may waive a constitutional right.

We think that in a case such as is presented here, in which the state itself has undertaken a great enterprise in the interest of the general good, and in the exercise of its police power, and presents to its citizens the option to join in the undertaking and receive its protection and benefit, on a right of action being withdrawn by the legislature, which experience has shown to be difficult of practical enforcement, while preserving the valuable and substantial kindred rights of action, it cannot be said that in such withdrawal there is a violation of the Constitution in the respects claimed.

But it is insisted that the act delegates judicial power to the board of awards, and denies recourse to the courts and trial by jury.

Of course, if the board is a court, there is an end of the whole matter. The statute would be unconstitutional; for if the board 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

is a court, it has not been created in accordance with the manner provided by the Constitution. We do not consider the board of awards a court, or invested with judicial power within the meaning of the Constitution. It is created by the act purely as an administrative agency to bring into being and administer the insurance fund, and the fact that it is empowered to classify persons who come under the law, and to ascertain facts as to the application of the fund, does not vest it with judicial power within the constitutional sense. Under our system the executive department of the government has many boards to assist in the administration of its affairs.

In State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 98, 5 N. E. 228, it is said: "What is judicial power cannot be brought within the ring fence of a definition. It is undoubtedly power to hear and determine, but this is not peculiar to the judicial office. Many of the acts of administrative and executive officers involve the exercise of the same power." The court then shows that many boards hear and determine questions affecting private as well as public rights, and quotes with approval from State v. Harmon, 31 Ohio St. 250: "The authority to ascertain facts, and apply the law to the facts when ascertained, appertains as well to the other departments of the government as to the judiciary." These principles were applied in France v. State, 57 Ohio St. 1, 47 N. E. 1041, in which case the court remark that the case of State ex rel. Monnett v. Guilbert, 56 Ohio St. 576, 38 L.R.A. 519, 60 Am. St. Rep. 756, 47 N. E. 551, forms no exception, for the powers of the recorder under the statute there in question were essentially those which properly belong to a court.

Does the law deny recourse to the courts and trial by jury? How does it affect an injured employee where the parties are operating under the act?

In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Stankard, 56 Ohio St. 232, 49 L.R.A. 381, 60 Am. St. Rep. 745, 46 N. E. 577, which was a suit by the beneficiaries of a member of the relief department of the railroad, the company answered setting up a rule which provided that the decision of the relief department should be final. The court say: "The right to appeal to the courts for the redress of wrongs is one of those rights which is in its nature, under our Constitution, alienable, and cannot be thrown off or bargained away." But the court shows that parties may contract to submit the fixing of facts to some nonjudicial tribunal, and say: "In insurance and other like cases, where the ultimate question is the payment of a certain sum of money, certain facts may be fixed by a person selected for that purpose in the contract; but the ultimate question as to whether the money shall be paid or not may be litigated in the courts, and a stipulation to the contrary is void." So that under that rule the parties may conclusively bind themselves in advance to submit questions of amount, etc., to some tribunal other than a court; but the ultimate question of actual liability cannot be removed from the courts.

Now, in this statute, § 36 is as follows: "Sec. 36. The board shall have full power and authority to hear and determine all questions within its jurisdiction, and its decision thereon shall be final. Provided, however, in case the final action of such board denies the right of the claimant to participate at all in such fund, . . . upon any . . . ground going to the basis of the claimant's right, then the claimant, within thirty (30) days after the notice of the final action of such board, may, by filing his appeal in the common pleas court of the county wherein the injury was inflicted, be entitled to a trial in the ordinary way, and be entitled to a jury if he demands it. In such a proceeding, the prosecuting attorney of the county, without additional compensation, shall represent the state liability board of awards, and he shall be notified by the clerk forthwith of the filing of such appeal. Within thirty days after filing his appeal, the appellant shall file a petition in the ordinary form against such board as defendant." Therefore, if the board denies the claimant's right to participate in the fund on any ground going to the basis of his claim, he may, by filing an appeal and petition in the ordinary form, be entitled to trial by jury; the case proceeding as any other suit.

It is not an appeal in the sense of appealing from one court to another, but is really the beginning of an original suit. As to this it must be remembered that the whole proceeding is with and against the board of awards. His claim is not against the employer. There is no dispute between them. His claim is for the benefits of the insurance fund. The board of awards inquires into the matters pointed out in the statute, and, in case of dispute as to whether there is any ultimate right to "participate at all in such fund," he has his recourse to the courts. But he is not confined to that method of proceeding. If he claims that the injury was caused by the wilful act of the employer or officer or agent, or from failure to comply with legal requirements as to safety of employees, etc., he may waive his claim under the act, and sue in court for his damages. But in his petition in such 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

case he could not claim damages for mere negligence; he having elected to waive that cause of action, having elected, as it were, to assume the risk of his employer's mere neglect in return for the benefits and protection to himself and his heirs afforded by the terms of the act.

Another objection that is urged against this statute is that it makes an unjust and arbitrary classification and does not affect all who are within its reason, as required by § 26, art. 2, of Constitution of Ohio. Under the law only employers of five or more are affected by it.

Spear, J., in Cincinnati v. Steinkamp, 54 Ohio St. 295, 43 N. E. 492, remarked: "In order to be general and uniform in operation, it is not necessary that the law should operate upon every person in the state, nor in every locality; it is sufficient, the authorities coincide in holding, if it operates upon every person brought within the relation and circumstances provided for, and in every locality where the conditions exist." To same effect are Platt v. Craig, 66 Ohio St. 75, 63 N. E. 594; Gentsch v. State, 71 Ohio St. 151, 72 N. E. 900; Cincinnati Street R. Co. v. Horstman, 72 Ohio St. 107, 73 N. E. 1075.

We think the classification is reasonable and proper. In the nature of the case the risks of any regular employment are less, and the opportunity for avoiding them better, where an employee is one of four than when the number is larger. As was said by Winslow, Ch. J., in Borgnis v. Falk Co. 147 Wis. 327, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 489, 133 N. W. 209. "The difference in the situation is not merely fanciful; it is real." Consolidated Coal Co. v. Illinois, 185 U. S. 203, 46 L. ed. 872, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616, is a case in which a classification was made under somewhat similar manner, and was upheld. Nor do we think it an objection that the law applies only to workmen and operatives, and not to all others. This classification brings within the law all employees within its reason.

As to the suggestion that this statute impairs the obligations of contracts, it is sufficient, to say that it can, of course, not affect contracts in existence and unexpired at the time it is put into operation by the employer.

It is suggested that this legislation marks a radical step in our governmental policy not contemplated by the Constitution, and which it is the duty of the court to condemn. But it creates no new right, or new remedy for wrong done. It is an effort to in some degree answer the requirements of conditions which have come in an age of invention and momentous change. The courts of the country, while firmly resisting encroachment on the Constitutions in the past, have yet found in their ample limits sufficient to enable us to meet the emergencies and needs of our development, and we do not find that this statute goes beyond the bounds put upon the legislative will.

The demurrer to the petition is overruled, and the writ of mandamus awarded.

Spear, Price, and Donahue, JJ., concur.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

AMERICAN SURETY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
A. D. MORTON.

(— Okla. —, 122 Pac. 1103.)

Principal and agent — want of authority — personal liability.

1. If a man contracts as agent, but without authority, for a principal whom he names, he cannot bind his alleged principal by the contract; but the party whom he induces to contract with him may sue the alleged agent upon a warranty of authority if said agent honestly believed that he had authority which he did not possess, or he may sue the alleged agent in an action of fraud and deceit if the professed agent knew he had not the authority which he assumed to possess and exercise, but he cannot sue the agent on the contract, unless the contract contains apt words to bind him personally.

Damages — action against agent — absence of authority.

2. In an action by a third person against one who assumes authority to enter into a contract as agent for another, or against an agent for acting in excess of his authority, the measure of damages is the loss which has accrued to the third person as a natural consequence of the want of authority, and is not limited by the contract, but embraces all injuries resulting from the wrongful assumption.

(April 9, 1912.)

ERROR to the Washington County Court to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover premiums alleged to be due on a guardian's

Headnotes by ROBERTSON, C.

Note. — The matter of the personal liability to the other contracting party, of one who, without authority, assumes to contract as agent of another, is discussed in a note to Haupt v. Vint, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 518.

39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

bond and expenses incurred in attempting to collect the same. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the commissioner's opinion.

Mr. J. T. Shipman, for plaintiff in error:

An agent who, without authority, contracts in the name of his principal, is himself liable to the person with whom he contracts as such agent.

31 Cyc. 1545; Kroeger v. Pitcairn, 101 Pa. 311, 47 Am. Rep. 718; Bank of Hamburg v. Wray, 4 Strobb. L. 87, 51 Am. Dec. 659; White v. Skinner, 3 Johns. 307, 7 Am. Dec. 381; Dusenbury v. Ellis, 3 Johns. Cas. 70, 2 Am. Dec. 144; Dale v. Donaldson Lumber Co. 48 Ark. 188, 3 Am. St. Rep. 224, 2 S. W. 703; Frankland v. Johnson, 147 Ill. 520, 37 Am. St. Rep. 234, 35 N. E. 480; Keener v. Harrod, 2 Md. 63, 56 Am. Dec. 706; Farmers' Co-Op. Trust Co. v. Floyd, 47 Ohio St. 525, 12 L.R.A. 346, 21 Am. St. Rep. 846, 26 N. E. 110; Cochran v. Baker, 34 Or. 555, 52 Pac. 520, 56 Pac. 643; Talbot v. Mattox, D. & P. Realty Co. 26 Okla. 298, 109 Pac. 128.

Messrs. J. P. O'Meara and H. H. Montgomery, for defendant in error:

The rule that an agent acting without or in excess of his authority is personally liable is subject to the qualification that the person dealing with him must have acted on the faith and representations, expressed or implied, that the agent had the authority assumed, and without any knowledge of any want of authority on the agent's part.

2 Enc. L. & P. 1152; Beattie v. Ebury, L. R. 7 Ch. 800, 41 L. J. Ch. N. S. 804, 27 L. T. N. S. 398, 20 Week. Rep. 994; Thilmany v. Iowa Paper Bag Co. 108 Iowa, 357, 75 Am. St. Rep. 259, 79 N. W. 261; Lewis v. Nicholson, 18 Q. B. 511, 21 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 311, 16 Jur. 1041; Kent v. Addicks, 60 C. C. A. 660, 126 Fed. 112; Lawson, Contr. § 195.

Robertson, C., filed the following opinion:

The plaintiff brought this suit against defendant to recover premiums alleged to be due on guardian's bond, and for expenses incurred in attempting to collect the same. The judgment of the lower court was for the defendant. The complaint, in substance, charges that in March, 1904, the defendant, Morton, representing to plaintiff that he was the agent of one James Donnelly, made application to have it become surety on the bond of one Silas Bryan as guardian of his (Bryan's) children, and by the terms of the agreement Donnelly was to sign a contract which would obligate the guardian to pay $5 per year premium on the bond until it was released.

Donnelly's name was signed by Morton. It is charged that Morton had no authority to sign Donnelly's name to the application, and that, therefore, Morton became liable to the surety company to the same extent as if he had signed his own name, instead of Donnelly's. This action is on the contract itself, and plaintiff does not attempt to recover on defendant's warranty of his authority to sign the name of his principal, nor does it attempt to recover against defendant for damages for fraud and deceit.

The case was tried to the court without a jury, and at the request of the surety company the court made special findings of fact, among which are the following:

"(1) The court finds that the defendant, Morton, made no representations as to his authority that were untrue, or that he had reason to believe were untrue.

"(2) The court finds that plaintiff's agent who took the application for the bond in this case was not deceived as to Morton's authority by anything that was said or done by Morton, and that Morton answered truthfully the questions asked him."

It seems plain that Morton would not be personally liable on the contract as sued on herein, inasmuch as the court found that he acted honestly, and that the agent was not deceived as to Morton's authority to sign Donnelly's name. Lawson on Contracts, § 195, lays down the rule in such case as follows: "Although there are decisions which hold an agent personally liable on a contract which he makes in the name of another without his authority, they are clearly wrong, for it is not the business of courts to make contracts for parties which neither of them intended to make or would have consented to make." This does not mean that the surety company would be left without a remedy, for, as the author above quoted says in the latter part of § 195, supra: "The agent's liability in such a case is either upon an implied warranty of authority on his part, when he acts in good faith, or upon the ground of fraud when he intentionally misrepresents his authority. The party contracted with has the right, on learning the facts, to repudiate the contract and to hold the assumed agent immediately responsible for damages, without waiting for the time when an action would lie on the contract itself, and the damages are to be measured, not by the contract, but by the injury resulting from the agent's want of power." Anson on the Law of Contract, Am. ed. p. 420, lays down the rule as follows: "If a man contracts as agent, but without authority, for a principal whom he names, he cannot bind his alleged principal or himself by the contract; but the party whom he induced to contract with him has one of two remedies: (a) If the alleged agent honestly believed that he had an authority which he did not possess, he may be sued upon a warranty of authority. . . .

(b) If the professed agent knew that he had not the authority which he assumed to possess, he may be sued by the injured in the action of deceit." Lawson on Contracts, § 195, further says: "But it would be stating the rule rather too broadly to say that the agent is liable on this warranty of authority, even where he bona fide believes that he had the authority, though this would seem to be the doctrine of the leading English case. If he enters into the contract as the agent of another, and does so honestly, at the same time fully disclosing all the facts touching his authority, so that the person contracting is fully informed of the authority possessed or claimed by him, he does not become personally liable if it turns out that he really had no authority." In 31 Cyc. p. 1614, it is said: "As to the ground upon which the liability of an agent contracting for another without authority rests, the authorities in the several states differ widely; nor is it easy to reconcile the various decisions in the same state. In some jurisdictions, particularly in the earlier cases, it is held that an action may be maintained against the agent as principal upon the contract itself, although it contains no apt words to bind him personally, but only to bind the principal, upon the theory that the contract must have been intended to bind someone; if not the principal, then the agent. By the great weight of recent authority, however, this theory has been emphatically repudiated, and it is now generally held, more logically, that the agent cannot be held upon the contract unless it contains apt words to bind him personally, in the absence of which the only remedy is by an action for the breach of his implied warranty or an action for deceit if the circumstances warrant the latter remedy."

These authorities, without doubt, are decisive of the question raised in this case. The plaintiff below sued Morton on the contract, just as though he had signed his own name, instead of Donnelly's. The recovery under the complaint would of necessity have been measured by the terms of the contract itself. A recovery under an implied warranty of authority would have been measured by the real damage sustained by the breach of the warranty. The rule for the measure of damages in such case is stated in 31 Cyc. 1651, as follows: "In an action by the third person against one who assumed without authority to enter into a contract as agent for another, or against an agent for acting in excess of his authority, the measure of damages is the loss which has accrued to the third person as a natural and probable consequence of the want of authority, and is not limited by the contract, but embraces all injuries resulting from the wrongful assumption." The contract contains no reference to Morton, nor are there any apt words which tend to bind him personally. Clearly, under the pleadings, no recovery could have been had on the contract. None was sought on any other theory. Therefore it necessarily follows that the judgment of the county court of Washington county was correct, and should be in all things affirmed.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.
(In Banc.)

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, Resp.,
v.

M. W. COFFEY, Appt.

(161 Cal. 433, 119 Pac. 901.)

Trial — jury — accomplice.

1. Whether or not a witness is an accomplice of accused is for the determination of the jury on conflicting evidence, but for the court where his acts and conduct are admitted.

Appeal — witness — accomplice.

2. An appellate court must consider whether or not a witness was an accomplice of accused, when an appeal from a conviction is upon the ground that the conviction was based upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice.

Accomplice — definition — bribery — evidence.

3. An intermediary representing one who desires to influence the action of a public board by bribery, who makes the bargain with the members and delivers their compensation, is an accomplice with one agreeing to receive and receiving the bribe, under a statute defining accomplices as all persons concerned in the commission of crime, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, so that his uncorroborated testimony is not sufficient to convict the latter.

Same — liability to indictment — necessity.

4. Liability to indictment for the same offense is not necessary to render one an accomplice with a person on trial for agreeing to receive and receiving a bribe, under a statute defining accomplices as all persons concerned in the commission of crime, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission.

Evidence — accomplices — corroboration — bribery.

5. That an official voted for a proposition to support which he is accused of agreeing to receive and receiving a bribe does not corroborate the testimony of the accomplice that he entered into the agreement, so as to support a conviction.

Same — fund — immunity agreement.

6. Establishing the existence of a fund for bribery, and showing a general immunity contract with one accused of agreeing to receive and receiving a bribe, are not sufficient to corroborate testimony of an accomplice who secured the bargain to receive the bribe, so as to support a conviction; nor is the fact that the accomplice

Note. — Who is accomplice in bribery case within the rule requiring corroboration of testimony.

In State v. Durnam, 73 Minn. 150, 75 N. W. 1127, 11 Am. Crim. Rep. 179, it was held that one who gives or offers a bribe is not an accomplice of the acceptor, as they are separate offenses.

And in People v. Ruef, 14 Cal. App. 576, 114 Pac. 48, 54, it was held that the following instruction was proper: "One who offers a bribe is not for that reason alone an accomplice of the one to whom it is offered, and one to whom a bribe is offered, or who asks or agrees to receive a bribe, is not for that reason alone an accomplice of one who offers a bribe."

In State v. Quinlan, 40 Minn. 55, 41 N. W. 299, in a prosecution under a section of the Penal Code providing for punishment of one who received money as a bribe, one who makes an agreement with another that the latter shall withhold evidence of crime, and pays money therefor to such person, is 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

not an accomplice of the acceptor of the bribe, within the rule requiring testimony of an accomplice to be corroborated.

In State v. Wappenstein, 67 Wash. 502, 121 Pac. 989, in a prosecution of the chief of police for soliciting and accepting a bribe to be influenced in his official action so as to permit houses of prostitution to be operated by bribe givers, under a statute providing that any public official who shall ask or receive directly or indirectly any compensation, gratuity, or reward, or any promise thereof upon an agreement or understanding that his official acts shall be influenced thereby, shall be punished, etc., it was held that the bribe givers were not accomplices of defendant, under the rule as to corroboration of testimony of accomplices. It was said that the true test to determine whether a witness is an accomplice or not is: "Could the witness himself have been indicted either as principal or accessory for the crime charged and under investigation?" If he could not, he is not an accomplice. Manifestly, under that test the witnesses sought to secure an abandonment of the prosecution against accused.

Bribery — acceptance of gift — effect.

7. Acceptance of a gift for prior official action without corrupt private understanding is not bribery.

(December 1, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco convicting him of bribery, and from orders denying motions to set aside the judgment and for a new trial. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Carroll Cook, Franklin P. Bull, and Robert Ferral for appellant.

Mr. William Hoff Cook with Messrs. U. S. Webb, Attorney General, W. H. Langdon, and Francis J. Heney for the People.

Henshaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant was indicted under § 165 of the Penal Code, and was charged as a su-in question were not accomplices, as neither had received a bribe and neither was a public officer:

In a prosecution of an indictment for offering a bribe to a supervisor, with corrupt intent to influence the official acts of such supervisor in the granting of a particular franchise, it was held that such supervisor did not become an accomplice, because of the fact that he was a party to a general scheme to deal in franchises for money, to which agreement defendant and other supervisors were also parties. People v. Ruef, supra.

And in People v. Bunkers, 2 Cal. App. 197, 84 Pac. 364, 370, a prosecution of a member of the legislature for asking and receiving a bribe, it was held that witnesses who were parties to a plan to detect and expose crime, who did not suggest, advise, or encourage crime, but only assisted in procuring the money and paying it over to defendant, were not accomplices, within the rule as to corroboration of accomplice's testimony. The court said: "The appellant was guilty of a crime when he asked for or offered to receive the bribe, and his acceptance of it neither added to his guilt nor to the penalty already entailed. Hence, the plan to 'entrap' him amounted to nothing more than procuring corroborative evidence essential to conviction. Such methods, under these circumstances, are not within the rule against encouraging crime merely to procure its commission, to the end that those willing to become offenders may be punished. They fall within that other rule which justifies dissemblance in order to procure additional and necessary evidence of guilt."

In Butt v. State, 81 Ark. 173, 118 Am. St. Rep. 42, 98 S. W. 723, a prosecution of a state legislator for bribery, it was said 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

supervisor with having "agreed to receive and receiving" a bribe of $4,000 from James L. Gallagher, Abraham Ruef, and Tiley L. Ford. It was alleged that the agreement to receive the bribe and the reception of the bribe were "with the wilful, felonious, unlawful, and corrupt intent" upon the part of Coffey, that his official vote, opinion, judgment, and action should be influenced thereby in the matter of granting to the United Railroads of San Francisco a franchise for an overhead trolley system. From the judgment of conviction, and from his various motions to set aside the judgment, in arrest of judgment, and for a new trial, each of which was denied by the court, defendant appeals. His principal contentions are that the court erred in the instructions which it gave upon the law of accomplices, and that his conviction was had in violation of the law, upon the uncorroborated testimony of a self-confessed accomplice in his crime.

When the question of an accomplice arises in the trial of a case, the general and accepted rule is for the court to in-that mere silence in the presence of the crime, or the mere failure to inform the officers of the law when one has learned of the commission of a crime, does not make one an accomplice.

On the other hand, it has been held that one offering or paying a bribe is an accomplice of the acceptor or receiver. Ruffin v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 565, 38 S. W. 169.

And that a deputy sheriff who was present when a bribe was paid, knew all the facts, and received one half of the amount of the bribe money, was an accomplice of a justice of the peace charged with accepting a bribe for not causing the arrest of one accused of carrying a gun on his person. Morawietz v. State, 46 Tex. Crim. Rep. 436, 80 S. W. 997.

And a friend of the one who paid the bribe, and who was present at the time and furnished part of the bribe money, was also held to be an accomplice. Ibid.

And in People v. Bissert, 71 App. Div. 118, 75 N. Y. Supp. 630, affirmed without opinion in 172 N. Y. 643, 65 N. E. 1120, it was held that one who paid to a police officer a sum of money with the understanding on his part that he would permit the party so paying, without molestation or interference, to conduct at a place specified a disorderly house, was an accomplice of such officer, within the rule requiring such testimony to be corroborated.

And in People v. Winant, 24 Misc. 361, 53 N. Y. Supp. 695, in the trial of an indictment for offering to bribe a grand juror, it was held that though, under the Penal Code, acceptance of a bribe is a separate offense from that of bribing or offering to bribe, yet one who accepts a bribe is an accomplice of the briber, within the definition given to that word by the authorities.

J. H. B.

struct the jury touching the law of accomplices, and leave the question whether or not the witness be an accomplice for the decision of the jury as a matter of fact. People v. Kraker, 72 Cal. 459, 1 Am. St. Rep. 65, 14 Pac. 196.

Whenever the facts themselves are in dispute, that is to say, wherever the question is whether the witness did or did not do certain things, which, admittedly, if he did do them, make him an accomplice, the jury's finding upon similar principles is not disturbed. But where the facts are not in dispute, where the acts and conduct of the witness are admitted, it becomes a question of law for the court to say whether or not those acts and facts make the witness an accomplice. For the law declares in mandatory terms that "a conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless he is corroborated by other evidence which in itself, and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice, tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof." Penal Code, § 1111.

Therefore, whenever upon appeal it is argued that the conviction was had upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, it is equivalent to a declaration that the verdict is contrary to the law and the evidence, and this is always a legal question. Penal Code, § 1181, subd. 6. Therefore, in every proper case, a court of appeals is called upon to consider whether or not the witness is an accomplice, and, if so, whether his evidence has received the corroboration demanded by the law, before a defendant may be convicted upon it.

To the consideration of what constitutes a man an accomplice in a bribery case, we are thus at once brought, and to an understanding of these matters a brief statement of the evidence becomes necessary. The principal witness for the prosecution was Gallagher, himself a supervisor. Gallagher, by his own statements, was testifying under a promise of immunity agreed to by the prosecution, in consideration of his giving truthful evidence touching his own crimes, and the crimes of others on the board of which he was a member, including the crime under examination. He swore that he acted as the intermediary of Abraham Ruef and for Ruef, and approached and consulted with his fellow members on the board in relation to the corrupt bargains which were, and were to be, entered into, and the amounts of money which the members of the board were to receive for voting as Ruef desired. In this particular instance Gallagher spoke to Coffey, at the suggestion of Ruef (quoting from his testimony): "Mr. Ruef told me what he could or would give the board of supervisors in the matter, and asked me to present the proposition to them, and I did so, and I reported back to Mr. Ruef from them that it was all right; that the matter could go through. I said to Mr. Coffey, in the matter of the overhead trolley, that there would be $4,000 in that matter, and Mr. Coffey said that that would be all right,—words to that effect. That is the substance of it." The trolley franchise was granted, and subsequent thereto, Gallagher testifies, he gave to Coffey $4,000 in two separate payments. This evidence, coming from the prosecution itself, is uncontroverted, and presents the legal question whether, by virtue of it, Gallagher was an accomplice of Coffey in the corrupt agreement thus charged and proved.

The rules of law and principles of evidence controlling the testimony of accomplices are drawn from the common law. The difficulty which the common-law judges experienced was not in determining the weight to be given to the testimony of an accomplice. Under their rules of evidence, a convicted felon could not testify. Influenced in no small degree by the maxim of the Roman law that a man of self-confessed infamy should not be heard as a witness against another (nemo, allegans turpitudinem suam, est audiendus), their principal difficulty was in determining whether the oath and evidence of a self-confessed, though unconvicted, felon,—an accomplice,—should be received at all. When this question was resolved against the doctrine of the Roman law, it was, of course, recognized that evidence of an accomplice, coming from a tainted source,—the witness being, first, an infamous man, from his own confession of guilt, and, second, a man usually testifying in the hope of favor or the expectation of immunity,—was not entitled to the same consideration as the evidence of a clean man, free from infamy. Hence, it soon became the practice of the common-law judges, in the wide latitude allowed to them in the instruction of their juries, to advise the latter that the testimony of an accomplice, for the reasons indicated, was to be viewed with care, caution, and suspicion (see Code Civ. Proc. § 2061); that the accomplice stood before them as a witness entitled to little credit; and that the surest way of establishing his credit in their eyes was for them to note whether his testimony was corroborated in any material matter by independent evidence, and that, if it were so corroborated, they might put faith in all that the accomplice had said. Instructions to this effect did not, of course, embody any rule of positive law. They were but the expression of considerations naturally arising from a contemplation of the weight and value to be given to such evidence. Subsequently, they were cast into the form of positive law by varying enactments in the Codes and statutes of the states. In this state, the rule of positive law since the year 1851 is as has been declared in § 1111 of the Penal Code. Time has not changed the value of such evidence, and succeeding legislatures have retained the rule; the amendment to the section in 1911 not materially affecting it.

But while the legislature was thus at pains to declare that a conviction could not be had on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, it omitted to define this word. At common law no difficulty was experienced, for the word was interpreted broadly to include principals in every degree and accessories before and after the fact. Those who "receive, relieve, comfort, or assist" the felon, were regarded as having participated in his crime, and as meriting the same punishment that he had earned. And so it will be found that at common law, and in the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, an accepted definition of an accomplice includes "all participes criminis, whether they are considered, in strict legal propriety, as principals in the first or second degree, or merely as accessories before or after the fact." Re Rowe, 23 C. C. A. 103, 40 U. S. App. 516, 77 Fed. 161.

Although the legislature did not in terms define an accomplice, it did lay down certain rules from which an acceptable definition of an accomplice may readily be derived. Thus, it obliterated the common-law distinctions between principals in their different degrees and accessories before the fact, and declared that "all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, or, not being present, have advised and encouraged its commission, . . . are principals in any crime so committed." Penal Code, § 31. The object of this was both to simplify criminal procedure and to do away with the technicalities of the common law which made the aider or abetter a principal in the second degree, and which forbade the accessory to be brought to trial until the principal had been convicted or outlawed, a rule that lived in modern times and did much mischief. 2 Stephen, History of Crim. Law, 232. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Rejecting from the category of accomplices the accessory after the fact (People v. Collum, 122 Cal. 186, 54 Pac. 589), we may derive a satisfactory definition of an accomplice from the language of § 31 of the Penal Code above quoted. Accomplices, then, are "all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, or, not being present, have advised and encouraged its commission." Certainly since the law has said that all such persons are so tainted with guilt that they may be indicted as principals, it cannot be denied that they are also accomplices. This definition, moreover, runs counter to no authority, since, by all, every person of legal responsibility, who knowingly and voluntarily co-operates with, or aids or assists or advises or encourages, another in the commission of a crime, is an accomplice, without regard to the degree of his guilt. 1 Russell, Crimes, 49; Wharton, Crim. Ev. 440; Rice, Crim. Ev. § 319; Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 1159.

Having reached the point of defining an accomplice, it becomes proper to consider what acts or facts fix this relationship or characteristic upon a witness. Manifestly, the single, sole determinative consideration is the part which the witness has borne in the crime perpetrated. If the witness has committed the crime, if he has knowingly aided and abetted in its commission, if he has advised and encouraged its commission, the existence of any one of these facts admitted or established stamps his status as that of an accomplice. This is the precise language of the law, and this, and this alone, is the governing principle of the law. Yet, in view of the cases hereinafter to be considered, it will be found that occasionally a court losing sight of this paramount and well-controlling consideration, namely, the conduct of the witness in relation to the crime, has wandered widely from the true test, and, in accordance with faulty definitions of its own making, has determined upon entirely false premises whether a witness is or is not an accomplice.

The commonest of these errors may thus be expressed: The law declares that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly commit it, or aid and abet in its commission, or advise and encourage its commission, are principals. They are, of course, accomplices. Therefore an accomplice is one who may be indicted for the same crime as that charged against the person on trial, and therefore, if he cannot be charged with the same crime, he is not an accomplice. Here is epitomized the reasoning of such cases as State v. Durnam, 73 Minn. 150, 75 N. W. 1127, 11 Am. Crim. Rep. 179, and the fallacy of the reasoning must be obvious. One is an accomplice in a crime because of the part that he has taken in it, not because he may be indicted as a principal. The latter is a mere accidental circumstance, depending upon the language of the statute, and in no way affecting the true touchstone, namely, the part which the witness has taken in the offense. The judicial declaration that, under a statute such as our § 31 of the Penal Code, all accomplices may be indicted as principals, is perfectly sound. But the attempted reasoning from this that if a person cannot be indicted as a principal, he is therefore not an accomplice, is absolutely fallacious. To illustrate: In the present condition of our law, no one would question but that the man who instigated and incited a murder, and the man who actually committed the murder, were both accomplices in the crime of murder. No one would question, moreover, but that both could be indicted as principals in the crime of murder. But suppose that to-morrow the legislature, as it would be quite competent for it to do, should declare that where a man had incited murder, he should be indicted only for subornation of murder, and upon conviction be punished by death; but that the man who committed the murder under such incitement should be charged with murder, and upon conviction should be punished by life imprisonment, there would be presented a case where the law denounced as different crimes the different acts of the parties. Would it for a moment be said that they ceased therefore and thereby to be accomplices in the crime of murder? Or, again, the law to-day declares that the giver of a bribe may be punished for the giving; that the officer who receives a bribe may be punished for the receiving. A offers B a bribe, and by this means advises and encourages the commission of a crime. B, in turn, consults his friend C, who "advises and encourages" B to accept the bribe. B returns to A and agrees to A's corrupt proposition, and A pays the bribe money. C is admittedly an accomplice. He has advised and encouraged B in the commission of a crime, but A has done precisely the same thing, and has gone even further than B, in that he has not only advised and encouraged, but has become a party to the criminal agreement. By what logic or reasoning may it be said that C is an accomplice, and A is not? Not because of the accidental circumstance, if such circumstance exist, that A can be charged with another crime growing out of the same acts; not because of the accidental circumstance, if it exist, that A cannot be charged with the same crime as B, for these are purely accidental circumstances, and are not of the essence of the consideration. At common law the accomplice could not be indicted for the same crime, yet he was none the less an accomplice. The declaration that one is an accomplice if he can be indicted for the same crime charged against the defendant on trial is perfectly sound; but the converse of the declaration, namely, that, if he cannot be indicted for the same crime, he is not an accomplice, is the merest sophistry, which, ignoring the true test and meaning of the word, seeks to turn shadow into substance. That test and meaning, as we have said, are expressed in § 31 of the Penal Code. If a man has committed a crime, if he has aided and abetted in its commission, if he has advised and encouraged its commission, he is an accomplice with all other participes criminis.

It is, of course, no argument to say that, where the law has denounced as separate crimes the separate acts of the parties as bribe-giving and bribe-taking, to hold the parties to be accomplices would make them principals in one crime and accomplices in another, "at the same time and through the same overt act." This is a frequent occurrence in and condition of the law. The law may and oft does go further, and make different offenses with different punishments of the same act. The prosecution may be had for any of the crimes embraced within the acts committed. But the law exacts only a single punishment, and, upon conviction or acquittal for the given acts, the defendant may successfully plead autrefois convict or autrefois acquit against another prosecution for the same acts, under a different section of the Code. Indeed, this condition of the law is expressly recognized, in § 654 of the Penal Code, which declares that "an act or omission which is made punishable in different ways by different provisions of this Code may be punished under either of such provisions, but in no case can it be punished under more than one; an acquittal or conviction and sentence under either one bars a prosecution for the same act or omission under any other." And as specific illustrations, subornation of perjury is declared a crime punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than one nor more than fourteen years. Penal Code, §§ 126, 127. A futile effort to induce a witness to commit perjury may be punished as an attempt under § 664 of the Penal Code, when, upon conviction, the defendant could be sentenced to state prison for a term not exceeding seven years. Yet by § 137 of the Penal Code, the same attempt is declared to be a felony, and by § 18 of the Code that felony could be punished only by a term of imprisonment not exceeding five years. Again, extortion under color of office contains all the elements of bribetaking, and the guilty official may be indicted and prosecuted indifferently for either offense, notwithstanding that their punishments may be different. Com. v. Wilson, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 26.

While our law generally does not seek to admeasure the degrees of guilt between principals, accessories, and accomplices, it is quite competent for it to do so, and in the past it has been quite common for it to do so. If A instigates B, C, D, and E to join in the commission of a murder, B furnishing the weapon, C transporting D and E to the scene of the crime, D holding the victim while E inflicts the fatal blow, the law might admeasure their degrees of criminality, define their offenses separately, and punish them accordingly. If it did not do so, all, under our Code, would be accomplices and principals alike in the crime of murder. Would they be any the less accomplices, would they any the less have instigated, aided, abetted, and committed the crime, because the law should happen to mete out different punishments for their separate acts of participation, as it actually did at common law?

Nor yet does it follow, because the particular act of participation of an accessory or accomplice in a crime has been denounced by our law as a separate crime, that he cannot therefore be indicted as a principal. If the law made manifest its intent that he should not be so indicted as a principal, it would be but an exception to the general provision of § 31. If it did not make manifest this intent, then the situation presented is that contemplated by § 664 of the Penal Code where the act is made punishable in different ways by different provisions of the Code. But in either case the accidental circumstances clearly do not affect the definition of an accomplice. One is an accomplice, we repeat, because of what he has done, and not because of the form of punishment which the law may mete out for his acts. Wherever the law has denounced as a separate crime the particular act of participation by an accessory or accomplice, the sole logical and legal effect is not to destroy the relationship of accomplice, but merely to effect a modification of § 31 of the Penal Code, as though by an express proviso it should read: "All persons concerned in the commission of a crime," etc., "are principals in any crime so committed, provided that they shall not be indicted as principals in any case where the law has denounced their participation as a separate crime, and declared that they shall be prosecuted exclusively for such separate crime." But this, as we have said, does not and cannot, by any species of legal hermeneutics or legerdemain, relieve an accomplice of his character of accomplice. It is merely prescribing a separate punishment for the particular act of one who is still an accomplice.

By a few courts which have regarded the effort to induce a witness to commit perjury as the essence of the crime of subornation, disregarding as negligible the success of the effort resulting in a corrupt agreement and in the commission of the perjury itself, it is held that, in a charge of subornation, the perjurer is not an accomplice with the suborner. The case most often cited, and here relied upon by respondent, is that of Stone v. State, 118 Ga. 717, 98 Am. St. Rep. 145, 45 S. E. 630. That was a charge of subornation of perjury, the perjury having been committed. The testimony of the perjurer was received. It was contended that the perjurer was an accomplice. The supreme court of Georgia reasoned that while "in perjury and subornation of perjury the act of the two offenders is concurrent, parallel, and closely related in point of time and conduct," still there was "sufficient inherent difference between the two to warrant the lawmaking power in separating the act into its component parts, and making that of the suborner a new and independent offense, punishable with greater or less severity than that inflicted on the perjurer." From this the court reasoned that "the suborner is not, under our law, treated as the accessory of the perjurer." This is "further evident from the fact that they are punished differently, while under the Code accessories before the fact are punished in the same way as principals." The next step in the reasoning is unsound. It is that "if not accessories, the suborner and the perjurer are not accomplices." And having determined to its satisfaction that the suborner and the perjurer were not accessories, the conclusion that they were not accomplices followed irresistibly. The court would have made a more plausible presentation if it had reasoned solely from the proposition that the one substantive element of subornation is the effort and attempt to procure perjury, and that the success or nonsuccess of the effort is a negligible quantity, and that it was thus like the crime of soliciting a bribe or the crime of offering a bribe. But to place its reasoning upon the ground that the suborner is not an accessory of the perjurer, so that, if the trial were for perjury, the suborner would not be considered as an accomplice, does violence to the common law, and to the decision of every state which has made the common law the basis of its jurisprudence. The accomplice at common law—the accomplice in this state—is one who advises and encourages the commission of a crime. How can it be said that the very instigator of the crime—the suborner—has not advised or encouraged it? But faulty as we believe even this reasoning would have been, because we conceive the corrupt agreement to be of the essence of the crime of subornation, though not of attempt to suborn, it would still have been at variance with the common-law rule and the rule of such well-considered cases, as People v. Evans, 40 N. Y. 5, and Com. v. Smith, 11 Allen, 243. The latter case merits quotation at length: "The crime of subornation of perjury is clearly in its nature that of an accessory before the fact to the perjury. Both perjury and subornation are felonies under our statute, being punishable by imprisonment in the state prison. Gen. Stat. chap. 163, §§ 1, 3; Id. chap. 168, § 1. Whoever procures a felony to be committed, though it be by the intervention of a third person, is an accessory before the fact, for it is not necessary that there should be any direct communication between the accessory and the principal. Rex v. Cooper, 5 Car. & P. 535; Fost. C. L. 125; 2 Hawk. P. C. chap. 29, §§ 1, 10; Somerset's Case, cited in 19 How. St. Tr. 804. And the accessory is a felon, though his felony is different in kind from that of the principal. Fost. C. L. 343. So it is said to be a principle in law which can never be controverted, that he who procures felony to be done is a felon. 1 Russell, Crimes, 32. We cannot see that the application of these principles is changed, when the crime of the accessory before the fact is made by statute a substantive felony. The object of making it a substantive felony may be either to provide a distinct or milder punishment upon conviction, or to authorize the indictment and conviction of the accessory where the principal has not been convicted. But whether the crime is made the subject of separate prosecution and punishment, or is to be included in an indictment with the principal offense, will not, in the opinion of the court, change the definition of it, or alter the facts or circumstances in which the commission of it consists. The same facts to be averred and proved in the same way will substantiate the crime in one case as in the other. . . . The crime of subornation of perjury would consist in procuring perjury to be committed, directly or indirectly, as much after subornation was made a felony as before."

To the same effect is the case of State v. Fahey, 3 Penn. (Del.) 594, 54 Atl. 690, and in State v. Renswick, 85 Minn. 19, 88 N. W. 22, the supreme court of Minnesota, which, as we shall see, is the only court that announces the extreme view that the briber and bribed are not accomplices, declares that in a trial for subornation of perjury the mere attempt to suborn, testified to by the witness, does not make him an accomplice; but, if the subornation itself is sought to be established by the testimony of the perjurer, the latter is an accomplice, and his evidence must be corroborated.

Wherever the commission of a crime involves the co-operation of two or more people, the guilt of each will be determined by the nature of that co-operation. Whenever the co-operation of the parties is a corrupt co-operation, then always those agents are accomplices, even as at common law they were principals. To the crime of seduction, two parties are necessary, but the co-operation of the seduced is not criminal. She is a victim, and she is not therefore an accomplice of the seducer. In such lesser offenses as created by laws denouncing the sale of lottery tickets or the sale of liquor, while two are necessary to the transaction and to the commission of the crime, the law reasons that the purchaser's act is entirely innocent, and he will not be regarded as an accomplice. In cases of abortion, where the law denounces the commission of an abortion, some cases hold that the consenting pregnant woman is not an accomplice. These decisions doubtless arise in part out of a tenderness for the sex, and a consideration of the extreme temptations by which a woman so situated may be beset. Under our law a woman may or may not be an accomplice, depending upon her part in the transaction. Thus she may consent to the taking of the drugs, or the performance of the operation, in ignorance of the intended purpose. She may, indeed, be coerced into submission, in neither of which cases would she be an accomplice. But if a woman voluntarily solicits the performance of such an operation upon herself, and to that extent induces it, it is impossible to see how she can fail to have been an instigator and encourager of the crime, and so an accomplice. Such is the ruling of the Ohio supreme court in State v. McCoy, 52 Ohio St. 157, 39 N. E. 316, and such is the decision of this state in People v. Josselyn, 39 Cal. 393; and the recognition of the relationship of an accomplice is evidenced by the provisions of the Penal Code, which, in § 1108, declares that upon a trial "for procuring or attempting to procure an abortion, or aiding or assisting therein, . . . the defendant cannot be convicted upon the testimony of the woman upon or with whom the offense was committed, unless she is corroborated by other evidence."

In adultery and fornication, where the willing consent of the woman is proven or assumed, the courts have found no difficulty in declaring her to be an accomplice with the man. For there, differing from abortion, no considerations of the temptation of the woman's hard lot operate to soften the court's views. They are accomplices the one with the other, because their conduct is corrupt and each has mutually aided the other in the commission of a crime to which the corrupt participation of the two is necessary. State v. Scott, 28 Or. 331, 42 Pac. 1, 10 Am. Crim. Rep. 13; Merritt v. State, 12 Tex. App. 203; Townser v. State, 58 Tex. Crim. Rep. 453, 137 Am. St. Rep. 976, 126 S. W. 572.

"Bribery" at common law, as defined by Bishop (1 Bishop, New. Crim. Law, 85), was "the voluntary giving or receiving of anything of value in corrupt payment for an official act done or to be done." It is the uniform rule of decision, not only of the common law, but of every state of the United States, with one exception, hereinafter to be considered, that the giver and receiver of the bribe are principals in the crime, and so necessarily accomplices of each other. The giving and the receiving are reciprocal. Rex v. Vaughan, 4 Burr. 2494; Reg. v. Boyes, 1 Best & S. 311, 2 Fost. & F. 157, 30 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 301, 7 Jur. N. S. 1158, 5 L. T. N. S. 147, 9 Week. Rep. 690, 9 Cox, C. C. 32. In the Vaughan Case, supra, says Lord Mansfield: "Wherever it is a crime to take, it is a crime to give." Various states have in various ways denounced as crimes certain phases, elements, and transactions going to the crime of bribery, but stopping short of its completion. Thus, in some states the soliciting of a bribe without its payment is a crime. Penal Code, § 93. In others it is not. In some states the offer to pay a bribe without regard to its acceptance is a crime. Ibid. In others it is not. Manifestly, in the crimes last mentioned, since the denounced act in no wise depends upon a plurality of agents, in no wise rests upon the corrupt assent, agreement or procurement of another, the person approached is not an accomplice of the approacher. But whenever a crime necessarily embraces the corrupt, guilty, criminal co-operation of two or more persons, those persons always have been and must be accomplices.

This, then, is the true test and rule: If in any crime the participation of an individual has been criminally corrupt, he is an accomplice. If it has not been criminally corrupt, he is not an accomplice. In those cases where the concurrent act or co-operation of two people is necessary, as in seduction, sometimes in abortion, and in the minor offenses of selling liquor, lottery tickets, or harmful drugs, the relationship of accomplice does not exist, because the co-operation of the other party is not denounced by the law as criminally corrupt, and, as matter of fact, need not be criminally corrupt. Upon the other hand, where the act requires the co-operation of two persons, and their co-operation is criminally corrupt, the relationship of accomplice is at once established, as in adultery and fornication, in dueling, in agreeing to fight a duel, in illegal rebating (United States v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. [C. C.] 146 Fed. 298), in bribery, and in all forms of criminal agreement, where the agreement itself constitutes the crime. Conspiracies are typical instances of agreements in and of themselves constituting crimes. All the conspirators are principals and, of course, accomplices.

In the charge against this defendant of "agreeing to receive a bribe" and "receiving a bribe," each element, the agreeing and the receiving necessarily contemplates the criminally corrupt co-operation of an other (eliminating from consideration, of course, the feigned accomplice). To this proposition the authorities are so numerous and so uniform that one is rather embarrassed by the wealth than by the dearth of them. But on the question of accomplices in bribery alone, as sustaining this principle either tacitly or with discussion, may be cited: Newman v. People, 23 Colo. 300, 47 Pac. 278; People v. Bissert, 71 App. Div. 118, 75 N. Y. Supp. 630, affirmed in 172 N. Y. 643, 65 N. E. 1120; People v. Winant, 24 Misc. 361, 53 N. Y. Supp. 695; People v. Acritelli, 57 Misc. 574, 110 N. Y. Supp. 440; State v. Callahan, 47 La. Ann. 444, 17 So. 50, 10 Am. Crim. Rep. 97; State v. Smalls, 11 S. C. 262; State v. Horner, 1 Marv. (Del.) 504, 26 Atl. 73, 41 Atl. 139; Murphy v. State, 124 Wis. 635, 102 N. W. 1087; People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 318, 99 N. W. 147; People v. Fielding, 36 App. Div. 401,

55 N. Y. Supp. 530; Ruffin v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 565, 38 S. W. 169; O'Brien v. State, 6 Tex. App. 665; Birch v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 106 S. W. 344; State v. Carr, 28 Or. 389, 42 Pac. 215; Butt v. State, 81 Ark. 173, 118 Am. St. Rep. 42, 98 S. W. 723; and State v. Duff, 138 Am. St. Rep. 269, note, where it is said: "It may be stated as a general rule that a person offering, giving, or paying a bribe is an accomplice of the person who receives it, particularly wherever the statutes make it a crime for a person to offer, give, or pay, and a crime for a person to receive, a bribe."

There is but one court; as has been intimated, which has advanced a view on this subject contrary to all other authorities and decisions. That is the supreme court of Minnesota, in the case of State v. Durnam, 73 Minn. 150, 75 N. W. 1127, 11 Am. Crim. Rep. 179. In that case the defendant was indicted and convicted of the crime of "asking" for a bribe, the crime contemplated in our state by such sections as Penal Code, 93 and 94. He had solicited the bribe from Richards and Halvorson, witnesses in the case. The defendant's demands were not acceded to; the bribe money was not paid. Upon appeal it was contended that Richards and Halvorson were accomplices. The attorney general in his brief made the argument that follows: "As to defendant's contention that Richards was an accomplice, it seems to us that, if a person from whom a bribe is asked is an accomplice when he refuses to give it, then a person who is held up on the street at night by a highwayman is an accomplice. In both cases, the person robbed and the person solicited furnish subjects upon which the crime could be committed; but that does not make them accomplices. In order to be an accomplice, a person must be a criminal. He must do a criminal act with a criminal intent, and the person who is merely asked for a bribe may refuse it, and be perfectly innocent of any offense." The position of the attorney general was perfectly sound. It could have been adopted by the court with absolute security. But the court went still further and, under the fallacious formula above adverted to, worked out the proposition that if the witness could not have been indicted for the offense, he was not an accomplice; and that, consequently, if the law has denounced the acts of participation of the two as separate offenses, "the one is not the accomplice of the other." How utterly mistaken this argument is, we think, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

has been abundantly shown. We have already pointed out how this same court, in the case of perjury and subornation, crimes made separate and distinct by the Minnesota law, has held, notwithstanding, that the testimony of the perjurer must be corroborated in a charge against the suborner. We are not called upon to reconcile the inconsistency of those decisions, and it is sufficient to point out that State v. Durnam is unique in the history of the law.

The charge against the defendant, as we have seen, is under § 165 of the Penal Code. It is not for asking or soliciting a bribe. It is for "agreeing" to receive and "receiving" a bribe. The agreement necessarily carries with it the essential concept of a criminal and corrupt bargain. There can be no agreement without a meeting of minds, and a meeting of minds for this base bargain is declared to be a crime. There is nothing in the law to suggest even that in such a crime the two parties stand in any different position from that occupied by two who agree to fight a duel. In such an agreement the act of the person who contracts to pay the consideration is admittedly base, corrupt, and criminal. Moreover, his conduct is essential to the very existence of the crime of agreeing. How then shall it be said that he is not, within the narrowest or the fullest meaning of the law, an accomplice of the man agreeing to take the bribe? He is an actual participant in the crime, as well as an aider, abettor, adviser, and encourager in its commission, for it is to be remembered that in the case at bar the crime itself is the agreement. An officer may solicit bribes, may ask for bribes, may advertise his willingness to accept bribes. Each one of these acts is a separate, distinct, and recognized crime; but no one of them is the crime of agreeing to take a bribe, which ex vi termini requires the guilty co-operation of another. United States v. Dietrich (C. C.) 126 Fed. 664. Moreover, if, as we have seen by all of the authorities, saving one, when the bribery is completed, the payer of the bribe and the recipient of the bribe are reciprocally accomplices in the bribing, it cannot successfully be argued that, in the perfected agreement for the accomplishment of this crime the same two persons are not accomplices.

With the law thus before us, we are in a position to consider the rulings of the trial court.

The court gave the following instruction: "Where two or more persons are concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they, or either of them, directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in the commission, or, not being present, have advised and encouraged in its commission, each one of them is an accomplice with the other in any crime so committed, and the final test of the question, as applied to a witness in any case, is: Could such witness lawfully be indicted with the defendant for the offense on trial? If so, he is an accomplice within the meaning of the law. If not, he is not, and the man who gives or offers a bribe is not for that reason an accomplice of the one who receives or agrees to receive a bribe." The opening sentence of this instruction defines an accomplice in just terms. But when it proceeds to say that the final test as applied to a witness in any case is: "Could such witness lawfully be indicted with the defendant for the offense on trial?" the court adopted the fallacious reasoning of the Durnam Case, supra, and fell into error, an error which was repeated in the closing sentence with, "the man who gives or offers a bribe is not, for that reason, an accomplice of the one who receives or agrees to receive a bribe." For, as Lord Mansfield said, "Wherever it is a crime to take, it is a crime to give." These crimes are reciprocal and mutually interdependent. The same is true of an agreement to receive a bribe.

It thus being established that Gallagher was clearly an accomplice, the equally important question remains whether or not his testimony was corroborated. If it be corroborated up to the requirements of the law, it might be argued that, notwithstanding the erroneous instruction above quoted, the jury determined that he was an accomplice, but rendered its verdict because of the corroborating evidence. Upon this it is declared by respondent that, treating Gallagher as an accomplice, his evidence was sufficiently corroborated.

The corroboration of an accomplice's testimony, as has been said, may be slight. People v. Melvane, 39 Cal. 616; People v. Clough, 73 Cal. 351, 15 Pac. 5. But it must in and of itself, and independent of the testimony of the accomplice, tend to inculcate the defendant on trial with the commission of the crime.

But no part of the testimony which the respondent declares effects such corroboration is of any legal effect for this purpose. Thus, it is said that the defendant's act "established primarily by Gallagher's direct testimony" tends to corroborate Gallagher. But this, in legal effect, is but the untenable declaration that one 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

part of the evidence of an accomplice may corroborate another part. "The testimony of independent witnesses as to the defendant's votes in the board of supervisors on the bills and ordinances in relation to the overhead trolley system" does no more than to show how he voted, and affords not the slightest independent evidence that he so voted under a corrupt agreement to accept a bribe for so doing. The immunity contract offered in evidence did no more than to declare that immunity would be granted for any and all crimes which Coffey as a supervisor might have committed, but contained no reference whatsoever to this or any particular crime. The tracing of a fund from the United Railways into the hands of Ruef was likewise insufficient. This was but a showing of the possession of sufficient money by the alleged briber. It did not tend to show that the defendant actually received any of it. See People v. Bissert, 71 App. Div. 118, 75 N. Y. Supp. 630, Id., 172 N. Y. 643, 65 N. E. 1120.

The other matters of evidence alleged as establishing sufficient corroboration are equally without substance. It is unnecessary to discuss them all. But in exemplification, after Coffey was indicted for the present crime, Gallagher interceded on his behalf with the district attorney, and sought to have the latter abandon the prosecution. This is urged as corroboration. So far as appears, it was an unsolicited act, and could not have the slightest effect as showing, from an independent source, that Coffey either corruptly agreed to take a bribe, or corruptly received a bribe. The latter fact, the reception of the bribe, stands equally upon the uncorroborated testimony of Gallagher.

Moreover, the money was received after the franchises were granted, and it is well established that, however atrocious in good morals the reception of a present after the act may be, the acceptance of a gift without corrupt prior understanding is not bribery. 2 Wharton, Crim. Law, 10th ed. § 1858; State v. Ellis, 33 N. J. L. 102, 97 Am. Dec. 707; Walsh v. People, 65 Ill. 58, 16 Am. Rep. 569.

It follows herefrom that the testimony of Gallagher is corroborated in no respect required by the law, and for the reasons given the judgment and orders appealed from are reversed, and the cause is remanded.

We concur: Beatty, Ch. J.; Shaw, J.; Melvin, J.; Lorgan, J., Sloss, J.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

JOE MCKAY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
STATE OF NEBRASKA.

(90 Neb. 63, 132 N. W. 741.)

Indictment — impossible date — sufficiency.

1. An information is defective if it charges the commission of the offense as subsequent to the date upon which the information is filed, or on an otherwise impossible date.

Same — amendment — rearraignment.

2. And in such a case it is error for the trial court, after permitting an amendment curing such defect, to require the accused, over his objection, to immediately proceed with the trial without arraignment under and plea to such amended information, and without giving him the statutory time of twenty-four hours in which to plead thereto.

Criminal law — amended information — trial — jeopardy.

3. Where one accused of a felony is put upon trial under an information defective upon its face, and, after trial begun, the information is amended and the trial proceeded with, there being no change in the offense charged, held, that the accused is not thereby placed in jeopardy a second time.

Same — assistant prosecutor — regularity.

4. Under the provisions of § 20, chap. 7, Comp. Stat. 1911, private counsel can only be permitted to assist in the prosecution of a person charged with the crime of felony, when procured by the county attorney, under the direction of the district court.

Same — permission — validity.

5. And an order by the district court, at the opening of the trial, that an attorney appearing as private prosecutor, under the employment of outside parties, is "permitted" to assist in the prosecution, is not a compliance with the statutory provision.

Same — objection — effect.

6. And when timely objection is made by the accused to the participation of such private prosecutor in the prosecution of the case it is error to overrule such objection.

Evidence — criminal trial — relevancy.

7. An accused in a criminal prosecution is entitled to a trial upon competent, relevant evidence; evidence which at least tends to establish his guilt or innocence; and evidence which has no such tendency, but which, if effective at all, could only serve to excite the minds and inflame the passions of the jury, should not be admitted.

(October 6, 1911.)

(Rose and Letton, JJ., dissent.)

ERROR to the District Court for Antelope County to review a judgment convicting defendant of murder in the first degree. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. O. A. Williams, William V. Allen, and William L. Dowling, for plaintiff in error:

The information charging that the crime was committed December 7, 1910, an impossible date, was void, and the court could not permit the county attorney to strike out "1900" and insert "1909," and force the defendant to trial.

Murphy v. State, 106 Ind. 96, 55 Am. Rep. 722, 5 N. E. 767, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 264, s. c. 107 Ind. 598, 8 N. E. 158; Serpentine v. State, 1 How. (Miss.) 256; Markley v. State, 10 Mo. 291; Com. v. Doyle, 110 Mass. 103; State v. Pratt, 14 N. H. 456; State v. Sexton, 10 N. C. (3 Hawks) 184, 14 Am. Dec. 584; State v. Woodman, 10 N. C. (3 Hawks) 384; Com. v. McKee, Addison (Pa.) 33; State v. Davidson, 36 Tex. 325; Williams v. State, 12 Tex. App. 226, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 292; State v. Litch, 33 Vt. 67; Terrell v. State, 165 Ind. 443, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 112 Am. St. Rep. 244, 75 N. E. 884, 6 Ann. Cas. 851; Hall v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 38 S. W. 996; McJunkins v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 117, 38 S. W. 994; Wright v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 92 S. W. 256; Stephens v. State, 51 Tex. Crim. Rep. 406, 103 S. W. 904; Haney v. State, 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 545, 107 S. W. 858; Newsome v. State, 2 Ga. App. 392, 58 S. E. 672; State v. Noland, 29 Ind. 212; State v. Windell, 60 Ind. 300; Trout v. State, 107 Ind. 578, 8 N. E. 618; Dyer v. State, 85 Ind. 525; State v. Patterson, 116 Ind. 45, 10 N. E. 289, 18 N. E. 270; State v. Smith, 88 Iowa, 178, 55 N. W. 198; State v. Ray, Rice, L. 1, 33 Am. Dec. 90.

The court erred in permitting prosecutor to conduct case for the state.

People v. Etter, 72 Mich. 175, 40 N. W. 241; Biemel v. State, 71 Wis. 444, 37 N. W. 244, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 556; Meister v. People, 31 Mich. 99, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 91; Sneed v. People, 38 Mich. 248; People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328, 1 N. W. 1027; Com. v. Knapp, 10 Pick. 477, 20 Am. Dec. 534; Com. v. Williams, 2 Cush. 584; Com. v. King, 8 Gray, 501; Com. v. Gibbs, 4 Gray, 146; People v. Bussey, 82 Mich. 49, 46 N. W. 97.

Headnotes by FAWCETT, J.

Note. — As to the right of accused to complain because prosecution is conducted or assisted by unofficial member of bar, see note to State v. Bartley, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 564.

As to right of prosecutrix in bastardy proceeding to private counsel, see note to State v. Smith, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 463. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Messrs. Grant G. Martin, Attorney General, and Frank E. Edgerton, Assistant Attorney General, for the State:

The court did not err in permitting amendment of the information to correct a clerical error.

Razee v. State, 73 Neb. 732, 103 N. W. 438; State v. Wister, 62 Mo. 592; State v. Wilcoxon, 38 Mo. 370; State v. Sam, 13 N. C. (2 Dev. L.) 567; Jones v. Com. 1 Bush, 34, 89 Am. Dec. 605; State v. Barnett, 3 Kan. 250, 87 Am. Dec. 471; People v. Kelly, 6 Cal. 210; People v. Littlefield, 5 Cal. 355; Hampton v. State, 8 Ind. 336; Hardebeck v. State, 10 Ind. 459; State v. Elliot, 34 Tex. 148; State v. Hoover, 31 Ark. 676; State v. Cooper, 31 Kan. 508, 3 Pac. 429; State v. Stebbins, 29 Conn. 463, 79 Am. Dec. 223; United States v. Evans, 1 Cranch, C. C. 55, Fed. Cas. No. 15,063; United States v. Shuck, 1 Cranch, C. C. 56, Fed. Cas. No. 16,285; Blondel v. Bolander, 80 Neb. 532, 114 N. W. 574; Bliss v. Beck, 80 Neb. 292, 114 N. W. 162, 16 Ann. Cas. 366; State v. Brooks, 85 Iowa, 366, 52 N. W. 240; Terrell v. State, 165 Ind. 443, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 112 Am. St. Rep. 244, 75 N. E. 884, 6 Ann. Cas. 851.

It was not error to permit a private prosecutor to conduct the case for the state.

State v. Bartlett (State v. Bartley) 105 Me. 212, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 565, 134 Am. St. Rep. 542, 74 Atl. 18; Burnett v. State, 88 Neb. 638, 130 N. W. 263.

Mr. John W. Rice also for the State.

Fawcett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff in error, whom we will herein-after designate as defendant, was convicted of murder in the first degree in the district court of Antelope county. A motion for a new trial was overruled, and a sentence of life imprisonment imposed.

Defendant was prosecuted under an information filed April 28, 1910, which, omitting the formal part, alleged "that Joe McKay, late of the county aforesaid, on the 7th day of December, A. D. 1910, in the county of Antelope, and the state of Nebraska, aforesaid, then and there being in and upon one Albert Brown, then and there being unlawfully, feloniously, purposely, and of his deliberate and premeditated malice, did make an assault with the intent then and there of him, the said Joe McKay, him, the said Albert Brown, unlawfully, feloniously, purposely, and of his deliberate and premeditated malice to kill and murder," etc. On the next day, defendant assailed this information with a motion to quash, and a demurrer, both of which were overruled in the order named. Defendant was thereupon arraigned and 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

pleaded not guilty, and the case was assigned for trial May 2, 1910. On May 2d the case was called for trial, and the impaneling of the jury begun. May 3d the jury was finally selected and sworn. The opening statements were made to the jury by counsel for the state and defendant, respectively. W. L. Staples, a witness for the state, was then called. After being interrogated as to his name, residence, and official position, he was asked whether or not he had made a trip to Brunswick, whereupon the defendant objected to the introduction of any evidence, upon the grounds: "(4) Because said complaint does not state an offense punishable by the laws of the state of Nebraska;" and "(6) Because the information charges the commission of the crime on an impossible date, to wit, the 7th day of December A. D. 1910, which has not yet arrived, and not on a date at any time prior to the filing of the information." Thereupon the court took a recess until the next morning (May 4th), on which day, at the opening of court, the county attorney filed a motion for "leave of this court to correct the clerical error appearing near the end of line 7 in the body of said information, by striking out the numerals, to wit, 1910, there appearing, and inserting in their stead the numerals, to wit, 1909." Defendant objected to the proposed amendment, upon the grounds that the defendant was prepared to go to trial on the information as it stood, but was wholly unprepared to proceed to trial under the proposed change in the information; that no copy of the information as it was proposed to be amended had been served upon defendant or his counsel, as required by statute; and that defendant had a statutory and constitutional right to twenty-four hours after service upon him of the information as amended within which to plead thereto. These objections were overruled. The court then, over defendant's objection, permitted the state to introduce the clerk of the court and the county attorney as witnesses for the purpose of laying the foundation for the state's motion to amend the information, at the conclusion of which the court sustained the motion to amend the information, and permitted the same to be amended by drawing a line through the figures "1910" without obliterating them, and by placing over them the figures "1909," and ordered that the defendant be served with a copy of the information as corrected. The information was thereupon amended as directed by the court, reverified, and refiled. The information as amended was served upon defendant at 8:49 in the evening of that day. On the next morning (May 5th) on the convening of court, defendant tendered a plea in abatement, or plea in bar, "to the further proceeding of the court in this case," and also moved the court to exclude the Honorable M. F. Harrington, attorney at law, from participating in the prosecution of the case, upon the grounds that he had not been appointed by the court, as provided by statute, to assist in the prosecution; that he is not a deputy county attorney of Antelope county, or acting officially, or under the solemnity of official oath in connection with the case; and, third, because his employment and payment are by private parties. All of defendant's objections and his motion were overruled, and at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day the jury were called into the box, and defendant's objection to the introduction of any evidence was then overruled, and, over the objection of defendant, the trial proceeded.

The objections of defendant to the information upon which he was arraigned, and under which the trial was entered upon, were well taken, and should have been sustained. It charged the commission of the crime upon an impossible date, viz., a date nearly eight months in the future. Joyce, Indictments, § 319, announces the rule thus: "It is a general rule that an indictment is fatally defective if it charges the commission of the offense as subsequent to the date upon which the indictment is found, or on an otherwise impossible date." A large number of cases cited by the author in support of the rule. Maxwell, Crim. Proc. 2d ed. p. 67, says: "Time and place must be alleged as to every material fact in an indictment;" and on page 69 he says that time "should be stated with certainty. It must not be an impossible date, such as a date after the indictment is found; and such defect is bad, even after verdict." In State v. Smith, 88 Iowa, 178, 55 N. W. 198, it was held: "An indictment containing but one allegation as to the time of the commission of the offense, and stating that it was committed on a future day, is bad; the provisions of Code, § 4306, that no indictment is insufficient for want of an allegation of the time of any material fact when the time has once been stated, and of § 4305, that an indictment is good if it can be understood therefrom that the offense was committed some time prior to the finding of the indictment, being inapplicable." In the opinion the court say: "This is not an omission to state the time when it had once been stated, but stating an impossible time. . . . It cannot be so understood from this indictment. It states but one date; a date, not prior, but subsequent, to the finding of the indictment. . . . No indictment is sufficient that does not state the time at or about which the offense was committed, and, if it states an impossible time, it fails to charge an offense. We are in no doubt but that the first indictment was sufficient." In Terrell v. State, 165 Ind. 443, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 251, 112 Am. St. Rep. 244, 75 N. E. 884, 6 Ann. Cas. 851, the supreme court of Indiana, in the opinion, and the annotator, in his notes, both exhaustively review the authorities on this point, which to our minds conclusively show that the original information was void, and hence did not state any offense.

Indeed, we do not understand the attorney general to contend that a conviction in this case could have been sustained under the information as originally filed; his contention throughout his brief being in support of the amendment permitted by the court. Upon that question we think the law must be taken as settled in this state. Section 436 of the Criminal Code provides: "And within twenty-four (24) hours after the filing of an indictment for felony, and in every other case on request, the clerk shall make and deliver to the sheriff, the defendant, or his counsel, a copy of the indictment, and the sheriff on receiving such copy shall serve the same upon the defendant; and no one shall be, without his assent, arraigned or called on to answer to any indictment until one day shall have elapsed, after receiving in person or by counsel, or having an opportunity to receive a copy of such indictment as aforesaid." In Zink v. State, 34 Neb. 37, 51 N. W. 294, the syllabus holds: "(2) The right conferred upon the accused in a prosecution for a felony by § 436 of the Criminal Code, to a copy of the indictment or information, and one day to prepare for trial, is a substantial right, to deny which is error. (3) When an information for a felony is insufficient for want of a material averment, it is error for the trial court to permit an amendment supplying such deficiency, and require the accused, over his objection, to proceed with the trial immediately, refusing him a copy of the amended information, and the statutory time to plead thereto." In the opinion by Post, J., we have a very lucid discussion of this point. Among other things, it is said: "This right to be furnished with a copy of the indictment or information, and one day to prepare for trial, is a substantial right which cannot be denied the accused in a prosecution for a felony. It is no answer to say that the information as filed contains sufficient matter to indicate the crime and the person charged. We do not agree with the attorney general that there was no substantial defense the accused could make before the amendment that was not equally available after. He had before the amendment this most potent of defenses, that he was not charged with a crime, and might object to being put on trial; or, if tried and found guilty, that a motion in arrest of judgment would be available." In Barker v. State, 54 Neb. 53, 74 N. W. 427, Zink v. State is cited and followed, and the same rule again announced. In Zink v. State, supra, it appears that the amendment was made before the trial was actually entered upon; but after it was made, and on the same day, the court refused defendant's demand for the statutory time in which to prepare for trial, and immediately put him upon trial without further arraignment or plea to the information as amended. The case at bar is stronger. Here the court permitted the amendment, and deprived defendant of his statutory rights, after the trial had been entered upon and the examination of witnesses had begun.

We do not agree with counsel for defendant that a trial under the amended information would be placing defendant in jeopardy a second time. The original information, being void upon its face, was no information at all. Hence nothing under it could in any manner place the defendant in jeopardy. The court did right in permitting the amendment, but erred in forcing the defendant to immediately proceed with the trial without arraignment under and plea to the only information filed which stated an offense, without giving him the statutory time in which to plead thereto, and before a jury which had been impeached under a void information.

Defendant strongly insists that the court erred in permitting private counsel to conduct the case for the state. When counsel for the defendant moved the court to exclude Mr. Harrington from participating in the prosecution, as hereinbefore set out, the record contains this: "By Mr. Harrington: The parties agree that M. F. Harrington is not the deputy county attorney of Antelope county, has not been appointed by the court to prosecute this case, but has been permitted by the court to prosecute the same, and that he is employed and is paid by the brothers and sisters of the deceased, Albert Brown, and that he has not taken an oath as an officer or deputy county attorney or prosecutor of Antelope county. By the Court: The order of the court having been made at the commencement of the impanelment of the jury herein that M. F. Harrington is permitted to assist the county attorney in the prosecution of this case, and made a matter of record in this case, said order having been made in the presence of the defendant and his counsel; objection overruled by the court, to which ruling the defendant excepts."

It must be remembered that at the time the court announced Mr. Harrington's permission to assist in the prosecution of the case, there was, as counsel for defendant well knew, no information on file under which defendant could be convicted of any crime. Hence it was immaterial to him who conducted the prosecution; but immediately upon the resumption of the trial on the amended information counsel objected to the participation of Mr. Harrington in the case. If, therefore, the objection was good, we think it was timely. The bill of exceptions shows that all of the most important witnesses for the state were examined, and the principal witnesses for the defense, including the defendant himself, cross-examined by Mr. Harrington. It also appears that, over the objection of defendant, he made the closing argument to the jury. Section 16, chap. 7, Comp. Stat. 1911, makes it the duty of the county attorney to appear in the several courts of their respective counties, and prosecute and defend on behalf of the state and county all actions, civil or criminal. Section 20 provides: "The county attorney may appoint one or more deputies, who shall act without any compensation from the county, to assist him in the discharge of his duties: Provided, that the county attorney of any county may, under the direction of the district court, procure such assistance, in the trial of any person charged with the crime of felony, as he may deem necessary for the trial thereof, and such assistant or assistants shall be allowed such compensation as the county board shall determine for his services, to be paid by order on the county treasurer, upon presenting to said board the certificate of the district judge before whom said cause was tried, certifying to services rendered by such assistant or assistants." The stipulation of Mr. Harrington, which we have given above, does not state that the county attorney had, under the direction of the district court, procured his assistance, but, on the contrary, states that he had been employed and was being paid by the brothers and sisters of the deceased; that he had not been appointed by the court to prosecute the case, "but has been permitted by the court to prosecute the same."

When placed upon the witness stand and examined by counsel for defendant, Mr. Harrington testified as follows:

Q. Now, have you been appointed under the statutes of this state, the method of which you understand well, to assist the county attorney in the prosecution of this case?

A. No; not at public expense.

Q. You have simply been permitted to appear?

A. I don't know; I have been employed by relatives of the deceased, his brothers and sisters.

Q. These relatives live in Beemer county, Iowa?

A. I don't know what county.

Q. Live near Gritole, in Iowa?

A. Some of them, I think.

Q. Any of them residents of this section?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. They employed you and are paying you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are appearing here in the capacity of private prosecutor?

A. Yes, sir.

The question of the right of private counsel to appear in the prosecution of a criminal action has been before this court a number of times. The first reported case is Polin v. State, 14 Neb. 540, 16 N. W. 898. That case was decided in 1883. We there held, under the statute as it then existed, that the district attorney in a criminal trial may have the assistance of counsel employed on private account. The next case is Bradshaw v. State, 17 Neb. 147, 151, 22 N. W. 361, 363, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 499, where the rule in Polin v. State was reannounced. In that case, however, it appears from the opinion, that "the record shows that before any evidence was introduced the district attorney stated to the court that he desired the assistance of Mr. Ashby in the trial of the cause on account of the magnitude of the case; that he had before that time requested his aid," etc. It will be observed that the facts in that case are very different from those in the case at bar. The next case was Gandy v. State, 27 Neb. 707, 723, 43 N. W. 747, 752, where the rule in Polin v. State was again announced. In that case it was insisted by counsel that Polin v. State and Bradshaw v. State, supra, arose under the statute existing prior to the passage of the act of March 10, 1885 (Laws 1885, chap. 40). The opinion then sets out the sections of the statute referred to, which are substantially the same as those now in force. In commenting thereon, Cobb, J., said: "But it by no means appears that Martin and Falloon were deputies of the district attorney appointed under the provisions of the 20th section, but were his assistants, procured by him under the direction of the district court, in accordance with the proviso of said section, and were not required to take an official oath, other than that as attorneys of the court." It appears from this statement in the opinion that the appearance of Messrs. Martin and Falloon in that case was strictly in accordance with the requirements of statute. The next case is Blair v. State, 72 Neb. 501, 515, 101 N. W. 17, 22. In that case the syllabus holds: "(10) An objection to the appearance of private counsel to assist the county attorney in conducting a criminal prosecution, to be available, should be made at a suitable time and in the proper manner, and must be supported by at least some showing that the county attorney did not request or require any assistance, and the court had not appointed such counsel for that purpose. (11) Held, that a general objection to the appearance of such counsel, made during the trial in connection with the examination of a witness, and without any showing to support it, was properly overruled." In the opinion, Barnes, J., said: "No statement was made, or evidence offered, showing, or tending to show, that the prosecution had not requested the assistance of counsel, or that the court had not properly appointed them to render such assistance." Under those facts the decision in that case was clearly right. It is urged by the state that the question of employment of private counsel in the prosecution of a criminal case has been very recently discussed by this court in Burnett v. State, 88 Neb. 638, 130 N. W. 263. In that case the question was not raised at any time during the trial. Moreover, it could not have been raised under the statute above quoted, for the reason that that case was a misdemeanor simply, and not a felony. To such a case the statute has no application. The only other authority cited by the state upon this point is the note to State v. Bartlett, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 564. There the principal case was simply a misdemeanor. An examination of the copious notes will show that there is a conflict in the holdings of the different states upon this point. In his brief the attorney general says: "I cannot see that the statute of 1893, quoted by counsel, provides for any change of this general rule." In Biemel v. State, 71 Wis. 444, 37 N. W. 244, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 556, and Bird v. State, 77 Wis. 276, 45 N. W. 1126, it is held that a statute very similar to ours does change the rule, and that under it an unofficial member of the bar may not assist in the prosecution for a fee to be paid by private persons.

In support of his contention, defendant cites Biemel v. State, supra; Meister v. People, 31 Mich. 99, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 91; People v. Bussey, 82 Mich. 49, 46 N. W. 97, and other cases. We are impressed with and prefer to follow the rule announced by the supreme court of Wisconsin and the other states that are in harmony therewith. We are not unmindful of the fact that in many cases, particularly in sparsely settled counties, young lawyers of little experience are oftentimes, from necessity, elected to the office of county attorney, and, if the prosecution of felony cases were left to such a county attorney alone, crime might go unpunished. In such cases it is to the interest of the state that such a county attorney should have the assistance of outside counsel; and, if there were nothing in the statute providing therefor, as was the case when Polin v. State, supra, was decided, we would adhere to the rule there announced; but our legislature, by the statute under consideration, has wisely provided for just such emergencies. In doing so, however, it has not left it to outside parties to select the assistant counsel. It has imposed that duty upon the county attorney and district court, and has provided that the county attorney may, under the direction of the district court, procure such assistance. Counsel thus procured will not be actuated by sordid motives. He will enter upon the discharge of his duties in the same spirit that any honorable county attorney would enter upon the same, viz., with the desire simply to see that justice is done. It is just as much the duty of a county attorney to see that an innocent man is not convicted as to see that the guilty receive their just deserts. As said by Mr. Chief Justice Christiancy, in Hurd v. People, 25 Mich. 405, 416: "The only legitimate object of the prosecution is 'to show the whole transaction, as it was, whether its tendency be to establish guilt or innocence.' The prosecuting officer represents the public interest, which can never be promoted by the conviction of the innocent. His object, like that of the court, should be simply justice; and he has no right to sacrifice this to any pride of professional success." Counsel called to assist in the prosecution should govern his actions in like manner, and when procured in the manner and for the compensation contemplated by the statute quoted would doubtless do so; while counsel employed by outside parties, and, in the case of a homicide, by relatives of the deceased, would not feel bound by any such rule of conduct. He appears as private counsel simply, to represent the wishes, prejudice, and animosities of his clients; to secure a conviction at all hazards. Such is not the policy of the law as indicated by the legislature, and we must decline to give it our sanction. In the case at bar there is nothing to show that the county attorney, who is a lawyer of known ability, requested the assistance of Mr. Harrington, nor that he had been in any manner previously consulted in reference thereto.

The mere fact that the court permitted Mr. Harrington to assist in the prosecution cannot be held to be a compliance with the statute, which provides that private counsel may be procured by the county attorney, under the direction of the court. This provision of the statute calls for affirmative action by the county attorney and the court. Mere acquiescence in or assent to the appearance of private counsel does not constitute the affirmative action required by the statute, and is not sufficient. If, in the further prosecution of this case, the court and county attorney deem it necessary to have the assistance of outside counsel, it is their duty to follow the plain provisions of the statute in procuring the same.

As the case will have to be tried again, we will refrain from expressing any opinion as to the weight of the evidence, and will only consider one of the errors complained of in connection therewith. It is urged that the court erred in admitting in evidence Exhibits 6, 7, 18, 19, and 22. Exhibits 6 and 7 were two shirts, stained with blood. 18 was the coat, 19 the vest and 22 the cap of the deceased. The testimony of the coroner, who was also a practising physician and surgeon, showed conclusively that the deceased had received three blows on the side of his head, each of which fractured his skull, and two of which penetrated the brain, either of which the doctor said was sufficient to have proved fatal. It was thus clearly established that the deceased had been murdered. There was no room for contention that his injuries had been self-inflicted, and the only question before the jury was, Did the defendant commit the murder? The admission of these blood-stained garments, and the flaunting of them before the jury, could in no manner identify, or even tend to identify, the prisoner at the bar as the murderer. We can conceive of no other purpose which these exhibits could subserve than to excite the passions and inflame the minds of the jury. A defendant who is being tried for any offense, and particularly one involving the possible taking of his life, is entitled to a trial upon competent evidence, — evidence which tends to show his guilt or innocence, — and not upon evidence which has no tendency in that direction, but which can only serve the purpose of distracting the minds of the jury from the real issue to gruesome exhibits, which may easily lead them to a wrong conclusion.

For the errors above indicated, the judgment of the District Court is reversed, and the case remanded for further proceedings in harmony herewith.

Letton, J., dissenting in part:

I am unable to concur in that portion of the opinion holding it was reversible error to permit other counsel to assist the county attorney. We held, in Rickley v. State, 65 Neb. 841, 61 L.R.A. 489, 91 N. W. 867, that the county attorney has complete control of criminal prosecutions, and that he may exclude other counsel if he so desires, even if the complainant desires to employ such counsel. Of course, this is subject to the direction and control of the court. When the county attorney allows private counsel to appear with him, and assist him in the trial without objection, it is clear that he desires his assistance; otherwise he could summarily dismiss him from the case; and, when the fact that such counsel is employed and his assistance is desired by the county attorney, is known and expressly permitted by the court, as the record shows, the defendant cannot complain.

The statutory provisions (Comp. Stat. 1911, chap. 7, § 16) are intended to limit the liability of the several counties to pay for assistance to the county attorney, and are not intended to deprive him of assistance which he believes to be necessary, and which is furnished, with the consent of the court, without expense to the county. It is true counsel paid by private persons are apt to err by excess of zeal; but this is entirely within the control of the official prosecutor, and he has the undoubted right to refuse to allow counsel to appear further if they go beyond the limits proper to an official prosecutor.

I think the opinion on this point is opposed to our former decisions, and is against the weight of authority. See note to State v. Bartlett 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 564.

A rehearing having been granted, Fawcett, J., on April 20, 1912, handed down the following opinion (135 N. W. 1024):

When our opinion was handed down in this case (90 Neb. 63, ante, 714, 132 N. W. 741), the county attorney of Antelope county requested and the attorney general directed a mandate to go down. Subsequently and within forty days from the filing of the opinion the private prosecutor employed by the relatives of the deceased requested and was given leave to file a motion for a recall of the mandate and for a rehearing of the case. Upon the filing of the motion, argument thereon was ordered and has been had. The case 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) is now before us on that motion, for review.

Counsel for defendant has entered objections to a further consideration of the case in this court for various reasons, which we deem it unnecessary to set out. It is sufficient to say that we permitted the filing of the motion for rehearing, and must now decline to dispose of it without consideration. Defendant's objections are therefore overruled.

Upon the original hearing we held the information originally filed to be void. This holding is now assailed. The writer is satisfied with our former holding and is still of the opinion that the information was void. A majority of the court, however, are of opinion that this is stating the matter too strongly; that the information was defective merely, but not void. Paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of the syllabus of the former opinion are therefore hereby modified so as to read as follows:

1. An information is defective if it charges the commission of the offense as subsequent to the date upon which the information is filed or on an otherwise impossible date.

2. And in such a case it is error for the trial court, after permitting an amendment curing such defect, to require the accused, over his objection, to immediately proceed with the trial without arraignment under and plea to such amended information, and without giving him the statutory time of twenty-four hours in which to plead thereto.

3. Where one accused of a felony is put upon trial under an information defective upon its face, and, after trial begun, the information is amended and the trial proceeded with, there being no change in the offense charged, held, that the accused is not thereby placed in jeopardy a second time.

That portion of the opinion upon which the above three paragraphs of the syllabus are predicated is also modified so as to conform therewith.

Our opinion in relation to the employment of private counsel, as embodied in paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 of the syllabus, is next assailed. We deem it unnecessary to again discuss that question. We are satisfied with our former opinion upon that point and adhere thereto. This case presents a good illustration of the sufficiency of the reasons which prompted the legislature to amend the statute in relation to the employment of private counsel in felony cases, and of the soundness of our former holding. Here we have private counsel, employed by relatives of the deceased, not only dominating the trial of a felony case in the court below, but obtruding himself into this court, after the attorney general and the county attorney had accepted the opinion and obtained the issuance of a mandate, and attempting to further serve his private clients by a persistent contention at variance with the orderly course then being pursued by the able prosecuting officers of the state.

Our opinion, as reflected in paragraph 7 of the syllabus, is next assailed. An attempt is made to justify the offering in evidence of the blood-stained garments of the deceased upon the theory that the evidence shows that the defendant was seen leaving the house of the deceased early in the morning of the day when the body was discovered, and that this evidence would show that the deceased was murdered after arising in the morning. It had already been shown by the testimony of the persons who first found the body of the deceased that, at the time they made the discovery, the body was lying at the foot of the cellar stairs, fully dressed, with the bloody ax, with which the deed had evidently been committed, lying beside it. This undisputed testimony established the fact that at the time of the murder the deceased was fully dressed; but neither that testimony, nor the blood-stained garments themselves, would prove that he had been murdered after arising in the morning, any more than they would prove that he had been murdered before the time for retiring the evening before. No attempt to disguise the motive of counsel in offering these blood-stained garments in evidence can obscure the fact that the real motive was for the purpose of exciting the passions of the jury. We are satisfied with our former holding, and adhere thereto.

The motion for rehearing is therefore overruled, and our former opinion, modified as above set out, is adhered to.

Reese, Ch. J., not having heard the arguments upon the motion, took no part.

Rose, J., dissenting:

Upon further reflection, I do not think the conviction should be set aside for any reason assigned in the former opinion or in the modification thereof on the motion for a rehearing.

1. Though the information was filed in the district court April 28, 1910, and the homicide occurred December 7, 1909, the date of the murder, as stated in the charge, was December 7, 1910. Why should the future date, which was palpably erroneous, control the charge that the felonious act had been committed in the past, where time is no part of the crime and the prosecution never outlaws? The information shows on its face that it was verified by the oath of the county attorney April 28, 1910, and that it was filed in the district court the same day. It is also formally and fully charged in technical language that defendant did feloniously make the fatal assault in Antelope county and did strike and wound his victim, and that in consequence the victim "then and there did die." The verbs are in the past tense. They contradict the immaterial future date. The figures "1910," which constitute no part of the felony, are repugnant to the material charges in the past tense. The nonessential future date should yield to the fundamental charges that the unlawful acts were committed in the past. In these respects the legislature in adopting the Criminal Code of this state departed from the technical exactitude formerly required by the rules of the common law.

"No indictment shall be deemed invalid, nor shall the trial, judgment, or other proceedings be stayed, arrested, or in any manner affected," declares the Criminal Code, "for omitting to state the time at which the offense was committed, in any case where time is not of the essence of the offense; nor for stating the time imperfectly;" nor "for any surplusage or repugnant allegation, when there is sufficient matter alleged to indicate the crime or person charged; nor for want of the averment of any matter not necessary to be proved, nor for any other defect or imperfection which does not tend to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits." Criminal Code, § 412. The Criminal Code further provides that a variance between the statements of the information and the evidence offered in proof thereof shall not be deemed "ground for an acquittal of the defendant, unless the court before which the trial shall be had shall find that such variance is material to the merits of the case or may be prejudicial to the defendant." Criminal Code, § 413. Construing these provisions of the Criminal Code, this court held: "Under § 412 of the Criminal Code, an indictment or information is not rendered fatally defective 'for omitting to state the time at which the offense was committed, in any case where time is not of the essence of the offense, nor the stating the time imperfectly.'" Rema v. State, 52 Neb. 375, 72 N. W. 474.

This rule applies to the present case, because time was not of the essence of the offense and the date was imperfectly stated. Within the meaning of the Criminal Code, the erroneous figures "1910" are repugnant to the formal charge that the felony had been committed by defendant before the county attorney filed his information. Besides, the omission to give the date correctly did not prejudice defendant. The county in which the murder was committed was named. The name of the murdered man was stated. The weapon used was described. In the complaint filed before the justice of the peace the date was correctly stated. Under this complaint he was arrested and bound over to the district court to answer the identical charge, giving the correct date. He had time to prepare for trial under the original information filed in the district court, and was represented by eminent counsel. Every fact necessary to a flawless information was as fully imparted to him by the judicial record of the proceeding, as would have been disclosed had the date been correctly stated. That the information, before the year "1910" was changed to 1909, was sufficient to support a conviction, seems to be sustained by the weight of authority, where the rules of the common law have been modified by statute, as in this state.

The report of Conrad v. State, 65 Ark. 559, 47 S. W. 628, shows that the indictment was filed July 14, 1896, and that it gave the date of the felony as May 15, 1899. In passing on the sufficiency of the indictment under statutes which modify the rules of the common law, the court in that case said: "In the indictment before us the grand jury of Faulkner county accused the defendant of the crime of slander, 'committed as follows,' and alleged that the defendant, 'on the 15th day of May, 1899, then and there maliciously, wilfully, feloniously, and falsely did use, utter, and publish,' etc. They alleged that the offense was committed in the past, using the words 'committed' and 'did' for that purpose, on a day some time in the future. No man of common understanding could infer from the indictment that the grand jury intended to accuse the defendant of 'having committed a crime before it was committed. To accuse one of a crime is to charge that it was committed prior to the accusation. The allegation as to the date of the commission of the offense was a clerical error, apparent on the face of the indictment, and was not calculated to, and did not, mislead the defendant, and did not affect the validity or sufficiency of the indictment or the judgment against him,"—citing Williams v. Com. 13 Ky. L. Rep. 893, 18 S. W. 1024.

In Stevenson v. State, 5 Baxt. 681, defendant was indicted for burglary February 5, 1876; the date of the crime as stated in the indictment being February 22, 1876. In passing on the sufficiency of the indictment under statutes changing the common law, the supreme court of Tennessee said: "The indictment was found 5th of February, 1876, and charges that the offense was committed 'heretofore, to wit, the 22d of February, 1876.' The Code only requires that the offense be charged to have been committed previous to the finding of the indictment; no particular day being necessary to be alleged or proven where time is not an ingredient in the offense. Code, § 5124. It is true it has been held that it must be distinctly alleged, and not left to inference or construction (King v. State, 3 Heisk. 148); but the language here is heretofore, to wit, this certainly means before the finding of the indictment. It is true 22d of December [February] 1876, is repugnant and an impossible date, in reality a mere mistake of the draftsman, and may be rejected; but we think the indictment good after verdict."

In State v. Brooks, 85 Iowa, 366, 52 N. W. 240, the indictment was returned February 13, 1890, and charged that the offense was committed November 15, 1890; whereas, the latter date should have been November 15, 1888. The prosecution was allowed to correct the mistake, and the supreme court observed: "It is not only apparent that the date '1890' was an impossible date and a clerical error, but that, omitting that date, still the offense is charged to have been committed at a time possible and certain, namely, 'on or about the 15th day of November, 1888.' Code, § 4538, requires that we 'must examine the record, and without regard to technical errors or defects which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties, render such judgment on the record as the law demands.' 'A mere clerical error, which can be discovered by a casual reading of the indictment itself, will not render it fatally defective.' State v. Crawford, 66 Iowa, 318, 23 N. W. 684; State v. Gurlock, 14 Iowa, 444; State v. Emeigh, 18 Iowa, 122; State v. White, 32 Iowa, 17. This being a mere clerical error, apparent upon the face of the indictment, the defendant was not prejudiced by allowing the correction."

In State v. McDaniel, 94 Mo. 301, 7 S. W. 634, the court enforced a statute providing that no indictment shall be deemed invalid for stating the offense to have been committed on a day subsequent to the finding of the indictment, or on an impossible day, or on a day that never happened. The rule was stated thus: "An indictment for murder which charges the assault and wounding to have occurred on the 25th day of December, 1886, from the effects of which the deceased died on the 25th day of December, 1885, is not fatally defective:

The mistake is merely clerical, is cured by the statute (Rev. Stat. 1879, § 1821), and should be disregarded."

In Conner v. State, 25 Ga. 515, 71 Am. Dec. 184, the presentment was dated September term, 1857, and charged that the offense was committed December 15, 1857, and the court said: "Have not all the courts, both in England and in this country, settled it so long ago that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, that while some day must be stated, any other may be proven? Who does not see that if it be immaterial to prove the day as charged, that no day or an impossible day will do just as well? But it will be replied that it never was decided, but that the time charged must be before the accusation is preferred. And I concede this to be so, at least for the purposes of the argument. But let us look at the reason of the thing. Suppose the day be laid subsequent to the finding of the grand jury; it is the same in effect as stating an impossible day, as the 40th of May, and if it be correct that any day within the statute of limitations and before indictment found will suffice, it is quite clear that no day, or one that is impossible, will do just as well."

In State v. Pierre, 39 La. Ann. 915, 3 So. 60, it was decided: "An immaterial and impossible date in an indictment may be corrected at any time, particularly when the date is not of the essence of the offense charged."

In modifying the rules of the common law on this subject the Criminal Code of Nebraska goes further than that of most of the states in which the decisions cited were rendered. To give effect to the changes which the legislature of this state made in the rules of the common law, it seems to me to be necessary to hold that the information as originally filed in the district court in the present case was sufficient to support a conviction without amendment or correction. If I am correct in this conclusion, it follows that the amendment inserting in the information "1909," instead of "1910," was immaterial, and that there was no error in refusing a postponement because of the change.

2. As I view the law, the majority opinion places too many restrictions around the engaging of private counsel to assist in criminal prosecutions. The proper solution of this question must rest upon the construction of the statute relating to the powers and duties of county attorneys. In 1885 the legislature passed an act containing the following provisions: "It shall be the duty of the county attorney to appear in the several courts of their respective counties and prosecute and defend, on behalf of the state and county, all suits, applications, or motions, civil or criminal arising under the laws of the state, in which the state or the county is a party or interested. . . . The county attorney may appoint one or more deputies, who shall act without any compensation from the county, to assist him in the discharge of his duties; provided, that the county attorney of any county may, under the direction of the district court, procure such assistance, in the trial of any person charged with the crime of felony, as he may deem necessary for the trial thereof, and such assistant or assistants shall be allowed such reasonable compensation as the county board shall determine for his services, to be paid by order on the county treasurer, upon presenting to said board the certificate of the district judge before whom said cause was tried, certifying to the services rendered by such assistant or assistants." Laws 1885, chap. 40, §§ 2, 6; Comp. Stat. 1885, chap. 7, §§ 16, 20.

It is matter of common knowledge that the officers of the executive department of the state government, in the enforcement of the criminal laws, have construed the foregoing statutory provisions to allow the county attorney such assistance as he believes to be necessary, if obtained by him with the consent of the court and without expense to the county; and such assistance, if allowed by the judge of the district court without objection from the county attorney, has not been regarded as a violation of the statute. This construction is not unreasonable. It does not deprive accused of any right. The statutory provisions quoted show that the county attorney has ample control of criminal prosecutions. As the representative of the state, he may exclude at any time an assistant who abuses his privileges or otherwise misbehaves. The trial court has authority to protect the defendant from all improper acts of any attorney representing the state. It ought to be assumed that a judge of the district court, in presiding in his own tribunal, will be anxious about proper decorum and the due administration of the justice. It should not be presumed that a trial judge will fail to observe and repress improper conduct of counsel for the state, whether it grows out of excessive zeal, malice, hope of reward, or professional vanity. The construction which gives sanction to the rulings of the trial court in this case has been followed by the prosecuting officers of the executive department of the state government, with the approval of the district courts, since the statute was passed, in 1885. While the sections containing the provisions under consideration have been amended from time to time, the provisions themselves, construed and applied as already stated, have remained unchanged during all these years. The question should therefore be determined according to a doctrine recently stated in the following language: "When a statute has for nearly forty years been practically construed by the officers whose duty it is to enforce it, and has during that time been several times re-enacted by the legislature in substantially the same terms, such construction will be regarded as adopted by the legislature, although the language of the statute would indicate a different meaning." State ex rel. Platte County v. Sheldon, 79 Neb. 455, 113 N. W. 208.

For these reasons I am constrained to recede from the construction adopted in the former opinion.

3. I am unwilling to say that the garments worn by the victim of the homicide at the time of his death were incompetent for every purpose in proving the state's case. In my judgment the record does not establish the correctness of that proposition. "If the evidence offered be legally admissible for any purpose, an objection of such evidence should be overruled." Carleton v. State, 43 Neb. 373, 61 N. W. 699. Competent evidence bearing on an issue cannot be excluded from the jury because it may incidentally arouse their prejudices. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Palmer, 55 Neb. 559, 76 N. W. 169. If this were not the law, the shocking atrocity of the homicide in this case would prevent a conviction. I think the majority opinion attaches too much importance to the rulings admitting the garments in evidence, when more revolting proofs of the crime are considered.

Unless an assignment of error not discussed is meritorious, the judgment, in my opinion, should be affirmed.

Letton, J., concurs in dissent.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

WILLIS O. NEWCOMB et al.

v.

ALBERT KLOEBLEN, Plff. in Err.

(77 N. J. L. 791, 74 Atl. 511.)

Guaranty — credit — contention.

1. The promise to be responsible for any bill that a certain person may make is a 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

continuing guaranty, and not limited to the purchase made at the time it is first presented, where the person named has a running account with the one to whom the paper is addressed, who refuses further credit unless the account is guaranteed.

Evidence — explaining writing — conversation — absence of party.

2. Evidence of a conversation between one who guaranteed another's account and the latter, in the absence of the one to whom the guaranty is addressed, is not admissible against the latter, for the purpose of showing the meaning in which the guarantor intended the instrument to be understood.

Same — necessity of notice.

3. One who guarantees another's account is not entitled to notice of the latter's default, before steps are taken to hold him liable on his guaranty.

(November 15, 1909.)

Note. — When is a guaranty a continuing one.

As to whether notice of acceptance is necessary in order to bind guarantor, see note to William Deering & Co. v. Mortell, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 367, et seq.

As to liability under continuing guaranty to partnership or corporation for goods sold or credits extended, after a change in the firm or corporation, see note to Lyon v. Plum, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1231. And as to whether guaranty of credit extended for price of goods sold covers sales to successor, see note to Lamm & Co. v. Colcord, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 901.

As to when contract of guaranty of commercial paper covers renewals, see note to American Trust Co. v. Louderback, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 775. And as to whether liability of guarantor of payment of interest ceases at maturity of the obligation, see Merritt v. Haas, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 153, and note appended thereto.

As has been well stated, the question under annotation is one of the most perplexing with which the courts have had to deal, especially where an attempt is made to follow either precedent or principle. This is true for the reason that from the great mass of cases selections may be made which seemingly are on all fours with almost any conceivable case, but which arrive at contrary conclusions. This in turn results from the fact that the construction in each particular case turns not only upon the terms of the guaranty, but, except in very clear cases, upon the circumstances under which the guaranty was given, which naturally differ in almost every case. The result then is that it is practically impossible to formulate any definite rule or set of rules for determining whether a guaranty is a continuing one or not. Likewise, precedents are of little use except for purposes of illustration, and even then, owing to the diversity of conclusions reached, often tend to confusion. There are, however, a number of principles deducible from ERROR to the Circuit Court for Hudson County to review a judgment in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover upon the guaranty of an account. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John J. Fallon, for plaintiff in error:

The paper writing did not constitute a continuing guaranty.

20 Cyc. 1439; 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 77-88.

Extrinsic evidence may be used to ascertain the true import of a letter of guaranty.

Bell v. Bruen, 1 How. 169, 11 L. ed. 89.

The defendant was not bound by the guaranty until after notice that it had been accepted and the plaintiff intended to act upon it.

20 Cyc. 1404; Douglass v. Reynolds, 7 Pet. 113, 8 L. ed. 626; Acme Mfg. Co. v. Reed, 197 Pa. 359, 80 Am. St. Rep. 832, 47 Atl. 207.

Mr. Clarence Linn, for defendants in error:

What the guarantor intended can be ascertained only from the guaranty itself.

Naumberg v. Young, 44 N. J. L. 339, 43 Am. Rep. 380; Grueber Engineering Co. v. Waldron, 71 N. J. L. 598, 60 Atl. 386; Van Horn v. Van Horn, 49 N. J. Eq. 328, 23 Atl. 1079; Ellison v. Gray, 55 N. J. Eq. 581, 37 Atl. 1018.

The instrument was a continuing or standing guaranty.

the authorities, but these rules, like the individual decisions, are also conflicting. The most general, as well as equitable, of these rules, seems to be that that construction should be adopted which, under all the circumstances of the case, ascribes the most reasonable, probable, and natural conduct to the parties, according to the true import of the terms used and what is presumed to have been the understanding of the parties. As a matter of fact, the real conflict among the authorities usually arises when the terms of the guaranty are ambiguous or leave the import of the guaranty uncertain. Among this class of cases there are three rules, all of which are well supported by authority, if precedents may be considered authority, namely: That rule which requires the guaranty to be construed most strongly against the guarantor; that rule which says that, inasmuch as the promise is to pay the debt of another, the presumption is that a guaranty of a single transaction was intended, rather than a continuing guaranty; and that rule which assumes the middle ground, or that the true principle of sound ethics is not to set up a presumption for or against the guarantor, but to give the contract the sense in which the persons making the promise believed the other party to have accepted it.

Of course, where a guaranty by express terms is a continuing one, the courts, as is illustrated by the following cases, will so hold, unless the words used were clearly not intended to have that effect: Lawrence v. McCalmont, 2 How. 426, 11 L. ed. 326; Indiana Bicycle Co. v. Tuttle, 74 Conn. 489, 51 Atl. 538; American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Seaverns, 121 Ill. App. 480; Tapper v. New Home Sewing Mach. Co. 22 Ind. App. 313, 53 N. E. 202; LaRose v. Logansport Nat. Bank, 102 Ind. 332, 1 N. E. 805; Weed Sewing Mach. Co. v. Winchel, 107 Ind. 260, 7 N. E. 881; Clark v. Hyman, 55 Iowa, 14, 39 Am. Rep. 160, 7 N. W. 386; Peoria Rubber Mfg. Co. v. Doring, 85 Mo. App. 131; Cochran v. Kennedy, 10 Daly, 346; Whitall-Tatum Co. v. Manix, 61 Misc. 615, 113 N. Y. Supp. 1010; Picker v. Fizzle, 28 App. Div. 519, 51 N. Y. Supp. 205; Johnson v. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Bailey, 79 Tex. 516, 15 S. W. 499; John A. Tolman Co. v. Butt, 116 Wis. 597, 93 N. W. 548; Staars v. Cosgrave Brewing & Malting Co. 12 Can. S. C. 571; Struthers v. Henry, 32 Ont. Rep. 365; Parr's Bkg. Co. v. Yates [1898] 2 Q. B. 460, 67 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 851, 79 L. T. N. S. 321, 47 Week. Rep. 42. And this is true notwithstanding the guaranty contains a limitation as to amount, it being said that the limitation merely applies to the liability of the guarantor, and not to the credit to be given. Bond v. John V. Farwell Co. 96 C. C. A. 546, 172 Fed. 58; Picker v. Fizzle, 28 App. Div. 519, 51 N. Y. Supp. 205.

In some instances, as for example in California, a continuing guaranty is defined by statute (Cal. Civ. Code, § 2814), and naturally, where this is the case, the decisions will often be influenced or controlled thereby.

Some courts have made a distinction between guaranties which were limited either as to time or amount, or both, and guaranties which were not so limited, but in the main no such distinction seems to have been made. For purposes of classification, however, the cases have been divided according to the nature of the limitation in the respective guaranties, and the various rules as established and applied by the cases stated and illustrated thereunder.

Unlimited as to time or amount

The general rules above stated apply to cases involving unlimited guaranties, but it has been said that there is more reason perhaps for giving a freer interpretation where the sum is limited, because there the party entrenches himself within a certain amount. See Anderson v. Blakely, 2 Watts & S. 237. As above stated, however, such a possible distinction has not been generally recognized.

Some courts announce the strict rule that, unless the words in which the guaranty is expressed fairly imply that the liability of the guarantor is to be limited, it continues until the guaranty is revoked. Thus, in the following cases the parenthesized guar-

Robbins v. Robinson, 176 Pa. 341, 35 Atl. 337; Mason v. Pritchard, 12 East, 227, 2 Campb. 436, 11 Revised Rep. 369; Merle v. Wells, 2 Campb. 413.

The defendant can be held liable upon his guaranty, in the absence of proof of notice to him by the plaintiffs that they accepted it and intended to act upon it.

20 Cyc. 1407, 1409; Davis Sewing Mach. Co. v. Richards, 115 U. S. 524, 29 L. ed. 480, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 173; Davis v. Wells, F. & Co. 104 U. S. 159, 26 L. ed. 686.

Vroom, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by S. Judd & Company, against the defendant below, Albert Kloeblen, as guarantor for goods sold to his son, James Kloeblen. It appeared from the evidence at the trial that the plaintiffs below were live stock commission merchants. James Kloeblen was one of their customers. In the month of April, 1906, the plaintiffs refused to make any further sales to him unless they had a guaranty of his account from his father, the defendant in this suit. Such a guaranty was procured from the defendant, and a copy of the same is as follows:

Jersey City, N. J., April 20, 1906.

S. Judd & Company.

Dear Sirs:—

I will be responsible for any bill that my son James will make. Thank you for the same. I remain,

Yours truly,

Albert Kloeblen.

anties were held to be continuing ones under the above rule: Wright v. Griffith, 121 Ind. 478, 6 L.R.A. 639, 23 N. E. 281 ("Please let my daughter, H., have what goods she wants, and I will stand good for the money to settle the bills," etc.); Ker-nochan v. Murray, 111 N. Y. 306, 2 L.R.A. 183, 7 Am. St. Rep. 744, 18 N. E. 868 (guaranty made as inducement to purchase stock, of a certain per cent per annum so long as the purchaser should retain the stock,—held not limited to the duration of the firm).

And that a guaranty should be given a liberal, and not a restricted, interpretation, where the terms are uncertain or ambiguous, is the broad rule indicated by the following cases: Lowe v. Beckwith, 14 B. Mon. 184, 58 Am. Dec. 659, holding the guaranty, "M. being about to commence the retailing of dry goods, . . . and desiring to open a credit with the firm of J. L. & Co., . . . I hereby undertake and contract with said L. & Co. to become responsible to them for the amount of any bill or bills of merchandise sold by them to said M., agreeably to the terms of sale agreed upon by the parties,"—a continuing one, embracing all purchases, and not limited to the first bill of merchandise bought; St. Lawrence Steel & Wire Co. v. Leys, 6 Ont. L. Rep. 235, affirmed in 7 Ont. L. Rep. 72, holding the guaranty, "will guarantee payment of all accounts," to be a continuing one.

On the other hand, where the terms of the guaranty are ambiguous or render the intent uncertain, some courts adhere to the rule that a strict interpretation should be applied in favor of the guarantor. This rule is illustrated by the following cases, in which the respective guaranties were held noncontinuing: Whitney v. Groot, 24 Wend. 82 ("We consider J. E. V. good for all he may want of you. . . . and we will indemnify the same"); Birdsall v. Heacock, 32 Ohio St. 177, 30 Am. Rep. 572 ("Please send my son the lumber he asks for, and it will be all right"); Morgan v. Beyer, 39 Ohio St. 325, 48 Am. Rep. 454 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

("The bearer, H. A. B., is visiting your city buying a few goods in your line, and anything you may be able to sell him will be paid promptly as agreed on, which I herewith guarantee"); Blyth v. Pinkerton Nat. Detective Agency, 10 Wyo. 135, 57 L.R.A. 468, 67 Pac. 619 (guaranty of the salary and expenses of a detective in working up a murder case held not to continue after conviction of a suspect and settlement of the bill for services to that time, although not canceled or recalled, and therefore the guarantor cannot be held liable for services rendered in connection with a retrial of the accused).

And other courts announce the rule to be that since a guarantor is a favorite of the law, his contract will not be held a continuing one unless the intention so to bind himself is clearly manifest. Under this rule the guaranties in the following cases have been held not to be continuing ones: John S. Brittain Dry Goods Co. v. Yearout, 59 Kan. 684, 54 Pac. 1062 (the guaranty, "We, the undersigned, hereby agree that we will guarantee the payment of goods purchased by Y.," was given upon the refusal of a dealer to ship goods ordered by Y. until a guaranty of payment was made); Gard v. Stevens, 12 Mich. 292, 86 Am. Dec. 52 ("If you will let the bearer have what leather he wants and charge the same to himself, I will see that you have your pay in a reasonable length of time,"—in holding this guaranty to be limited to a single purchase, the court said: "Every person is supposed to have some regard to his own interest, and it is not reasonable to presume any man of ordinary prudence would become surety for another without limitation as to time or amount unless he has done so in express terms or by clear implication. If the guaranty was limited in express terms, either as to time or amount, but not as to both, it might be said it was the intention of the guarantor to leave it open as to the other, or that a further limitation could not be implied. But where it contains no express limitation as to either, and there is nothing in the instrument it-

On the strength of this guaranty the plaintiffs thereafter sold to James live stock, from time to time, as he required it, until July, 1907, when he failed in business, owing them $2,251.92. The case was tried at the Hudson circuit before Judge Speer, without a jury, and he found for the plaintiffs, and directed a judgment for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed, with interest.

The first contention made by the plaintiff in error in favor of the reversal of the judgment below was that the trial court erroneously held that the paper writing was a continuing guaranty. On motion to nonsuit, made by the defendant below, the trial judge held that the "phraseology that he will guarantee any bill will include any bill the son might contract, whether in one purchase or more." The insistent is now made that the language of the paper itself, and the circumstances under which it was given, show that the liability of the defendant was intended to be limited to the bill of goods for which James Kloeblen had applied to the plaintiffs to purchase, and that it could not be operative in guaranteeing the payment of all bills sold to him after the delivery of the guaranty. In coming to the consideration of the question as to whether this is or is not a continuing guaranty, it is important to refer to the general rule for the construction of guaranties. Admittedly, in the construction of contracts, it is a general rule that all words are to be taken most strictly against the guarantor or contractor. De Colyar, Guaranties, 177.

self from which it can be inferred that it was the intention of the guarantor to leave it open as to both, we think it must be understood as referring to a single transaction"); Baker v. Rand, 13 Barb. 152 ("Whatever goods you sell to A. B. to be sold in our store, we will consent that he may take the money out of our concern to pay for the same, only you must treat him as well about prices and length of credit as you do your best customers. The said A. shall have the liberty of taking the pay out of our concern as fast as the goods are sold"); Dixon v. Frazee, 1 E. D. Smith, 32 (guarantor stated that "his son would want some hardware," and directed obligee to "let him have what he wanted, and he [guarantor] would see that he [obligee] was paid"); Stern v. James, 51 Hun, 640, 4 N. Y. Supp. 16 (obligee having refused to open an account with retailer, guarantor's agent wrote: "Any goods you may sell to B. would be promptly paid for, and if not so paid for by her [B], he [guarantor] will pay the account"); Whitney v. Groot, supra ("We consider J. E. V. good for all he may want of you, . . . and we will indemnify the same."—held limited to goods obtained upon the first presentation); Birdsall v. Heacock, supra ("Please send my son the lumber he asks for, and it will be all right"); Anderson v. Blakely, supra ("P. having informed me that he is making some purchases from you, and not being acquainted with you that you wish some reference. Though not personally acquainted, yet I would say from my knowledge of P. that you might credit him with perfect safety, and that anything he may purchase from you I would see paid for").

The great majority of cases which involve unlimited guaranties, however, reject both the strict and liberal rule of construction, by taking the equitable ground that the contract must be construed according to the intent of the parties, the question being what is the fair import of the language of the guaranty in view of the circumstances under which it was given. Hotchkiss v. Barnes, 34 Conn. 27, 91 Am. Dec. 713; 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Mamerow v. National Lead Co. 206 Ill. 626, 99 Am. St. Rep. 196, 69 N. E. 504, affirming 98 Ill. App. 460; Bridgeport Malleable Iron Co. v. Iowa Cutlery Works, 130 Iowa, 736, 107 N. W. 937; Menard v. Scudder, 7 La. Ann. 385, 56 Am. Dec. 610; Knowlton v. Hersey, 76 Me. 345; Mussey v. Rayner, 22 Pick. 223; Lehigh Coal & I. Co. v. Scal-len, 61 Minn. 63, 63 N. W. 245; Boehne v. Murphy, 46 Mo. 57, 2 Am. Rep. 486; Hayden v. Crane, 1 Lans. 181; Agawam Bank v. Strever, 18 N. Y. 502; Strong v. Lyon, 63 N. Y. 172, 13 Mor. Min. Rep. 554; Schwartz v. Hyman, 107 N. Y. 562, 14 N. E. 447; Birdsall v. Heacock, 32 Ohio St. 177, 30 Am. Rep. 572; Morgan v. Boyer, 39 Ohio St. 324, 48 Am. Rep. 454; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Cole, 83 Ohio St. 50, 93 N. E. 465, Ann. Cas. 1912 A, 773; Tischler v. Hofheimer, 83 Va. 35, 4 S. E. 370; Hoad v. Grace, 7 Hurlst. & N. 494, 31 L. J. Exch. N. S. 98, 8 Jur. N. S. 43, 5 L. T. N. S. 359, 10 Week. Rep. 85; Coles v. Pack, L. R. 5 C. P. 65, 39 L. J. C. P. N. S. 63, 18 Week. Rep. 292; Nottingham Hide, Skin & Fat Market Co. v. Bottrill, L. R. 8 C. P. 694, 42 L. J. C. P. N. S. 256, 29 L. T. N. S. 134, 21 Week. Rep. 739; Burgess v. Eve, L. R. 13 Eq. 450, 41 L. J. Ch. N. S. 515, 26 L. T. N. S. 540, 20 Week. Rep. 311. Under this rule the guaranties set out with the following cases were held to be limited, and not continuing, ones: Knowlton v. Hersey, 76 Me. 345 ("The bearer of this letter . . . wishes to place a stock of groceries in his provision and meat store in this place. To enable him to do this, I am willing to be responsible to you for the amount of groceries he may order of you"); Hayden v. Crane, 1 Lans. 181 ("There is a fair prospect that R. could sell a few chamber sets if he had them. If you will let him have them, we will see that you receive pay for them as sold or soon after"); Strong v. Lyon, 63 N. Y. 172, 13 Mor. Min. Rep. 554. ("I hereby agree to save and hold the said S. harmless from any and all loss that he may sustain by reason of the purchase of the within-named 3,000 shares of the C. G. Co., and if any such loss is made, I agree

And although in some jurisdictions it has been laid down that the contract of guaranty must in this respect be construed differently from other contracts, following Baron Bayley, in Nicholson v. Paget, 1 Crompt. & M. 48, 3 Tyrw. 164, 5 Car. & P. 395, 2 L. J. Exch. N. S. 18, yet, in this state the doctrine must be considered as settled as stated by Chief Justice Beasley, in Hoey v. Jarman, 39 N. J. L. 523, affirmed in 40 N. J. L. 379, that "the words of a guaranty will be read most strongly against the guarantor;" the learned chief justice citing with approval the language of Burge on Suretyship, p. 46: "It may then be considered . . . that the contract of guaranty or surety will be subject, as every other contract, to the rule that, where there is ambiguity or obscurity which the other parts of the instrument do not explain, it is to be construed potius contra proferentum; that is, against the party giving the contract."

Is, then, the guaranty here in question a continuing one or not? In considering the law applicable to the matter of continuing guaranties, De Colyar, in his Law of Guaranties, says: "No fixed rules have been laid down for determining whether a guaranty is to be considered a continuing one or not, and that such guaranties are to be so construed as to give effect to what may be fairly inferred to be the real intention and understanding of the parties as expressed in the writing." To the same effect, Brandt on Suretyship & to pay the same to the said S., provided such loss shall accrue within thirty days from this date,"—held to include only stock first purchased); Schwartz v. Hyman, 107 N. Y. 562, 14 N. E. 447 ("You will be kind enough to send J. P. a full line of samples, of course, suitable for spring and summer, at the lowest figures. And I will guarantee the payment of any goods you may sell him. Hoping you will comply with my request and attend to it at once," etc.,—held not continuing, but to refer simply to the goods ordered from the samples sent as requested); Birdsall v. Heacock, 32 Ohio St. 177, 30 Am. Rep. 572 ("Please send my son the lumber he asks for, and it will be all right"); Morgan v. Boyer, 39 Ohio St. 324, 48 Am. Rep. 454 ("The bearer, B., is visiting your city buying goods in your line, and anything you may be able to sell him will be paid promptly as agreed on, which I herewith guarantee"). And the guaranties in the following cases were held to be continuing in character: Hotchkiss v. Barnes, 34 Conn. 27, 91 Am. Dec. 713 ("You may let D have what goods he calls for, and I will see that the same are settled for"); Mamerow v. National Lead Co. 206 Ill. 626, 99 Am. St. Rep. 196, 69 N. E. 504, affirming 98 Ill. App. 460 (guaranty reciting that the guarantors "desired" the obligee to continue to sell goods to the principal debtor, that they requested him to do so, and that they guaranteed the payment "upon demand of all moneys, debts, obligations, and demands of whatever nature or character now due or which may hereafter become due, from" the principal debtor to the obligee); Bridgeport Malleable Iron Co. v. Iowa Cutlery Works, 130 Iowa. 736, 107 N. W. 937 (guaranty given to perfect credit in terms as follows: "We hereby guarantee that the B. M. I. Co. shall receive prompt remittance for shipments of castings," etc.); Menard v. Scudder, 7 La. Ann. 385, 56 Am. Dec. 610 ("I do recommend my friend. . . a planter, and any funds that he may raise or acceptances, in case he does not pay, I feel bound to pay"); Mussey v. Rayner, 22 Pick. 223 ("To whom it may concern. The bearer, M. R., son of the subscriber, is . . . about to establish a store in P. of books and stationery, and now goes to B. to obtain an assortment of stock for that purpose. . . . He wishes to purchase school books, etc., upon a credit of four or six months, and miscellaneous books, paper, etc., on commission. For the faithful management of the business and punctual fulfillment of contracts relating to it, the subscriber will hold himself responsible"); Lehigh Coal & I. Co. v. Scallen, 61 Minn. 63, 63 N. W. 245 ("In the matter of furnishing fuel to E. F. S. for his trade, I hereby agree to become responsible for any amount of credit you [obligee] may give him [principal debtor], and in case he fails to pay you, . . . I will pay the same,"—held continuing, but limited to what would be a reasonable time and amount under the circumstances); Boehne v. Murphy, 46 Mo. 57, 2 Am. Rep. 485 ("Please let T. have the paints . . . he wants. I will be security for the amount for what he will owe you,"—held continuing in view of the probable intent of the parties as gathered from the circumstances); Agawam Bank v. Strever, 18 N. Y. 502,—see contra id. 16 Barb. 82 (indorsement on a promissory note as follows: "The above note is left as collateral security for all liabilities incurred by I. S. D. or D. & H. to the A. Bank"); Tischler v. Hoffheimer, 83 Va. 35, 4 S. E. 370 ("Let F. have as many shoes and boots as he want, and I see you are getting paid for. Don't charge him more as goods is worth"); Hoad v. Grace, 7 Hurlst. & N. 494, 31 L. J. Exch. N. S. 98, 8 Jur. N. S. 43, 5 L. T. N. S. 359, 10 Week. Rep. 85 ("As D. informs me you require some person as guaranty for goods supplied to him by you in his business, I have no objection to act as such for payment of your account,"—held to apply to both goods already furnished and to those to be furnished in the future); Coles v. Pack, L. R. 5 C. P. 65 ("Whereas F., coal merchant, is and stands indebted to you, C., in the sum of. . . and whereas you are pressing for the immediate payment of the said sum of. . . now I do hereby, in consideration of your forbearing to take immediate steps for the recovery of the said

Guaranty, (1878) § 130: "The true rule for construing guaranties is to give effect to the intention of the parties as expressed in the instrument read in the light of the surrounding circumstances." It was held, in the case of Wood v. Priestner, L. R. 2 Exch. 66, by Chief Baron Kelly, in deciding the guaranty there sued upon to be a continuing one, that "the question in these cases depends not merely on the words, but, when the words are at all ambiguous, requires a consideration of the circumstances to aid the construction. It is therefore necessary to look at the existing state of things, and, looking to that, to construe the words in such a way as we consider most consistent with the intention of the parties; not, indeed, considering any statement of either party as to what he meant by the words used, but taking the words themselves, together with the surrounding facts, as the exponents of the meaning of both."

The guaranty in this case, it will be noticed, contains no limitation either as to time or amount. It reads: "I will be responsible for any bill that my son James will make." The contention that the use of the word "any" limited the guaranty to the one bill of goods purchased at the time of the delivery of the guaranty is without merit. Many cases could be cited showing that, in similar actions upon guaranties, the word "any" has been construed as synonymous with "every." Thus, in Mason v. Pritchard, 12 East, 227, 2 Campb. 436, 11 sum, guarantee the payment of, and agree to become responsible for, any sums of money, for the time being, due from the said F. to you, whether in addition to the said sum of . . . or no,"—held unlimited as to both time and amount); Nottingham Hide, Skin, & Fat Market Co. v. Bott-rill, L. R. 8 C. P. 694, 42 L. J. C. P. N. S. 256, 29 L. T. N. S. 134, 21 Week. Rep. 739 ("Having every confidence in him [principal debtor], he has but to call upon us for a check and have it with pleasure for any account he may have with you; and when to the contrary we will write you"); Burgess v. Eve, L. R. 13 Eq. 450 ("In consideration of your discounting for M. my promissory note to him for £2,000, . . . I deposit with you the several documents mentioned in the schedule hereunder written, which I agree shall remain with you . . . as a security for the payment to you . . . of all money due or to become due from him to the said company, . . . on any account whatsoever,"—held a continuing guaranty for all money already due or which should become due).

In the following cases, which do not adhere to any particular rule or rules, the parenthesized guaranties were held to be continuing ones: Bell v. Bruen, 1 How. 169, 11 L. ed. 89 ("In expressing my obligations to you for the continuation of your friendship to this gentleman [one to whom credit had been extended in favor of a designated firm], I take occasion to state that you may consider this, as well as any and every other credit you may open in his favor, as being under my guaranty"); Scott v. Myatt, 24 Ala. 489, 60 Am. Dec. 485 ("Let bearer . . . have any little things he may stand in need of, and I shall be good for the same,"—held continuing until revoked or account closed, and applicable to any little necessities); Cahuzac v. Samini, 29 Ala. 288 (a promise in consideration of selling and delivering, from time to time, to a third person who desired to open an account such goods as were necessary and proper in his line of business, that the writer would pay for them if the debtor failed to do so); Doyle v. Nichols, 15 Colo. App. 458, 63 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Pac. 123 (a writing requesting obligee to "kindly furnish H. with groceries, and oblige," written for the purpose of allowing H. to procure groceries on credit); A. B. Small Co. v. Claxton, 1 Ga. App. 83, 57 S. E. 977 ("My sons may need some help through the summer, and I ask you to show them all the favors you can, and I will see that you get pay for anything you may sell them,"—held continuing for reasonable time and for reasonable amount); Conduitt v. Ryan, 3 Ind. App. 1, 29 N. E. 160 ("I hereby guarantee the payment when due of all bills of goods sold, or that may be sold on and after this date," by the obligee to the principal debtor); Singer Mfg. Co. v. Littler, 56 Iowa, 601, 9 N. W. 905 (guaranty and fulfillment by agent of his contract); Collins v. Alvery, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 985 (guaranty of 10 per cent dividend on stock, given as inducement to purchase,—held continuing during life of company, and not limited to one year); White Sewing Mach. Co. v. Powell, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 94, 74 S. W. 746 (agreement to pay "any and all sums of money and indebtedness of any kind that" principal debtor "might become indebted to and owing" obligee, "either in the form of open account or promissory note or notes, for any machine or other property thereafter to be sold and furnished to" the principal debtor by the obligee); Batchelder & S. Co. v. Saco Sav. Bank, 108 Me. 89, 79 Atl. 13 ("You are authorized to contract for material and supplies for S. P. Hotel, and the same will be paid for by us,"—held that obligee was warranted in relying on the guaranty the year following its execution); American Agri. Chemical Co. v. Ellsworth, — Me. —, 83 Atl. 546 (agreement in terms, "In consideration of the sum of $1 to me in hand paid by the A. G. C. Co., . . . I do hereby guarantee the faithful performance by G. E. B. of all and singularly the obligations of the within agreement [appointment of G. E. B. as agent and agreement by him to settle in cash for goods furnished him] on his part, to be kept and performed, and all renewals and extensions thereof, so long as said agency shall be continued"); Grant v. Ridsdale, 2 Harr. & J.

Revised Rep. 369, where the words of the guaranty were "to be responsible for any goods he hath or may supply to my brother to the amount of £100." And in Merle v. Wells, 2 Campb. 413, where the guaranty was, "I consider myself bound to you for any debt he [my brother] may contract for his business as a jeweler; not exceeding £100, after this date." In both cases the guaranties were held to be continuing. In 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1139, a distinction is sought to be made between guaranties containing a limitation as to the amount for which the guarantor will be bound, but containing no limitation as to time, and guaranties containing no limitation either as to time or amount. In the former, where there is nothing in the circumstances surrounding the execution of the contract to evince a contrary intention, it will, in general, be construed a continuing guaranty, and in the latter, where there is nothing in the instrument itself from which it can be inferred that it is the guarantor's intention to have it open as to both, the guaranty will be understood as referring to a single transaction.

Whatever merit there may be in drawing the distinction so made, it is unnecessary here to consider. I find no adjudged case making such a distinction; but, after all, we must come to the conclusion of Chief Baron Kelly, in the cases above cited, that the true construction can only be reached, whatever be the limitation as to

186 ("I will guarantee their [principal debtors'] engagements, should you think it necessary, for any transactions they may have with your [obligee] house"); Allen v. Pike, 3 Cush. 238 ("I hereby make myself responsible for whatever amount D. may become indebted to either of you. I have fixed no limits to the amount, as he has assured me that he shall be cautious on getting much in debt, and this is satisfactory to me"); Dover Stamping Co. v. Noyes, 151 Mass. 342, 24 N. E. 53 (guarantor, in reply to a letter from the obligee stating that he have opened trade with the principal debtor, who claimed to be backed by the guarantor, and asking if the guarantor would be responsible for his debts, stated that he, guarantor, was assisting the principal debtor in a small way, that he had advised prompt payment of bills at maturity, that he thought the advice would be followed, but that if the principal debtor failed to do so, "I will see that you [obligee] are taken care of"); Rotch v. French, 176 Mass. 1, 79 Am. St. Rep. 292, 56 N. E. 893 (guaranty of dividend of 6 per cent per annum on stock, given as inducement to purchase,—held not limited to one year, but to continue during life of purchaser, but not beyond, and provided he lived only a reasonable time); Celluloid Co. v. Haines, 176 Mass. 415, 57 N. E. 691 (obligee wrote principal debtor, "If he [guarantor] will give his written guaranty to pay bills of one month upon the 15th of succeeding month, if not already paid by the company [D. Co., principal debtor], we will accept it and extend credit." Guarantor in reply wrote, "As you have requested me to have me guarantee the payment of the D. Co's. account by the middle of the month, I hereby agree to pay the current month's account of the D. Co. on the 15th of the following month, if not paid by them before,"—held continuing, especially where the guarantor evidently so regarded it); Froment v. Taylor, 25 Misc. 776, 55 N. Y. Supp. 609, affirming 25 Misc. 792, 54 N. Y. Supp. 1099 ("I understand we [principal debtors] have purchased from your company [obligee] a bill of goods amounting to something less than a thousand dollars, and you find that 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the commercial agencies do not give us any particular rating. I write this letter to assure you that the bills will be paid at maturity, which I understand is within thirty days from shipment. I am so confident of the prompt payment of the bills that we purchase from you that I hereby personally guarantee the payment of them within the time mentioned, thirty days,"—held continuing in light of the circumstances); First Nat. Bank v. Union Stockyards, 138 App. Div. 918, 123 N. Y. Supp. 655 (agreement of bank to honor checks of a firm drawn on it and accompanying drafts on an individual so long as another bank will protect the drafts, entered into to extend credit to such firm); Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Hall, 83 N. Y. 338, 38 Am. Rep. 434 (assignment of certificate of stock "as security for the payment of any demands" the obligee "may from time to time have or hold" against the principal debtor); Lester Piano Co. v. Romney, — Utah, —, 126 Pac. 325 (guarantor in reply to request for guaranty of running account wrote that he did not doubt but that all obligations would be met promptly and that for that reason he guaranteed any amount of credit that might be extended); Young v. Brown, 53 Wis. 333, 10 N. W. 394 (guaranty "for all goods" principal debtor may buy from obligee); Broom v. Batchelor, 1 Hurlst. & N. 255 ("In consideration of the credit given by B to E, I hereby agree to guarantee the payment of all bills of exchange drawn by the said B. and accepted by the said E. Also I hereby agree to guarantee the payment of any balance that may be due from the said E. to the said B. This guaranty to include all bills of exchange now running, as well as the balance of account due at this day"); Hitchcock v. Humfrey, 5 Mann. & G. 559, 6 Scott, N. R. 540, 12 L. J. C. P. N. S. 235, 7 Jur. 423 ("In consideration of your extending the credit already given to my son H., and agreeing to draw upon him at three months from 1st of the following month, for all goods purchased up to the 20th of the preceding month, I hereby, at your request, guarantee the payment, and agree to pay you any sum that shall be due and owing to you upon his account for goods supplied").

time or amount, by taking "the words themselves, together with the surrounding facts, as the exponents of the meaning of both [parties]." The instrument in this case, when considered in the light of the surrounding facts and circumstances, clearly evinces the intention to create a continuing guaranty. The trial judge made a general finding for the plaintiffs. Concededly this finding must be construed as including every fact favorable to the plaintiffs that might reasonably be found from the evidence. The fact of the previous dealing between James Kloeblen and the plaintiffs there appeared, and the absolute necessity on his part for a general credit for the future, as the plaintiffs refused to make him further sales unless his father, the defendant, would guarantee his account with them. Under these circumstances, the defendant guaranteed to be responsible for "any bill that my son James will make," and this leads inevitably to the conclusion that the guaranty was to remain continuing until revoked.

The next contention on the part of the plaintiff in error was that the trial judge erred in refusing to permit the defendant to show the circumstances under which the guaranty was given. The offer was of evidence of the conversation between James Kloeblen and his father, the defendant, prior to the execution of the guaranty. The refusal of the trial judge was based upon the theory that the offer of the defendant was to show the meaning Albert

And in the following cases, of the same character, a contrary conclusion was reached: Perryman v. McCall, 66 Ala. 402, 41 Am. Rep. 752 (a letter written in reply to a reply of wholesalers to a letter from one B., who was about to commence business as a retail dealer, in which latter letter an order for goods was forwarded and credit asked, in which reply of the wholesalers they proposed "to fill your [B's.] order" if proper security can be furnished them by the indorsement of M., directing the filling of the order and stating that the writer, M., indorsed B. and hoped that he would become one of their best customers,—held not a continuing warranty, it being said that the superadded hope that B. would become a good customer was too indefinite to overcome the otherwise manifest purpose that the guaranty should apply to the single order referred to in the letters); Patterson v. Gage, 11 Colo. 50, 16 Pac. 560 ("I will be responsible for the hotel bill of H. and will see it paid within twenty days,"—held limited to bill due at date of guaranty); Williams v. Wyatt, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 444 (guarantor directed obligee to let guarantor's son have some whisky, promising to see obligee paid,—held to cover delivery of a single lot only); Bloom v. Kern, 30 La. Ann. 1263 ("K. tells me that he selected some groceries at your house which you, however, will not ship without my say so. Please ship the same by the first boat out, and I will see that everything is right," and "Yours of the 5th came to hand with invoice. In reply, Mr. K., I want you to ship the goods he selected, and I will see it paid in time. You shall be safe if it takes the last dime I have"); Crooks v. Propp, 32 Misc. 309, 66 N. Y. Supp. 753 ("He [S.] [one about to form a partnership with R. for the sale of groceries] wishes to purchase a full line of groceries, and I recommend him to you. They [S. and R.] are perfectly reliable and will pay as soon as bills mature. Any favors conferred upon S. will be appreciated by me,"—assuming it to be a guaranty, held to apply only to the first bill of goods); Rogers v. Warren, 8 Johns. 119 ("If W. & B. wish to take goods of you on credit, we are willing to lend our names as security for any amount they may wish,"—held limited to one transaction); Standard Supply Co. v. Finch, 147 N. C. 106, 60 S. E. 904 ("Just as soon as [a certain contingency happens], . . . I will see that your bill is paid"); Hilliard v. Hons, 37 Tex. 717 ("T. wants some clothing for a negro and himself, and expects to give his business to you. Please let him have any article he wants, and I will see it paid").

Limitation as to amount.

In many instances the courts construe guaranties which are limited as to the amount, but not as to time, to be continuing until revoked, where there is nothing in the surrounding circumstances to evince a contrary intention. The following cases adhere to this rule: Frost v. Standard Metal Co. 215 Ill. 240, 74 N. E. 139, affirming 116 Ill. App. 642, holding the guaranty, "I hereby guarantee the purchase account of . . . to the amount of $1,500," a continuing one, and not limited to the purchase of goods up to the amount of $1,500 in the aggregate; Lane v. Mayer, 15 Ind. App. 382, 44 N. E. 73, holding the guaranty, "I hereby agree to hold myself responsible for, and agree to pay for, any goods and merchandise which may be purchased of you by L. to the amount of $300,"—to be a continuing one; Presbyterian Bd. of Publication & S. S. Work v. Gilliford, 139 Ind. 524, 38 N. E. 404, holding the guaranty, "We hereby jointly and severally guarantee to P. B. of P. payment for all sales which may be made by them to W. A. P., but our liability on this guaranty not to exceed in any event $3,000,"—to be a continuing one; D. B. Fisk & Co. v. Rickel, 108 Iowa, 370, 79 N. W. 120, holding that a guaranty given in consideration of the obligee selling goods to the principal debtor on credit from time to time, that all bills would be paid promptly at maturity, but not exceeding $400,—was a continuing one; and Rindge v. Judson, 24 N. Y. 64, holding that the limitation in a guaranty to "be accountable to you that B. will pay you for a credit of glass, paints, etc., which he may require in his business, to the extent of $50," is not of the credit of B., but of the extent of the guarantor's liability.

Kloeblen intended to express in the writing, and the conversation between James and his father at the time of its execution. The ruling of the trial court in overruling the questions was correct. Naumberg v. Young, 44 N. J. L. 331, 43 Am. Rep. 380; Grueber Engineering Co. v. Waldron, 71 N. J. L. 598, 60 Atl. 386.

Other courts hold the rule to be that, when the guaranty is ambiguous or other things are equal, it should be given a liberal construction, that is, taken as strongly against the guarantor as the sense will admit, since, if the guarantor desired to limit his responsibility to a single or several transactions not exceeding in all a certain sum, the guaranty should have been, and the courts say probably would have been, so limited in the same manner as the amount. This rule was announced and applied in the following cases, in which the guaranties were held to be continuing ones: Rapelye v. Bailey, 5 Conn. 149, 13 Am. Dec. 49 ("Gentlemen:—My brother . . . is wishing to go into business in New York by retailing goods in a small way. Should you be disposed to furnish him with such goods as he may call for, from $300 to $500 worth, I will hold myself accountable for the payment should he not pay as you and he shall agree"); Taussig v. Reid, 145 Ill. 488, 36 Am. St. Rep. 504, 30 N. E. 1032, 32 N. E. 918 ("I hereby guarantee the prompt payment at maturity of any indebtedness owing to . . . for goods purchased, or which may require in his business, to the extent of the amount of $1,600"); Sickle v. Marsh, 44 How. Pr. 91 ("The bearer L. W. is going to start a peddling route to sell cigars and tobacco. He wishes to buy his goods of your firm if you will give him a liberal credit. We, the undersigned, will be his security to the amount of $1,000"); City Nat. Bank v. Phelps, 16 Hun, 158, affirmed in 97 N. Y. 50, 49 Am. Rep. 513 ("We hold ourselves responsible for the payment of any sum not exceeding $5,000 W. may require of your bank for legitimate business purposes"); Rindge v. Judson, 24 N. Y. 64 (guaranty to "be accountable that B. will pay you for glass, paints, etc., which he may require in his business, to the extent of $50"); City Nat. Bank v. Phelps, 86 N. Y. 484 (same as City Nat. Bank v. Phelps, supra); Hartwell & R. Co. v. Moss, 22 R. I. 583, 48 Atl. 941 ("I hereby guarantee to be responsible for any account that may be due or to become due to H. & R. Co. from J. H., and to see that such account is paid to the amount of $500"); Merle v. Wells, 2 Campb. 413 (set out in NEWCOMB v. KLOEBLEN).

On the other hand, some decisions are to the effect that guaranties, when ambiguous or when other things are equal, should be construed in favor of the guarantor, or, in 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It was further urged on the part of the plaintiff in error that the defendant was not bound by the guaranty until after notice to him by the plaintiffs that they accepted it and intended to act upon it. No exception appeared in the record covering this ground, nor was the question raised at the trial.

other words, that his liability should not be extended beyond the strict letter of his contract. To this effect are the following cases: Cremer v. Higginson, 1 Mason, 323, Fed. Cas. No. 3,383, holding the guaranty, "The object of the present letter is to request you, if convenient, to furnish them . . . [principal debtors] with any sum they may want, as far as $50,000. . . . They will reimburse you the amount, together with interest, as soon as arrangements can be made to do it, and as our embargo cannot be continued much longer, we apprehend there will be no difficulty in this. We shall hold ourselves answerable to you for the amount."—exhausted when the sum of $50,000 was once advanced, and not to cover further advances, although made while the balance due was below the stipulated sum of $50,000); Sherman v. Mulloy, 174 Mass. 41, 75 Am. St. Rep. 286, 54 N. E. 345, holding the guaranty, "I . . . agree to be holden for stock [building materials] delivered to C. to the amount of $200, and agree to pay the same,"—not to be a continuing one; Fellows v. Prentiss, 3 Denio, 512, 45 Am. Dec. 484, holding the guaranty, "I hereby agree to guarantee to you the payment of such amount of goods, at a credit of one year, interest after six months, not exceeding $100, as you may credit to P."—exhausted by a single purchase; National Bank v. Garn, 23 Ohio C. C. 447, holding the guaranty, "We . . . guarantee to you the payment of any and all sums of money that may be loaned by you to the C. P. Co., . . . provided the amount of said loan shall not exceed in the aggregate $3,000,"—limited to the first $3,000 loaned; and Cheshire Beef Co. v. Thrall, 72 Vt. 9, 47 Atl. 160, holding the liability under the guaranty, "I, T., will be responsible to the amount of $700, to the C. B. Co. for goods purchased by G. In case of failure of said G. to meet this obligation, I guarantee its payment,"—confined to the first $700 worth purchased.

And in some courts the tendency is against construing guaranties as continuing unless it is reasonably clear that the intention was to make the guaranty continuing. This was the rule adhered to in the following cases, the guaranty and holding thereon being parenthesized: Carson v. Reid, 137 Cal. 253, 70 Pac. 89 (guaranty to secure the payment of a specified part of a promissory note,—held a guaranty that the amount secured would be paid, and obligation to be discharged by payments equaling that amount); Columbus Sewer Pipe Co. v. Ganser, 58 Mich. 385, 55 Am. Rep. 697, 25 N. W. 377 (guaranty

The objection that the plaintiffs cannot recover upon defendant's guaranty because they did not notify him of the default of James in paying his bills is without substance. Columbia Electrical Supply Co. v. Kemmet, 67 N. J. L. 19, 50 Atl. 663.

The judgment below is affirmed.

For affirmance.—The Chancellor, Chief Justice, Garrison, Swayze, Reed, Trenchard, Parker, Bergen, Voorhees, Min-turn, Bogert, Vredenburg, Vroom, Gray, Dill, JJ.

For reversal.—None.

recited that the principal debtor "has arranged and is about to purchase on credit sewer pipe," and declared it to be void if he shall pay "for all goods purchased, or that he may thereafter purchase, of them [obligees] according to the terms of purchase," otherwise to be "in full force and effect for the amount of his said indebtedness, not exceeding $3,000"—held not continuing; Twohy v. McMurran, 57 Minn. 242, 59 N. W. 301 (guarantor being advised that credit would be extended to the principal debtor, who was about to open a café, only when guaranteed, executed the following guaranty: "If you desire to give B. a credit of $250 with your house for provisions for the restaurant, . . . I will be responsible for such amount,"—guaranty held noncontinuing); George D. Witt Shoe Co. v. Peacock, 150 N. C. 545, 64 S. E. 437 ("Sixty days after date we, or either of us, promise to pay to . . . attorney, or order, the sum of $1,000 for value received, which money, when received by him, to be applied to the payment of all claims he has now in his hands for collection against the said P., and to such others as he may receive for collection, until the full amount is applied. This note executed for the purpose of securing and guarantying the payment of the said claims to the extent of $1,000,"—held noncontinuing); Aldricks v. Higgins, 16 Serg. & R. 212 ("A., a young man living in this place, having a desire to enter into trade in a small way, and feeling ourselves confident of his well managing the business, we here offer ourselves in security to any gentlemen who may feel disposed to give him credit not exceeding $700, to be bound and held firmly by this writing to pay the said sum of $700 or any sum less, as the said A. may think proper to contract,"—held noncontinuing); Bussier v. Chew, 5 Phila. 70 ("I, the undersigned, do hereby agree to become surety to B. for any bills contracted by S. from this date, said bills in the aggregate may not exceed $300,"—held not continuing).

In this class of cases, like the preceding one, the majority of the adjudications are to the effect that the real inquiry is the intention of the parties, and that, to ascertain this, the words of the guaranty must generally be taken in their plain, popular, and obvious sense, and construed in connection with the surrounding circumstances. Douglas v. Reynolds, 7 Pet. 113, 8 L. ed. 626; Hall v. Rand, 8 Conn. 560; Lewis v. Dwight, 10 Conn. 95; Manry v. Waxelbaum Co. 108 Ga. 14, 33 S. E. 701; Campbell Bkg. Co. v. Worman, 99 Iowa, 671, 68 N. W. 912; Wilde v. Haycraft, 2 Duv. 309; Bent v. Hartshorn, 1 Met. 24; Melendy v. Capen, 120 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Mass. 222; Crittenden v. Fiske, 46 Mich. 70, 41 Am. Rep. 146, 8 N. W. 714; Mathews v. Phelps, 61 Mich. 327, 1 Am. St. Rep. 581, 28 N. W. 108; Smith v. Van Wyck, 40 Mo. App. 522; L. Bauman Jewelry Co. v. Bertig, 81 Mo. App. 393; Kansas City use of Kansas City Hydraulic Press Brick Co. v. Youmans, 213 Mo. 151, 112 S. W. 225; Tootle v. Elgutter, 14 Neb. 158, 45 Am. Rep. 103, 15 N. W. 228; Crist v. Burlingame, 62 Barb. 351; Gates v. McKee, 13 N. Y. 232, 64 Am. Dec. 545; White's Bank v. Myles, 73 N. Y. 335, 29 Am. Rep. 157; Henry McShane Co. v. Padian, 142 N. Y. 207, 36 N. E. 880; Foster County State Bank v. Hester, 18 N. D. 135, 119 N. W. 1044; Rochford v. Rothschild, 16 Ohio C. C. 287, 9 Ohio C. D. 47; National Bank v. Garn, 23 Ohio C. C. 447; National Bank v. Thomas, 220 Pa. 360, 69 Atl. 813; Boyce v. Ewart, Rice, L. 126; Lawton v. Maner, 10 Rich. L. 323; Frost v. Weathersbee, 23 S. C. 354; Bank of Alexandria v. Turney, — Tenn. —, 52 S. W. 762; Friedman, K. & Co. v. Peters, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 11, 44 S. W. 572; Gardner v. Watson, 76 Tex. 25, 13 S. W. 39; Lemp v. Armengol, 86 Tex. 690, 26 S. W. 941, reversing — Tex. Civ. App. —, 25 S. W. 137; Michigan State Bank v. Peck, 28 Vt. 200, 65 Am. Dec. 234; Keith v. Dwinell, 38 Vt. 286; Hargreave v. Smeed, 6 Bing. 244, 3 Moore & P. 573, 8 L. J. C. P. 46, 31 Revised Rep. 407; Hefield v. Meadows, L. R. 4 C. P. 595, 20 L. T. N. S. 746; Wood v. Priestner, L. R. 2 Exch. 66, 36 L. J. Exch. N. S. 127, 15 Week. Rep. 912, affirmed in L. R. 2 Exch. 282, 15 L. T. N. S. 317; Mayer v. Isaac, 6 Mees. & W. 605, 9 L. J. Exch. N. S. 225. 4 Jur. 437; Grahame v. Grahame, Ir. L. R. 19 Eq. 249. Applying this rule, the following cases have construed the parenthesized guaranties as not constituting continuing guaranties: Hall v. Rand, 8 Conn. 560 (agreement by A to be responsible to B in one half the amount of any loss sustained by him under an agreement to indorse C's notes, to the amount of $4,000—held limited to the indorsement of notes once only, to the amount of $4,000); Sanford v. Dick, 15 Conn. 457 ("For any sum that my son G. may become indebted to you, not exceeding $200, I will hold myself accountable,"—held not a continuing guaranty, but satisfied when any one indebtedness within the amount limited was incurred by G.); Finnucan v. Feigenspan, 81 Conn. 378, 71 Atl. 497 (C guaranteed payment of a certain loan and the price of goods A furnished B to start him in business, not exceeding a specified sum,—held limited to the original transaction); Campbell Bkg. Co. v. Worman, 99 Iowa, 671, 68 N. W. 912 (guaranty considered alone implied that it was continuing, but when considered with attending circumstances, was held to show a different intention, and therefore to be limited to a single transaction); Wilde v. Haycraft, 2 Duv. 309 (joint agreement to become bound "for any goods" bought by the principal debtor from obligee, "for $100 and no more,—it being the true intent and meaning that each obligor incurs for himself a separate liability of $100,"—held limited to a guaranty of a purchase of $100 in the aggregate for each, and therefore not continuing); Smith v. Van Wyck, 40 Mo. App. 522 (obligee stated that he could not fill order unless guarantor would guarantee the same, but that if he would guarantee for a certain sum, and they sold more goods than that, they would take the risk; and guarantor executed the following guaranty: "I hereby guarantee the payment of bills as they mature, purchased by . . . to the amount of $1,300,"—held, in view of the circumstances, not to be a continuing guaranty); National Bank v. Garn, 23 Ohio C. C. 447 ("We . . . guarantee to you the payment of any and all sums of money that may be loaned by you to the C. P. Co., providing the amount of said loan shall not exceed in the aggregate $3,000,"—held restricted to the first $3,000 loaned); Boyce v. Ewart, Rice, L. 126 ("S. E. is about to commence business. . . . To assist him in which he will stand in need of your aid and indulgence, which if you render him, in case of his failure or delinquency, we will indemnify you to the amount of $4,000,"—held limited to aid rendered in the commencement of the business); Lawton v. Maner, 10 Rich. L. 323 ("B. informs me" that he had a conversation with S. of your firm, in which he stated to B. that "if he would get me to be responsible for him to you, or, in other words, to give B. a letter of credit to you, he would sell him on longer time, say nine months or one year. This is therefore to inform you that I will be responsible for B. for the amount of $1,000,"—held continuing until the specified amount of goods was delivered, but not to extend so as to cover a final balance of $1,000); Frost v. Weathersbee, 23 S. C. 354 ("In consideration of your agreeing to advance to" the principal debtor "not exceeding the sum of $7,000 and interest, I hereby guarantee to you the repayment of the sums advanced and commissions as agreed"). And in the following cases a contrary conclusion was reached: Douglass v. Reynolds, 7 Pet. 113, 8 L. ed. 626 ("H., to assist him in business, may require your aid from time to time, either by acceptance or indorsement of his paper, or advances in cash; in order to save you from harm by so doing, we hereby bind ourselves severally and jointly to be responsible to you at any time for a sum not exceeding $8,000, should the said H. fail to do so,"—held not limited to advances, etc., in the first instance to the amount of $8,000, but to cover successive advances,

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

etc., made to the same amount at any future times, toties quoties, whenever the antecedent transactions were discharged); Lewis v. Dwight, 10 Conn. 95 (bond to C, "to pay or cause to be paid to C all sums or sum of moneys, responsibilities, debts, and dues which B might owe C equal to the sum of $1,500, either contracted, or which might thereafter be contracted"); Manry v. Waxelbaum Co. 108 Ga. 14, 33 S. E. 701 ("guarantee the prompt payment of all accounts and notes given in settlement for goods purchased by G. from W. Co., to the extent of $400," with provision for liberty to withdraw guaranty at any time account of G. was paid); Bent v. Hartshorn, 1 Met. 24 ("I hereby agree to be responsible for the price of hats and other goods purchased of you, either by note or account, by H. H. at any time hereafter, to an amount not exceeding $1,000"); Melendy v. Capen, 120 Mass. 222 ("We hereby agree to guarantee the payment to the said M. H. & Co. for any goods which may be purchased of them by A. W., not, however, binding ourselves to become responsible for a larger sum than $500, except by another special agreement. The above guaranty to remain in force until it is withdrawn by us"); Crittenden v. Fiske, 46 Mich. 70, 41 Am. Rep. 146, 8 N. W. 714 ("In consideration that D. B. F. & Co. will and do sell to C. upon credit bills of goods from time to time as she may order, I, the undersigned, do hereby guarantee to the said D. B. F. & Co. prompt payment of all such bills at their maturity, the same being four months from the date of purchase or order, . . . the amount guaranteed not to exceed the sum of $200"); Mathews v. Phelps, 61 Mich. 327, 1 Am. St. Rep. 581, 28 N. W. 108 (agreement to guarantee payment of money received by agent of obligee in selling cigars, to the extent of $200); L. Bauman Jewelry Co. v. Bertig, 81 Mo. App. 393 ("Please allow L. to have goods to the amount of $500, and I will be responsible to you for the same. This order shall remain in force until I advise you to the contrary,"—held, under the circumstances, to authorize a continuing credit of $500); Kansas City use of Kansas City Hydraulic Press Brick Co. v. Youmans, 213 Mo. 151, 112 S. W. 225 ("Said parties of the second part hereby guarantee that the said party of the first part will well and truly perform the covenant hereinbefore contained; to pay for the work and labor of all laborers and teamsters, teams and wagons, employed in the work, and for all materials used therein, . . . but said second parties shall not be liable on this guaranty on account of the materials used and labor done upon said work beyond the sum of $83,540, the estimated cost of the materials used and labor done on said work"); Tootle v. Elgutter, 14 Neb. 158, 45 Am. Rep. 103, 15 N. W. 228 ("Please let N. have credit for goods to the amount of $100, and for the payment of which I hold myself responsible"); Crist v. Burlingame, 62 Barb. 351 ("I will be and am responsible for any amount which A. B. may draw on you for any sum not to exceed $1,500, on condition of your acceptance of the same," the evident object being to secure a continuing credit); Gates v. McKee, 13 N. Y. 232, 64 Am. Dec. 545 ("I will be responsible for what stock M. E. N. has had or may want hereafter, to the amount of $500"); White's Bank v. Myles, 73 N. Y. 335, 29 Am. Rep. 157 ("Please discount for C. to the extent of $4,000. He will give you customers' paper as collateral. You can also consider me responsible to the bank for the same"); Henry McShane Co. v. Padian, 142 N. Y. 207, 36 N. E. 880 (guaranty of the "payment by J. P. W., plumber, to them [obligees], for any and all materials which they may deliver to J. P. W., I not to be liable for any balance exceeding $500 which may become due"); Foster County State Bank v. Hester, 18 N. D. 135, 119 N. W. 1044 (guaranty of collection of indebtedness, with a limit of liability of $1,000); Rochford v. Rothschild, 16 Ohio C. C. 287, 9 Ohio C. D. 47 (guaranty in sum of $500, given in consideration of furnishing merchandise to principal debtor on open account); National Bank v. Thomas, 220 Pa. 360, 69 Atl. 813 ("I hereby guarantee the N. bank against any loss on any personal loans made by the said bank to my said son F. G. T., to the amount of $2,500; also against any loss on business paper of his discounted by said bank, not exceeding the sum of $1,000"); Bank of Alexandria v. Turney, — Tenn. —, 52 S. W. 762 (letter to bank requesting that, if another overdraws his account to the amount of $500, it honor his check, and the writer will be responsible to the bank to that amount); Friedman, K. & Co. v. Peters, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 11, 44 S. W. 572 ("I guarantee the payment of your account with S. of this city, to the amount of $400. At the same time I would kindly ask you to state terms of sale on each invoice, and to let me know at once if it should happen that an invoice is not met at maturity. Your Mr. K. has been here a few days ago, and S. ordered two barrels of whisky from him, which was afterwards refused on account of S's financial standing. Please forward same now at your earliest convenience"); Gardner v. Watson, 76 Tex. 25, 13 S. W. 39 ("I have to-day seen G., and upon consulting with him I am willing to become his security to the amount of $500 worth of goods, instead of $250 as heretofore, provided you extend to him a credit of $500 worth of goods additional on his own individual account or responsibility"); Lemp v. Armen-gol, 86 Tex. 690, 26 S. W. 941, reversing — Tex. Civ. App. —, 25 S. W. 137 ("We, . . . in consideration of goods sold and to be delivered to K. by L., do hereby guarantee full payment to said L. of the value of all goods sold and delivered since the 1st day of March, 1889, or that may be hereafter sold and delivered to said K., not to exceed, however, the sum of $3,000"); Michigan State Bank v. Peck, 28 Vt. 200, 65 Am. Dec. 234 ("R. H. & Co. are hereby authorized to value upon us or either of us to the amount of $25,000, in such amounts and on such time as they may require, which will be duly honored, and we hereby jointly and severally hold ourselves accountable for the acceptances and payment of such drafts,"—held continuing, especially as that was the practical construction given it by the parties); Keith v. Dwinnell, 38 Vt. 286 ("W. wishes to buy stock for his shop and pay in six months or before. We will be surety for him for a sum not to exceed $100"); Hargreave v. Smee, 6 Bing. 244, 3 Moore & P. 573, 8 L. J. C. P. 46, 31 Revised Rep. 407 ("I do hereby agree to guarantee the payment of goods to be delivered . . . to J. & E. A. S., according to the custom of their trading with you, in the sum of £100,"—held, in view of the custom of continued dealing, to be a continuing guaranty); Heffield v. Meadows, L. R. 4 C. P. 595, 20 L. T. N. S. 746 ("I, M., will be answerable for £50 sterling, that Y., butcher, may buy of H.,"—circumstances showed that a continuing supply was contemplated); Wood v. Priestner, L. R. 2 Exch. 66, affirmed in L. R. 2 Exch. 282 ("In consideration of the credit given by H. G. C. Co. to my son P., for coal supplied by them to him, I hereby hold myself responsible as a guaranty to them for the sum of £100; and in default of his payment of any accounts due, I bind myself by this note to pay to the H. G. C. Co. whatever may be owing, to an amount not exceeding . . . £100"); Mayer v. Isaac, 6 Mees. & W. 605, 9 L. J. Exch. N. S. 225, 4 Jur. 437 ("In consideration of your supplying my nephew V. with china and earthenware, I hereby guarantee the payment of any bills you may draw upon him on account thereof, to the amount of £200"); Grahame v. Grahame, Ir. L. R. 19 Eq. 249 ("I hereby undertake to guarantee to the N. Bank any advances made to my son G., to the extent of £1,000"); Whelan v. Keegan, 7 Ir. C. L. Rep. 544 ("I hereby guarantee the payment of any amount of goods you may give to K., not exceeding £40").

The following cases, in which no definite rule was shown to have been applied, construed the respective guaranties as continuing: National Exch. Bank v. Gay, 57 Conn. 224, 4 L.R.A. 343, 17 Atl. 555 (guaranty to bank for the "full, prompt, and ultimate" payment of all loans made by the bank to the principal debtor, "not to exceed $15,000 in all at any one time," with the right to terminate the obligation by written notice,—held continuing so as to cover substitutions, renewals, and extensions); Gay v. Ward, 67 Conn. 147, 32 L.R.A. 818, 34 Atl. 1025 (same guaranty construed in National Exch. Bank v. Gay, supra); Sherburne v. J. W. Butler Paper Co. 40 Ill. App. 383 (guaranty "at maturity of any bills of account due them [obligees] hereafter from time to time sold and delivered by them to the E. R. Co., whether sold on open account or notes, to the amount of $30 on twenty days' time"); Malleable Iron Range Co. v. Pusey, 244 Ill. 184, 91 N. E. 51, affirming 148 Ill. App. 344

(guaranty of "the payment . . . of any and all indebtedness then due or hereafter to become due . . . for goods heretofore purchased, shipped, or ordered, . . . and for any goods which might then be purchased, shipped, or ordered at any time in the future"); Platter v. Green, 26 Kan. 252 ("We hereby authorize the C. L. Co. to furnish W. such building materials as he may wish, not exceeding the value of $2,000 at once; and if the said W. shall fail to pay for the same, either in money or material received from the C. L. Co., then upon ninety days' notice we agree to pay to the C. L. Co. the amount remaining due from W. to the C. L. Co."); Emerson v. Dye, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 236 (obligees "hereby agree to sell D. B. & Co. buggies and carriages not to exceed in amount at any one time the sum of $3,500," and guarantor obligates himself "that, in case of default in payment. . . he . . . will pay . . . any deficiency or amount that may be due upon settlement to the said E. F. & Co. [obligees] by D. B. & Co., not exceeding, however, in amount not exceeding $1,000, to include a Dye, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 592 (held generally that a letter of credit is a continuing guaranty); Tuckerman v. French, 7 Me. 115 ("I will hold myself responsible for any goods which you may sell him [principal debtor], provided the amount does not exceed at any time the sum of $500"); Howe v. Nickels, 22 Me. 175, guaranty in substance, ("in consideration of $1 the subscribers agree jointly and severally to guarantee to the plaintiffs payment for all goods which may be purchased of them by N. after the 21st of October, 1834, till otherwise ordered, the amount not exceeding $1,100, to include a bill before purchased"); Columbia Electrical Supply Co. v. Kemmet, 67 N. J. L. 18, 50 Atl. 663 ("We, G. K. & Bro., herewith guarantee the account of D. to the amount of $500. We are willing to make monthly settlement for the electrical supplies purchased by him, such payments to be made every 15th of the month for the month previous"); Rosenberg v. Klopfer, 117 N. Y. Supp. 102 (guaranty of "payment of account . . . to the extent of $1,800,"—held continuing under the evidence); Straus v. Beardsley, 79 N. C. 59 ("We . . . acknowledge ourselves indebted to the firm of S. H. H. & Co. in the sum of $100 each, for payment of which . . . we bind ourselves. . . . The condition to the above obligation is such that if the said firm . . . shall furnish P., as agent for them, with goods for sale on commission or otherwise, and the said P. shall thereafter fully and fairly settle and account for said goods, then the above obligation to be void; otherwise to be and remain in full force and effect"); Rouss v. Krauss, 126 N. C. 667, 36 S. E. 146 (guaranty of a line of credit of $1,300); Wolf v. Shillito, 9 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 273 ("Please let W. have such goods as he may purchase in person or order from time to time, to amount of $500, and I hereby guarantee the prompt payment of same, and will pay the same myself if not met by him promptly when due"); Bentz's Estate 14 Phila. 258 (guaranty for the payment "of all future bills"); Schneider-Davis Co. v. Hart, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 529, 57 S. W. 903 ("I hereby guarantee the account of H. . . . for a line of credit with S.-D. Co., to the amount of $500, and obligate myself to pay S.-D. Co. for any goods bought by H. to the amount of $500, in case he should not do so"); First Nat. Bank v. Wunderlich, 145 Wis. 193, 130 N. W. 98 ("We . . . hereby guarantee the payment of all future sums of money advanced by you to S., and guarantee the payment of all notes executed by him to said F. N. Bank for loans or sums advanced to him in any amount, not to exceed the sum of $1,000"); Sawyer-Massey Co. v. Foster, 2 West. L. Rep. (Can.) 197 (guaranty of the purchase price of a traction engine, etc., to the extent of $1,000 only,—held not limited to first $1,000 paid, but to apply to any balance); Ross v. Burton, 4 U. C. Q. B. 357 ("I hereby hold myself accountable to you for any goods M. may purchase of you, to the amount of £250 currency,"—held not limited to a single transaction); Shaw v. Vandusen, 5 U. C. Q. B. 357 ("I have just received a line from F. informing me that he wishes to purchase goods from you. Being acquainted with his circumstances and knowing him to be a man of prudence and integrity, I do not hesitate to be responsible to you for £150 or £200 worth of goods, should he require that amount"); Fennell v. McGuire, 21 U. C. C. P. 134 ("In consideration of your supplying M. supplies of hardware, iron, etc., out of your store for his business, we agree to become responsible to you for the payment of $200 for such goods, and guarantee the payment of that amount whether the same be due on note or book account"); Allan v. Kenning, 9 Bing. 618 ("Whereas C. is indebted to you in a sum of money, and may have occasion to make further purchases from you, as an inducement to you to sell him such goods and continue your dealings with him, I hereby agree and undertake to guarantee you in the sum of £100, payable to you in default on the part of said C. for two months"); Mason v. Pritchard, 12 East, 227, 2 Campb. 436, 11 Revised Rep. 369 (set out in NEWCOMB v. KLOEBLEN); Bastow v. Bennett, 3 Campb. 220 ("I hereby undertake and engage to be answerable to the extent of £300 for any tallow or soap furnished by B. to F. & B., provided they shall neglect to pay in good time,"—held that the use of the word "any" rendered the guaranty a continuing one); Johnston v. Nicholls, 1 C. B. 251 ("As you . . . are about to enter upon transactions in business with C., with whom you have already had dealings, in the course of which C. may from time to time become largely indebted to you, in consideration of your doing so, I hereby agree to be responsible to you for, and guarantee to you the payments of, any sums of money which C. now is or may at any time be indebted to you, so that I am not called upon to pay more than the sum of £2,000"); Edwards v.

Jevons, 8 C. B. 436, 19 L. J. C. P. N. S. 50, 14 Jur. 131 ("In consideration of E. R. & Co. giving credit to J. D., I hereby engage to be responsible and to pay any sum not exceeding £120, due to the said E. R. & Co. by the said J. D.,"—held to apply to both past and future debts); Weston v. Empire Assur. Corp. 19 L. T. N. S. 305 (memorandum charging premises "with the payment of the sum of £100 for goods delivered or to be delivered to me by you to that amount"); Browning v. Baldwin, 40 L. T. N. S. 248, 27 Week. Rep. 644 ("We request you to accept the drafts of L. in your London house of B. & Co. at sixty days' sight to the extent of £1,000, and we undertake to provide you with funds to meet such acceptances before maturity," and "in consideration of your accepting the drafts of L. to the extent of £1,000 further, we undertake to provide you with funds to meet such acceptances before maturity"); Woolley v. Jennings, 5 Barn. & C. 165, 7 Dowl. & R. 824, 2 Car. & P. 144, (warrant of attorney with the following defeasance: "The within warrant of attorney is given to secure the payment of £4,000, with lawful interest thereon,"—held, in absence of anything to show an intention that the security was to apply to an existing balance, that it must be construed as a continuing security); Martin v. Wright, 6 Q. B. 917 ("In consideration of your agreeing to supply goods to K. at two months' credit, we jointly and separately agree to guarantee his present or any future debt with you, to the amount of £80. Should he fail to pay at the expiration of the above credit, we hereby bind ourselves to pay you within," etc.); Batson v. Spearman, 3 Perry & D. 77, 9 Ad. & El. 298 (agreement to discount bills and advance sums not exceeding at any one or more time or times £200, in consideration of repayment, upon default of the principal debtor).

And the following general cases construed the respective guaranties as noncontinuing: Gerson v. Hamilton, 30 La. Ann. 737 ("As you have promised to advance my son G., I am willing to go his security for the amount of $2,500"); Reed v. Fish, 59 Me. 358 ("Let the bearer buy merchandise to the amount of two or three hundred dollars on six months, and I will see you paid,"—held limited to first purchase); Boston & S. Glass Co. v. Moore, 119 Mass. 435 ("I guarantee the sum of $500 value in glass shades purchased by my son M. from the B. & S. G. Co., terms of purchase to be sixty days from date of invoice, and if not paid within ninety days draft to be drawn on me for the amount"); Cutler v. Ballou, 136 Mass. 337, 49 Am. Rep. 35 ("Please deliver to H. goods as he may want from time to time, not exceeding in amount $300, and if not paid for by him within thirty days I will be responsible for the same,"—held exhausted and satisfied by first purchase); Callender, McCa. & T. Co. v. Flint, 187 Mass. 104, 72 N. E. 345 (obligee wrote guarantor that principal debtor wished "to buy a few goods of us to-day," and asked that guarantor guarantee any such purchase;—guarantor answered stating that he had decided to help principal debtor, and that he would "guarantee the payment of goods he may buy of you not to exceed $300"); Fogel v. Blitz, 128 Mich. 503, 87 N. W. 640 (guaranty of "the value of a consignment stock of watches, jewelry, etc., that you may ship to and place with the S. S. B. J. Co., to the extent of $1,000, said stock to be on memoranda for a period of no less than six months, and all reorders from said stock to be accompanied and paid for in cash. At the end of this period or any renewal or extension thereof, the goods unsold can be returned"); Merchants' & F. Bank v. Calmes, 82 Miss. 603, 35 So. 161 ("We hereby guarantee the account of C. & St. J. Co. with the M. & F. Bank, to the amount of $2,500. It is agreed and understood that this guaranty is to cover all amounts which above firm may owe the said bank to the above specified amount"); Lampport v. Greenberg, 48 Misc. 513, 96 N. Y. Supp. 143 ("We hereby guarantee the sum of $100, the amount which they [obligees] will sell to the F. S. Co. [principal debtor], that in case of their failing to pay, we will pay the same amount to them"); Arnold v. Wilder, 6 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 819 (in consideration of extending credit, guarantor pledged her property to the extent of and for the payment of $1,000); McGough v. Birmingham, 12 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 178, as set out in 25 Century Dig. 112 (a letter of credit stating that any draft for $5,000 drawn upon S. with his permission, by C., would be paid on presentation,—held limited to one $5,000 draft); Sollée v. Meugy, 1 Bail. L. 620 ("M. . . . has requested of me to continue my assistance by lending him my name. I have therefore consented that he shall use it for the amount of from $1,000 to $1,500,"—held exhausted by advances made to the amount specified); Sawyer v. Senn, 27 S. C. 251, 3 S. E. 298 ("Whereas S., by overdrafts, has become indebted to the said C. N. Bank to the amount of $1,500, and is unable to refund the same. Now, the condition of this obligation is such that if the said S. . . . do and shall well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, unto the above-named bank "the full sum of $1,500 twelve months from this date, with interest," etc., then the obligation to be null and void); Auerbach v. Holley, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 26 S. W. 83 (obligee wrote guarantor that H. had bought his "opening bill" of goods, and asked if guarantor guaranteed it, to which guarantor replied, "In regard to purchase of H., we guarantee payment of same to amount of $4,500"); Sutherland v. Paterson, 4 Ont. Rep. 565 (guarantor wrote obligee: J. S. "informs me now that I could help him by pledging myself to you, that you might give him a letter of credit in M., and I now say if you will assist him in that say to $7,000 or $8,000, that I will become responsible to you for the like amount in any manner you may wish;" J. S. applied for and was given a guaranty continuing for the year of $5,000,—held, per Wilson, Ch. J., that the letter did not constitute a continuing guaranty, and that no recovery could be had when $5,000 had once been paid); Melville v. Hayden, 3 Barn. & Ald. 593, 22 Revised Rep. 495 ("I engage to guarantee the payment to the extent of £80 at quarterly account, bill two months, for goods to be purchased by him [principal debtor] of," etc.,—held applicable only to the first quarterly payment); Re Medewe, 26 Beav. 588, 28 L. J. Ch. N. S. 891, 5 Jur. N. S. 421, 7 Week. Rep. 319 (guaranty recited that guarantor owed obligee bank on three accounts, and that, security having been required, he guaranteed any balance "which shall or may be found due," and charged his estate with "the three several sums of money which shall or may be found due on the balance of the said several accounts," limited to the aggregate of £3,000,—held not a continuing security for any floating balance, but to apply to the exhausted balance only); Kay v. Groves, 6 Bing. 276, 3 Moore & P. 634, 4 Car. & P. 72, 8 L. J. C. P. 9 ("I hereby agree to be answerable to K. for the amount of five sacks of flour to be delivered to T., payable in one month,"—held limited to the first transaction, and not even a continuing guaranty for flour delivered at subsequent periods, though not exceeding in the whole five sacks); Bovill v. Turner, 2 Chitty, 205 ("You may let L. have coals to £50, for which I shall be answerable at any time,"—held limited to the first purchase of £50); Walker v. Hardman, 4 Clark & F. 258, 11 Bligh, N. R. 292 (firm heavily indebted to bank required to give security; money bond executed to secure a certain sum with interest from date,—held to secure the existing debt and not to cover floating balances, there being nothing on the face of the instrument to show that it was a security for future balances); Nicholson v. Paget, 5 Car. & P. 395, 3 Tyrw. 164, 2 L. J. Exch. N. S. 18, 1 Crompt. & M. 48 ("I hereby agree to be answerable for the payment of £50 for T. L. In case T. L. does not pay for the gin, etc., he receives from you, I will pay you the amount"); Allnutt v. Ashenden, 5 Mann. & G. 392, 7 Jur. 113, 12 L. J. C. P. N. S. 124, 6 Scott, N. R. 127 ("I hereby guarantee J's account with you for wines and spirits, to the amount of £100,"—held, in view of the fact that there was an existing indebtedness though in a less sum than £100, that the guaranty did not extend to future accounts); Kirby v. Marlborough, 2 Maule & S. 18, 14 Revised Rep. 573 (guaranty made to enable C. to carry on business conditioned for the payment of all such sums, not exceeding the sum of £3,000, which should or might at any time or times thereafter be advanced,—held a guaranty for the first £3,000 lent only); Chalmers v. Victors, 16 Week. Rep. 1046, 18 L. T. N. S. 481 ("V. hereby engages to be responsible for liabilities incurred by M. & V., to the extent of £50,"—held limited to the existing indebtedness plus such amount as made up £50).

Limitation as to time.

In this class of cases it has been held that the guaranty should be construed strictly against the guarantor, it being said that if it had been his intention to limit the credit, he should have so expressed it. Simpson v. Manley, 2 Crompt. & J. 12, holding the guaranty, "M. having intimated to us that he is about to make some purchases of goods from you, we beg to say that if you give him credit, we will be responsible that his payments shall be regularly made, to the extent of £1,000 from this period to June 1, 1831,"—to be a continuing one.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

But that the liability of a guarantor is not to be extended by construction or implication beyond the strict terms of his contract was the rule announced in Cushing v. Cable, 48 Minn. 3, 50 N. W. 891, where a guaranty of prompt payment of rent for four months, and for a renewal of two months if renewed in the manner prescribed, was held noncontinuing, and the guarantor not liable after four months' period where there was no renewal in the manner provided.

The rule that the intention of the parties should govern, and that a wide latitude should be allowed in discovering the intention, was adhered to in Farmers' & M. Bank v. Kercheval, 2 Mich. 504, where the guaranty, "Whereas C. & Co. are now or may hereafter be indebted to the F. & M. Bank . . . in divers sums of money, and may from time to time become liable to pay to the . . . said bank divers sums of money, to the amount of $3,000, by means of notes, discounts, and overdrafts made or indorsed by the said P. C. & Co. and for their benefit: Now, therefore, if the said P. C. & Co. shall pay or cause to be paid . . . said bank . . . this obligation to be void, otherwise to remain in full force and virtue for the space of three years from the 1st day of January, A. D. 1837, unless notice is given . . . to the contrary,"—was held intended to cover successive notes, etc., made by P. C. & Co. at any time within the limited period, whenever the antecedent transaction where discharged, and not to be limited to the first $3,000, it being said that narrow and restricted rules should not be applied to ordinary business guaranties to relieve the parties from what appears to have been engagements fairly and voluntarily assumed.

In the following cases, it is impossible to determine from the decisions what general rule or rules, if any, were applied: Johnson v. Fisher, 4 Colo. 242, holding that a request by A that B give C until November in which to pay for goods, made in reply to B's request that C return goods which he had for the purpose of selling on commission, A stating that "all the goods he [C] is unable to send back at that time shall be paid for. So far I guarantee,"—was a guaranty limited to the goods on hand at the time of its execution; Rouss v. Creglow, 103 Iowa, 60, 72 N. W. 429, holding a guaranty for the payment of any sum "which is now, or at any time hereafter may become, due and payable" upon an open account for goods sold and delivered, with the provision that it shall apply to the indebtedness which may accrue within one year,—not continuous, but limited to one year.

So, it has been held that a guaranty of the payment of the advertising bills of a corporation "for the present" is continuous for a reasonable length of time, in the absence of a termination of contract by notice. Lewis v. Worrell, 185 Mass. 572, 71 N. E. 73, holding fifteen months a reasonable time under the circumstances of the case.

The question has also arisen in connection with the guaranty of the rent, etc., under leases. Thus, where the lease is for a definite term with provision for holding over on renewal, and the guaranty is of payment of rent according to the stipulations and covenants in the lease, it has been held that the guaranty is not limited to the definite term, but applies to rents accruing while holding over under the original lease or in possession under a renewal executed pursuant to the terms of the original lease. Salisbury v. Hale, 12 Pick. 416; Rice v. Loomis, 139 Mass. 302, 1 N. E. 548; Deblois v. Earle, 7 R. I. 26; Heffron v. Treber, 21 S. D. 194, 130 Am. St. Rep. 711, 110 N. W. 781. And the same is true where the contract is to be renewed if "fulfilled to the satisfaction of the parties," and the guaranty is "security for F. S. G.," the lessee (Decker v. Gaylord, 8 Hun, 110); unless by other terms of the guaranty it is manifest that the guarantor intended the guaranty to be limited to the original term (Woods v. Doherty, 153 Mass. 558, 27 N. E. 676). But the guaranty will not apply to the holding over or renewal where such holding over or renewal is not under and pursuant to the terms of the guaranteed lease. Warren v. Lyons, 152 Mass. 310, 9 L.R.A. 353, 25 N. E. 721. And it has been held that where the guaranty is merely of the punctual payment of the rent in a mentioned lease, it will not cover a renewal lease, although the taking of the renewal lease was in the exercise of an option contained in the original lease. Kanouse v. Wise, 76 N. J. L. 423, 69 Atl. 1017.

And a guaranty of the fidelity of an agent or employee, which refers to the contract of employment, is limited to the term of employment under the contract. John A. Tolman Co. v. Clements, 98 Mich. 6, 56 N. W. 1038.

Limitation as to time and amount.

In cases in which the guaranties are limited as to both time and amount, the same general rules seem to be applicable.

Thus, it has been said that contracts of guaranty are to be strictly construed, and all reasonable doubts resolved in favor of the guarantor, this being the tenor of the decision in Hill Mercantile Co. v. Rotan Grocery Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 127 S. W. 1080, wherein the guaranty, "In consideration of the sale of merchandise by the R. G. Co. to the H. M. Co., I, we, or either of us, guarantee unconditionally the payment to the R. G. Co. any indebtedness of said H. M. Co. to it made prior to . . . [a certain date]," and thereafter until further notice 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) in writing, not to exceed the sum of $7,000,—was held to be noncontinuing.

So, it has been held that if the terms of the guaranty are uncertain or ambiguous, or other things are equal, the guaranty should be construed most strongly against the guarantor. Schinasi v. Lane, 118 App. Div. 76, 103 N. Y. Supp. 127, holding the guaranty, "I hereby guarantee any bills the R. C. & T. B. D. Asso. may contract with you from this date until January 1, 1906, unless I notify you to the contrary, providing the amount of credit shall not exceed $5,000 at any one time,"—to be limited only as to time and liability.

And the rule that a contract of guaranty should be construed so as to give effect to the intention of the parties as expressed in the instrument read in the light of the surrounding circumstances was applied in the following cases, wherein the respective guaranties were held to be continuing ones: Lafargue v. Harrison, 70 Cal. 380, 59 Am. Rep. 416, 11 Pac. 636 ("At the request of J. M. & Son we hereby authorize A. L. & Co. to draw on you at sixty days sight for our account to the amount of £3,000. . . . this credit to be in force for twelve months"); Home Sav. Bank v. Hosie, 119 Mich. 116, 77 N. W. 625 (guaranty executed by stockholders to secure borrowed money which might be required for the corporate business during the next ensuing twelve months, to an amount not exceeding a specified sum,—held continuing for time specified); Rundle v. Scully, 144 Mich. 62, 107 N. W. 694 (guaranty of the pay for coal furnished the principal debtor on or before a specified date, not to exceed the sum of $1,000,—held continuing for the amount stated through the whole period, and not discharged by the payment by the principal debtor of a stipulated amount once during the period); Paakusz v. Bodner, 75 N. J. L. 447, 67 Atl. 1040 ("We the undersigned do guarantee you to trust E. B. & Co. $300 worth of material, to be credited to them at the rate of ten or fifteen days terms, for a term of five months from date,"—held to extend to all moneys due for materials purchased within five months, the amount of the credit only being limited to $300); Pratt v. Matthews, 24 Hun, 386 (guarantor agreed that the principal debtor, "who has purchased or is about to purchase anthracite coal of said firm, shall and will pay said firm at such time or times and at such prices as may be agreed upon between said firm [obligee] and said P., for all coal that may be delivered to him up to the 1st of January, 1878, and in default of his so doing, we agree to pay for the same, provided the amount so in default shall not at any time exceed the sum of $1,000,"—held to limit the liability, and not the amount furnished during the specified time); Fifth Nat. Bank v. Woolsey, 21 Misc. 757, 48 N. Y. Supp. 148, affirmed in 31 App. Div. 61, 52 N. Y. Supp. 827 (guaranty by stockholders of a corporation, reciting that it desired to borrow money, and that, as a guaranty had been demanded, they agreed to pay all paper discounted by the obligee for the corporation, which shall remain due and unpaid within one year, not exceeding $10,000 in the aggregate); Sentinel Co. v. Smith, 143 Wis. 377, 127 N. W. 943 ("You are hereby authorized to furnish H. with copies of the M. S. for sale, the undersigned hereby agreeing to become responsible to you for the prompt payment of all bills for such papers, to the amount of $500").

The following decisions, which do not state the rule or rules applied, held the respective guaranties to be continuing: First Nat. Bank v. Waddell, 74 Ark. 241, 85 S. W. 417, 4 Ann. Cas. 818 (guaranty to pay any and all indebtedness to the obligee, to the extent of $3,000, on or before April 1, 1891,—held continuing for advances made up to April 1, 1891, and not discharged by the first transaction or payment made, so long as any balance remained unpaid, especially as the evidence showed that the principals had no capital, contemplated business operations which necessarily required the use of thousands of dollars monthly or even daily, and that the manifest purpose of executing the guaranty was to afford a basis of credit); Consolidated Portrait & Frame Co. v. Claxton, 1 Ga. App. 809, 57 S. E. 980 ("Should C. order goods of you at one or several times within the next twelve months," we "request that you ship such goods," and if said C. "fails to pay for such goods, . . . we agree to pay, . . . provided our responsibility shall not exceed $200"); Hatch v. Hobbs, 12 Gray, 447 ("I hereby guarantee the sum of $500 to be drawn out in merchandise by W. from time to time as he may want. This guaranty to remain good until further order or until April 1, 1857,"—held that the guaranty was a continuing one, and covered balances for goods sold up to April 1); Clark v. Burdett, 2 Hall, 217 ("I hereby guaranty the payment of any bill or bills of merchandise . . . P. has purchased or may purchase of E. P. C. & Co.; the said P. having the privilege of ninety days' credit on the purchases made by her, the amount of this guaranty not exceeding $200, and this guaranty to expire at the end of one year from this date"); Martin v. McMullen, 18 Ont. App. Rep. 559, reversing 20 Ont. Rep. 257, affirming 19 Ont. Rep. 230 ("In consideration of the goods sold by you on credit to McG. Bros., and of any further goods which you may sell to McG. Bros. upon credit during the next twelve months from date, I hereby undertake to guarantee you against all loss in respect of such goods, so sold or to be sold, provided I shall not be called on in any event to pay a greater amount than $2,500,"—held continuing for the whole amount of indebtedness, with a limit of liability to the stipulated amount, the majority of the court laying down the rule that where the amount of indebtedness at the time of the giving of the guaranty exceeds a specified limit, the guaranty is not restricted to the specified amount); W. R. Brock Co. v. Young, 8 East. L. Rep. (Can.) 244 (guaranty not set out); Williams v. Rawlinson, Ryan & M. 233 (a bond conditioned to indemnify and save harmless the obligees for "such sums as they in their banking business should within ten years advance to pay, or be liable to advance or pay for, on account of their accepting, discounting, etc., any bill of exchange, notes, etc., which A. B. should, from time to time, draw upon or make payable, etc., at their house, . . . not exceeding . . . £5,000, . . . together with interest on such advances"); Laurie v. Scholefield, L. R. 4 C. P. 622 ("In consideration of the U. Bank agreeing to advance and advancing to the firm of R. & Co. any sum or sums of money they may require during the next eighteen months, not exceeding in the whole . . . £1,000, we hereby jointly and severally guarantee the payment of any such sum as may be owing to the said bank at the expiration of the said period,"—held to cover a floating balance).

And in the following cases a contrary conclusion was reached: Rueter v. Howe, 60 N. H. 578 (authorization to deliver ale during twelve months, not exceeding the amount of $500, and promise to pay for it if original debtor did not,—held limited to first $500 worth of ale delivered); Borghfield v. La-Banque d'Hochelaga, Rap. Jud. Quebec 28 C. S. 344 ("We hereby guarantee you to the extent of $500, for invoices of goods sold or to be sold to C. & D. within six months from this date, all drafts to be sent to this bank for acceptance,"—held not a continuing guaranty as to all sales, but limited in time and amount as stated in the guaranty).

Parol evidence rules.

Closely allied to the question stated in the title to this note is that of the right to show the intention of the parties and the surrounding circumstances by extrinsic evidence, and as these cases have been collected they will be inserted because of their practical value in connection with the application of the foregoing rules.

In the first place it may be considered as certain that parol evidence is not admissible to vary, contradict, or add to the terms of the guaranty (Schneider-Davis Co. v. Hart, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 529, 57 S. W. 903; Heffield v. Meadows, L. R. 4 C. P. 595, 20 L. T. N. S. 746); this being especially true where there are equivocal expressions or ambiguities (Scott v. Myatt, 24 Ala. 489, 60 Am. Dec. 486; West-Winfree Tobacco Co. v. Waller, 66 Ark. 445, 51 S. W. 320; Indiana Bicycle Co. v. Tuttle, 74 Conn. 489, 51 Atl. 538; Lazear v. National Union Bank, 52 Md. 78, 36 Am. Rep. 355; Boston & S. Glass Co. v. Moore, 119 Mass. 435; Henry McShane Co. v. Padian, 142 N. Y. 207, 36 N. E. 880; Bank of Alexandria v. Turney, — Tenn. —, 52 S. W. 762).

But extrinsic evidence of the existing circumstances is admissible to explain the true meaning of an ambiguous guaranty (Collins v. Alvery, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 985; Columbus Sewer Pipe Co. v. Ganser, 58 Mich. 385, 55 Am. Rep. 697, 25 N. W. 377; Perlman v. Ehrlich, 119 N. Y. Supp. 663;

White's Bank v. Myles, 73 N. Y. 335, 29 Am. Rep. 157; Lemp v. Armengol, 86 Tex. 690, 26 S. W. 941; Hoad v. Grace, 7 Hurlst. & N. 494, 31 L. J. Exch. N. S. 98, 8 Jur. N. S. 43, 5 L. T. N. S. 359, 10 Week. Rep. 85; or to show the meaning attached to mercantile terms used in the instrument (Schneider-Davis Co. v. Hart, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 529, 57 S. W. 903).

So, it has been held that parol contemporaneous evidence is admissible to show the circumstances under which the guaranty was entered into, when the intent and meaning is uncertain, under the rule that a wide latitude should be allowed in interpreting guaranties and in discovering the intention of the parties. S. Hamill Co. v. Woods, 94 Iowa, 246, 62 N. W. 735; Columbus Sewer Pipe Co. v. Ganser, 58 Mich. 385, 55 Am. Rep. 697, 25 N. W. 377; Tootle v. Elgutter, 14 Neb. 158, 45 Am. Rep. 103, 15 N. W. 228; Crist v. Burlingame, 62 Barb. 351; Agawam Bank v. Strever, 18 N. Y. 502; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Cole, 83 Ohio St. 50, 93 N. E. 465, Ann. Cas. 1912 A, 773; Gardner v. Watson, 76 Tex. 25, 13 S. W. 39; St. Lawrence Steel & Wire Co. v. Leys, 6 Ont. L. Rep. 235, affirmed in 7 Ont. L. Rep. 72; Johnston v. Nicholls, 1 C. B. 251, 14 L. J. C. P. N. S. 151, 9 Jur. 429; Heffield v. Meadows, L. R. 4 C. P. 595, 20 L. T. N. S. 746; Grahame v. Grahame, Ir. L. R. 19 Eq. 249.

And evidence that the guaranty was considered as a continuing one, and so acted upon, was held admissible in Douglass v. Reynolds, 7 Pet. 113, 8 L. ed. 626, not as explaining or construing the guaranty itself, but as showing the reliance placed thereon.

So, in Bell v. Bruen, 1 How. 169, 11 L. ed. 89, it was said that extrinsic evidence is admissible to obtain the true import and application of a guaranty, but not to add to it.

G. J. C.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT. (Department No. 2.)

ST. PAUL TITLE & TRUST COMPANY,
Appt.,

v.

LOUIS T. STENSGAARD, Respnt.

(— Cal. —, 121 Pac. 731.)

Pleading — statute of limitations — amendment — discretion.

1. Permitting an amendment of a plea of the statute of limitations so as to set out the subdivision of the section relied on is not an abuse of discretion where there is only one subdivision that is applicable so that the plea is sufficient without amendment.

Limitation of actions — foreign judgment — change of name — effect.

2. A mere change of name without fraudulent intent, after one against whom a judgment has been entered in one state takes up his residence in another state, will not prevent the statute of limitations running in his favor in the latter state.

(February 3, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Los Angeles County in defendant's favor in an action brought to enforce a judgment which had been recovered against defendant in the state of Minnesota. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Constan Jensen, for appellant:

One who comes into this state under an assumed name, fraudulently represents himself to be a person other than his true self, conceals his presence in the state from his family and all who know him in the state of his former residence, and who does this manifestly for the purpose of evading his obligations, is not entitled to the protection of the law.

Palmer v. Shaw, 16 Cal. 93; Angell, Limitations, 6th ed. 215, 216; Stewart v. Stewart, 152 Cal. 162, 92 Pac. 87, 14 Ann. Cas. 940; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 233; 25 Cyc. 1214, 1251; Goldberg v. Lippmann, 6 Misc. 35, 25 N. Y. Supp. 1003; Rogers v. Hatch, 44 Cal. 280; Harrigan v. Home L. Ins. Co. 128 Cal. 531, 58 Pac. 180, 61 Pac. 99; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 727, 728.

The California statute of limitations was not pleaded, and the action of the court in permitting amendment after close of trial and over plaintiff's objection, was an abuse of discretion.

Wolters v. Thomas, — Cal. —, 32 Pac. 585; Bank of Woodland v. Heron, 122 Cal. 107, 54 Pac. 537; Cooke v. Spears, 2 Cal. 409, 56 Am. Dec. 348; Morton v. Bartning, 68 Cal. 306, 9 Pac. 146; Manning v. Dallas, 73 Cal. 420, 15 Pac. 34.

Appellant's cause of action is not barred in Minnesota, and therefore not barred here under § 361, Code Civ. Proc.

Note. — Concealment of identity by change of name as interrupting statute of limitations.

But three cases aside from ST. PAUL TITLE & T. Co. v. STENSGAARD have been found wherein it was sought to make the fact that a debtor had assumed a fictitious name for the purpose of eluding his creditors a ground for interrupting the running of the statute of limitations, and they are in accord with ST. PAUL TITLE & T. Co. v. STENSGAARD, that such fact does not come within the provision of any exception which will suspend such statute.

In Engle v. Fischer, 102 N. Y. 400, 55 Am. Rep. 818, 7 N. E. 300, it was held that such a case did not, as therein contended, Finnell v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 33 Fed. 427; Moores v. Winter, 67 Ark. 106, 53 S. W. 1057; Stuart v. Lander, 16 Cal. 372, 76 Am. Dec. 538; Davidson v. Barnes, 17 Minn. 69, Gil. 49; Lamprey v. Davidson, 16 Minn. 480, Gil. 435; Donner v. Polmer, 23 Cal. 40.

The time of the lien has nothing to do with the right to bring action on the judgment.

23 Cyc. 1352; Haeussler v. Scheitlin, 9 Mo. App. 308; 23 Cyc. 350; Ashton v. Slater, 19 Minn. 347, Gil. 300; Burwell v. Tullis, 12 Minn. 572, Gil. 486; Newell v. Dart, 28 Minn. 248, 9 N. W. 732; Dole v. Wilson, 39 Minn. 330, 40 N. W. 161; Spencer v. Haug, 45 Minn. 231, 47 N. W. 794; Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Earl, 56 Minn. 390, 57 N. W. 938; D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Heuer, 62 Minn. 507, 64 N. W. 1151.

The defendant, claiming the bar of a foreign statute, must have remained in the foreign state during the entire period prescribed in the statute; otherwise, the statute has not operated.

Drake v. Bigelow, 93 Minn. 112, 100 N. W. 664; Powers Mercantile Co. v. Blethen, 91 Minn. 339, 97 N. W. 1056; Holley v. Coffee, 123 Ala. 406, 26 So. 239; Strong v. Lewis, 204 Ill. 35, 68 N. E. 556; Web-come within the exception provided for by the Code in case of absence from the state, because the debtor was not without the state when the cause of action accrued and he never thereafter departed from the state; and though he bore an assumed name he was physically at all times within the state, and there was no hiding or concealment of his person except as he assumed and bore a fictitious name.

And in Miller v. Lesser, 71 Iowa, 147, 32 N. W. 250, it was said that there was no provision of the Code which created an exception in favor of a creditor upon the ground that he was unable to discover a debtor's place of residence within the period prescribed for bringing an action, and so it was held that where a debtor was a resident of the state when the cause of action accrued, and continued to reside therein during the time prescribed for bringing an action, the statute of limitations was not interrupted by the fact that the debtor was living under an assumed name, which delayed the discovery of his place of residence.

In Chemical Nat. Bank v. Kissane, 32 Fed. 429, in holding that one is not estopped to plead the statute by the fact that he removes to another state, and remains in such state under an assumed name until a cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations, the court said: "In this case, there was no legal obstacle in the way, at all. It is true the man, in a certain sense, disguised himself by assuming an additional name, and moved into another state; but there is no legal obstacle to instituting a suit. All 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) ster v. Davies, 44 Neb. 301, 62 N. W. 484; Nicholas v. Farwell, 24 Neb. 180, 38 N. W. 820; Lewis v. Hyams, 26 Nev. 68, 99 Am. St. Rep. 677, 63 Pac. 126, 64 Pac. 817; Chevrier v. Robert, 6 Mont. 319, 12 Pac. 702; Kempe v. Bader, 86 Tenn. 189, 6 S. W. 126; Osgood v. Artt, 11 Biss. 160, 10 Fed. 365; Martin v. Wilson, 58 C. C. A. 181, 120 Fed. 202; Story, Conf. L. 8th ed. 801; Whar-ton, Conf. L. 3d ed. §§ 535-543; 25 Cyc. 1241-1411.

Mr. Edward E. Bacon, with Messrs. Gibson, Dunn, & Crutcher, for respondent:

Where the debtor is within the state at the time that the cause of action accrues, the statute will run in his favor, notwithstanding his departure from the state where the obligation was incurred, and his change of name to conceal his identity and whereabouts.

Miller v. Lesser, 71 Iowa, 147, 32 N. W. 250; Engel v. Fischer, 102 N. Y. 400, 55 Am. Rep. 818, 7 N. E. 300; Chemical Nat. Bank v. Kissane, 32 Fed. 429; Myers v. Center, 47 Kan. 324, 27 Pac. 978; Amy v. Watertown, 130 U. S. 320, 32 L. ed. 953, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 537; 25 Cyc. 1223; Davis v. Hart, 123 Cal. 384, 55 Pac. 1060; complainant had to do was to find the defendant. It was well aware of the cause of action. It was its own fault, or misfortune, if it was unable to find its debtor. If defendant had come into this state, and gone into some of its most secluded corners, without adding a name to his own, it is not likely he would have been found, within the time allowed by the statute. I apprehend that no one in that case would have set up the fact that he could not be found till the action was barred, as an equitable ground for restraining him from availing himself of the statute of limitations. So if, being baldheaded, he should put on a wig, or cultivate his beard in such way, or wear false whiskers, or in some other way disguise himself, in addition to moving to another state, or while staying in some secluded spot in the state where his obligation was incurred, that would be no legal obstacle to bringing a suit. It would be simply throwing a difficulty in the way of finding or recognizing the man. So, taking on an additional name is only another element of the same kind of disguise. It interposed no legal impediment to the pursuing of the remedy, provided he should be found. It might make it more troublesome to find him. I think, therefore, it is not a case under our statute, or upon equitable principles established before the statutes, covering the points upon which the party can be restrained from setting up the statute of limitations. The taking on of another name is an act of disguise and of secretion, but it interposes no legal impediment."

J. H. B.

Clausen v. Meister, 93 Cal. 555, 29 Pac. 232.

The defense of bar by the limitation prescribed by our Code for actions on judgments was sufficiently pleaded.

25 Cyc. 1407; Pipes v. North Carolina Mica Mineral & Lumber Co. 132 N. C. 612, 44 S. E. 114; Churchill v. Woodworth, 148 Cal. 669, 113 Am. St. Rep. 324, 84 Pac. 155; Trower v. San Francisco, 157 Cal. 762, 109 Pac. 617; Lilly-Brackett Co. v. Sonnemann, 157 Cal. 192, 106 Pac. 715, 21 Ann. Cas. 1279.

Under the statutes of Minnesota a domestic judgment became extinct in ten years from its entry or docketing, and no action could thereafter be maintained thereon.

Brown v. Dooley, 95 Minn. 146, 103 N. W. 894; Relyea v. Tomahawk Paper & Pulp Co. 102 Wis. 301, 72 Am. St. Rep. 878, 78 N. W. 412; Holcombe v. Tracy, 2 Minn. 241, Gil. 201; Burwell v. Tullis, 12 Minn. 572, Gil. 486; Stine v. Bennett, 13 Minn. 153, Gil. 138; State ex rel. National Bond & Secur. Co. v. Krahmer, 105 Minn. 422, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 157, 117 N. W. 780; Gaines v. Grunewald, 102 Minn. 245, 113 N. W. 450.

Melvin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant sued upon a judgment for something more than $5,000, recovered in the state of Minnesota on May 6, 1891, against the defendant and respondent herein, under the name of Louis T. Stensgaard. The complaint in this action was filed December 1, 1909. It was alleged in the complaint that the defendant surreptitiously left the state of Minnesota within one year after the recovery of the judgment pleaded; that he concealed his whereabouts from his family and acquaintances at all times after his departure from that state; and that he changed his name to Alton B. Hill, and concealed his identity and kept his place of residence a secret for the purpose of defrauding his creditors. While admitting the recovery of judgment against him as alleged in the complaint, he denied by his answer that he left Minnesota surreptitiously, or that he had fraudulently concealed his identity. He pleaded the statute of limitations.

The court found that defendant lived in Minnesota with his family after the entry of the judgment against him, until the year 1897; that in that year he openly departed from Minnesota; that he did not change his name until 1899; that he had not fraudulently concealed his identity for the purpose of defrauding any creditor; and that he had continuously resided in the county of Los Angeles since the year 1900 under the name of Alton B. Hill. The court found that long prior to the year 1909 the judgment had ceased to be of any effect in the state of Minnesota, and that the plaintiff's cause of action was barred by provisions of § 336, subd. 1, and § 361, of the Code of Civil Procedure. From the judgment against it, plaintiff appeals.

In his original answer, respondent pleaded the bar of § 336 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but did not specify the subdivision on which he relied. Before final submission of the cause, the court permitted him to amend his pleading by designating the first subdivision of that section as the one upon which he placed special reliance. Appellant asks us to hold that the granting of permission to amend was an abuse of discretion by the trial court. We do not think so. Indeed, the original pleading of the section of the Code, without special reference to the particular part of it upon which defendant depended, was sufficient, because the first subdivision is the only one that could possibly apply to the facts of this case. Hence there was no uncertainty, or, in any event, any such uncertainty as plaintiff could urge, in the absence of special demurrer to the answer. Subdivision 1 of § 336 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to an action upon "a judgment or decree of any court of the United States or of any state within the United States." The only other subdivision relates to "an action for mesne profits of real property." It will therefore be seen that the original pleading of the statute was sufficient. Churchill v. Woodworth, 148 Cal. 675, 113 Am. St. Rep. 324, 84 Pac. 155. But the court, in the exercise of its discretion, permitted an amendment which removed all possible criticism of the plea of the statute. Such a plea is to the merits, and the court is clothed with discretion to permit the defense of the statute of limitations, just as it is given authority to allow the pleading of any other meritorious defense. Lilly-Brackett Co. v. Sonnemann, 157 Cal. 196, 106 Pac. 715, 21 Ann. Cas. 1279; Trower v. San Francisco, 157 Cal. 769, 109 Pac. 617.

We can see no escape from the court's conclusion that the cause of action was barred because not brought within the time limited by subd. 1 of § 336 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Appellant cites Stewart v. Stewart, 152 Cal. 163, 92 Pac. 87, 14 Ann. Cas. 940; and Palmer v. Shaw, 16 Cal. 95, in support of the proposition that a clandestine entry into this state with intent to defraud creditors does not operate to begin the period of limitation in favor of the debtor thus secretly coming to California. But in this case the court found that defendant's coming to this state and his change of name were without fraudulent intent. The case of Stewart v. Stewart, supra, is authority for the proposition that neither the creditor's ignorance of, nor his inability to discover, the presence of the judgment debtor, will prevent the running of the statute in the latter's favor.

It has been held in this Federal circuit, and we think correctly, that living in this state under an assumed name will not prevent a defendant, sued on a judgment recovered in another state, from pleading the statute of limitations. Chemical Nat. Bank v. Kissane (C. C.) 32 Fed. 429. The court, after hearing all of the evidence, concluded that the defendant had not been guilty of fraud, either in coming to California, or in changing his name, and that he had resided in this state for about nine years prior to the filing of the complaint in this action. The only judgment possible, therefore, was the one sustaining the defense urged under subd. 1 of § 336 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and our conclusions upon the applicability of that section make it unnecessary to review the findings and conclusions with reference to the laws of Minnesota and the availability of § 361 of the Code of Civil Procedure as a defense.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: Henshaw, J.; Lorigan, J.

Petition for rehearing denied, March 4, 1912.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

ADA WEST, Plff. in Err.,

v.

S. M. INMAN.

(137 Ga. 822, 74 S. E. 527.)

Landlord and tenant — supervision of fire escapes — liability for injury.

1. The owner of a building who has pro-

Headnotes by Beck, J.

Note. — Liability for injuries caused by lack or insufficiency of fire escapes.

The earlier cases on this subject are collected in the notes to Rose v. King, 15 L.R.A. 160; Yall v. Snow, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 177; and Arnold v. National Starch Co. 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 178. But little authority has been found since the writing of the latter note.

An attack was made in Roumfort Co. v. Delaney, 230 Pa. 374, 79 Atl. 653, upon the validity of a statute requiring fire escapes, etc., upon all buildings, such as theaters, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

provided fire escapes in accordance with the provisions of § 3151 of the Code, and who has rented certain stores above the second story in said building to firms engaged in a legitimate manufacturing business, is not bound to exercise supervision over the portions of the building rented, so as to insure that the passages or entrances to the fire escapes are at all times kept open.

(a) Nor is such owner liable in damages to an employee in said building, working on a floor above the second floor, who suffered injuries from fire in consequence of obstructions placed in the passageway to the fire escape by a tenant who had rented that portion of the building around and about the fire escape.

Pleading — failure to provide for fire extinguishment — generality.

2. The allegation that "defendant negligently failed to provide in said building . . . ample means of extinguishing fire" was open to attack by special demurrer, which criticized the allegation on the ground that it was a mere conclusion of the pleader, and which called for more specific information as to what means of extinguishing fires were ample and should have been provided.

(March 14, 1912.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Fulton County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries from fire alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence in permitting obstructions preventing access to the fire escape. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James L. Key for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Payne & Jones, for defendant in error:

The owner of a building not particularly exposed to the danger of fire is not bound to anticipate the possibility of remote danger from fire, and where the building is properly constructed for its intended use and purpose, the construction of fire escapes is not required.

Yall v. Snow, 201 Mo. 511, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 177, 119 Am. St. Rep. 781, 100 S. W. 1, 9 Ann. Cas. 1161; Jones v. Granite Mills, 126 Mass. 84, 30 Am. Rep. 661; Pauley v. Steam Gauge & Lantern Co. 131 N. Y. 90, 15 L.R.A. 194, 29 N. E. 999; public halls, and other places where persons assemble or the public resort, upon the ground that it is an unreasonable exercise of the police power in that the act might be enforced in such an arbitrary manner as to work hardship and do great injustice in some instances. In addressing itself to this argument the court said: "It will be presumed that officers intrusted with its enforcement will only require such reasonable compliance as the exigencies of each particular case demand. The act should be enforced in a spirit not to destroy the usefulness of

Keith v. Granite Mills, 126 Mass. 90, 30 Am. Rep. 666; Rose v. King, 49 Ohio St. 213, 15 L.R.A. 160, 30 N. E. 287; 26 Cyc. 1114; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 83.

No duty is imposed upon the owner of the building to so regulate the conduct of his tenants as to interfere with the proper user of the leased floors of the building, even though such user may in some measure interfere with access to one or more of the means of egress from the building.

Sewell v. Moore, 166 Pa. 570, 31 Atl. 370; Yall v. Snow, 9 Ann. Cas. 1166; Huda v. American Glucose Co. 154 N. Y. 480, 40 L.R.A. 411, 48 N. E. 897.

Beck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Ada West brought suit to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been received in consequence of having inhaled smoke and fumes from a fire in a building of which the defendant was the owner, and in which she was at work on the third story as an employee of a manufacturing company occupying a part of said third story as tenant. It was alleged: That another tenant of the owner of the building occupied the second story and that portion of the third story which was "around and included the entrance to the fire escape of said building." That "there were two means of ingress and egress provided for said building and for said place at which petitioner was at work; to wit, one a stairway inside of said building, and the other a fire escape stairway on the outside of said building. Said fire escape could be reached only through one window or door on said third story, and through a space which was occupied by the Silverman-Lonsberg Company, as aforesaid. That on the day aforesaid a fire broke out in said building, on the second story thereof, and in the place occupied by the Silverman-Lonsberg Company. That from said fire issued vast volumes of smoke, heated air, and fire, which penetrated and filled the entire third floor of said building where petitioner was at work. That said fire and smoke and hot air cut off the stairway of said building entirely, and it was impossible to flee from said building by the stairway inside of said building. That the only means of escape left was the fire escape on the outside of said building. That the fire escape on said building was completely cut off and obstructed from access and use by petitioner by boxes, goods, merchandise, and other material, which were piled up against the door and window leading to said fire escape, and made access to said fire escape absolutely impossible." General and special demurrers were filed, and to an order sustaining them the plaintiff excepted.

1. If the plaintiff is entitled to recover in this case, it is in consequence of a violation of the statutory provisions contained in § 3151 of the Code. At common law, the failure to provide fire escapes on the part property or to place undue burdens upon the owner, but only as a protection to such an extent as may be required in view of the situation of the building, having due regard to the use made of it. When so enforced there can be no valid objection on the ground of its requirements being unreasonable. That it will be so enforced may be presumed."

But in Radley v. Knepfly, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 124 S. W. 447, affirmed in — Tex. —, 135 S. W. 111, where an ordinance provided that all rooms above the second floor in "every hotel, family hotel, apartment house, boarding house, lodging house, club house, or tenement house, in which persons reside or lodge," shall be provided "with more than one way of egress or escape from fire, placed as near as practicable at opposite ends of the room, and leading to fire escapes on the outside of such building or to stairways on the inside, provided with proper railings," and the evidence showed that it was unusual to have more than one fire escape on a three-story building like the one in question, and impracticable to so construct the rooms on the third floor of such a building, not situated on a corner, so as to provide each room with more than one way of egress or escape from fire, placed at opposite ends of the room leading to the fire escapes on the outside of the building,— it was held that the ordinance was oppressive and unreasonable, and therefore void. The court said: "It is clear that such construction would, as to inside buildings, destroy the value of all stories above the second, and amount to a practical confiscation of the same."

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And the requirements of the statute may be waived by those for whose protection it is designed.

Thus, where it was alleged that the defendant was negligent in failing to equip the three floors of the building with proper fire escapes, as in Radley v. Knepfly, supra, but the deceased had been occupying a room on the third floor of the building for five or six weeks and knew the condition of the building as to fire escapes, the court said: "Having had time to ascertain the condition of the building as to fire escapes, and to secure another room and move thereto, by voluntarily continuing in the building he took the hazard of the failure to provide it with fire escapes (if there was a failure in that respect)."

And of course the failure to construct an additional fire escape as required by ordinance does not make the owner liable for the death of the deceased caused by a fire, unless the failure to construct was the proximate cause of the death. Ibid.

E. M. S.

of the owner of a building not particularly exposed to danger from fire from the character of the work being carried on in it did not render the owner liable in damages to an employee of the tenant who might receive injuries incurred in consequence of such failure. Yall v. Snow, 201 Mo. 511, 119 Am. St. Rep. 781, 100 S. W. 1, 9 Ann. Cas. 1161, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 177, and cases cited in note. So that the liability of the owner in the present case, if any exists, is entirely statutory, and depends upon the construction of the Code section (§ 3151), which reads as follows: "Owners of every building more than two stories in height, not including the basement, used in the third or higher stories, in whole or in part, as factory or workshop, shall provide more than one way of egress from each story of said building, above the second story, by stairways on the inside or outside of said buildings; and such stairways shall be, as nearly as may be practicable, at opposite ends of each story, and so constructed that, in case of fire, the ground can be readily reached from the third and higher stories. Stairways on the outside of said buildings shall have suitable railed landings at each story above the first, and shall connect with each of said stories by doors or windows opening outwardly, and such doors, windows, and landings shall be kept at all times clear of obstructions. All the main doors of such buildings, both inside and outside, shall open outwardly, and each story shall be amply supplied with means for extinguishing fires." We are clear that under the express provisions of this statute it is the duty of the owner of a building of the character of the buildings referred to in the statute to provide fire escapes in accordance with the provisions of this statute, and that in case of injury to an occupant of a building, resulting directly from said failure, on account of a fire in the building which necessitated the use of fire escapes, there would be a corresponding liability on the owner. And we are equally clear that where the owner of a building has properly equipped it with fire escapes in accordance with law, and has rented any of the stories above the second story to tenants who have leased the same for legitimate manufacturing purposes, the owner is under no obligation to exercise any supervision over the conduct of his tenants in the use of the particular floor which he may have rented to any one of them. Where there is an outside stairway erected as a fire escape, it is, of course, contemplated that the entrance to the building from the landing at each story shall in some way be closed at such hours as the building or some particular story is unoccupied; as at night, for instance, when the men and women working in the building have left and gone home. At such times, the opening by a window or by a door from the landing of the outside staircase or fire escape would be closed in most instances, unless the business conducted therein is of such magnitude as to require or justify the employment and presence of a special watchman. In all such cases would it be the duty of the owner of the building to go upon the premises which he had rented to someone else, and see that his tenant had unlocked the door or unfastened the window shutter, so that there could be free access to the landing of the fire escape? We apprehend that, before a statute passed in derogation of the common law could be given a construction which would place upon the owner of buildings duties so onerous, the language of the statute itself imposing the duties should be express and unequivocal. The allegations of the petition show that a portion of the third story, on which the plaintiff was at work, had been rented to a named tenant, "which said portion of the third story was around and included the entrance to the fire escape of said building; . . . that the fire escape on said building was completely cut off and obstructed from access and use by petitioner by boxes, goods, merchandise, and other material, which were piled up against the door and window leading to said fire escape, and made access to said fire escape absolutely impossible; . . . that the defendant, in violation of petitioner's legal right, obstructed the passage of said fire escape, and permitted the same to be obstructed, so that petitioner could not reach the same and escape." The allegations last quoted are to be construed as meaning, not that the owner himself, in person or by his agents, had piled up boxes, goods, etc., so as to obstruct the passage to the fire escape, but that the tenant, who during the period of his tenancy had the right to use and control the floor about the passage that led to the fire escape, had obstructed the passage. And this is the construction put upon this allegation in the brief of counsel for plaintiff in error. That being the case, under what we have said above, so much of the plaintiff's petition as sought a recovery on the ground that the owner was liable because of the obstruction of the passage, leading to the fire escape was demurrable, and the court did not err in so holding.

30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

2. In another paragraph of the petition it is alleged: "Defendant negligently failed to provide in said building and on the floors thereof, and particularly on the second floor, where said fire broke out, ample means of extinguishing fires. That said fire was finally extinguished by the fire department of the city of Atlanta, and that petitioner was finally rescued from said burning building by the fire department of the city of Atlanta." This paragraph was specially demurred to on the ground, among others, that "the allegation that the defendant negligently failed to provide in said building and on the floors thereof, and particularly on the second floor, where said fire broke out, ample means of extinguishing fires, constitutes a conclusion of the pleader, and is not predicated upon any facts to substantiate the same, . . .

and that it does not appear what means of extinguishing fires, if any, said defendant should have furnished, nor what constitutes ample means of extinguishing fires." The court sustained this special demurrer, but allowed the plaintiff twenty days within which to file amendments. No amendments were filed. We are of the opinion that the special demurrer pointed out specifically existing defects in the paragraph of the petition referred to, and that the plaintiff was allowed a reasonable time within which to amend the same; and, she having failed to amend within the time so allowed, this part of his petition was stricken therefrom, which left the case to stand upon the allegations complaining of the failure upon the part of the owner of the building to keep the passage or entrance to the fire escape free from obstructions. And as that part of the case last referred to, under the ruling made above, was properly stricken on general demurrer, the entire case, without reference to certain other grounds of special demurrer, stood dismissed, as it should have stood under this decision.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

KANSAS CITY PAPER HOUSE, Appt.,
v.
FOLEY RAILWAY PRINTING COMPANY.

(85 Kan. 678, 118 Pac. 1056.)

Corporations — account due president — transfer.

1. Where a corporation through its president asks that an account owing to him personally by the holder of its note be credited thereon, this amounts to a transfer of the account from the president to the corporation; and in an action upon the note the plaintiff cannot object to the account being used as an offset, on the ground that no formal assignment had been made.

Reference — evidence — striking — effect.

2. Where a referee sustains a motion to strike out certain testimony that has been introduced at the trial, and no order is made reinstating it, such testimony cannot be considered by the court in determining whether there was any evidence to sustain the finding of the referee.

Contracts — validity — sale to public.

3. An agreement to pay for services in selling goods to a public board, which does not contemplate the exercise of personal or political influence, and on the carrying out of which no such influence is in fact exerted, and which is otherwise unobjectionable, is not rendered void because the salesman's compensation is made to depend upon the success of his efforts, or because he makes a legitimate argument to one of the members of the board while the others are not present.

(November 11, 1911.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Labette County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. ELLIS, COOK, & BARNETT and E. L. BURTON for appellant.

Messrs. KIMBALL & OSGOOD for appellee.

Mason, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Kansas City Paper House, a corporation, sued the Foley Railway Printing Company, corporation, upon a promissory note. The defendant claimed a credit of $500 on account of an indebtedness of that amount which it asserted was owing to P. T. Foley, its president, by the plaintiff. This is the only matter still in controversy. A referee found in favor of the defendant, and a Note. — Validity of agreement by which compensation is dependent on success in procuring contract with public officer or board.

As to the validity of contracts to procure legislative action, including contracts to procure legislative action on commission, see note to Houlton v. Dunn, 30 L.R.A. 737, and supplementary note to Edwards v. Goldsboro, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 589.

For a discussion of the question of the validity of a contract which contemplates the location of a public building, see note to Edwards v. Goldsboro, supra.

While the question does not seem entirely settled in the Federal courts, it appears to be generally well established elsewhere that agreements for the sale of goods to the public, which are otherwise fair and unobjecjudgment was rendered accordingly, from which the plaintiff appeals.

The appellant contends that, even if it was indebted to Foley, it could not be required to credit the amount upon the note, since no assignment was shown from Foley to the Foley Company. Foley, who personally managed the business of his company, testified in substance that he intended the company to have credit on the note for his claim against the paper company, and gave the latter notice to that effect. This in effect amounted to an assignment, and the paper company, being fully protected against a further assertion of the claim by Foley, cannot complain of the lack of formality.

The appellant also contends that there was no competent evidence that it owed Foley the $500, because his claim rested upon an agreement which he professed to have made with a salesman of the paper company, who was not shown to have had any authority to bind his employer in that respect, and whose authority was denied under oath in the reply. Foley testified in effect that the paper company, through the salesman referred to, agreed to pay him $500 for his assistance in procuring a contract to supply paper and other material to the state; that he went to Topeka, and in the interest of the paper company "talked up" its goods to a member of the executive council, showing samples; that, after the contract had been awarded to the paper tionable, are not rendered invalid because of a stipulation providing that the sale is to be made on commission.

Thus an agreement by one to procure orders from the United States government for supplies to be furnished for use upon vessels in the public service, in consideration of one half the net profits, is valid where it does not contemplate resort to any but legitimate methods in procuring the orders. Swift v. Aspell, 40 Misc. 453, 82 N. Y. Supp. 659. The court said: "If the rule adopted in the Federal courts, as to the enforceability of agreements for contingent compensation in procuring government contracts, is to be applied, the agreement in suit cannot be upheld. In these courts the broad principle is declared that any agreement which has a tendency to introduce into a government transaction involving the purchase of supplies, elements other than the single consideration of a faithful execution of orders at the lowest price, is void; and the inference that personal solicitation or influence is to be employed is held to be enough to defeat the agreement for compensation, irrespective of what was or was not done.

. . . The courts of this state, however, when dealing with the question presented under similar contracts, have not gone so far in the acceptance of inferences to avoid the contract, and have drawn a distinction between agreements to procure legislation and agreements to make sales to the government. A person having something to sell has the right to sell it through an agent, and this right is an incident to his ownership. To declare that he may not employ an agent, upon commission, where the government is the prospective buyer, is to take away what is ordinarily one of the elements of the enjoyment of ownership,—the unrestricted right to sell. Upon this line of reasoning, commission agreements for a sale to the government have been upheld and enforced in this state where the agreement did not actively require corruption in its performance. Treated as a matter distinct in its nature from agreements to procure legislation, an agreement to compensate an agent, for his successful efforts in traffic with the government, has been held binding, where unfairness in the dealings or an intention to resort to corruption did not actually appear from the facts (Lyon v. Mitchell, 36 N. Y. 235, 93 Am. Dec. 502; Southard v. Boyd, 51 N. Y. 177); and these cases, while in conflict with the rule laid down in the Federal decisions referred to, afford direct and binding authority for a recovery in this action. For all that appears, or is to be inferred here, the plaintiff was expected to and did resort to none but the most legitimate methods in procuring these orders for the defendant's goods. Within the rule which, as I have said, obtains in this state, personal solicitation was quite proper, and jealous suspicion of the possibility of corruption cannot be invoked to repudiate the contract. The fact that the defendant was willing to pay one half the net profits contains a suggestion less sinister than that found in the agreement to pay 10 per cent of the gross price received, which was the promise upheld in Lyon v. Mitchell, supra; and the measure of the commission in the present case does not necessarily mean that the government must have been overcharged in the usual course of business. If there was a custom in the trade whereby all vendors of such supplies, in large quantities, were put to the necessity of so fixing their prices as to enable them to pay large commissions to agents, the government would have to pay the prices thus fixed by all available sellers. The mere agreement to pay a large commission from net profits does not mean that the buyer was necessarily to pay more than the value of the goods, under normal trade conditions."

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And an agreement to pay a commission of 5 per cent on the amount of the charter for obtaining a charter from the United States for a steamship does not contravene public policy. Howland v. Coffin, 47 Barb. 653.

Nor does a contract by which one undertakes to pay a commission for chartering his vessel to the government, to persons who are related to the government's agents in charge of selecting vessels for charter, company, he had several conversations with its president in regard to his arrangement with the salesman; and that the president did not deny the salesman's authority to make such an agreement. When the Foley company rested its case, the paper company moved "to strike out that part of the conversation in reference to the contract with Mr. Shaw [the salesman], as there was no proof of any authority of Mr. Shaw to make the contract." The record shows that this motion was sustained. The only evidence on the most vital portion of the Foley company's case seems to have been stricken out by this ruling. No order was made reinstating it, and its place was not supplied by any further testimony. It is at least doubtful whether the ruling was not correct; for there was no evidence that Shaw had authority to make the agreement with Foley, unless it is to be found in the testimony that the president of the company in the course of a conversation, the details of which are not stated, did not deny it. But, whether the ruling was right or wrong, the referee, in deciding that the Foley company could recover without the evidence that was stricken out, must have proceeded upon an erroneous view of the law, which necessarily affected the judgment. Where a court makes its own findings of fact from the evidence reported by a referee, it may doubtless take into account evidence which the referee had stricken out, if the circumstances be such that the adverse party where the agents so employed did not agree to use any corrupt means to procure the charter. Southard v. Boyd, supra.

And in Lyon v. Mitchell, supra, a contract by which a broker undertook to dispose of certain steamers to the government for a commission of 10 per cent of the total amount received for them was held valid, and a recovery was allowed thereon.

And in Cummins v. Barkalow, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 479, a contract by a dealer in arms to pay an agent a share of the profits for obtaining from the government an order for the purchase of arms was held valid, there being nothing to show that it called for any illegal or improper action on the part of the agent.

And in Kerr v. American Pneumatic Service Co. 188 Mass. 27, 73 N. E. 867, it was held that a contract by a company whose business was the carrying of mail by pneumatic tube service, with one to attend to government and franchise matters at a certain amount, with a provision for an advance in salary when the company's contracts amounted to a stated sum, was not rendered invalid because of such provision for an increase of salary, if no corrupt methods by the agent were contemplated. The court said: "If such work only is contemplated, the provision for an increase of salary when the government mail contracts reach a certain amount cannot be said to be one which has a tendency to induce the use of corrupt or improper acts on the part of the agent. An agent who gives all his time to the business of a principal fairly may be given a compensation increasing with the volume of the business."

And in Barber v. Asphalt Paving Co. v. Botsford, 56 Kan. 532, 44 Pac. 3, a recovery of a contingent compensation to attorneys and agents for presenting facts as to the character and quality of paving material which the company entering into the contract with them put out was allowed, but no particular stress was laid upon the fact that the compensation was contingent.

In Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U. S. 276, 26 L. ed. 545, it was held that a contract by the consul general of Turkey with a manufacturer of firearms, by which the consul general, for a certain commission, agreed to effect through his influence with the representatives of the government, sales of the arms manufactured by the concern with which he contracted, was invalid as against public policy. Referring to the agreement for the payment of a commission, the court said: "So, too, with reference to furnishing the government with arms or supplies of any kind. It is legitimate to lay before the officers authorized to contract, all such information as may apprise them of the character and value of the articles offered, and enable them to act for the best interest of the country. And for such services compensation may be had as for similar services with private parties, either upon a quantum meruit or, where a sale is affected, by the ordinary brokerage commission. And here it may be observed, in answer to some authorities cited, that the percentage allowed by established custom of commission merchants and brokers, though dependent upon sales made, is not regarded as contingent compensation in the obnoxious sense of that term, which has been so often the subject of animadversion by this court, as suggesting the use of sinister or corrupt means for accomplishing a desired end. They are the rates established by merchants for legitimate services in the regular course of business. But where, instead of placing before the officers of the government the information which should properly guide their judgments, personal influence is the means used to secure the sales, and is allowed to prevail, the public good is lost sight of, unnecessary expenditures are incurred, and, generally, defective supplies are obtained, producing inefficiency in the public service."

And in Winpenny v. French, 18 Ohio St. 470, it was held that a contract with a broker employed to negotiate contracts with the government for the sale of baskets to the Army for a certain commission was not illegal. The court attempted to distinguish the case of Providence Tool Co. v. Norris, infra, from the case before them, upon the judgment was rendered accordingly, from which the plaintiff appeals.

The appellant contends that, even if it was indebted to Foley, it could not be required to credit the amount upon the note, since no assignment was shown from Foley to the Foley Company. Foley, who personally managed the business of his company, testified in substance that he intended the company to have credit on the note for his claim against the paper company, and gave the latter notice to that effect. This in effect amounted to an assignment, and the paper company, being fully protected against a further assertion of the claim by Foley, cannot complain of the lack of formality.

The appellant also contends that there was no competent evidence that it owed Foley the $500, because his claim rested upon an agreement which he professed to have made with a salesman of the paper company, who was not shown to have had any authority to bind his employer in that respect, and whose authority was denied under oath in the reply. Foley testified in effect that the paper company, through the salesman referred to, agreed to pay him $500 for his assistance in procuring a contract to supply paper and other material to the state; that he went to Topeka, and in the interest of the paper company "talked up" its goods to a member of the executive council, showing samples; that, after the contract had been awarded to the paper tionable, are not rendered invalid because of a stipulation providing that the sale is to be made on commission.

Thus an agreement by one to procure orders from the United States government for supplies to be furnished for use upon vessels in the public service, in consideration of one half the net profits, is valid where it does not contemplate resort to any but legitimate methods in procuring the orders. Swift v. Aspell, 40 Misc. 453, 82 N. Y. Supp. 659. The court said: "If the rule adopted in the Federal courts, as to the enforceability of agreements for contingent compensation in procuring government contracts, is to be applied, the agreement in suit cannot be upheld. In these courts the broad principle is declared that any agreement which has a tendency to introduce into a government transaction involving the purchase of supplies, elements other than the single consideration of a faithful execution of orders at the lowest price, is void; and the inference that personal solicitation or influence is to be employed is held to be enough to defeat the agreement for compensation, irrespective of what was or was not done."

... The courts of this state, however, when dealing with the question presented under similar contracts, have not gone so far in the acceptance of inferences to avoid the contract, and have drawn a distinction between agreements to procure legislation and agreements to make sales to the government. A person having something to sell has the right to sell it through an agent, and this right is an incident to his ownership. To declare that he may not employ an agent, upon commission, where the government is the prospective buyer, is to take away what is ordinarily one of the elements of the enjoyment of ownership,—the unrestricted right to sell. Upon this line of reasoning, commission agreements for a sale to the government have been upheld and enforced in this state where the agreement did not actively require corruption in its performance. Treated as a matter distinct in its nature from agreements to procure legislation, an agreement to compensate an agent, for his successful efforts in traffic with the government, has been held binding, where unfairness in the dealings or an intention to resort to corruption did not actually appear from the facts (Lyon v. Mitchell, 36 N. Y. 235, 93 Am. Dec. 502; Southard v. Boyd, 51 N. Y. 177); and these cases, while in conflict with the rule laid down in the Federal decisions referred to, afford direct and binding authority for a recovery in this action. For all that appears, or is to be inferred here, the plaintiff was expected to and did resort to none but the most legitimate methods in procuring these orders for the defendant's goods. Within the rule which, as I have said, obtains in this state, personal solicitation, was quite proper, and jealous suspicion of the possibility of corruption cannot be invoked to repudiate the contract. The fact that the defendant was willing to pay one half the net profits contains a suggestion less sinister than that found in the agreement to pay 10 per cent of the gross price received, which was the promise upheld in Lyon v. Mitchell, supra; and the measure of the commission in the present case does not necessarily mean that the government must have been overcharged in the usual course of business. If there was a custom in the trade whereby all vendors of such supplies, in large quantities, were put to the necessity of so fixing their prices as to enable them to pay large commissions to agents, the government would have to pay the prices thus fixed by all available sellers. The mere agreement to pay a large commission from net profits does not mean that the buyer was necessarily to pay more than the value of the goods, under normal trade conditions."

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And an agreement to pay a commission of 5 per cent on the amount of the charter for obtaining a charter from the United States for a steamship does not contravene public policy. Howland v. Coffin, 47 Barb. 653.

Nor does a contract by which one undertakes to pay a commission for chartering his vessel to the government, to persons who are related to the government's agents in charge of selecting vessels for charter, company, he had several conversations with its president in regard to his arrangement with the salesman; and that the president did not deny the salesman's authority to make such an agreement. When the Foley company rested its case, the paper company moved "to strike out that part of the conversation in reference to the contract with Mr. Shaw [the salesman], as there was no proof of any authority of Mr. Shaw to make the contract." The record shows that this motion was sustained. The only evidence on the most vital portion of the Foley company's case seems to have been stricken out by this ruling. No order was made reinstating it, and its place was not supplied by any further testimony. It is at least doubtful whether the ruling was not correct; for there was no evidence that Shaw had authority to make the agreement with Foley, unless it is to be found in the testimony that the president of the company in the course of a conversation, the details of which are not stated, did not deny it. But, whether the ruling was right or wrong, the referee, in deciding that the Foley company could recover without the evidence that was stricken out, must have proceeded upon an erroneous view of the law, which necessarily affected the judgment. Where a court makes its own findings of fact from the evidence reported by a referee, it may doubtless take into account evidence which the referee had stricken out, if the circumstances be such that the adverse party where the agents so employed did not agree to use any corrupt means to procure the charter. Southard v. Boyd, supra.

And in Lyon v. Mitchell, supra, a contract by which a broker undertook to dispose of certain steamers to the government for a commission of 10 per cent of the total amount received for them was held valid, and a recovery was allowed thereon.

And in Cummins v. Barkalow, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 479, a contract by a dealer in arms to pay an agent a share of the profits for obtaining from the government an order for the purchase of arms was held valid, there being nothing to show that it called for any illegal or improper action on the part of the agent.

And in Kerr v. American Pneumatic Service Co. 188 Mass. 27, 73 N. E. 867, it was held that a contract by a company whose business was the carrying of mail by pneumatic tube service, with one to attend to government and franchise matters at a certain amount, with a provision for an advance in salary when the company's contracts amounted to a stated sum, was not rendered invalid because of such provision for an increase of salary, if no corrupt methods by the agent were contemplated. The court said: "If such work only is contemplated, the provision for an increase of salary when the government mail contracts reach a certain amount cannot be said to be one which has a tendency to induce the use of corrupt or improper acts on the part of the agent. An agent who gives all his time to the business of a principal fairly may be given a compensation increasing with the volume of the business."

And in Barber v. Asphalt Paving Co. v. Botsford, 56 Kan. 532, 44 Pac. 3, a recovery of a contingent compensation to attorneys and agents for presenting facts as to the character and quality of paving material which the company entering into the contract with them put out was allowed, but no particular stress was laid upon the fact that the compensation was contingent.

In Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U. S. 276, 26 L. ed. 545, it was held that a contract by the consul general of Turkey with a manufacturer of firearms, by which the consul general, for a certain commission, agreed to effect through his influence with the representatives of the government, sales of the arms manufactured by the concern with which he contracted, was invalid as against public policy. Referring to the agreement for the payment of a commission, the court said: "So, too, with reference to furnishing the government with arms or supplies of any kind. It is legitimate to lay before the officers authorized to contract, all such information as may apprise them of the character and value of the articles offered, and enable them to act for the best interest of the country. And for such services compensation may be had as for similar services with private parties, either upon a quantum meruit or, where a sale is affected, by the ordinary brokerage commission. And here it may be observed, in answer to some authorities cited, that the percentage allowed by established custom of commission merchants and brokers, though dependent upon sales made, is not regarded as contingent compensation in the obnoxious sense of that term, which has been so often the subject of animadversion by this court, as suggesting the use of sinister or corrupt means for accomplishing a desired end. They are the rates established by merchants for legitimate services in the regular course of business. But where, instead of placing before the officers of the government the information which should properly guide their judgments, personal influence is the means used to secure the sales, and is allowed to prevail, the public good is lost sight of, unnecessary expenditures are incurred, and, generally, defective supplies are obtained, producing inefficiency in the public service."

And in Winpenny v. French, 18 Ohio St. 470, it was held that a contract with a broker employed to negotiate contracts with the government for the sale of baskets to the Army for a certain commission was not illegal. The court attempted to distinguish the case of Providence Tool Co. v. Norris, infra, from the case before them, upon the judgment was rendered accordingly, from which the plaintiff appeals.

The appellant contends that, even if it was indebted to Foley, it could not be required to credit the amount upon the note, since no assignment was shown from Foley to the Foley Company. Foley, who personally managed the business of his company, testified in substance that he intended the company to have credit on the note for his claim against the paper company, and gave the latter notice to that effect. This in effect amounted to an assignment, and the paper company, being fully protected against a further assertion of the claim by Foley, cannot complain of the lack of formality.

The appellant also contends that there was no competent evidence that it owed Foley the $500, because his claim rested upon an agreement which he professed to have made with a salesman of the paper company, who was not shown to have had any authority to bind his employer in that respect, and whose authority was denied under oath in the reply. Foley testified in effect that the paper company, through the salesman referred to, agreed to pay him $500 for his assistance in procuring a contract to supply paper and other material to the state; that he went to Topeka, and in the interest of the paper company "talked up" its goods to a member of the executive council, showing samples; that, after the contract had been awarded to the paper tionable, are not rendered invalid because of a stipulation providing that the sale is to be made on commission.

Thus an agreement by one to procure orders from the United States government for supplies to be furnished for use upon vessels in the public service, in consideration of one half the net profits, is valid where it does not contemplate resort to any but legitimate methods in procuring the orders. Swift v. Aspell, 40 Misc. 453, 82 N. Y. Supp. 659. The court said: "If the rule adopted in the Federal courts, as to the enforceability of agreements for contingent compensation in procuring government contracts, is to be applied, the agreement in suit cannot be upheld. In these courts the broad principle is declared that any agreement which has a tendency to introduce into a government transaction involving the purchase of supplies, elements other than the single consideration of a faithful execution of orders at the lowest price, is void; and the inference that personal solicitation or influence is to be employed is held to be enough to defeat the agreement for compensation, irrespective of what was or was not done."

. . . The courts of this state, however, when dealing with the question presented under similar contracts, have not gone so far in the acceptance of inferences to avoid the contract, and have drawn a distinction between agreements to procure legislation and agreements to make sales to the government. A person having something to sell has the right to sell it through an agent, and this right is an incident to his ownership. To declare that he may not employ an agent, upon commission, where the government is the prospective buyer, is to take away what is ordinarily one of the elements of the enjoyment of ownership,—the unrestricted right to sell. Upon this line of reasoning, commission agreements for a sale to the government have been upheld and enforced in this state where the agreement did not actively require corruption in its performance. Treated as a matter distinct in its nature from agreements to procure legislation, an agreement to compensate an agent, for his successful efforts in traffic with the government, has been held binding, where unfairness in the dealings or an intention to resort to corruption did not actually appear from the facts (Lyon v. Mitchell, 36 N. Y. 235, 93 Am. Dec. 502; Southard v. Boyd, 51 N. Y. 177); and these cases, while in conflict with the rule laid down in the Federal decisions referred to, afford direct and binding authority for a recovery in this action. For all that appears, or is to be inferred here, the plaintiff was expected to and did resort to none but the most legitimate methods in procuring these orders for the defendant's goods. Within the rule which, as I have said, obtains in this state, personal solicitation, was quite proper, and jealous suspicion of the possibility of corruption cannot be invoked to repudiate the contract. The fact that the defendant was willing to pay one half the net profits contains a suggestion less sinister than that found in the agreement to pay 10 per cent of the gross price received, which was the promise upheld in Lyon v. Mitchell, supra; and the measure of the commission in the present case does not necessarily mean that the government must have been overcharged in the usual course of business. If there was a custom in the trade whereby all vendors of such supplies, in large quantities, were put to the necessity of so fixing their prices as to enable them to pay large commissions to agents, the government would have to pay the prices thus fixed by all available sellers. The mere agreement to pay a large commission from net profits does not mean that the buyer was necessarily to pay more than the value of the goods, under normal trade conditions."

And an agreement to pay a commission of 5 per cent on the amount of the charter for obtaining a charter from the United States for a steamship does not contravene public policy. Howland v. Coffin, 47 Barb. 653.

Nor does a contract by which one undertakes to pay a commission for chartering his vessel to the government, to persons who are related to the government's agents in charge of selecting vessels for charter, company, he had several conversations with its president in regard to his arrangement with the salesman; and that the president did not deny the salesman's authority to make such an agreement. When the Foley company rested its case, the paper company moved "to strike out that part of the conversation in reference to the contract with Mr. Shaw [the salesman], as there was no proof of any authority of Mr. Shaw to make the contract." The record shows that this motion was sustained. The only evidence on the most vital portion of the Foley company's case seems to have been stricken out by this ruling. No order was made reinstating it, and its place was not supplied by any further testimony. It is at least doubtful whether the ruling was not correct; for there was no evidence that Shaw had authority to make the agreement with Foley, unless it is to be found in the testimony that the president of the company in the course of a conversation, the details of which are not stated, did not deny it. But, whether the ruling was right or wrong, the referee, in deciding that the Foley company could recover without the evidence that was stricken out, must have proceeded upon an erroneous view of the law, which necessarily affected the judgment. Where a court makes its own findings of fact from the evidence reported by a referee, it may doubtless take into account evidence which the referee had stricken out, if the circumstances be such that the adverse party where the agents so employed did not agree to use any corrupt means to procure the charter. Southard v. Boyd, supra.

And in Lyon v. Mitchell, supra, a contract by which a broker undertook to dispose of certain steamers to the government for a commission of 10 per cent of the total amount received for them was held valid, and a recovery was allowed thereon.

And in Cummins v. Barkalow, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 479, a contract by a dealer in arms to pay an agent a share of the profits for obtaining from the government an order for the purchase of arms was held valid, there being nothing to show that it called for any illegal or improper action on the part of the agent.

And in Kerr v. American Pneumatic Service Co. 188 Mass. 27, 73 N. E. 867, it was held that a contract by a company whose business was the carrying of mail by pneumatic tube service, with one to attend to government and franchise matters at a certain amount, with a provision for an advance in salary when the company's contracts amounted to a stated sum, was not rendered invalid because of such provision for an increase of salary, if no corrupt methods by the agent were contemplated. The court said: "If such work only is contemplated, the provision for an increase of salary when the government mail contracts reach a certain amount cannot be said to be one which has a tendency to induce the use of corrupt or improper acts on the part of the agent. An agent who gives all his time to the business of a principal fairly may be given a compensation increasing with the volume of the business."

And in Barber v. Asphalt Paving Co. v. Botsford, 56 Kan. 532, 44 Pac. 3, a recovery of a contingent compensation to attorneys and agents for presenting facts as to the character and quality of paving material which the company entering into the contract with them put out was allowed, but no particular stress was laid upon the fact that the compensation was contingent.

In Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U. S. 276, 26 L. ed. 545, it was held that a contract by the consul general of Turkey with a manufacturer of firearms, by which the consul general, for a certain commission, agreed to effect through his influence with the representatives of the government, sales of the arms manufactured by the concern with which he contracted, was invalid as against public policy. Referring to the agreement for the payment of a commission, the court said: "So, too, with reference to furnishing the government with arms or supplies of any kind. It is legitimate to lay before the officers authorized to contract, all such information as may apprise them of the character and value of the articles offered, and enable them to act for the best interest of the country. And for such services compensation may be had as for similar services with private parties, either upon a quantum meruit or, where a sale is affected, by the ordinary brokerage commission. And here it may be observed, in answer to some authorities cited, that the percentage allowed by established custom of commission merchants and brokers, though dependent upon sales made, is not regarded as contingent compensation in the obnoxious sense of that term, which has been so often the subject of animadversion by this court, as suggesting the use of sinister or corrupt means for accomplishing a desired end. They are the rates established by merchants for legitimate services in the regular course of business. But where, instead of placing before the officers of the government the information which should properly guide their judgments, personal influence is the means used to secure the sales, and is allowed to prevail, the public good is lost sight of, unnecessary expenditures are incurred, and, generally, defective supplies are obtained, producing inefficiency in the public service."

And in Winpenny v. French, 18 Ohio St. 470, it was held that a contract with a broker employed to negotiate contracts with the government for the sale of baskets to the Army for a certain commission was not illegal. The court attempted to distinguish the case of Providence Tool Co. v. Norris, infra, from the case before them, upon the

is not thereby prejudiced by being deprived of an opportunity for rebuttal.

But testimony which the referee has eliminated from his consideration cannot be considered by the court in determining whether there was any evidence to sustain his finding. Here the findings and conclusions of the referee were couched in the most general terms, so that his precise theory of the case is not disclosed. This situation requires that a new trial be ordered.

Other questions are argued which will naturally arise at another trial, and therefore should be decided now. The appellant contends that public policy forbids a recovery upon such a contract as that testified to by Foley. There was some evidence that the contract contemplated a payment for the exertion of personal and political influence upon members of the executive council, and that the services rendered were of that character. If that was the case, the contract was of course void. But there was also testimony that Foley was employed simply as an ordinary salesman, because of his experience in using and buying paper and other material handled by the plaintiff, and that his efforts were in accordance with that employment, and were confined to exhibiting samples and "talking up" the goods and the responsibility of the house. If that was the case, the contract was valid. In this aspect the question is merely one of fact, proper to be decided by a tribunal which sees and hears the witnesses.

ground that there was a contingency involved in the case referred to which was not an element in the case before them. In considering this point they said: "The case of Providence Tool Co. v. Norris, 2 Wall. 45, 17 L. ed. 868, is relied upon by counsel for plaintiff in error. It does not sustain them. That case was essentially different from the present, not only in the character of the means resorted to by the agent,—which counsel seems to argue is the only point of difference between the cases,—but also in the nature of the contract of employment. Here there was a simple authorization to make a contract,—a specified, and well-defined contract; no contingent fee; no special agreement as to mode or amount of compensation. There was to be a public letting to the lowest bidder, and Winpenny merely employed an agent to put in his bid, and, if you please, to guarantee his performance. French was not employed to 'procure' a contract, as a mere matter of personal 'favor,' but to make the contract, as a matter of convenience and necessity. There is nothing to the nature of such an employment to require or suggest the use of improper influences, and none such seem to have been resorted to by French. He seems to have acted openly, honestly, and at arm's length with the officer, resorting to no devices to prevent a free competition by others. Very different from this was the case in 2 Wallace. There was no public bidding in that case. No contract was defined. The fee was contingent upon success. It was not a case of authorization to make a contract as agent, but an undertaking to compensate a party for procuring one to be made. This is the sense in which the court understood it, for they speak of it as a contract 'to procure favors in the shape of contracts,' and from its very nature 'suggesting the use of sinister and corrupt means.' And the court, therefore, very properly class it with agreements for 'lobbying' legislative bodies, for 'procuring appointments to office,' and the like. It was simply an agreement to pay a party for 'personal solicitations and personal influences,' to be used in 'controlling the discretion of public officers,' and the court so 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) denominate it. Such, also, was the construction put upon their contract by the parties themselves; for the measures employed for its fulfillment were properly denominated as mere 'lobbying' and 'solicitations for personal favors.'"

In Providence Tool Co. v. Norris, supra, referred to in the preceding case, it was held that an agreement for compensation to procure contracts from the government to furnish it with supplies was against public policy and void. The plaintiff claimed that his compensation was to be the difference between the contract price and a certain price named, while the corporation with which he contracted contended that it had simply promised a liberal compensation in case of sales. The court said: "Agreements for compensation contingent upon success suggest the use of sinister and corrupt means for the accomplishment of the end desired. The law meets the suggestion of evil, and strikes down the contract from its inception. There is no real difference in principle between agreements to procure favors from legislative bodies and agreements to procure favors in the shape of contracts from the heads of departments. The introduction of improper elements to control the action of both is the direct and inevitable result of all such arrangements."

In Hovey v. Storer, 63 Me. 486, where the owners of a vessel authorized their agent to charter her to the government for $100 per day and relinquished all over that amount to the agent, it was held that a contract made by the agent with the government, through the intervention of another, by which the government was to pay $150 per day, was invalid as against public policy; but the court refused to disturb it in so far as it had been executed.

And in Nash v. Kerr Murray Mfg. Co. 19 Mo. App. 1, it was held that where one had advised commissioners of an asylum as a disinterested friend to employ a certain contractor to do a certain piece of work, it would be contrary to public policy to suggest to the contractor to covertly insert in his estimate an item as a bonus to the one suggesting his employment. J. T. W.

The evidence suggested, but perhaps did not absolutely determine, that Foley's compensation was to be contingent upon the procuring of the state contract. There is a conflict of judicial opinion as to whether that circumstance should stamp the contract as illegal. In Providence Tool Co. v. Norris, 2 Wall. 45, 55, 56, 17 L. ed. 868, 870, 871, it was said: "Agreements for compensation, contingent upon success, suggest the use of sinister and corrupt means for the accomplishment of the end desired. The law meets the suggestion of evil, and strikes down the contract from its inception. There is no real difference in principle between agreements to procure favors from legislative bodies, and agreements to procure favors in the shape of contracts from the heads of departments. . . . All agreements for pecuniary considerations to control the business operations of the government . . . are void as against public policy, without reference to the question whether improper means are contemplated or used in their execution. The law looks to the general tendency of such agreements; and it closes the door to temptation, by refusing them recognition in any of the courts of the country."

In that case, however, it was plainly shown that the services for which a recovery was sought consisted in bringing personal and political influence to bear upon the public officers charged with the duty of letting a contract for the purchase of supplies for the government. The language quoted was obviously used with that fact in mind. Substantially the same thing was said in the recent case of Russell v. Courier Printing & Pub. Co. 43 Colo. 321, 95 Pac. 936. But there, too, the contract involved was clearly bad upon other grounds than that it provided for contingent compensation. We find no case in which an agreement to pay for services in selling goods to a public body, which was found to be otherwise fair and unobjectionable, has been held void because payment was to be made only in the event of a sale being effected. If the fact that payment is made to depend upon results renders such an agreement void, it must be because the salesman who has a pecuniary interest in the success of his efforts will be presumed to resort to methods which he would otherwise avoid. This is recognized by a text writer in these words: "We know the sinister influences that are being constantly employed, and what willing ears are lent to corrupt propositions; and, when men have every motive for the advancement of such propositions, it is safe to say that any contract which leaves any opportunity for the tender of such propositions cannot be too forcibly condemned. Let men who seek dealings with the government employ men who are prompted by no motives except the desire to fulfil their duty. The inconvenience attending such a restriction is so much counterbalanced by the obvious benefits, that the seeming injustice has no place worthy of notice." Greenhood, Pub. Pol. p. 365.

That test, however, seems to be repudiated in Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U. S. 261, 26 L. ed. 539, where stress is laid upon the question, not whether the amount of compensation depends upon the result, but whether it is unusual or excessive; the court saying; "And here it may be observed, in answer to some authorities cited, that the percentage allowed by established custom of commission merchants and brokers, though dependent upon sales made, is not regarded as contingent compensation in the obnoxious sense of that term, which has been so often the subject of animadversion by this court, as suggesting the use of sinister or corrupt means for accomplishing a desired end. They are the rates established by merchants for legitimate services in the regular course of business." 103 U. S. 276, 26 L. ed. 545.

The fact that the compensation of a salesman, employed to sell goods to the public, depends upon his success, may tend to show a purpose to use illegal means, or a probability that such means will be used; but we do not think that it should be regarded as conclusive on either point, nor that in and of itself it should be deemed to characterize the employment as illegal. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Botsford, 56 Kan. 532, 44 Pac. 3; Howland v. Coffin, 47 Barb. 653; Bergen v. Frisbie, 125 Cal. 168, 57 Pac. 784; Beal v. Polhemus, 67 Mich. 130, 34 N. W. 532; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. ed. 983. We believe this view accords not only with sound reason, but with what has actually been decided by the courts. Cases bearing more or less directly on the matter are collected in various text-books and notes. 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 974; 9 Cyc. 490; 121 Am. St. Rep. 726; 6 Ann. Cas. 218; 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 213. Many of the cases in these collections involve contracts for influencing legislation, which are not entirely analogous to those for the sale of goods, and may well be regarded as subject to a more stringent rule.

Foley testified that he talked with a member of the executive council, showed him the samples, and went over the matter with him so that he would understand the questions that would come up. That these representations were made to an individual, instead of to the council as a body, might afford a reason for believing that illegal methods were pursued, but does not of itself compel that conclusion. To give information regarding a proposed contract to one of several members of a board charged with the letting of it is a means of getting the information before the board, and does not necessarily imply secrecy or concealment.

The judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

RE JOHN F. THOMAS et al.

(20 Okla. 167, 93 Pac. 980.)

Bail — capital offense — burden of proof.

1. Upon an application to the supreme court for bail, by writ of habeas corpus, after commitment for a capital offense by a justice of the peace, the burden is upon the petitioner to show that he is illegally deprived of his liberty.

Same — evidence of guilt — reasonable doubt.

2. If, after hearing the whole evidence introduced on the application for bail, it is insufficient to generate in the mind of the court a reasonable doubt whether the accused committed the act charged, and in doing so they were guilty of a capital offense, bail should be refused.

Same — conflicting evidence.

3. It is not all conflicting exculpatory evidence that will have the effect to raise a reasonable doubt of guilt, and destroy or impair the force of "evident proof" made by inculpatory evidence. It is for the judge or court who hears the testimony to consider the evidence as a whole, and if, by the entire evidence, a reasonable doubt of the applicant's guilt of a capital offense is not generated, the proof is evident and bail should be denied.

(Williams, Ch. J., and Hayes, J., dissent in part.)

(February 4, 1908.)

APPPLICATION for writ of habeas corpus to secure the petitioners' release on bail from custody to which they had been committed for the crime of murder, by a justice of the peace sitting as an examining magistrate. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. T. J. McMurray, Al J. Jennings, and John H. Burford for petitioners.

Messrs. Charles West, Attorney General, W. C. Reeves, S. M. Cunningham, Fain & Young, and W. Poindexter for the State.

Headnotes by KANE, J.

Note. — Bail in capital cases.

I. Scope, 752.

II. Bail as a matter of right.

- a. Common-law rule, 752.
- b. Constitutional rule, 755.

III. Who may admit to bail, 758.

IV. Bail before indictment, 759.

V. Bail upon indictment, 760.

VI. Bail after indictment.

- a. Mistrial, 766.
- b. Delay, continuance, appeal, 768.

VII. Application for bail on special grounds.

- a. In general, 769.
- b. Health of accused, 770.
- c. Discretionary penalty, 771.

VIII. Burden of proof.

- a. General rules applicable thereto, 772.
- b. Tests for determining whether burden has been sustained, 775.
- c. Illustrative cases.

- 1. Bail granted, 778.
- 2. Bail refused, 780.

IX. Amount of bail, 782.

X. Rules governing appellate court on application for bail, 784.

I. Scope.

This note is limited to a consideration of the rules applicable to the granting or refusal of bail in capital cases, under the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

common law and under constitutional provisions of the various states, which provisions are similar in form. Cases arising under special statutory provisions applicable to a single state are not considered.

II. Bail as a matter of right.

a. Common-law rule.

The rule of the common law is that bail may be granted in any case in the discretion of the court, but that the court's discretion will be controlled by certain well-defined and established rules.

By the early English common law, bail seems to have been a matter of discretion with all judicial magistrates and courts before whom offenders might be brought. By the ancient statute of Westminster, 1 C. 13, especially, the power to bail, as to the inferior courts and magistrates, was regulated and restricted; but the court of Kings bench and its judges were left unaffected by this statute, in possession of full common-law jurisdiction. The celebrated habeas corpus act of Charles II. conferred the power to bail on the judges of the superior courts of Westminster Hall and other superior judges. The court of King's bench and the judges authorized to hear and determine a case on habeas corpus have, according to the principles of the common law, the power and discretion to bail all persons whatsoever, and for all

Kane, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This cause is here on a petition for writ of habeas corpus by John F. Thomas and Will Thomas, in which they contend they are unlawfully imprisoned and restrained at Lawton in the common jail of Comanche county, state of Oklahoma, by Rufe Le Fors, sheriff of said county, and one Julian, jailer of said Comanche county jail; that the cause of restraint, according to their best knowledge and belief, is that they have been committed to said Comanche county jail for the crime of murder, without bail by a justice of the peace sitting as an examining magistrate. Said petitioners further allege that they are innocent of the crime of murder, and that the proof, as shown by the record of this cause in the examining trial under which they were committed, shows that the proof against them is not evident nor the presumption thereof great. On this petition a writ of habeas corpus was issued. For his return to the writ Rufe Le Fors, sheriff of Comanche county, state of Oklahoma, shows to the court that he holds the petitioners in his custody, and restrains them of their liberty, by virtue of a writ of commitment issued by S. Armstrong, justice of the peace in and for the city of Lawton, Comanche county, state of Oklahoma, to him issued and delivered on the 22d day of January, 1908, upon hearing before said S. Armstrong, justice of the peace, in a preliminary trial in said court, charging the petitioners offenses whatsoever, without regard to the degree of the crime or the nature of the punishment. Their power to bail in a capital case was as unquestioned as when the punishment did not reach to the life of the accused. Street v. State, 43 Miss. 1.

The court of King's bench might and still may bail in any case whatsoever, even high treason or murder, for the court is held in law coram ipso rege (4 Co. Inst. p. 71, 2 Co. Inst. p. 186), but this is in the discretion of the court, and no one can challenge it de jure. And this bailment in the King's bench may be upon original indictment before them in the county where they sit or upon an indictment removed by certiorari or upon the prisoner's removal by habeas corpus before or after indictment taken. 2 Hale, P. C. 129.

The court of King's bench has discretionary power to bail. Egerton v. Morgan, 1 Bulstr. 69.

In Rex v. Marks, 3 East, 157, Grose, J., said that there was no doubt as to the power of the court of King's bench to bail in all cases of felony; even in cases of murder, though there should be no doubt as to the validity of the warrant of commitment.

"Herein," says Blackstone, "the wisdom of the law is very manifest. To allow bail to be taken commonly for such enormous crimes would greatly tend to elude the public justice; and yet there are cases, though they rarely happen, in which it would be hard and unjust to confine a man in prison though accused even of the greatest offense." 4 Bl. Com. 299.

By the common law all offenses, however high, including murder and other felonies, and treason, were and still are bailable before indictment found, though not as a matter of right in cases of capital felonies, but as matter of judicial discretion. The facts and circumstances of each particular case regulated in a large degree the exercise of the discretion. Judicial decision established it as a rule that one accused of a capital felony should be admitted to bail whenever, upon examination of the evidence, the presumption of guilt was not strong. Ex parte McAnally, 53 Ala. 495, 25 Am. Rep. 646. To the same effect, Ex parte Bryant, 34 Ala. 270.

The court of King's bench may bail any man according to their discretion, on the return of the habeas corpus, but in the rules which they observe they are guided by a series of decisions, for the discretion to be exercised by a court of justice is not a wild, but a sound, discretion, and to be confined within those limits to which an honest man, competent to discharge the duties of his office, ought to confine himself. 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 129. To the same effect, Ex parte Bryant, 34 Ala. 270.

At common law, bail is a matter of discretion with the judges. The court of King's bench had an unlimited power of admitting to bail for all offenses, including treason and murder, but bail was not demandable as a right. Of course, the judicial discretion was exercised according to established rules. The object of the detention or imprisonment of the prisoner being to secure his forthcoming to abide the sentence of the law, the principle inquiry was whether a recognizance would effect that end. In seeking an answer to this inquiry, the matters chiefly considered were the seriousness of the charge, the nature of the evidence, and the severity of the punishment. Hence, when the offense was capital, and the evidence in support of it was strong, bail was denied, because no pecuniary consideration would be likely to secure the attendance of the prisoner, to the probable loss of his life. Com. v. Lemley, 2 Pittsb. 362.

In murder and manslaughter, where the prisoner was notoriously guilty, by his confession or otherwise, the almost unbroken practice was to refuse bail. Where there were circumstances in his favor, or where the evidence against him left reasonable doubts of his guilt, bail was generally allowed. Ibid.

Instead of committing the accused to prison, the examining justices may, in all cases except treason, admit him to bail to with the crime of murder; that the petitioners were committed to the common jail of Comanche county, Oklahoma, and are being held by him, as the duly qualified and acting sheriff of Comanche county, under and by virtue of said commitment; and that he now produces said petitioners in person in this court in obedience to said writ of habeas corpus.

Upon agreement of counsel the case was heard in this court upon the record and testimony introduced at the preliminary examination before Hon. S. Armstrong, justice of the peace within and for the city of Lawton, Comanche county, Oklahoma. The question, then, before the court, is: Are the petitioners entitled to bail upon the showing made at the preliminary examiappear at the court at which his trial is to take place. In cases of treason, no person can be admitted to bail, except by order of one of the secretaries of state, or by the King's bench division of the high court of justice, or a judge thereof in vacation. All other crimes are, as regards bail, divided into two classes by statute. One class consists of felonies and certain specified misdemeanors; the other embraces all other misdemeanors. With respect to the first class, the justices have a discretion whether they shall admit to bail or not, but it is not usual to grant bail in cases of murder. 9 Laws of England (Halsbury) 323, citing indictable offenses act 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. chap. 42), § 23.

It is a rule of the common law that before indictment is found a defendant charged with murder will be admitted to bail, whenever, upon examination of the testimony under which he is held, the presumption of guilt is not strong; while on the other hand, bail is always refused after an indictment for murder has been found by a grand jury. Ex parte Bryant, supra.

The Kings bench may at its discretion bail one found guilty of manslaughter. Armstrong v. Lisle, 1 Salk. 60.

In Rex v. Wyndham, 1 Strange, 3, the prisoner, who was accused of treason, was admitted to bail where four terms of the court had passed since commitment.

In Reg. v. Rumble, 1r. Rep. 3 C. L. 271, where it appeared that an attachment of soldiers was pelted with stones, and two of them fired into the crowd without orders, one of them was discharged on habeas corpus proceedings, and the other was admitted to bail.

In Rex v. Dalton, 2 Strange, 911, it was held that if the depositions, before the coroner showed that the accused was guilty only of manslaughter, he would be bailed, though the coroner's inquest found the offense to be murder. This was not like a case on an indictment where the evidence is secret. Followed in Rex v. Magrath, 2 Strange, 1242.

Where the prisoner has been committed 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

nation before the committing magistrate, under § 17, art. 2, of the Bill of Rights of the state of Oklahoma? which reads: "All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses when the proof of guilt is evident or the presumption thereof is great."

The first appearance of the above terms in American statutory or constitutional law seems to have been in a part of article 2 of an ordinance for the government of the territories of the United States north of the River Ohio, which reads as follows: "The inhabitants of the said territory shall always be entitled to the benefits of the writ of habeas corpus, and of the trial by jury, of a proportionate representation of the people in the legislature, and of judicial proceed-upon a charge of wilful murder, found by a coroner's jury upon evidence sufficient to support the finding, the court of Queen's bench will not admit him to bail. Re Bar-ronnet, 1 El. & Bl. 1, Dears, C. C. 51, 22 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 25, 16 Eng. L. & Eq. Rep. 361, 17 Jur. 184, 1 Week. Rep. 6.

Where the common law has not been changed by the Constitutions of the various states of the United States, the rule that capital offenses are bailable in the discretion of the court prevails.

In those states of our Union where there are no constitutional provisions or statutory enactments upon this subject, the English practice has been pretty closely followed. The right to admit to bail in felonies of death has scarcely been questioned and has been repeatedly recognized. In most of these states bail is not usually taken in cases of murder, but it seems to be generally conceded that it may be done, and in some of them it has been done. The power to bail in all offenses is regarded as an incident of the right and duty to hear and determine them. Com. v. Lemley, supra.

In New York in cases of felony the prisoner cannot be admitted to bail as a matter of right. People v. Shattuck, 6 Abb. N. C. 33.

The right to admit to bail is a matter of discretion. People v. Beigler, 3 Park. Crim. Rep. 316.

The power of the court to bail for all crimes is discretionary. Ex parte Tayloe, 5 Cow. 39.

The court has a right to admit the prisoner to bail even in case of murder. People v. Cole, 6 Park. Crim. Rep. 695, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. 280.

The discretionary power of the court to bail is not arbitrary, but is judicial and governed by established principles and precedents. People v. Perry, 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. 27.

The power to bail may be exercised either before or after indictment. Ibid.

The power to bail may be exercised either before or after indictment. Whether the ings according to the course of the common law. All persons shall be bailable, unless for capital offenses where the proof shall be evident or the presumption great." 1 Stat. 52. From this original this language has been copied into most of the state Constitutions and statutes. With the exception that some Constitutions contain only provisions as to "excessive bail," and that others use the words "before conviction," or words of like import, or the words "murder" and "treason," instead of the words "capital offenses," and other slight changes, the language used above is substantially that of all the Constitutions.

The only use of the term, "when the proof is evident or the presumption great," independent of statute or Constitution, we

